SCHUBERT's symphony No. 2 in B flat (MS.) was performed at the Crystal Palace last Saturday, where it was produced, “probably for the very first time since its birth,” on October 20, 1877. It was written in 1815, the most prolific year of the composer's life. The symphony is chiefly of historical interest. It shows that Schubert was a diligent student of Haydn and Mozart, and that he was no stranger to Beethoven's works; but there is nothing in it which foreshadows his later style, or that is even equal in interest to the andante of the first symphony. The work is scored for an ordinary orchestra, and contains the usual four movements. Herr Ignatz Brüll played his first concerto for pianoforte and orchestra. In 1878 he gave us his second composition of this class, and it did not lead us to expect anything interesting or acceptable in an earlier work. The first concerto is dull, tedious, and commonplace; in fact, we could perceive nothing to render it worthy of a place in a Crystal Palace programme. The concert concluded with the ballet music from Rubenstein's Nero. Mr. Herbert Reeves was the vocalist.

A sonata in B flat for piano and violoncello (op. 3) by J. Röntgen was performed for the first time at the last Monday Popular Concert by Mdlle. Krebs and Signor Piatti. The composer, only twenty-three years old, is at present a professor at the Amsterdam Musikschule. Among his works are quartets, sonatas, and other pieces. The sonata, containing three movements—allegro, andante, and finale—is written in the style of the Haydn-Mozart period. The various themes are certainly lacking in originality, those of the first two movements especially being very Mendelssohnian in character. Yet the work possesses many admirable qualities, and there is really nothing to object to either in the form, or mode of treatment, for the writing throughout is pleasing, clear, and unpretentious. As the composer is quite young, we may reasonably expect from him works of greater power and individuality; if he only has the ideas, he knows thoroughly well how to express them. The work was played to perfection by the above-named artists. We would also mention an excellent performance of Beethoven's quartet in C minor (op. 18, No. 4), led by Herr Jean Becker. Mdlle. Krebs played in her best style three sonatas by Domenico Scarlatti. The concert concluded with Spohr's trio in E minor (op. 119), played by Mdlle. Krebs, Herr Becker, and Signor Piatti. The programme-book mentions this trio as the first of three written by Spohr for that combination of instruments. He, however, composed five. Besides the three spoken of, he wrote one in B flat (op. 133) and one in G minor (op. 142).

The 143rd anniversary festival of the Royal Society of Musicians was held on the 10th inst. at St. James's Hall. The Duke of Connaught presided, and Prince Leopold was also present. The Duke in his speech made special mention of Mr. Molineux, who has given a thousand guineas to the charity fund. A large number of distinguished musicians were present; also visitors, among whom were the American Minister, the Greek Minister, Sir F. Leighton, Canon Duckworth, &c.

On the same evening Mr. Harward Turner gave the first of a series of three concerts at the Beethoven Rooms. We shall hope to have another opportunity of noticing the first piece in the programme—viz., Dr. Macfarren's quartet (MS.), No. 6, in G, which was performed by Messrs. Holmes, Gibson, Burnett, and Howell.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

THE Highgate Choral Society announce the performance of Dr. Sullivan's Martyr of Antioch at their next concert, to be given on Tuesday, March 1. Mr. Worsley Staniforth is to be the conductor.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186 Strand, and Messrs. CURTICE & Co., Catherine Street, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can also be obtained every Saturday Morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. W. H. SMITH AND SONS; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

PARIS.

Copies can be obtained in Paris every Saturday morning of M. FOTHERINGHAM, 8 Rue Neuve des Capucines.

THEATRES.

CONNAUGHT THEATRE.

Sole Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

To-night, at 8, ROBERT BUCHANAN'S romantic Play,
THE NINE DAYS' QUEEN.
 "If demonstrations go for anything, Mr. Buchanan's piece, which contains many literary beauties, should run for some time."—Daily Chronicle.
 "Miss Jay's earnest and impressive manner enables her to sway the sympathies of the spectators and give adequate effect to the stirring scene."—Daily Telegraph.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8, an adaptation of the Comedy in five acts,
ADRIENNE LECOUREUR.
 Messrs. Forbes-Robertson, Beveridge, Lin Rayne, Darley, Boone, &c., and G. W. Anson; Mesdames Modjeska, Emery, Varro, J. Clifford, Garnier, &c., and Mrs. Howard Moore.
 Box-office open 11 to 5. Doors open 7.15. Carriages 10.45. No fees.
 Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

DRURY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

MOTHER GOOSE.
 By E. L. Blanchard. The success of the season.
 Misses Kate Santley, Ada Blanche, Addie Blanche, D'Auban, Howitt, De Vere, Howard, Farquhar, Hogarth, Ridgway, Braham, and Payne; the children of the School of Dancing, under Miss Katti Langer; Messrs. Arthur Roberts, Jobo D'Auban, James Fawn, Kinghorn, Ross, Wyatt, Ridley, Abraham, and Girard; Mesdames Palladio, Fervial, Fisher, Evans, Howells, and Cote.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.
 At 8.15, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called
THE UPPER CRUST.
 Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Misses Lillian Cavaller, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorpe.
 At 10.15, ICI ON PAULE FRANCAIS.
SPRINGUINS—Mr. J. L. TOOLE.
 Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to 25 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.

Every evening, a new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, entitled LA BELLE NORMANDE.
 Composed by MM. VASSEUR and GREVE, the libretto by Messrs. A. MALTBY and H. MANSELL. Scenery by Mr. REAN.
 Supported by a powerful company.
 Preceded, at 7.30, by a new Comedietta, by H. WILLIAMSON, entitled
THE GENIUS.
 Box-office open daily from 11 till 5.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

To-night, MACBETH.
 For one week only.
MACBETH—Mr. CHARLES WARNER (his first appearance in this character).
MACDUFF—Mr. HERMANN VEZIN.
LADY MACBETH—Miss BATEMAN.
 The new scenery by Mr. W. B. Spong. Locke's music will be given by accomplished vocalists.
 Preceded at 7 by a Farce.
 Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. No fees.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. DOYLE CARTE.

At 8.45, THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE.
 A new and original Melodramatic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN.
 Preceded, at 8, by
IN THE SILKS.
 By Messrs. FRANK DESPREZ and ALFRED CELLIER.
 Messrs. G. Grossmith, Richard Temple, Rutland Barrington, F. Thornton, Durward Lely, Geo. Temple; Mesdames Emilio Petrelli, Jessie Bond, R. Brandram, Gwynne, Barlow, and Alice Barnett. Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

At 8.30 a new Comedy, in three acts, called
THE COLONEL.
 By F. C. BURNARD.
 Preceded, at 7.45, by a one-act Comedy, by SYDNEY GRUNDY,
IN DONOR BOUND.
 Messrs. Coghlan, James Fennell, W. Herbert, Eric Bayley, Howland Buckstone, and Edgar Bruce; Mesdames Amy Roselle, Myra Holme, C. Graham, Leigh Murray, &c.
 New Scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith.
 Doors open 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOOCH.

To-night, at 7.45, Shakspeare's Tragedy,
KING LEAR.
 Specially selected Company. Preceded, at 7.15, by the laughable Farce,
THAT BLESSED BABY.
 Scenery by Mr. Charles Brooke. Stage Manager, Mr. HARRY JACKSON.
 Doors open at 6.45. Box-office open daily.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 7.30, a new and original Drama, by JOE MACKAY, entitled
PEGGY.
 Mesdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Covey, Amy Crawford, Ruth Francis, Florence Lavender, Clair St. Clare, and Sylvia Gray; Messrs. Edward Ashton, Frank Cooper, H. Kealey, H. Martel, and Seymour Dallas.
 New and realistic scenery specially designed and executed by Bruce Smith.
DON JUAN, JUNIOR, now in the full tide of its success.
 Musical Director, Herr Max Schuster. Secretary and Treasurer, Frank Rathbey. Acting and General Business Manager for Kate Lawler, CECIL KALEIGH.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

WINTER EXHIBITION.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY

EXHIBITION OF WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS AND DECORATIVE DESIGNS, BY LIVING ARTISTS,
 NOW OPEN DAILY, 10 to 6.

Admission, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA "If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa,"
Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

EXTRACT "It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."
 W. W. STODDARD, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
 A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

"WESTWARD HO!"

WILLS'
"WESTWARD HO!" NEW SMOKING MIXTURE.

"When all things were made, none were made better than Tobacco; to be a lone man's Companion, a bachelor's Friend, a hungry man's Food, a sad man's Cordial, a wakeful man's Sleep, and a chilly man's Fire. There's no Herb like it under the canopy of heaven."—Kingsley's "Westward Ho!"

In 1 oz., 2 oz., and 4 oz. packets, lined with tinfoil.

W. D. & H. O. WILLS.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

ALL WHO COUGH, SING, OR HAVE COLDS,

Read the following from

S. PEARSALL, Esq., Vicar-Choral Lichfield Cathedral:—

"I am suffering much from this unhealthy season. Send me a few boxes of
DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS, as they alone afford me relief."

They taste pleasantly.

Sold at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per box by all Chemists.

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS!
ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds.

The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £230,000.*MODERATE PREMIUMS.

Bonus allowed to Insurers after Five Years.

£1,630,000HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, and West-end Office, 8, Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing-cross, or 64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.
BRYANT & MAY'S
PATENT SAFETY
MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS
 Are free from SMELL
 Are manufactured
 Without Phosphorus
 Are perfectly harmless
 To the Operatives employed
 Are very DAMP PROOF

LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.*PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and
POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.
 Also
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal.

Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £5 6s. to 50 guineas.

Drawing-room Suites, from £9 9s. to 45 guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.

Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.

Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.

Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.

Thoroughly reprints the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, HeadacheGout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies,

Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair to a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones.
 Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

MESSRS. RIVINGTON'S NEW LIST.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THOUGHTS on PRESENT CHURCH TROUBLES,
Occurring in Four Sermons preached in St. Paul's Cathedral in December, 1880. With a Preface. By H. P. LIDDON, D.D., Canon Residentiary of St. Paul's and Ireland Professor at Oxford.

New and Cheaper Edition, small 8vo, paper cover, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

SOME ELEMENTS of RELIGION. Lent Lectures.
By H. P. LIDDON, D.D., Canon Residentiary of St. Paul's and Ireland Professor at Oxford.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, 6s.

AFTER DEATH: an Examination of Primitive Times respecting the State of the Faithful Dead, and their Relationship to the Living. By HERBERT MORTIMER LUCKOCK, D.D., Canon of Ely, Principal of the Theological College, and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop.

Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, crown 8vo, 6s. 6d.

EVERLASTING PUNISHMENT. Lectures delivered at St. James's Church, Piccadilly, on the Six First Sundays after Trinity, in the Year 1880. With Three Dissertations on Kindred Topics. By EDWARD MEYRICK GOULBURN, D.D., Dean of Norwich.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s., or separately, 8s. each.

THE COLLECTS of the DAY: an Exposition, Critical and Devotional, of the Collects appointed at the Communion. With Preliminary Essays on their Structure, Sources, and General Character; and Appendices containing Expositions of the Discarded Collects of the First Prayer-Book of 1549, and of the Collects of Morning and Evening Prayer. By EDWARD MEYRICK GOULBURN, D.D., Dean of Norwich.

Vol. I. (432 pp.) ADVENT to WHITSUN DAY.
Vol. II. (516 pp.) TRINITY SUNDAY to ALL SAINTS' DAY.

Fifth Edition, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

EIGHT LECTURES on the MIRACLES: being the Bampton Lectures for 1865. By J. B. MOZLEY, D.D., late Canon of Christ Church, and Regius Professor of Divinity, Oxford.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

SERMONS, Parochial and Occasional. By J. B. MOZLEY, D.D., late Canon of Christ Church, and Regius Professor of Divinity, Oxford.

8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE ORGANISATION of the EARLY CHRISTIAN
CHURCHES. Being the Bampton Lectures for 1880. By EDWIN HATCH, M.A., Vice-Principal of St. Mary Hall, and Grinfield Lecturer in the Septuagint, Oxford.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

SOME HELPS for SCHOOL LIFE: Sermons preached at Clifton College, 1862-1879. By the Rev. J. PERCIVAL, M.A., LL.D., President of Trinity College, Oxford, and late Head-Master of Clifton College.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

SELECTION, adapted to the SEASONS of the ECCLESIASTICAL YEAR, from the "Parochial and Plain Sermons" of JOHN HENRY NEWMAN, B.D., sometime Vicar of St. Mary's, Oxford. Edited by the Rev. W. J. COPELAND, B.D., Rector of Farnham, Essex.

Third Edition, with Appendix, small 8vo, 7s. 6d.

LIBER PRECUM PUBLICARUM ECCLESIAE
ANGLICANAE. A GULIELMO BRIGHT, S.T.P., Aedis Christi apud Oxon. Canonico, et PETRO GOLDSMITH MEDD, A.M., Collegii Universitatis apud Oxon. Socio Seniore, Latino redditus.

Small 8vo, 6s.

THE FIRST BOOK of COMMON PRAYER of
EDWARD VI. and the ORDINAL of 1549. Together with the Order of the Communion, 1548. Reprinted entire. Edited by the Rev. HENRY BASKERVILLE WALTON, M.A. With Introduction by the Rev. PETER GOLDSMITH MEDD, M.A., Rector of North Cerney, Hon. Canon of St. Albans.

Second Edition, imp. 8vo, 42s.; half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.

DICTIONARY of DOCTRINAL and HISTORICAL THEOLOGY. By Various Writers. Edited by J. H. BLUNT, M.A., F.S.A., Rector of Beverstone, Gloucestershire.

"We know no book of its size and bulk which supplies the information here given at all, far less which supplies it in an arrangement so accessible, with a completeness of information so thorough, and with an ability in the treatment of profound subjects so great."

Guardian.

"It is not often that a work of so comprehensive and as profound a nature is marked to the very end by so many signs of wide and careful research, sound criticism, and well-founded and well-expressed belief."—Standard.

BY THE SAME EDITOR.

Imp. 8vo, 36s.; half-morocco, £2 8s.

DICTIONARY of SECTS, HERESIES, ECCLESIASTICAL PARTIES, and SCHOOLS of RELIGIOUS THOUGHT. By Various Writers.

"We doubt not that the 'Dictionary' will prove a useful work of reference; and it may claim to give, in reasonable compass, a mass of information respecting many religious schools knowledge of which could previously only be acquired from amid a host of literature. The articles are written with great fairness, and in many cases display careful, scholarly work."—Athenaeum.

"A very comprehensive and bold undertaking, and is certainly executed with a sufficient amount of ability and knowledge to entitle the book to rank very high in point of utility."

Guardian.

"After all deductions, it is the fullest and most trustworthy book of the kind that we possess. The quantity of information it presents in a convenient and accessible form is enormous; and, having once appeared, it becomes indispensable to the theological student."

Church Times.

Seventh Edition, imp. 8vo, 36s.; half-morocco, £2 8s.

THE ANNOTATED BOOK of COMMON PRAYER:
being an Historical, Ritual, and Theological Commentary on the Devotional System of the Church of England. By the Same Editor.

[This large Edition contains the Latin and Greek Originals, together with Technical Ritual Annotations, Marginal References, &c., which are necessarily omitted for want of room in the Compendious Edition.]

"Whether as, historically, showing how the Prayer-Book came to be what it is; or ritually, how it designs itself to be rendered from word into act; or theologically, as exhibiting the relation between doctrine and worship on which it is framed, the book amasses a world of information, carefully digested, and errs commonly, if at all, on the side of excess."—Guardian.

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.; half-morocco, 16s.; morocco limp, 17s. 6d.

THE COMPENDIOUS EDITION of the ANNOTATED
BOOK of COMMON PRAYER; forming a Concise Commentary on the Devotional System of the Church of England. By the Same Editor.

"This is a compendious edition of the author's well-known and masterly work on the subject. It will be found extremely useful to all Churchmen."—Standard.

"We hope that the new issue will obtain a wide circulation, as it will tend to advance that intelligent appreciation of the Prayer-Book which all faithful English Church people of education ought to have at the present time."—Church Times.

3 vols., demy 4to, with Maps, &c.

THE ANNOTATED BIBLE: being a Household
Commentary upon the Holy Scriptures, comprehending the Results of Modern Discovery and Criticism. By the Same Editor.

Vol. I. (668 pages).—Containing the GENERAL INTRODUCTION, with Text and Annotations on the Books from GENESIS to ESTHER. 31s. 6d.

Vol. II. (720 pages).—Completing the OLD TESTAMENT and APOCRYPHA. 31s. 6d.

Vol. III.—Containing the NEW TESTAMENT and GENERAL INDEX.

[In the press.]

"Mr. Blunt's 'Annotated Bible' is marked by the author's usual untinted industry and wide range of reading. Its purpose is to 'provide for educated readers, as distinguished from laborious students,' a sufficient aid towards understanding the Scriptures from an intellectual point of view. . . . There is a harmony and consistency in the annotations, introductions, excursuses, &c., which is hardly in any other way to be hoped for, and, what is quite as important in a work of this nature, a condensation is obtained which would not be otherwise possible. . . . There results a unity, a directness, and a consciousness of treatment which greatly enhance the clearness and vigour of the work. Mr. Blunt has, as might be expected from so experienced and business-like a compiler, paid great attention to the minor accessories which so greatly add to the convenience and usefulness of a commentary. The marginal notes and references have been thoroughly revised and improved; chronological and other tables have been anxiously introduced wherever they could prove useful; maps and diagrams have been employed also with freedom."—Guardian.

New Edition, small 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HOUSEHOLD THEOLOGY: a Handbook of Religious Information respecting the Holy Bible, the Prayer-Book, the Church, the Ministry, Divine Worship, the Creeds, &c., &c. By J. H. BLUNT, M.A., F.S.A., Rector of Beverstone, Gloucestershire.

New Edition, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

DIRECTORIUM PASTORALE: the Principles and Practice of Pastoral Work in the Church of England. By the Same Author.

Fourth Edition, 8vo, 16s.

THE REFORMATION of the CHURCH of ENGLAND:
its History, Principles, and Results. A.D. 1514—1547. By the Same Author.

LONDON: RIVINGTONS, WATERLOO PLACE, PALL MALL.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 460.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

New Books Published by Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, & Rivington.

NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY, AT EVERY LIBRARY.

In 3 vols. MR. WILLIAM BLACK'S NEW NOVEL, SUNRISE: a Story of These Times. A FOURTH EDITION is Ready of MARY MARSTON. By George MacDonald. 3 vols., 31s. 6d. FLOWER o' the BROOM. By the Author of "Rare Pale Margaret." 3 vols. AN ENGLISH SQUIRE. By C. R. Coleridge, Author of "Lady Hetty," "Hanbury Mills," &c. 3 vols., 31s. 6d. A THIRD EDITION is Ready of A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART. By W. Clark Russell. 3 vols.

The NEW ADDITION to LOW'S STANDARD SIX-SHILLING NOVELS is

BEN-HUR: a Tale of the Christ. By L. Wallace. Small post 8vo, 6s.

NEW and CHEAPER EDITIONS of JULES VERNE'S NOVEL.

MICHAEL STROGOFF, the COURIER of the CZAR. By Jules Verne. With Illustrations. Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

MICHAEL STROGOFF. In 2 parts. Boards. With Illustrations. 1s. each.

THE STORY of a SOLDIER'S LIFE; or, Peace, War, and Mutiny. By Lieut.-General Alexander Ewart, C.B., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen from 1859 to 1872. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Two Chromo-lithographs, cloth extra, price 32s.

NICE and HER NEIGHBOURS. By the Rev. Canon Hole, Author of "A Book about Roses," "Little Tour in Ireland," &c. With many charming Illustrations of the Scenery in and around Nice. Square 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 16s.

THE STORY of a MOUNTAIN. By E. Reclus, Author of the "Nouvelle Geographie Universelle," "The Earth," &c. Translated by BERTHA NESS. Square 8vo, with many Illustrations, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

WEBER. By Sir Julius Benedict. Dedicated, by permission, to Her Majesty the Queen. New Volume of the Biographies of the Great Musicians. Edited by FRANCIS HUEFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

SCHUBERT. By H. F. Frost. New Volume of the Biographies of the Great Musicians. Edited by Francis HUEFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

Also now ready, small post 8vo, cloth extra, 3s.

WAGNER. By Francis Hueffer, Editor of the "Great Musicians" Series.

Also now ready, small post 8vo, cloth extra, 3s.

ROSSINI, and the Modern Italian School. By H. Sutherland Edwards.

THE LIFE and WORK of WILLIAM AUGUSTUS MUHLENBERG. By Anne Ayres. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, with Portraits, price 16s. This Biography of the Great American Philanthropist will have an interest for many English readers.

THROUGH AMERICA; or, Nine Months in the United States. By W. G. Marshall, M.A. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 21s.

This Work is embellished with nearly 100 Woodcuts illustrative of Scenes in the Utah Country and the famous Yosemite Valley, the Giant Trees, New York, Niagara, San Francisco, &c.; and contains a Full Account of Mormon Life, as noted by the Author during his Visits to Salt Lake City in 1878 and 1879.

EXTRACT FROM THE WORK:—"Mormonism has now become so firmly established in the United States that it is important, at the present time, when so many of our poor and ignorant countrymen are yearly conveyed to Salt Lake City, to call attention to some of the evils to which Mormon emigrants to Utah are exposed."

COMPLETION of BRYANT'S Great Work, The HISTORY of the UNITED STATES, from the First Discovery of the Western Hemisphere by the Northmen to the End of the Civil War. Preceded by a Sketch of the Prehistoric Period and the Age of the Mound Builders. By WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT and SYDNEY HOWARD GAY. In 4 vols., imp. 8vo, cloth extra. Containing in all 1,097 Text Cuts, 17 Steel Plates, 52 Full-Page Woodcuts and 25 Maps and Plans. Price of the Four Volumes, £8; or 42s per Volume.

EPISODES of FRENCH HISTORY. Edited, with Notes, Genealogical, Historical, and other Tables, by GUSTAVE MASSON, B.A.

1. CHARLEMAGNE and the CARLOVINGIANS. [Ready.]

3. FRANCIS I. and the EMPEROR CHARLES V. [Ready.]

2. LOUIS IX. and the CRUSADES. [Ready.]

4. FRANCIS I. and the RENAISSANCE. [In a few days.]

. Other Volumes in preparation.

The above Series is based upon M. Guizot's "History of France." The Volumes are choice illustrations, contain Maps, and are printed and bound in a handy form, each 2s. 6d.

Now ready, demy 8vo, cloth extra, 18s.

Professor SAYCE'S EDITION of GEORGE SMITH'S The CHALDEAN ACCOUNT of GENESIS. Revised and Corrected.

Now ready, in 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

THE HISTORY of ANCIENT ART. By John Winckelmann. Translated from the German by G. Henry LODGE, M.D. With a Life of Winckelmann. Fully and finely Illustrated.

Now ready, a New and Cheaper Edition of

THE ADVENTURES of a FIELD CRICKET. By Dr. Ernest Candeze. Translated by N. d'Anvers. Illustrated. Cloth extra, 5s.

Now ready, in 1 vol., royal 8vo, pp. 1,036, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 21s. (Carriage free on receipt of P.O.O.) A SPLENDID AND MOST APPROPRIATE PRESENT.

A LIBRARY of RELIGIOUS POETRY: a Collection of the Best Poems of all Ages and Tongues. With Biographical and Literary Notes.

THE TWENTY STYLES of ARCHITECTURE. Illustrations of the finest Edifices in the World. By the Editor of "The Hundred Greatest Men." Demy 4to, price One Guinea.

The object in the method employed has been so to present the subject that a few hours' study will enable one to become acquainted with the leading principles of Architecture, and to distinguish the different styles.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
RECENT BOOKS ON JAPAN, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	145
CUNNINGHAM'S CHURCHES OF ASIA, by the Rev. W. H. SIMCOX	146
FORNANDER'S ACCOUNT OF THE POLYNESIAN RACE, by the Rev. S. J. WHITMER	147
BAYNE'S TWO GREAT ENGLISHWOMEN, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY	148
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	149
CURRENT LITERATURE	150
NOTES AND NEWS	152
ORITARY: PAULIN PARIS, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY; & Co.	153
THE EXTENSION OF UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON	154
THE WORKS OF SAINT-SIMON, by GABRIEL HANOTAUX	154
SELECTED BOOKS	155
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Grove's "Dictionary of Music," by the Rev. F. E. WARREN; Pontefract near Southwark , by James Gairdner; Iarza , by the Rev. Henry G. Tompkins	155-6
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	156
CLEMENTS MARKHAM'S INTRODUCTION OF CHINCHONA CULTIVATION INTO BRITISH INDIA, by ALFRED W. BENNETT	156
CLELAND'S EVOLUTION, EXPRESSION, AND SENSATION, by GRANT ALLEN	157
OBITUARY	157
NOTES OF TRAVEL	157
SCIENCE NOTES	158
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	158
ARCHAEOLOGICAL EXPLORATION IN SAMOTHRACE, by A. S. MURRAY	158
THE EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY, by J. M. GRAY	159
MILLAIS AT THE FINE ART SOCIETY, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	159
ART SALES	160
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	160
STAGE NOTES	161
HUFFER'S BIOGRAPHIES OF THE GREAT MUSICIANS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	162

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 3RD OF MAY.

F. W. MADDEN, M.A., Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

The PROFESSORSHIP OF POLITICAL ECONOMY will become VACANT at the close of the present Session. Applications for the Appointment will be received, on or before MARCH 21ST, at the Office of the College, Gower-street, W.C.

TALFOURD ELY, M.A., Secretary.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIP WITHOUT

EXAMINATION.—The HIBBERT TRUSTEES are prepared to grant, at their meeting in JUNE next, ONE SCHOLARSHIP of £250 per Annum, for Two Years, to a Graduate of any University in Great Britain and Ireland, between the ages of Twenty-one and Twenty-eight, to enable him to study Theology and Mental and Moral Philosophy at Universities in Germany, Holland, or Switzerland (or elsewhere), subject to the approval of the Trustees.

Full particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, to whom applications for the Scholarship must be forwarded before MARCH 31ST, 1881.

PERCY LAWFORD, Secretary.

University Hall, Gordon-square, London, W.C.

HIBBERT TRUST.—ONE SCHOLAR-

SHIP will be awarded on this Foundation after the next Examination, provided that a Candidate of sufficient merit present himself. The NEXT EXAMINATION will be held at UNIVERSITY HALL, GORDON SQUARE, LONDON, on three consecutive days in NOVEMBER, 1881. Candidates must furnish satisfactory evidence of age, graduation, and other points, the particulars of which, as well as copies of the Scheme of Examination, may be obtained on application to the Secretary of the Trust, and the names and addresses of all Candidates must be sent to the Secretary, at University Hall, on or before OCTOBER 1ST, 1881.

PERCY LAWFORD, Secretary.

University Hall, Gordon-square, London, W.C.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WARBERRY

HOUSE, Bishopsdown Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

CHELSEA VESTRY HALL,

KING'S ROAD, S.W.

A COURSE OF SIX LECTURES on "EPOCHS OF GREEK INFLUENCE" will be given by REGINALD STUART POOLE, on WEDNESDAY, MARCH 2ND, and five following Wednesdays, at 4.30. Fee for the Course, £1 1s.; for a Single Lecture, 5s. Governesses will be admitted for a Reduced Fee on applying to the Hon. Sec., Miss GRACE, 43, Trafalgar-square, S.W. Tickets can be obtained from Messrs. MACMURRAY, King's-road, Chelsea; SQUIRE, Post-office, S. Fulham-road; FOOKS, 96, Fulham-road; BOLTON, Knightsbridge; WARD, 25, High-street, Kensington; and, by letter, from the HON. SECRETARY.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Commission Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's)—Choice Works ON VIEW by Henry Dawson, scul., T. S. Cooper, R.A., E. J. Newman, L. J. Pott, Ernest Parnoe, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Stark, utsum, &c.

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM,

13, LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS.

ANTIQUITIES, PICTURES, and SCULPTURE.

OPEN FREE, from 11 to 5, on TUESDAYS and THURSDAYS in MARCH, and on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS in APRIL, MAY, JUNE, JULY, and AUGUST. Cards for Private Days and for Students to be obtained of the CURATOR, at the Museum.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

The NINETEENTH WINTER EXHIBITION will CLOSE on SATURDAY, MARCH 5TH.—5, PALL MALL EAST, from 10 till 5.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT

BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

Rev. WILLIAM BOUGHTON, M.A., F.R.S., will on THURSDAY NEXT, MARCH 3RD, at 3 o'clock, begin a COURSE OF TWO LECTURES on "THE ORIGIN OF THE CUNEIFORM CHARACTERS." Subscription to this Course, Half-a-Guinea; to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

MILLAIS EXHIBITION.—A LOAN

COLLECTION OF THE WORKS OF MR. J. E. MILLAIS, R.A., is NOW ON VIEW at the FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 138, NEW BOND STREET. The Contributions include: Autumn Leaves—Boyhood of Raleigh—Carpenter's Shop—Cherry Ridge—Child October—Ferdinand and Ariel—The Gambler's Wife—Lorenzo and Isabella—the Mosaic—North-West Passage—Order of Release—Princes in the Tower—Vale of Acre—Yeomen of the Guard—and a new Picture, The Princess Elizabeth in Prison at St. James's. Admission, 1s. Notes on Pictures, 6d.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.

The EXHIBITION OF WORKS by the OLD MASTERS, and by Deceased Masters of the British School, including a Collection of Drawings by John Flaxman, R.A., is NOW OPEN DAILY, from 9 till 7. One Shilling. Catalogues 5s. per, or bound in cloth, with pencil, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

N.B.—The Exhibition is lighted at dusk.

RICHARD COSWAY'S WORKS.—

Messrs. P. & D. COLNAGHI & CO. propose to publish a small series of ETCHINGS by M. C. WALTNEIL, of the finest Miniatures by COSWAY. A specimen Plate, now completed, can be seen at 14, Pall Mall East.

ROBERT BLAKE'S ETCHING, "THE CANTERBURY PILGRIMS."—Messrs. P. & D. COLNAGHI & CO. having purchased this Plate, which is in fine condition, propose printing a limited number of impressions on Japan paper.—13 and 14, Pall Mall East.

EXHIBITION of the WORKS of ART-

CRITICS.—It is proposed to form during the ensuing Season an EXHIBITION OF PAINTING and SCULPTURE, consisting entirely of the productions of Ladies and Gentlemen connected with the Press in the above capacity.—Persons willing to assist in forwarding this project are requested to send names and addresses to C. WATT AYSCOUGH, The Limes, East Croydon.

Further announcement shortly.

WILLIAM ANDERSON, Collector of and Dealer in AUTOGRAPHS and MANUSCRIPTS, Toronto Villa, Terranova-avenue, London, N.W.

Letters of Mr. Thomas Carlyle for Sale.

MR. WALTER BACHE'S PIANO.

FOURTE REGICAL (Tenth Season), ST. JAMES'S HALL, TUESDAY, MARCH 1, at Half-past 3 o'clock precisely (to conclude at a Quarter-past 5). Vocalist, Miss Orridge. Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Admission, 1s.—Stanley Lucas, Weber, & Co., 84, New Bond-street; Chippell & Co., 50, New Bond-street; A. Hays, 4, Royal Exchange-buildings, and 29, Old Bond-street; Austin's Ticket Office, St. James's Hall, 25, Piccadilly.

RARE ETCHINGS, ENGRAVINGS, and

DRAWINGS by the most esteemed OLD MASTERS may be obtained at GEORGE LOVE'S OLD PRINT SHOP, 31, BUNHILL ROW, LONDON. The Engravings, &c., are in the condition, and have formed portions of the most celebrated collections. A Catalogue of a small portion of the Stock will be sent on receipt of two penny postage stamps.

* Established above 60 years.

"ENDYMION" AT MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

FURTHER REDUCTION OF PRICE.

On and after Monday next the price of "Endymion" (second-hand copies) will be reduced to 9s.; or, strongly rebound for Literary Institutions and Public Libraries, 12s. per set; or carefully selected for Gentleman's Libraries, in half-perian, 18s., or half-calf extra or half-morocco, 18s.

More than One Thousand other popular Books will also be offered in Mudie's Clearance Catalogue for March. Ready on Monday next. Postage free on application.

NEW OXFORD STREET, February 26.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Mudie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Colotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Pseudo-graphical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

The Woodbury Process is utilised for photographs of Art Manufactures, Portraits, &c., where mounting is not an objection.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meisner, Corot, De Neuville, Burce-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS OF PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMPTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of aqua and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 29in. by 21in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, prices 10s. 6d.

"COME UNTO THESE YELLOW SANDS," after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

Pictures Cleaned, Restored, Framed.

To adorn the walls of Homes with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Deane, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

THE DUBLIN UNIVERSITY PRESS SERIES.

Now ready, 1s 8s, price 15s., cloth.

THE COLLECTED WORKS of JAMES

MAC CULLAUGH, LL.D., Fellow of Trinity College, and Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Dublin. Edited by J. H. JELLET, B.D., and S. HACHTON, CLK., M.D.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

Dublin: HODGES, FIGGIS, & CO.

Just published, price One Shilling.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY: Why are there no Medical Degrees? An Address by J. E. MORGAN, M.D., M.A. (Oxon.), F.R.C.P., Professor of Medicine at the Victoria University.

Manchester: J. E. CORNISH, 33, Piccadilly.

GRAY'S INN.—EXAMINATION for the

"BACON" and "HOLT" SCHOLARSHIPS.—NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that an Examination for these Scholarships will be held in GRAY'S INN HALL, on the 14TH and 15TH days of JUNE next, commencing at 10 o'clock A.M. precisely.

These Scholarships are of the yearly value of £15 and £40 respectively, tenable for two years, and are open to every Student for the Bar who, on the 14th day of June next, shall have been a Member of Gray's Inn for not more than Five Terms, and who shall have kept every Term since his admission, inclusive of that or before which he shall have been admitted. In the Examination for the Scholarships there will be set Two Papers of Questions—viz.,

1st. One on the CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY of ENGLAND to the End of the Reign of George the Second;

2nd. One on the GENERAL HISTORY of ENGLAND to the same date.

And there will also be given to the Candidates Two or more subjects connected with the Constitutional and General History of England to the above date, any one of which subjects a Candidate may select, and on the one which he does select he will be required to write a short Essay.

The time to be allowed for each of these Three Papers will be Three Hours.

(Signed) WM. F. JOLLIFFE, Treasurer.

THOS. C. SANDARS, Examiner.

Dated this 16th day of February, 1881.

The Subscription List of the Facsimile of THE BOKE of SAINT ALBAN'S, by Dame Juliana Berners, will be closed on the 1st of March, after which date no orders can be received, except at the published price of Two Guineas.

* * * A Full Prospectus concerning the publication of "The Boke of Saint Alban's" will be sent on application to the Publisher.

LONDON: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

SPECIMEN LIST OF NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS.

Many Copies of each of the following Books are in Circulation at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY:—

McCarthy's History of Our Own Times—Life of Cicero, by Anthony Trollope—Fitzgerald's Life of George IV.—Knox's Wanderings in Algeria—Ewart's Story of a Soldier's Life—Island Life, by Alfred R. Wallace—Tennyson's New Volume of Ballads—Trevelyan's Life of Fox—Bagehot's Biographical Studies—Life of Lord Campbell—Lord Ellenborough's Diary—Guizot in Private Life—Life of Sir James Outram—Unbeaten Tracks in Japan, by Miss Bird—Markham's Voyage of the Isbjörn—Oliphant's Land of Gilead—Capper's Shores of the Boden See—In the Ardennes, by Mrs. Macquoid—Gallenga's South America—Rovings Re-told, by W. F. Butler—Temple's India in 1880—Miss Sewell's Note-Book of an Elderly Lady—Max Müller's Selected Essays—The Bedouins of the Euphrates; and A Pilgrimage to Nejd, by Lady Anna Blunt—Life of Sir Rowland Hill—Across Patagonia, by Lady Florence Dixie—Burbidge's Journal in Borneo—Mrs. Sumner's Holiday in the East—Through America, by W. G. Marshall—Duty, by Samuel Smiles—Two Great Englishwomen, by Dr. Bayne—Personal Life of Livingstone—Pollock's Life of Spinoza—Ruskin's Letters to the Clergy—The New Virginians—Children at Jerusalem, by Mrs. Holman Hunt—New Guinea, by L. M. D'Alvertis—Hayward's Eminent Statesmen—Kinglake's Crimea (New Volume)—Sylvestre, by Anne Ellis—Buckland's British Fishes—The Duties of Women, by Miss Cobbe—Ruskin's Arrows of the Chace—Endymion, by the Earl of Beaconsfield—The Duke's Children—Dr. Wortle's School—Adam and Eve—A Confidential Agent—Oliver Constable—Mehalah—Washington Square—A Stubble Farm—White Wings—Sunrise—Asphodel—Lord Brackenbury—A Village Commune—Dimplethorpe—An English Squire—From the Wings—Queenie's Whim—Queen Cophetua—Mary Marston, by George MacDonald—Love and Life—Missing—The Trumpet-Major, by Thomas Hardy—The Tragic Comedians—Mary Anerley—A Child of Nature, by Robert Buchanan;

AND NEARLY ONE THOUSAND OTHER RECENT WORKS OF GENERAL INTEREST.

See MUDIE'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR for MARCH, now ready, postage free.

Fresh Copies of all the Best Books of the Season continue to be added as the demand increases, and arrangements are made with the Leading Publishers for an ample supply of the Principal Forthcoming Books as they appear.

FIRST-CLASS SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM,

For a Constant Succession of the Newest Books.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTION, TWO GUINEAS AND UPWARDS,

According to the Number of Volumes required.

THE LONDON BOOK SOCIETY,

A DEPARTMENT OF

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY MESSENGERS call to deliver Books at the Residence of Subscribers in Every Part of London and the Immediate Neighbourhood, on a Plan which has given General Satisfaction for many years.

MORE THAN FIVE THOUSAND FAMILIES

Already avail themselves of the facilities thus afforded, and obtain

A CONSTANT SUCCESSION OF THE BEST NEW BOOKS

IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE DAY OF PUBLICATION.

Revised Lists of New and Choice Books lately added to the Library, and Catalogues of Surplus Copies Withdrawn for Sale at Greatly Reduced Prices, are now ready, and will be forwarded, postage free, on application.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

510, 511, & 512, NEW OXFORD STREET; and 20, 21, & 22, MUSEUM STREET.

CITY OFFICE: 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S

NEW WORKS.

Now ready, price One Shilling,

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR MARCH, 1881.

- I. KITH and KIN. By JESSIE FOTHERGILL. (Continued.)
- II. A SON of the NEW TIME.
- III. HAZLITT'S "LIBER AMORIS."
- IV. THE THORN.
- V. THE BEAUTIFUL MISS ROCHE. Part I.
- VI. GENIUS and METHOD.
- VII. FROM HEINE.
- VIII. A PEEP at the MOGIREBINS. II.
- IX. QUAKERISM in IRELAND.
- X. "THE BEST PICTURE in the WORLD."
- XI. THE FRERES. By Mrs. ALEXANDER. (Continued.)

* Cases for binding the volumes of "Temple Bar" can be obtained at all Booksellers', price One Shilling each.

THE MEMOIRS of PRINCE

METTERNICH, 1815—1829. Edited by his Son, PAUL RICHARD METTERNICH. Translated by ROSINA NAPIER. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

THE POLITICAL DIARY of

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, 1828—1830. Edited by LORD COLCHESTER. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

ACROSS PATAGONIA. By Lady

FLORENCE DIXIE. With Illustrations by Julius Beer-bohm. Demy 8vo, 15s.

"To read it is to be exhilarated and refreshed."—World.
"The book is not to be described, it is to be read."—Vanity Fair.

NOTICE.

MR. BUCHANAN'S NEW NOVEL

is now ready at all Libraries, in 3 vols.

A CHILD OF NATURE.

BY ROBERT BUCHANAN,

AUTHOR OF

"THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD."

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

QUEENIE'S WHIM. By Rosa

NOTCHETTE CARRY, Author of "Wood and Married," "Nellie's Memories," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

HIRAM GREG. By J. Crowther

HIRST. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"This capital novel is absolutely true to nature throughout."—Standard.
"A novel evidently based upon fact, full of variety, and full also of strong human interest."—World.

THE MYSTERIES of HERON

DYKE. By the Author of "In the Dead of Night." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The mystery is capital; it is nervous, it is well conceived, it is absorbing, it is drawn with great skill, and worked out with telling touches. The interest never flags, and we can recommend the book as one of the best sensational novels of the season."—Vanity Fair.

ADAM and EVE. By Mrs. Parr,

Author of "Dorothy Fox." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,

NEW BURLINGTON STREET,

Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

SMITH, ELDER, & CO'S

New Books and New Editions.

MR. BRANDRAM'S SHAKESPEARE FOR THE YOUNG.

SHAKESPEARE:

Certain Selected Plays abridged for the Use of the Young.

By SAMUEL BRANDRAM, M.A. Oxon.

1 vol., large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Shortly.]

NEW VOLUME BY MISS THACKERAY (MRS. RICHMOND RITCHIE).

MISS WILLIAMSON'S DIVAGATIONS.

By Miss THACKERAY (MRS. RICHMOND RITCHIE). Reprinted from the Cornhill Magazine, &c. With Four Illustrations. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. [In April.]

RENAISSANCE in ITALY: Italian Literature.

By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A., Author of "Studies of the Greek Poets," "Sketches in Italy and Greece," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, being Vols. IV. and V. of "Renaissance in Italy," and concluding the Work, price 32s. [In the press.]

OUTLINES of NAVAL HYGIENE. By

JOHN D. MACDONALD, M.D., F.R.S., Inspector-General R.N., Professor of Naval Hygiene, Army Medical School, Netley. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo. [In the press.]

THE ATLAS of HISTOLOGY. By E. Klein,

M.D., and E. NOBLE SMITH, F.R.C.S. Edin. With Forty-eight Coloured Plates. The Illustrations are done by Mr. Noble Smith, from Preparations by Dr. Klein. The Text is by Dr. KLEIN. Royal 4to, bound in half-leather, £1 4s.; or in 13 parts, price 6s. each. Cases for binding may be had, price 4s. each.

THE DESCRIPTIVE ATLAS of ANAT-

OMY: a Representation of the Anatomy of the Human Body. In Ninety-two royal 4to Plates, containing 550 Figures. Introducing Heitzmann's Figures, considerably modified, and with many Original Drawings from Nature. By E. NOBLE SMITH, F.R.C.S. Edin. Bound in half-leather, price 25s.

THE POWER of SOUND. By Edmund

GURNEY, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Royal 8vo, 25s.

"There need be no reservation in the welcome which we give to the book as a whole. Psychologically and aesthetically—and, we would add, physiologically also—it is a book which makes a distinct forward step."—Spectator.

THE POETRY of ASTRONOMY. By

RICHARD A. PROCTOR, Author of "The Borderland of Science," "Science Breviary," &c. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"Will do much to supply valuable information in a popular form concerning some of the chief results and speculations of modern astronomical science. The book contains most valuable reading, and is in such a clear and pleasant style that it deserves to be very popular."—Queen.

FARMING in a SMALL WAY. By James

LONO, Author of "Poultry for Purses and Profit," "The Goat," &c. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"We heartily recommend all who are interested in farming in a small way to secure it while there is yet time."—Gardener's Magazine.

SECOND EDITION, Revised, and with an additional Map.

LIFE of LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SIR

JAMES OUTRAM. By Major-General Sir FREDERIC J. GOLDSMID, C.B., K.C.M.G. With Illustrations and Maps. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 32s.

SECOND EDITION, 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

A HISTORY of ENGLISH THOUGHT in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By LESLIE STEPHEN.

NEW NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "CHILDREN'S CHILDREN."

HAROLD SAXON: a Story of the Church and the World. By ALAN MUIR, Author of "Children's Children: a Story of Two Generations." 3 vols., post 8vo.

"A powerful, truthful work."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A vigorous and readable novel."—Scotsman.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MADEMOISELLE DE MERSAC."

MATRIMONY. By W. E. Norris, Author of "Mademoiselle de Mersac," &c. 3 vols., post 8vo.

"It has not a single dull page. It is amusing and interesting from end to end."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A downright clever and amusing book, brimful of life and humour."—Whitcomb Review.

Now ready (One Shilling), No. 256.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For MARCH.

With Illustrations by GEDROK DU MAURIER and W. SMALL.

CONTENTS:

A GRAVE from a THORN. By JAMES PATY. (With an Illustration.) Chap. X.—Drivers and Walkers. XI.—The Picnic. XII.—A Couple of Patients. XIII.—A Suggestion.

SIR GEORGE ETHEREDGE: a Neglected Chapter of English Literature. By EDMUND W. GOSSE.

AUTUMN WANDERINGS. I.—Italian Petunias. II.—Over the Apennines. III.—Fosdinovo. IV.—La Spezia. V.—Porto Venere. VI.—Lerici. VII.—Vareggio.

HELEN in the WOOD. By A. MART F. ROBINSON.

PHAGOO.

WHO were the FAIRIES?

THOMAS CARLYLE.

LOVE the DEBT. (With an Illustration.) Chap. VII.—Barney McGrath.

VIII.—Miss Masters. IX.—Mabel to the Rescue.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

REMINGTON'S

NEW BOOKS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE GLEN of SILVER BIRCHES:

a Novel. By E. OWENS BLACKBURN, Author of "Illustrious Irishwomen," &c. 2 vols., 21s.

"At the present time, when half the English public are aroused to sympathy with Irish distress, and the other half thrilled with indignation at Irish crime, so well told a story as that of Miss Blackburne has a special claim to attention."—Athenaeum.

STEADFAST unto DEATH: a

Tale of Ireland of To-day. By Mrs. BEERS. 1 vol., 7s.

"A tale that has in it much true, quiet pathos. The reader of her work will lay it down with a truer and sadder realization of the starvation deaths in Ireland than is to be gathered from reports of commissioners and special correspondents."—World.

'TWIXT FRIEND and FOE: a

Novel. By M. A. WACKERBARTH, Author of "Looking Back." 2 vols., 21s.

"There is sufficient in the book to tempt anyone who has begun it and caught sight of the plot to read steadily through to the end. It is decidedly interesting."—Athenaeum.

MADAME de MAINTENON: a

Memoir. By WALTER BENNETT. 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"A memoir of considerable value, conceived in a spirit of fairness, and written with power and picturesque effect."—Court Journal.

IN FAIR BRUGES: a Romance of the Present Day. By C. BEESTON. 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"The book is pleasantly written and distinctly readable. It contains some effective studies of Flemish character among the lower classes, and two picturesque and pleasing, if slightly idealised, portraits of English 'girls of the period' of the best kind."—Scotsman.

DUMDUMINGTON RECTORY and the ADVENTURES of TWO CURATES: THOMAS LORENZO DAWK, B.A., of St. Drone's, and CHARLES DIAMOND, of Maudlin. By the Author of "Marriage à la Mode." 1 vol., 7s. 6d.

"There is a great show of humour throughout these stories, levelled with tolerable impartiality against some of the most familiar follies and foibles of the ecclesiastical world."—Athenaeum.

NOT MANY YEARS AGO:

Memoirs of my Life. By AN ELDERLY BACHELOR. 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"This is a volume that will delight many readers. In a manner so natural as to be beyond praise, the author tells us all the incidents of his early days, and with so much simplicity that anyone who had not been brought up under tender parents in a loving family himself might feel as if the writer had endowed him with a happy childhood."—St. James's Gazette.

SYBARITE and SPARTAN: a

Novel. By Mrs. LORENZO NUNN, Author of "The Militia Major," &c. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

"The story is rarely dull, and the good spirits of the author infect the reader and carry him pleasantly along from the beginning to the end."—Sunday Times.

MY SISTER'S PRUSSIAN LOVER:

a Novel. By BOUTON D'OR. 2 vols., 21s. [Just out.]

DIVIDED: a Novel. By the Author of "Shakespeare's Stories Simply Told." 2 vols., 21s. [Just out.]

A STORY of AUTUMN: a Novelette.

By Mrs. COMYNS CARR, Author of "North Italian Folk." 1 vol., 10s. 6d. [Now ready.]

IRELAND'S TRUE DAUGHTER:

a Novel. By "MARCELLINA," Dedicated, by permission, to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. 3 vols., 31s. 6d. [Now ready.]

GRAND TOURS in MANY LANDS.

By JOHN MCCOSH, M.D., F.R.C.S., F.R.G.S., H.E.I.C.S., Author of "Nuova Italia." 1 vol., 7s. 6d. [Now ready.]

LONDON:

REMINGTON & CO., 134, NEW BOND STREET, W.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1881.

No. 460, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

RECENT BOOKS ON JAPAN.

Unbeaten Tracks in Japan. By Isabella L. Bird. (Murray.)

Japan. By Sir E. J. Reed, K.C.B., F.R.S., M.P. (Murray.)

The Classical Poetry of the Japanese. By Basil Hall Chamberlain. (Trübner.)

A Grammar of Japanese Ornament and Design. By Thomas W. Cutler. (Batsford.) (First Notice.)

OUR knowledge of Japan is progressing. Of its country and people we are beginning to learn something: the inflammatory stage of ignorant worship of its art is passing away; into the jungle of its history and the forests of its mythology excursions have been made; and of one branch of its literature, its classical poetry, we have a really masterly study, which we can trust as a guide as well as read with admiration. Besides the books which form the subject of this article, Mr. Franks' edition of a native report upon Japanese pottery, the American Mr. Griffis' Mikado's Empire (which owes a good deal to Mr. Pfoundes' Japanese Notes and other sources), Mr. F. Dillon's facsimiles of his Japanese drawings, with the letterpress, and many other publications, not to mention the Transactions of the Asiatic Society of Japan, are all doing their work of clearing away the mists, though the domain of the unknown appears only the larger for a larger horizon.

At present much of our information does not come straight from its source. It is from men like Mr. Satow, Mr. W. S. Aston, Prof. Anderson, and others, who have devoted years of study to Japan, its history, language, and art, and who have published learned papers not generally accessible, that much of the material of such books as those of Mr. Griffis and Sir E. J. Reed have been derived; and it is to be hoped that before long we shall have a series of studies from such hands equal in authority to Mr. Chamberlain's Classical Poetry. None the less should we be thankful to Sir E. J. Reed for his laborious and well-ordered compilation, or to Mr. Cutler for his exquisite book of facsimiles of Japanese designs. The latter supplies a collection of examples of Japanese decoration, chosen with much taste and reproduced with almost faultless care, accompanied by an account of Japanese art which states shortly and clearly the gist of our present knowledge. This knowledge will, we trust, be increased by the promised works of the gentlemen already mentioned, and also by Dr. Dresser; but nothing can destroy the permanent value and beauty of Mr. Cutler's labours. Not content with giving us admirable specimens of finished design both in black-and-white and in colour, showing the characteristic treatment of bird and tree, of flower and fish, dragons and lobsters, beetles and flies, together with diapers and badges, he has added some very instructive elementary plates, taken from Japanese drawing-books, which give much insight into the method of artistic training in Japan. Some of the plates are taken from carvings; some from lacquer work, of which a beautiful imitation is given in pl. 35; some from embroidery, and some from drawings and paintings; some are highly finished, some sketchy; some much, some very little, conventionalised; so that, if Mr. Cutler's book is scarcely complete or methodical enough to fully earn its title of a grammar, it presents an opportunity for the study of Japanese design such as has never yet been afforded in so small a compass.

Being, however, confined to ornament and decoration, its value is chiefly aesthetic and artistic. But it contains one plate which, though its subject is apparently but a fanciful procession of insects, yet touches upon that strange old life in the days of Daimios which is all the more fascinating because it seems to have melted away like snow. This fantastic cortège, with its fly in a palanquin, its beetles bearing aloft reeds and flowers like banners, has a complicated story, if we could but know it, and creates a thirst for knowledge more directly human than is to be gathered from the pages of Mr. Cutler's beautiful book. It is, however, in vain we turn either to Sir E. J. Reed or to Miss Bird for any picture of the life of that curious aristocracy, warlike and art-cherishing, which so few years ago partitioned Japan in feudal fashion, and was the soul of the strange, self-centred civilisation which perfected itself in centuries of seclusion. It is said that the memory of those days has already all but faded from the mind of the modern Japanese, that the taste for literature and archaeology which marked the preceding generation has passed away, and that the preservation of the records and memories of old Japan is left to Europeans. But if we cannot have what we like in this case, there is little difficulty in liking what we have in Miss Bird's book—viz., a long and finely painted panorama of the Japan of to-day.

Miss Bird is not, any more than Sir E. J. Reed, an authoritative teacher of Japanese lore. When she started on her travels she scarcely knew a word of the language, and her experience of the country extended over scarcely six months, but nevertheless she has managed to add much to our knowledge of the country and people by the simple but bold device of choosing "unbeaten tracks." Her traverse of the length of the principal island from Tōkiyō northward to Aomori, her journeys in Yezo and visits paid there to the Aino villages, especially that of Biratori, which is exclusively inhabited by these gentle aborigines of Japan (whom it seems a misnomer to call "savages"), are real contributions to the sum of existing information, and are of no small assistance to the understanding of the natural character of this clever and lovable nation. If it only proved that a woman, unattended except by a precocious Japanese youth, could travel the length and breadth of the country "with absolute security from danger and rudeness," her journey would not have been in vain. But she has shown, as in any other way it would have been difficult to show beyond question, that such civilisation, in the highest sense of the term, as exists in Japan is not confined to the towns and their neighbourhoods, but that in the wildest and poorest districts there is absolute order and gentleness, courtesy and honesty, if the latter term may be used without implying a habit of veracity.

But it would not be fair to consider Miss Bird's book only from a utilitarian point of view. It has literary merits which would make it remarkable even if her tracks had been well beaten, and would deserve attention if only as an exhibition of what a resolute Englishwoman can accomplish by force of character and endurance. No one who has read one of Miss Bird's previous delightful books need be told that she is a woman of will; and that the lady who drove cattle "like a man" in Colorado was not likely to be daunted by any discouragements placed in the way of her determination to run through Japan. Nor need he be told that she is a born traveller, with whom the desire to leave the "beaten tracks" of civilisation to see new things and invite adventures is a passion; or that few living travellers have better eyes to see or a more graphic pen to describe. For the benefit of those who need an introduction, let us add that though she can ride like a man she writes like a lady, and that her accounts of men and things are enlivened by personal thought and feeling. She draws pictures of scenery bright with the delight of vision; her sketches of men and women, civilised or savage, are those of no mere clever spectator, but of a sister in the large human family; and when she deals with strange religions her notes are accurate and unprejudiced, although they are always accompanied by comments which show that she has no sympathy with the Gallo spirit which seems at present to be dominant among educated Japanese.

We have no space here to give an adequate account of her journeys, nor even of the varied literary power shown in these charming letters. We are glad to have them as they were written, although the reader suffers a little from repetition, and has to arrange much of the scattered information for himself. The charm of the book consists greatly in the gradual unfolding of the panorama, not only of the scenery, but of the writer's progressive knowledge of things Japanese. There are many of these things which we should like to know which Miss Bird does not tell us; but, on the whole, we know no book which is a better introduction to the study of Japan than hers.

In the first place she is always readable, a quality not easy to find in a long book about Japan, with its complicated and uninteresting mythology and its terrible names. In the second place she has been to see the Ainos, who, if not aboriginal, are as aboriginal as one can expect, and whose religion, if not the origin of pure Shinto, looks very like it—who are practically, at all events, the alpha of Japan; and, in the third place, she seldom touches a question without a clue to where it can be followed up—shows you the dishes, in fact, after providing you with an appetite.

She was surprised, somewhat unreasonably perhaps, to find that the doll-like prettiness with which we are accustomed to associate everything Japanese failed before she left the outskirts of the capital, and that not only untidiness, but dirt made its appearance. "Must I write it?" she asks. "The houses were mean, poor, shabby, often even squalid, the smells were bad, and the people looked ugly, shabby, and poor, though all were working at something or other." Her first night in a yadoya, with its want of privacy, its crowds of travellers, and many evil smells, its fleas and mosquitoes, its intrusion of a messenger at midnight into her improvised apartment, might well have deterred a less resolute lady. But two days brought her to Nikkô, where she was consoled with "great snow-slashed mountains," "a colossal avenue of cryptomeria," "exquisite leafage," "white azaleas," a quiet "yadoya," and a good night's rest. Next day she again reached a doll-like paradise in the house of a native, one Kamaya, the preceptor of the famous Nikkô shrines. His sister, "the sweetest and most graceful Japanese woman but one" that Miss Bird had seen, moved about the house like a floating fairy, and her voice had music in its tones. The house, the charming description of which I should like to quote, seems to have been a fitting cage for this pretty bird. Equally good is the description of the famous shrines themselves, with their wonderful laquered woodwork, where "the lotus leaf retains its dewy bloom, the peony its shades of creamy white, the bamboo leaf still trembles on its graceful stem, in contrast to the rigid needles of the pine, and countless corollas, in all the perfect colouring of passionate life, unfold themselves amid the leafage of the gorgeous tracery."

Will ever such beautiful monuments perpetuate the memory of any future Mikado of New Japan as were raised in honour of these old Shôguns, Iyôyasu and Iyémitsu, his grandson.

To so intrepid an equestrian as Miss Bird the Japanese method of riding pack-horses and cows (on which animals she had to perform the rest of her journey over the Nantaizan Mountains, and onwards to Niigata, the only treaty port on the west of the largest island) must have been very trying; but Miss Bird seems to have the faculty of transmuting energy into patience. Of this part of her journey, and her subsequent more arduous ride to Aomori, I must leave the reader to discover the delights for himself for the most part, finding only room for a sight such as does not often astonish the eyes even of a traveller.

"In the midst of this sublime scenery, and at the very top of the pass, the rain, which had been light but steady during the whole day, began to come down in streams and then in sheets. I had been so rained upon for weeks that at first I took little notice of it, but very soon changes occurred before my eyes which concentrated my attention upon it. The rush of waters was heard everywhere, trees of great size slid down, breaking others in their fall; rocks were rent, and carried away trees in their descent, the waters rose before our eyes; with a boom and a roar as of an earthquake, a hill-side burst, and half the hill, with a noble forest of cryptomeria, was projected outwards, and the trees, with the land on which they grew, went down heads foremost, diverting a river from its course, and where the forest-covered hill-side had been there was a great scar, out of which a torrent burst at high pressure, which, in half-an-hour, carved for itself a deep ravine, and carried into the valley below an avalanche of snow and mud. Another hill-side descended less abruptly, and its noble groves found themselves at the bottom in a perpendicular position, and will doubtless survive their transplantation."

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

The Churches of Asia: a Methodical Sketch of the Second Century. By William Cunningham, M.A. The Kaye Essay for 1879. (Macmillan.)

THIS very careful and sensible little monograph is hardly improved by the author having tried to imitate German method, and to approach an historical and critical question in the light of a metaphysical system.

There is a certain immaturity traceable in the tone of parts of the book, as though in writing an academical prize essay he had felt too much like an undergraduate. But few academical essays do as much as this to throw fresh light upon their subjects; and, when Mr. Cunningham has done so much for us as he has, we cannot complain if he makes us think that in time he will be able to do something better.

So much more of the Christian literature of the second century comes to us from Asia than from any other district that the two titles of the work are equally appropriate; but the fact seems to be that the latter indicates the subject chosen by the writer, the former the mode of treating it that was forced on him. He begins by considering the first form in which both Church and Gospel are conceived—"the Kingdom of God"—and then goes on to trace, in Asia and (when we have any other evidence) elsewhere, how this primitive Kingdom of God developed into the Church known to continuous history.

Mr. Cunningham's suggestions as to the progress of this development are worthy rather of consideration than of prompt acceptance. "We see," he says, "that the Christian society did become, on Asian soil, that which the Greeks had striven to realise—a federation of free democracies;" and he indulges in the unproved and improbable fancy that St. Paul, when among the once great cities of Greece, interested himself in the history of their greatness. Now it is a question of great importance and some obscurity how far the primitive churches are correctly described as democracies, "the church in each city . . . possessing authority over its officers." Mr. Cunningham has a perfect right to his opinion, though he ought perhaps, on such a controverted point, to have alleged his evidence for it—e.g., Col. iv. 17. But, so far as illustration may be sought from the secular politics of the semi-independent Greek cities, we ought to remember that, though they still had a certain amount of real political life, their constitutions had been recast under Roman influence, and that that influence had been aristocratical. At Rome itself sober politicians approved, and no one seriously complained, when Tiberius transferred the appointment of magistrates from the people to the Senate, and virtually to the Prince. It is a priori probable, then, that when a society was constituting itself in the next generation the choice of its officers would practically lie with its Council of Elders, and that their president would be (as Mommsen says of even the primitive Comitia) "much more than a mere returning officer;" even though the ἐκκλησία were really free and its officers ideally its servants, they would in practice guide it far more than it would control them.

Though he does not notice this analogy, what Mr. Cunningham says on the origin of episcopacy is very sensible; only he seems to draw too sharp a line between its double character as a natural "differentiation of function" in the primitive Presbyterian bodies and as an imitation or extension of the "viceregal" position borne by St. James. While noticing that at Antioch as well as at Alexandria there are traces of the episcopate having been of the viceregal rather than the civic type, it is strange that he does not call attention to St. Ignatius speaking of his diocese as "Syria," and himself as "the Bishop of Syria" (Mag. 14, Trall. 13, Rom. 2, 9). But, on the other hand, the saint plainly regards the "civic" bishops of Asia as being vicars of Christ by exactly the same right as himself, and this makes it hard to suppose that his position had a different origin from theirs. Still more arbitrary is the attempt to distinguish (pp. 118 et seqq.) between the Apostles' function lying in "teaching" and (what is not quite the same thing) being "guardians and exponents of the Christian tradition," and the function of "organising or ruling, entrusted to the presbytery with James at its head." Surely in Acts xv. the Apostles take a part more prominent than the presbyters (if, perhaps, subordinate to James) in deciding a point primarily administrative rather than doctrinal; and it would be absurd to deny that St. Paul "ruled," in a tolerably absolute way, all the churches which he had "taught."

The most original thing in the book—perhaps the most valuable—is the theory suggested of the Paschal controversy. The "harmonistic" problem, indeed, is rather cut than solved—it is a priori unlikely that the Synoptists should all be wrong and the Fourth Gospel right; but if we believe the Fourth Gospel, taken in its plain sense, to give the true facts, then Mr. Cunningham's view accounts very well for the opinion embodied in the synoptical tradition, and for the Quartodeciman practice. But has he evidence for his view that the "conformity" between St. Polycarp's betrayal and death and his Master's is so close that the "Preparation" and "the Great Sabbath" are not Good Friday and Easter Eve, but the day before and the day after the Paschal supper? Was the latter ever called "Sabbath" in popular language?

WILLIAM HENRY SIMCOX.

An Account of the Polynesian Race: its Origin and Migrations, and the Ancient History of the Hawaiian People to the Times of Kamehameha I. By Abraham Fornander, Circuit Judge of the Island of Mani, H.I. Vol. II. (Trübner.)

IN the first volume of this work, published more than three years ago, and noticed in the ACADEMY of January 5, 1878, Mr. Fornander propounded a bold theory of the origin of the Polynesians. He expressed the conviction that they may be traced back, not only to the Indian Archipelago, but through it to the western side of India up to the shores of the Persian Gulf. He believes that he sees faint but unmistakable proofs that they once reached yet farther north and north-west. He tells us they had their "head, and front, and beginning in a white (the Aryan) race" in its earliest days, long before the Vedic irruption into India, and that for long ages they were "the recipients of a Cushite civilisation."

The present volume treats of the ancient history of one branch of the Polynesians—those who inhabit the Hawaiian Islands. We think this by far the more valuable of the two volumes. This history is derived from the "traditions, legends, genealogies, and chants" which have been preserved by the people and orally handed down from one generation to another. To one at all acquainted with the difficulties of collecting such material, and of discriminating between fact and fiction, the labour which the book has cost its author will appear immense. We fully endorse his words when he says in his Preface:

"In entering the almost impenetrable jungle of traditions, legends, genealogies, and chants, the author has had no easy task in reducing his materials to historical sequence, precision, and certainty. The difficulties he has had to contend with hardly any but Polynesian scholars can fully appreciate."

Mr. Fornander adds that he leaves the Hawaiian people themselves to determine how far he has succeeded in his task. Although possessing some knowledge of Polynesian legends and songs from other portions of the Pacific, we cannot pronounce a very decided opinion on this point. As far, however, as we can judge, we think he is to be congratulated on his success.

The approximate date of the migration of the Polynesians across the Pacific Mr. Fornander gives as about the close of the first and during the second century of the Christian era. From other data, which we have looked into afresh since his first volume was published, we think there is good reason for accepting this conclusion. He does not, however, place the occupation of the Hawaiian Islands earlier than during the sixth century. From the absence of information—there being in the legends nothing more concerning this early date than the bare genealogical tree—he believes that the settlers lived secluded and isolated from the rest of the race in the South Pacific until towards the close of the tenth or the beginning of the eleventh century. He then finds this period of quiet and obscurity broken, and the folk-lore, not only of Hawaii, but of all the principal groups of the Pacific, becoming stirring adventures, and voyages undertaken to far-off lands. An era of national unrest and of tribal commotion seems to have set in, from causes not now known nor mentioned in the legends. . . . A migratory wave swept the island world of the Pacific, embracing in its vortex all the principal groups, and probably all the smaller. Chiefs from the southern groups visited the Hawaiian group, and chiefs from the latter visited the former. . . . As far as the Hawaiian group partook of this ethnic convulsion, it continued for seven or eight generations, though there is ground for believing that among the southern groups it continued several generations later, and only finally closed with the emigration from Savaii (Samoan group) to New Zealand about fifteen generations previous to 1850, or at the close of the fourteenth or commencement of the fifteenth century" (pp. 6, 7).

"replete with the legends and songs of a number of remarkable men, of bold expeditions,

Our author meets the objection sometimes raised against the probability of such long voyages being made by the Polynesians as this intercommunication between the different groups would involve. He very rightly says that we err if we judge the Polynesian people of those ages by what their descendants were when Europeans first knew them, "isolated, deteriorated, decaying." Those who have given much attention to Polynesian archaeology well know that there are numerous indications, in almost all the groups, which show that this race once occupied a much higher position than it occupied when first discovered by Europeans. The isolation of the people in such small communities, in islands where there was little to call their intellectual energies into use, but where everything would tend to enervate them, would be sufficient to account for this deterioration. We entirely agree with the following statement:—

"At the time we are now speaking of, the Polynesians were not only possessed of open canoes, hollowed out of a single tree, and seldom used except for coasting or fishing excursions, but of vessels constructed from planks sewn together in a substantial manner, pitched and painted, decked over (or partly so), and with a capacity of hold sufficient to contain men, animals, and stores for any projected voyage; that they possessed a respectable knowledge of the stars, their rising and setting at all times of the year, in both the Southern and Northern hemispheres; that they were acquainted with the limits of the ecliptic and situation of the Equator; that they possessed the keenest eyesight, and a judgment trained to estimate all appearances indicating the approach of land by flight of birds and other signs; and, with all this, a courage, hardihood, and perseverance that never failed them at critical moments" (pp. 8, 9).

The art of navigation was retained in the southern groups longer than in Hawaii. It is not long since the construction of large sewn sea-going vessels was discontinued. The writer of this notice has seen such vessels which have been used in voyages between some of the groups—e.g., Samoa and Tonga. These were fairly respectable craft, although doubtless inferior to those built in the palmy days of Polynesian navigation.

The space at our command will not admit of any detailed account of the history proper of the Hawaiian people as given in this volume. Generally, it is what most histories of ancient times have been—a record of the births of kings and chiefs, their deeds of valour and, too often, of blood, and then their deaths. The different islands were held and governed by separate kings; sometimes one island was divided between rival rulers. Comparatively little is learnt of the mode of life of the people. This was, of course, to be expected from such material as the history is based upon. Wars, religious rites—chiefly those bearing on the conduct of war, such as the building or repairing of temples to propitiate the divinities, and the offering of human sacrifices, especially captives taken in war—the intrigues of rival factions, the power exercised by the priesthood, the amours of prominent men and women—these make up the greater part of the history. There are, however, occasional interesting glimpses given into the social and domestic life of the people, from which we learn something of their ordinary occupations, their amusements, and their modes of thought.

We may give an example of one king of Oahu belonging to a time soon after the migratory period ceased, Mailikukahi by name.

"In the Oahu legends Mailikukahi occupies a prominent place for his wise, firm, and judicious government. He caused the island to be thoroughly surveyed, and the boundaries between the different divisions and lands to be definitely and permanently marked out, thus obviating future disputes between neighbouring chiefs and landholders. He caused to be enacted a code of laws, in which theft and rapine were punishable with death. He also caused another ordinance to be enacted and proclaimed, which, the legend says, found great favour with both chiefs and commoners—namely, that all first-born male children should be handed over to the Moi (king), to be by him brought up and educated. He was a religious chief withal, built several heiaus (temples), held the priests in honour, and discountenanced human sacrifice. The island of Oahu is said to have become very populous during his reign, and thrift and prosperity abounded" (p. 89).

Among the legends of the achievements of the great men in Hawaiian history there are some which, in the opinion of Mr. Fornander, refer to wanderings in foreign lands beyond the island-world peopled by their own race. The legends of Paumakua relate how he visited all the foreign lands outside the Hawaiian group, and how he took back with him two white men said to be priests, from whom several priestly families in after-ages claimed their descent and authority. We do not pretend to judge whether this legend is to be depended upon. But it appears evident that, at a very early time, the Hawaiians knew of the existence of other people differing in complexion and in language from their own race. These two particular men are described as being "foreigners of large stature, bright, sparkling eyes, white cheeks, and with roguish, staring eyes—large white hogs with reddish faces." With reference to this apparently uncomplimentary term, Mr. Fornander says that, in the ancient chants, it is not uncommon to find "hog" applied to persons "as a poetical and sacerdotal expression."

A tradition is preserved of the arrival of a foreign vessel at the islands at a period which the author refers to about the middle of the thirteenth century. There were both men and women on board. They are described as being white, with bright, shining eyes. The tradition states that their descendants were plentiful in one part of the island of Oahu, and that their countenances changed by intermarriage with the Hawaiian people. As European vessels did not traverse the Pacific Ocean at that time, Mr. Fornander thinks these people cast upon the island were probably Japanese. It is known that, in comparatively recent times, there have been at least two arrivals of Japanese vessels which were driven by winds and currents across the Pacific to these islands.

There is an interesting tradition of a shipwreck on the island of Hawaii, which Mr. Fornander gives good reasons for believing occurred between 1525 and 1528, and which he thinks refers to one of the Spanish vessels under the command of Don Alvaro de Saavedra. It speaks of the captain as a white man, who had his sister with him.

"As they were sailing along, approaching the land, the vessel struck at the Pali of Keel, and was broken to pieces by the surf, and the foreigner and his sister swam ashore and were saved, but the greater part of the crew perished perhaps; that is not well ascertained. . . . The strangers cohabited with the Hawaiians and had children, and they became ancestors of some of the Hawaiian people, and also of some chiefs" (p. 107).

A chant, which is referred to about the middle of the seventeenth century, speaks very definitely of a visit paid by one Kualii to a country where white men dwelt who spoke a strange language. Mr. Fornander believes "that some Spanish galleons, passing by the islands, picked up Kualii while out fishing, carried him to Acapulco, and took him back on the return trip." We give a few lines of this chant as a specimen of such compositions.

"O Kahiki,* land of the far-reaching ocean,
Land where Olopana dwelt!
Within is the land,† outside is the sun;
Indistinct is the sun and the land when approaching.

Perhaps you have seen it?

I have seen it.

I have surely seen Kahiki.

A land with a strange language is Kahiki.

The men of Kahiki have ascended up

The backbone of heaven;

And up there they trample indeed,

And look down on below.

Men of our race are not in Kahiki.

One kind of men is in Kahiki—the white man" (p. 255).

If Mr. Fornander be correct in his opinion that the Hawaiian Islands were known to the Spanish navigators, of course he deprives Capt. Cook of the honour of being their discoverer. He enters somewhat fully into this subject, and, in our opinion, shows it to be at least highly probable that the discovery was made as early as 1555 by Gaetano. But we wish this were all that the volume before us does to dim the lustre of Cook's fame. We are sorry to say it does much more than deprive him of the honour of discovering the islands where he met his unhappy death. It fixes a stain upon the memory of our great navigator which we wish we could persuade ourselves he does not deserve. But we cannot.

* A general term for all foreign lands outside the Hawaiian group.

† Indicating that the land was to the eastward of the voyager.

It is not our intention to enter at length into the melancholy story of Cook's visit to Hawaii, his reception by the people as their god Lono, the religious rites which they offered to him as such, or his tragic end when, in the fatal fray, they discovered that he was not a god. The people received him and his crews with the utmost good-will, and exhibited towards them boundless hospitality, which was ill requited on the part of our countrymen. They manifested very little gratitude to the people for all they did for them; but, when provisions ran short and the natives could not supply their visitors with their accustomed bounty, the imperious Englishmen considered themselves badly treated.

Much has been written of late years about the decrease of the native population of the Hawaiian Islands. Capt. Cook and his men are mainly to blame for this. When they first arrived in the islands, Cook appears to have tried to keep some check upon the vicious indulgence of his men. But he did not enforce his orders, although he well knew, as his own words show, what would be the consequence. Indeed, the native traditions declare that he was not without personal blame in this matter (see p. 169). As to the men, they gave unbridled licence to their lust. "The result was death and indescribable misery to the poor Hawaiians, and no wonder that the memory of Capt. Cook is not cherished among them" (p. 163).

We thank Mr. Fornander for this valuable contribution to the ancient history of the Polynesian race. S. J. WHITMEE.

Two Great Englishwomen: Elizabeth Barrett Browning and Charlotte Brontë. With an Essay on Poetry. By Peter Bayne. (Clarke.)

THERE is perhaps nothing to be more rarely met with in literature nowadays than a piece of thoroughly naïf criticism. Very few critics have at once sufficient confidence in themselves and sufficient freedom from affectation to say right out what they think. Mr. Peter Bayne is one of the exceptions; and this fact gives his work an interest which perhaps it might not derive from the intrinsic value of his critical utterances, or from the merit of the manner in which they are expressed. In the body of the book before us we do not, we confess, find much to interest. A lengthy comptendu of the work of great writers is only tolerable when it is informed by greater originality and literary charm than we are able to discover here. But the Essay on Poetry with which the book opens is a much more attractive piece of work. Mr. Bayne has, it seems, been greatly exercised by Mr. Matthew Arnold's Introduction to his Wordsworth Selections, especially by the celebrated "Criticism of Life" theory, and by Mr. Arnold's enumeration of the poets of the last two hundred years, to whom Wordsworth is, as he thinks, superior. A good many other people have also been exercised by these things, and Mr. Bayne has taken up the cudgels for them all in an enthusiastic manner which is refreshing to witness, and with a very considerable amount of success. In saying that Wordsworth

"adds less to nature than belongs to great poetry," Mr. Bayne makes a real point, though his utterance is not quite consistent with other utterances in this very essay. It seems to us, too, that another point is scored by the less famous critic in dwelling on the fact that it is precisely where Wordsworth is most critical of life—in some of his religious passages—that he is thought by the definer of poetry as consisting in such criticism to be commonplace and homiletical. The truth probably is that in this celebrated phrase Mr. Arnold hardly intended more than an argumentative exaggeration of a point of view which he wished to impress on his readers, and that he would not care to have pushed home the question whether the essence of poetry is to be found in any such thing as criticism of life. But an adverse critic is at least formally justified in taking his antagonist's expressions in their literal and grammatical sense; and Mr. Bayne in doing this has, we say, scored something of a success—certainly more than generally falls to the lot of an impar congressus. Unluckily, the intoxication of victory is rather too much for him, as it has been of old time for many other valiant sons of heroes. He tells us (and here Mr. Arnold would perhaps agree with him) that "Dryden, Pope, and Johnson are firmly and unanimously denied the distinctive glory of poets by the present generation." The word "unanimously" has been very variously construed. It generally means that the speaker does not choose to take account of dissenters. We shall only say that there are such dissenters in the present case, and that they are quite prepared on proper occasions to make their voices heard. Then Mr. Bayne ventures into the dangerous region of verbal criticism, and objects to Wordsworth because, in a famous passage, he talks about "the very pulse of the machine." This is "a touch of the dead hand," says Mr. Bayne. May we be pardoned if we say that Mr. Bayne must have been unable to get rid of the curious provincial use of "machine" north of the Tweed for what south of it is called a "trap"? To Englishmen "machine" conveys no base or prosaic associations, and certainly it has none such for readers of the classics. Again, Mr. Bayne tells us that the coarseness of Burns is "not so bad as the coarseness of Chaucer;" that English is "too stately and cold" to be as good for lyric poetry as German and Scotch; and talks about Byron's "humour." The critic who sees anything "bad" in Chaucer's charming Fabliaux must have a very remarkable vulturine faculty. The condemnation of the language of Shakspeare and a score of seventeenth-century writers, of Blake, and Shelley, and Coleridge, of Mr. Tennyson and Mr. Swinburne, as even by comparison unfit for lyric poetry, is sufficiently amusing. But Byron's "humour" caps the climax. "The noble poet," as Mr. Bayne calls him with an affectionate reminiscence of an attitude commoner seventy years ago than now, had plenty of wit; but, as for humour, we fear that anyone who talks about Byron's humour shows most conclusively that he himself is quite destitute of the precious quality. However, though Mr. Bayne has occasionally tumbled over his own weapons in the contest, he has, as we have said, sufficiently triumphed over his adversary, and stands Colossus-wise waving his beam over the pashed corpse of the "criticism of life." Into his examination of his "Two Great Englishwomen" we shall not follow him farther than to notice an odd difficulty which he has made about a phrase in Jane Eyre. The novelist talks about "the garments pendent from the port-manteau," and Mr. Bayne adds, in a note, that he quotes from the edition of 1875, but he does not see how garments can be pendent from a portmanteau. Now, as he himself has commented (and very sensibly) upon the great influence of Charlotte's Brussels stay on her style and expression, it is odd that he should not have thought of the primary and proper sense of portmanteau (or rather porte-manteau) in its own language. This is a sort of rudimentary wardrobe—a wooden arrangement of pegs to hang up dresses upon. Charlotte Brontë, no doubt, used the word as she would have used it in Brussels. Mr. Bayne's remarks on the poems of the sisters are good, but it is singular that he should not, unless we have overlooked his mention, notice Emily's masterpiece, the incomparable Remembrance. Perhaps he thought it "too cold and stately."

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

NEW NOVELS.

Fixed as Fate. By Mrs. Houston, Author of "Recommended to Mercy," &c. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Confessions of a Frivolous Girl. Edited by Robert Grant. (Sampson Low & Co.)

The Brides of Ardmore: a Story of Irish Life. By Agnes Smith. Author of "Effie Maxwell," &c. (Elliot Stock.)

The Lutaniste of St. Jacobi's: a Tale. By Catherine Drew, Author of "Harry Chalmers' Legacy," &c. (Marcus Ward & Co.)

Jacob's Ladder. By Barbara Wordsworth. (Wyman & Sons.)

An Outlying Hamlet. By the Author of "An Elder Sister," &c. (Bemrose & Sons.)

MRS. HOUSTON writes in a pleasant and agreeable vein, and one can enjoy her style without the least feeling of ennui. But we had not proceeded very far in Fixed as Fate before we were aware of the little social imbroglio that was impending. The charming heroine, Miss Ethel Bassett, is in love with General Philip Meredyth. There is no blame attaching to her for this, for he is a fine, handsome fellow, whose mental characteristics are equal to his physical; but, unfortunately, his late wife—for he is a widower—was sister to Ethel! Here is let loose upon us at once the whole Deceased Wife's Sister Question. We sympathise with the pretty Ethel (as we are bound to do with every attractive heroine), but doubly so because we agree with her on the momentous question which threatens to shipwreck both her life and her lover's. But what we cannot understand is that she should allow a vote in Parliament to act as a moral thermometer. So long as the Legislature refuses to pass a law allowing a man to marry his deceased wife's sister she feels that her love is wrong and unmaidenly, and against the dictates of nature; but with such a law passed all would be changed. She is on the Continent when Meredyth telegraphs to her that the Bill has been lost in the House of Commons by six. Now if seven more members had only attended and voted in the affirmative, all her scruples would have been silenced, and the love which she could not extinguish would have been a hallowed thing. However, to come to the story itself, we may admit at once that we have been much interested in it, notwithstanding its special object and the fact that it contains also not a few polemical passages in which the Ritualists and the Roman Catholics come off very badly. Mr. Ripley, the Ritualistic priest, is, to say the least, an extremely shady personage, and we heartily rejoice to see him unmasked. It seems unnecessary, however, for the author to have made Ethel pledge herself to Paul Wingrove merely for the purpose of endeavouring to hide and stifle her love for Philip. The novel does not close with a marriage, for the two chief characters are left in expectancy in consequence of the rejection of the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill. Mrs. Houston gives a good many quotations from well-known authors as the headings to her chapters, but whenever this is done it is as well that the quotations should be accurate. The author of Festus, for example, does not spell his name Bayley; neither does Tennyson, in In Memoriam, say,

"O yet we trust that, somehow, good
Will be the final goal of all."

The word is ill, and the context will show why. Again, Miss Bassett is made to say: "He that is down," I have read, "can fall no lower." What she was doubtless thinking of was Bunyan's line: "He that is down needs fear no fall."

From the title-page of the second novel on our list we learn that Mr. Grant is also the author of a work entitled The Little Tin Gods-on-Wheels. Not having seen this latter work, we are unable to tell what Mr. Grant's little tin gods are like; but there is an unconscionable amount of another kind of metal in his new heroine, the "Frivolous Girl," and that metal is "brass." The author describes the present novel as "a story of fashionable life." It professedly depicts American society, and, if the picture be true, all we can say is that the descriptions in Dickens and other writers, which have frequently been regarded as libels, are very far under the mark. It is amazing to us how Mr. Grant could spend so much time in relating the worthless career of the Yankee belle, Miss Alice Palmer. In telling of her friendship for one whom she regarded as her dearest friend, she observes that "within a week she called me 'a hateful thing,' and I—it makes me blush to recal it now—stuck out my tongue at her, and walked away, tittering, arm-in-arm with fascinating Gwendolen Hochheimer." Alice is lectured as follows by one Mrs. Gatling Gunn:—

"Chic is what you need. If a girl wants to be a genuine success, it is her duty to walk as if she were a great deal handsomer than she is, and then people will think her handsomer than she is. You will excuse me, I know, if I say that you walk and hold yourself twenty-five per cent.

'off' your looks, instead of fifty per cent. in advance, as you ought to do. . . . The modest blush and the downcast eye become a girl charmingly for the first two weeks of her career, but after that period they are simply gaucheries. To affect the ingénue is quite another matter, and as different from what I refer to as champagne is from seltzer."

It is long since we met with a book—if, indeed, this is not entirely by itself—which credited our fair American cousins with so much vulgarity and so many little petty intrigues.

The Brides of Ardmore is a semi-historical novel in one volume, and it is much better, from the literary point of view, than many longer and more pretentious works. We have called it "semi-historical," and yet, from the author's brief Preface, it would appear that she claims for it a wholly historical basis. She states that the notes which form the substance of the story were found among the records of the nunnery at Kilcheechan, on the banks of the Suir, opposite the city of Waterford. These notes were in the handwriting of Grainné Ni-Carthy, one of the characters in the novel, only a few additions being from the pen of another.

"Considering the opportunities enjoyed by that fair matron for studying the characters and motives of her young companions, as well as indirectly through them of their husbands, the editress thinks herself fortunate in having become possessed of the record of a state of things now so completely passed away."

It is not our business to discuss how much of the work is based upon actual history or how much is merely legendary; but we can bear witness that, so far as we are able to judge from collateral sources of information, the author has presented us with a very vivid and truthful picture of Irish life in the twelfth century. The narrative is very interesting, and the close very pathetic and tragic. Ardal O'Brien is a fine character, and he appears all the more striking and noble when contrasted with his rival, Fergus, who is chiefly noticeable for his duplicity. The latter can, however, on occasion talk in the Ossian vein, as in his florid speech to the sons of Declan. Grainné herself, who leaves the materials for the story behind her, is "not happy," like Mr. Toole; but her case is not so hard as that of Mòr, one of the brides, who is grossly deceived by Fergus O'Flannahan. Sorcha, the other bride, is a charming character, excellently drawn. The author has supplied a tolerably full list of historical appendices for the purpose of elucidating certain points in her story; and, on the whole, we may congratulate her upon having accomplished her task with praiseworthy skill.

In The Lutaniste of St. Jacobi's, Miss Drew has not followed the conventional lines of the novelist, but has mixed with the charm of her story a good deal of solid information respecting German lutes and organs of the seventeenth century, Mechlin lace, organ stops, church music, &c.—all which may be a weariness to the flesh to the ordinary reader of Mudie's. But, in spite of this, we have found her tale very interesting. The painful history of George Neumark, the distinguished Hamburg musician, with his many years of semi-starvation and utter lack of recognition, is graphically told. The narrative is lightened somewhat by the love passages between himself and the pretty, but frivolous, Barbara Etterlein; and we are glad when he finds at last a haven of rest in the heart of his noble and far more worthy pupil, Janotha Tielke. His career, which was a very remarkable one, has a happy ending. We also get attractive glimpses of Simon Dach, the learned Professor at Königsberg, and Neumark's preceptor. The life of the hero well exemplifies the author's observations that "the world, which is quick to reward success, is terrible to punish failure. Fortune then (in the seventeenth century), as she does to-day, only crowns those who conquer her." Miss Drew shows no mean faculty in tracing the meanderings of the love passion. "When a woman is utterly indifferent," she remarks, "or, worse still, rather despises a man who adores her, it is not possible for him to do right in her eyes. The more he tries, the greater is his blunder. He can no more help doing stupid things than she can help being irritated by his manner of doing them." We can only hope that every lover may be as completely disillusioned by his fickle and cruel fair one as George Neumark was by Barbara.

Jacob's Ladder is a volume of short stories which reflect great credit upon the literary powers of Miss Wordsworth. We do not see the reason for the title, unless we are to understand that the lessons inculcated are intended as successive steps leading to the higher life. But the title is a matter of little consequence. The stories themselves are exceedingly good, one or two being especially graphic and finely told. There is a strange burden of sadness over almost all, which would have been relieved if the author had possessed in addition to her other gifts the faculty of humour. But we think no one could read the beautiful story "Gladys," for example, without being struck with Miss Wordsworth's power in pathetic narrative. Yet the story itself is very slight. The heroine, Gladys, is beloved by one James Evered Martyn, to whom, on the eve of his departure for China, she plights her troth. After some years he returns, when she finds, as she believes, that she does not love him. She discovers her terrible mistake, however, when he has once more put the wide sea between them and she is left to pine in unavailing regret. A second re-union takes place at last, which is well told. There is another peculiar tale, "Coming," with a touch of the weird in it that would have commended it to Nathaniel Hawthorne. Two lovers, who have dreamt the same strange dream before coming together, are married. The dream was to the effect that they had been upon a burning vessel at sea, in a terrible storm, and had been engulfed by the waves. The girl had said to someone she saw in her dream, "I am coming." This was her future husband. After marriage, man and wife emigrate for Australia, but they are lost in the manner depicted in the dream. The ship Alcestis takes fire, and a boy saw them on the burning deck of the vessel just before they were lost to sight for ever.

"Husband or wife stirred not. Edgar turned a look of unutterable tenderness on his dear companion's face. She lifted her hand, and her lips moved. When she had spoken, Edgar raised his eyes to heaven, and on both their faces shone a solemn, awful light (not born of the outward fire), such as the boy had never seen till then. Had she not, doubtless, said the 'It is coming, Alfred'?"

"Ru" and "A. E. I." are also very strange, but singularly attractive, stories. If Miss Wordsworth could preserve the same characteristics in a novel with a larger canvas, she could not fail to make a considerable mark in fiction. We ought to add that the present collection of stories is interspersed with musical illustrations by Mr. Arthur Henry Brown which, so far as we are able to judge, are worthy of the text.

An Outlying Hamlet is a slight but not unpleasing story, relating the experiences of a long winter in the village of Chalkhill. The author has chosen for her motto the well-known words, "Noblesse Oblige," and the narrative pointedly enforces the moral. The sketch of Lord Eustace is very good. Instead of being the lackadaisical, effeminate aristocrat he is generally supposed, with no care for the souls or bodies of his father's miserable tenants, when an epidemic falls upon Chalkhill he shows himself capable of great energy and self-sacrifice. By his benevolent efforts he undermines a not very strong constitution, and succumbs, in consequence, to an accident whose effects would have been only slight under other circumstances. But his death is the means of working a transformation in some of the uncouth and godless villagers.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

India in 1880. By Sir Richard Temple. (Murray.) Sir Richard Temple is indefatigable. In the course of a single year he has governed the Presidency of Bombay, fought a contested election in England, and composed this large volume. Its interest is not so much in what it says, as in the man who says it. We have here the representative member of the Indian Service, whom none can surpass either "on tour" or at the desk, and who has held a greater variety of appointments than Lord John Russell. If physical energy, talents for business, and readiness with the pen could make a great man, Sir R. Temple might claim to rank with Hastings or with Lawrence. But, despite these qualities, a certain something is lacking, which makes all the difference between the statesman and the official. Nothing can be abler than this exposition of the state of India at the present time. No living man knows more about the circumstances of the country. Few have a more ready or graphic pen. Yet here, again, we miss the spark of genius that turns ink and paper into an imperishable book. Instead of an historical document, we have an "administration report" on a large scale. This criticism is suggested by the reflection that the book might easily have been made much better, and much shorter, than it is. Encyclopaedic knowledge is always distrusted; and, if a man has anything of value to say, it must be worth his while to think twice about his manner of saying it. Not that Sir R. Temple's style is positively bad; it is simply careless, and offends by its assumption of literary effect. The contents of the book may be best described as officialism of the best kind—i.e., as tempered by a wide experience and liberal sympathies. One who has taken such a leading part in the administration during the past eighteen years must inevitably be a laudator of that which he has done. But, when addressing an English audience, Sir R. Temple knows the way to balance his phrases, and express that doubtfulness in official infallibility which all Anglo-Indians feel at heart. Though there is no regular Opposition in India, a healthy spirit of criticism on many questions is abroad, and the unofficial point of view has always had able representatives. If we could only forget who wrote it, this sketch of India in 1880 is an exhaustive repertory of facts and opinions.

Our Public Schools. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) Perhaps nothing in English life has been more significant during the past thirty years than the extraordinary and uninterrupted development of the public school system. The older institutions, with but a single exception, have been filled to overflowing; while their newly established rivals press close upon their heels in numbers, in efficiency, and in reputation. During the same period of time, if judged by the criterion of success at the universities, the public schools have distinctly retrograded. But it is evident that nothing will remove the prejudice of the upper middle-classes in favour of a barrack education, by which parental responsibility is transferred, or rather abolished. We admit that, by superhuman efforts on the part of the masters, the evils of the system are at present kept down to a minimum; but it is not within the limits of nature that these efforts shall be permanently maintained. In the long run a school must be what the boys make it; and every man who honestly recalls his own boyhood knows what that will be. The book before us consists of a series of descriptive sketches of the seven best-known schools of England. Hardly one of the sketches is favourable. But the blame does not lie with the writer, or even with the school, but with the system. It is a thankless task to point out that each school and each head-master in turn falls short of the ideal standard, below which the vices of the system are admitted to be greater than its virtues. Some of the schools have a noble past; all have much historical interest; but their present condition is scarcely a fit subject for detailed criticism. The system, we feel sure, cannot be modified in the way suggested in the concluding pages of this book. A school must be either a boarding-school or a day-school. It cannot possess the distinctive qualities of both. Happy is the father who has a day-school within his reach!

A Short Manual of the History of India; with an Account of India as it is. By Roper Lethbridge. With Maps. (Macmillan.) If a manual is ever pardonable, the exception may be made in favour of India. The ignorance generally prevailing about that country is so great, and the political importance of dispelling some of that ignorance is so pressing, that we welcome any attempt to induce Englishmen to read about things Indian. At the same time, no task could be more difficult than to condense into a small volume the manifold affairs of so vast an empire. As far as regards his descriptive introduction, we think that Mr. Lethbridge has succeeded fairly well. He is accurate in his facts, he has preserved the proportions of things, and he is entirely free from the vice of word-painting. He describes India not as a traveller of the last century would do, impressed by the novelty and tropical colour of the scene, but like a modern administrator whose daily life is spent in looking the ugly facts in the face. We regret that we cannot speak so favourably of the historical or main portion of the book. Mr. Lethbridge has here adopted a baldness of style that is meant to be simple but has become repulsive; nor has he entirely avoided the fault of making allusions which cannot be intelligible to one in a hundred of his readers. Whether it be that his literary powers have been corrupted by his official duties in connexion with the vernacular press, or perchance that he has entrusted some part of the work to his attendant babu, the result is most unfortunate. He must know that nothing happens in history "of course," not even the victory of a British army; and that, in historical narrative, sentences should not be introduced by such particles as "now" and "so."

L'Athos: Notes d'une Excursion à la Presqu'île et à la Montagne des Moines, by the Abbé Neyrat, is a pleasantly written account of one of the most remarkable communities in Europe. It does not pretend to be more than a sketch, and there are inaccuracies here and there both in names and in descriptions of places and customs. It is a mistake, for instance, to speak of the heads of any of the Athos monasteries as archimandrites, for that is a Russian title, and is not found in the Byzantine Church; and it implies rather a limited knowledge of the history of the Eastern Empire to speak of a community as having been founded by Comnène de Trebizonde. But anyone who likes to wander for a few hours in the midst of romantic and beautiful scenes, where a life closely resembling that of the Middle Ages is enacted, and to hear, in passing, of views of life and religion and modes of thought strongly contrasted with his own, will find satisfaction in reading it. The interest of the book is increased by the illustrations, which enable the reader to realise more easily both the scenery and the buildings. The writer observes well, and has recorded his impressions of a great variety of objects. In particular he notices what is a leading feature in the architecture of the Athos churches—the richness and multiplicity of the lines of the interior, and what he calls a "luxu d'ornementation," the effect of all which is to give dignity and repose to buildings of small dimensions. His religious point of view is that of an intelligent Roman Catholic ecclesiastic, who admires the antiquity in rites and conservatism in doctrines which he meets with, but regrets that the Greeks have cut themselves off by schism from his own Church, and have thereby lost the benefit of what he regards as the element of progressiveness "which always places the Catholic Church in the van of civilisation." His scepticism about the relics in the monasteries, in comparison with those of the Latin Church, "to guarantee the authenticity of which such precautions have been taken," is even a little comical. At the same time his comments throughout are respectful and sympathetic. M. Neyrat ascended to the peak of Mount Athos, and has described the superb view which it commands. It appears from his account that, notwithstanding signs of poverty in some of the monasteries owing to the loss of the properties which they possessed—or, to speak more accurately, of which they had the administration—in Moldo-Wallachia, and which was resumed, or, as some would say, confiscated, by the Government of those principalities about 1862, the number of the monks is not decreasing. At the same time the proportion of Russian monks in the peninsula is larger than formerly, though they still form only a small minority of the whole community.

Essays of Joseph Addison. Chosen and Edited by J. R. Green. "Golden Treasury Series." (Macmillan.) With great judgment Mr. Green has refrained from encumbering his selection with any of Addison's disquisitions on politics or speculations in theology. His political and religious essays came home to people who would not have been touched by the treatises of bishops or the pamphlets of statesmen, but their day has long since perished. The world does not need now to be informed of the importance of the Glorious Revolution of 1688, and it has long left behind the milestone of religious belief at which Addison had arrived. The charm of his writings lies in his ever-delightful essays on Sir Roger de Coverley, and in his satires on the fashions and foibles of life in town and country. It would be difficult to extract from the volumes of the Tatler or the Spectator any better specimens of the genius of Addison than have been selected by Mr. Green. No fair objection can be brought against him on that score; nor will the pages of introduction which he has prefixed to his selection be found to be other than a pleasant and harmonious preface to the essays of Addison, if the reader can bring himself to overlook the geographical confusion contained in the sentence which speaks of the "brutalised colliers at Ringwood before Wesley." This little volume is intended for readers of both sexes; and, as a knowledge of Latin has not yet extended to all women, it would have been judicious if Mr. Green had, for their sakes, if not for his male readers', supplied translations of the quotations from classical writers which Addison embodied in his writings.

The Book of Eminent Scotsmen. Compiled and Arranged by Joseph Irving. (Paisley: Alexander Gardner.) The best thing about Mr. Irving's new compilation is the modesty of the Preface. Deprecating severe criticism, he says:—"The compiler is hopeful that his book—the only one of its class—will be found useful. That it will be found nearly perfect he can hardly assume; but, on examining it carefully, students or critics who know something about the labour involved in such productions may think not unkindly of the number and variety of the names included, in comparison with what may have been omitted through oversight or ignorance." The criticism which Mr. Irving, therefore, invites is that of pointing out blunders that he has made. Unfortunately, such comes too readily to the pen. His work is marked by haste in preparation, slovenliness of style, and want of proportion between the "eminence" of the "subjects" and the length of the notices. To begin with, we can see no good reason for encumbering the first edition of a work of reference with a list of "additions." We come, moreover, every third page, on such loose English as "Irving, Rev. Edward, son of a farmer in the burgh of Annan, where the great preacher was born;" "Sir William and Lady Hamilton materially assisted Nelson in the pursuit of French fleet to Aboukir," and "voted for reform and national education." As specimens of the second class of blunders may be taken such statements as that the Sir William Hamilton mentioned above was born in 1780, and died in 1803; while we have two biographies of the late Mr. William Jenkins, who was killed with Cavagnari in Cabul, the one in the body of the work, and the other in the "additions," which leave us in doubt whether he was born in 1846 or 1849. Possibly Mr. Irving's printer rather than himself is to blame for "Roseberry" instead of "Rosebery;" and perhaps this statement about the death of "Sylvester Otway" Oswald in Paris should be allowed to pass on account of the "comic horror" attaching to it—"Oswald was killed there early in the war, probably by his own men, who chafed under the severity of his discipline." Finally, were it not that, as Sir William Harcourt has recently reminded us, a joke is a serious matter in Scotland, we should almost be inclined to say, from the prominence and space allotted to certain "worthies," that Mr. Irving uses the phrase "eminent Scotsmen" ironically, as the French speak of homme éminent. Otherwise how comes it that while provincial notabilities—not to say nobodies—are treated to columns of eulogy, Mr. Carlyle receives scant notice, and Mr. Gladstone in effect no notice at all? Still we are bound to say that the book may be made a useful one with fresh and careful editing, that it contains nearly 3,000 names, and that the type is excellent.

Brain: a Journal of Neurology, manages to combine with a subject-matter that is largely technical, and interesting only to the student of nervous disorders, a mode of treatment which lifts it out of the run of specialist journals. The current number, though more technical than some others, contains two articles which should be read by every student of psychology who is desirous of being abreast with the latest conceptions of the mechanism of nerve-action. Dr. J. Hughlings Jackson, one of the editors, who is distinguished by his large philosophical views no less than by his shrewd scientific insight, discourses, in connexion with the subject of certain forms of temporary paralysis, on the relations of the functions and disorders of function of the higher and the lower centres in the light of Mr. Spencer's doctrine of evolution. His insistence on a consistent materialistic explanation of the facts of nervous disease as opposed to a fictitious "psychological" explanation; his more precise definition and extension of the idea of paralysis in accordance with a general conception of its nature and causes; his way of accounting for the difference between sudden wide-spreading and slow and circumscribed discharge (convulsion) and consequent exhaustion (paralysis)—all this shows the writer at his best, and is an excellent illustration of the scientific precision which is already possible in handling the difficult mechanical problems of nervous action. The other article referred to is from the pen of Dr. Francis Warner, and gives some very interesting facts respecting the relation of the different kinds of movements generally known as "expressional" to varying conditions of nervous disease. As a sample of the suggestive remarks to be found here we may take the following:—

"From direct observation it appears to me that intellectuality is represented by the movements of the eyeballs in their orbits. When an individual, in looking at an object, moves the eyes by the action of the recti muscles so as to direct them towards it, the movement is more intellectual than when the head is turned so as to direct the eyes in the required direction. A bright, healthy, well-developed infant turns its eyes well in the orbits in looking about; not so a dull, wasted child."

The Starry Blossom, and other Stories, by M. Betham-Edwards (Marshall, Japp and Co.), are pretty and mostly pathetic little stories. The effect of one or two is, however, somewhat marred by a mixture of the fanciful and the real—as, for instance, the first. This is the story of a child who is devoted to her guardian, an old botanist, and who watches with unceasing faith for the growth of a seed supposed to have been brought by a meteorite. The flower at length blooms, and in some mysterious way comforts the girl after the death of her guardian. Instead of ending here, as might have been expected, the story goes on to tell how the old man's plot was bought by the neighbouring town for botanical gardens, and how the girl and an old servant became the keepers.

Labour and Victory: a Book of Examples for those who would learn. By Alexander H. Japp. (Marshall, Japp and Co.) Under this heading Dr. Japp has collected a series of miscellaneous biographical sketches, most of which have already appeared in the magazines. The first is Outram, than whom no nobler example could be chosen by "those who would learn." Of the other names, the best-known are Bishop Selwyn, Sir Titus Salt, and Sir James Simpson. Speaking for ourselves, the chief interest is supplied by Friedrich Albrecht Augusti, of whom we cannot pretend to have heard before. He was a Jew, born at Frankfort-on-the-Oder towards the end of the seventeenth century. Having been converted to Christianity, he suffered much persecution, but finally settled down as pastor of a little village near Gotha for nearly fifty years. Dr. Japp's facile pen has done a real service in redeeming from obscurity this curious episode of German life.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. LECKY has completed for publication the third volume of his History of England in the Eighteenth Century.

MESSRS. LONGMANS have in the press the first two volumes of Mr. S. R. Gardiner's Fall of the Monarchy of Charles I. The first volume takes up the story with the Star Chamber proceedings against Prynne, Burton, and Bastwick in the summer of 1637, and carries it down to the opening of the Long Parliament. The second volume is devoted to the history of the Long Parliament down to the beginning of the Civil War. The author has had before him a considerable quantity of new material, especially in the despatches of foreign ambassadors. He has thus been enabled to trace out the intrigues of the Court more thoroughly than has hitherto been done, though there is much which still remains unknown. Another feature of the work is the pains taken to give a full account of the two political parties which were opposed to one another first in Parliament and then on the field of battle.

We learn that Mr. Linley Sambourne has undertaken to prepare for Messrs. Macmillan & Co. an illustrated edition of Kingsley's Water Babies, which will be published in the course of the autumn.

THE same publishers have in the press a romance, entitled John Inglesant, by Mr. J. H. Shorthouse, which was privately printed lately in Birmingham, and has been noticed in some London papers. The full title will convey some idea of its contents. It runs thus:—"Memoirs of the Life of John Inglesant, sometime Servant to King Charles I.; with an account of his birth, education, and training by the Jesuits, and a particular relation of the secret services in which he was engaged, especially in connexion with the late Irish Rebellion; with several other remarkable passages and occurrences. Also, a History of his religious doubts and experiences, and of the Molinists or Quietists in Italy, in which country he resided for many years; with an account of the Election of the late Pope, and many other events and affairs."

THE Right. Hon. G. Shaw-Lefevre's collected essays on English and Irish Land Questions will be published next week by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co.

THE first volume of a History of Ireland by Mr. Standish O'Grady will shortly be published by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. It will form a critical examination of early Irish history, with the object of determining what is mythical and what reliable.

A NEW novel, entitled Beside the River, by Mrs. Macquoid, author of Patty, &c., will be published in March, by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett, in three volumes. The same publishers will also issue immediately His Little Mother, and other Tales and Sketches, by the author of John Halifax, in one volume.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH AND FARRAN will publish shortly The Life of a Soul: an Allegory, illustrated by Sister Emma of Clewer, a small volume of poems and pictures.

MR. CARLYLE'S Reminiscences, edited by Mr. J. A. Froude, are announced for publication to-day. They will be issued in two volumes, the contents of the first being "James Carlyle, of Ecclefechan, and Edward Irving," and of the second, "Lord Jeffery and Jane Welsh Carlyle," with an Appendix on Southey and Wordsworth.

MR. REGINALD STUART POOLE will give a course of lectures on "Epochs of Greek Influence" at the Chelsea Vestry Hall, beginning Wednesday, March 2, at half-past four. The subjects are:—The Greek World from the Persian Wars to Alexander; Alexander; Ptolemy Philadelphus; Cleopatra; Marcus Aurelius; Athanasius.

MR. SECRETARY EWARTS has advised the United States Government to purchase Benjamin Franklin's original papers, which are for sale, for the sum of £4,000.

MR. J. FORBES-ROBERTSON is writing a sketch of Mdme. Modjeska for the March number of Colburn's New Monthly, which will contain a portrait of the actress, and also portraits of Ellen Terry and Mrs. Osgood.

THE Rev. William Houghton will give the first of two lectures on "The Picture Origin of the Cuneiform Characters," on Thursday next (March 3), at the Royal Institution.

THE second and concluding volume of Prosper Mérimée's Letters to Panizzi, containing a portrait of the great librarian, will be published on March 4.

A CENTENARY reproduction of Lessing's Nathan der Weise has been published at Berlin by Carl Robert Lessing, a descendant of the poet. Three editions of the play, which appeared in 1779, have formed the basis of the new texts. The type, paper, and binding of the new edition are splendid, and worthy of the work. Lessing died on February 15, 1781, and this memorial edition of his greatest work is dated February 15, 1881.

MACAULAY'S Speech on Jewish Emancipation, delivered in the House of Commons on April 17, 1833, has just appeared at Frankfurt in a German translation.

THE Camden Society have agreed to join the Early English Text Society in bringing out Mr. Sidney J. Herrtage's largely annotated edition of the Early English-Latin Dictionary in a Northern dialect known as the Catholicon Anglicum, and dated 1483. The book forms the second volume of the Dictionary Series of the Early English Text Society, and as it is also the natural complement of the Promptorium Parvulorum edited for the Camden Society by Mr. Way, the latter society has availed itself of the Early English Text Society's offer to join in the undertaking. The earlier sheets have been reprinted for the purpose, the work is in type to S. and Mr. Herrtage has all his "copy" ready. His notes are admirably full, and are almost all fresh material, as he has avoided, whenever possible, the passages quoted by Stratmann, &c.

THE Visitors' Register of the University of Oxford, which gives a full account of the Puritan visitation of the university, and which has been edited for the Camden Society by Prof. Montagu Burrows, is now in the binders' hands. As the book is likely to be of special interest to members of the university, the Council has had a few extra copies printed, which will be obtainable by non-subscribers at the price of 21s. upon application to Messrs. Nichols, 25 Parliament Street, S.W. The volume contains about six hundred pages.

PROF. SKEAT hopes to finish the words of his Etymological English Dictionary in about two months from this time. Then will come the list of roots and the words grouped under each, the Index of affixes, with their derivations, and the Corrections and Additions, &c.

MESSRS. MAISONNEUVE AND Co., of Paris, have just issued, as the first volume of their new folk-lore series entitled "Littératures populaires de toutes les Nations," M. Paul Sébillot's Littérature orale de la Haute-Bretagne; Contes populaires, Chansons avec la Musique notée; Devinettes et Formulaires; Proverbes et Dictions. This work is a valuable supplement to the author's Contes populaires de la Haute-Bretagne published last year, and a most important contribution to French folk-lore. It forms a charmingly printed and neatly bound volume, in the format of the Bibliothèque Elzévirienne.

DR. J. J. JUSSERAND is preparing a second edition of his History of the Theatre in England before the Time of Shakspeare.

PROF. B. TEN BRINK's German History of Early-English Literature is really to be translated, after all the delays that have occurred. Messrs. Leypoldt and Holt, of New York, and Messrs. George Bell and Sons, of London, have undertaken the book together, and we may hope for its appearance soon. There is no so thorough book on the subject now in England.

WE mentioned some weeks ago the number of spellings, about three hundred, that had been noted of the word "cushions" in early wills, &c. Since then Mr. Chaloner Smith, of the Probate Office Reading-Room, has re-counted his list, with all the latest additions, and finds that the number of spellings is 593. We give, as specimens, four that turned up in the Inventories in the course of half-an-hour: qwheshngis, cwyschens (A.D. 1551), coysshyns (1535), cosschens. Four others, in another half-hour, were "chusshons, chosshons, coysshons, cosschons." The lists of debts due to a testator are not classified as "good" and "bad," but as "sperat dettes" and "desperat dettes."

SUBSCRIBERS to the new edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica will have observed that some of the articles are announced to be copyright in the United States, and some to be copyright in Canada. We regret to hear that Messrs. Black have recently failed to enforce their claim to a Canada copyright. The ninth volume of the Encyclopædia, containing Mr. G. Saintsbury's article on "French Literature" and another on "Fisheries," both of which articles were duly entered in the office of the Minister of Agriculture according to the provisions of the Dominion Act of Parliament, was reprinted in Philadelphia and introduced into Canada. Messrs. Black forthwith obtained an injunction at Quebec against the Philadelphia publisher, but this injunction was dissolved by the Superior Court on the ground that the remedy sought for was inapplicable to the case; and the same view has been taken by the Court of Appeal.

THE firm of Engelmann, of Leipzig, announces as forthcoming a work on Aramaic plant-names, by Immanuel Löw. It will be dedicated to the veteran Orientalist, Prof. L. Fleischer, on the occasion of his eightieth birthday.

AMONG eccentric visitors to Parisian libraries, a French paper mentions a monomaniac who frequented the Arsenal library for twenty years for the sole purpose of reading and re-reading Paul and Virginia. He knew the tale by heart, and recited it on summer evenings as he paced to and fro in the Jardin des Plantes. When M. Victor Massé's opera was brought out at the Gaieté, he was present in the theatre, but left before the end of the first act, exclaiming, "Your music spoils the whole thing!"

MESSRS. BERGER-LEVRAULT have published a French translation of Commandant De la Llave y Garcia's work on the operations among the mountains during the last Carlist insurrection in Catalonia (1872-75).

MR. T. H. S. ESCOTT'S England is being translated into French by M. René de Lubersac, M. Dreyfous will be the publisher.

THE Nation announces that Messrs. Harper have in the press an Encyclopaedia of English and American Poetry by the late Epes Sargent, of Boston.

MR. W. H. OVERALL, the librarian to the Corporation of London, read a very interesting paper on Proclamations and Broadside before the last meeting of the Library Association. He pointed out that a large number of these documents, some in MS. and others in print, existed in the British Museum and other libraries, and suggested that a printed index, describing the character of the whole of these collections, would be of great value for historical students. The earliest known proclamation in English was issued in 1258; the earliest printed English broadside is dated in 1513.

OUR readers will have noticed from the papers that a Bill for the amending and consolidation of the existing laws relating to free libraries has been introduced into Parliament. It is proposed to simplify and improve the system of voting now in use, and to give power to the ratepayers of a rural parish to amalgamate for the purposes of the Act with those of an adjacent urban district. The accounts of all free libraries are to be submitted to the House of Commons once a year.

FROM the report of the Liverpool Free Public Library for the past year (Henry Greenwood) we have compiled the following statistics:—In the reference library the total number of volumes is 72,406, and the total number of volumes issued during the year was 577,772, or just 2,000 volumes a-day. Striking an average, each volume was issued about eight times, but each volume of prose fiction was issued about fifty times. In the two lending libraries the total number of volumes is 43,285, and the total number of volumes lent during the year was 436,415. In this case, each volume on an average was lent ten times, and prose fiction contributed just three-fourths of all the volumes lent. The Report of the Wigan Free Library (Strowger) is chiefly noticeable as showing the effect of Sunday opening. The hours on that day are from two to nine, during which 10,472 persons attended the news-room, and 220 the reference department.

M. TAINE'S third volume of his great work on the French Revolution is now in the press. It will be entitled La Conquête jacobine.

THE French papers announce the publication of the correspondence between Talleyrand and Louis XVIII. at the time of the Congress of Vienna. The editor is M. Pallain, an official in the Finance Department.

WE learn from the Revue Critique that M. Ph. Tamizey de Larroque has just brought out, with the publishing house of Vic, a hitherto unpublished work of the abbé Jean-Jacques Boileau, entitled Relation abrégée de la Vie et des Sentiments de feu Madame la duchesse de Luynes.

THE first volume has appeared of the Bibliografia romana: Notizie della Vita e delle Opere degli Scrittori romani dal Secolo XI. fino ai nostri Giorni (Roma: Botta). The work has been undertaken by a committee, under the editorship of M. Narducci, the Librarian of the Biblioteca Alessandrina.

At the meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions at Belles-Lettres on the 11th inst., M. d'Arbois de Jubainville read a paper on the Ogham alphabet, in which he attempted to derive the word from Ogmios, the Celtic god of power and of eloquence.

THE report of the death of Cesaro Cantù, which we contradicted in our last number, arose in the following curious way. A newspaper published in French, at Milan, commenced a paragraph thus:—"Sur la tombe ouverte de Cantù, . . ." referring to a tomb that had been opened a few days before at an obscure village of this name in Lombardy. The French papers, not inexcusably, took up the phrase, and manufactured it into a piece of news.

IN the ACADEMY of November 30, 1878, when dealing with the parentage and family of Philip Massinger, the dramatist, whose father, Arthur, was in Lord Pembroke's service, we expressed the hope that search among the Wilton archives might throw light on the matter, and we stated that the present Lord Pembroke "had kindly promised Mr. Furnivall to have search made." The latter gentleman is now informed that on a late visit of an Historical MSS. Commissioner to Wilton, the whole of Lord Pembroke's muniments were carefully gone through by the Commissioner and Mr. Nightingale, and "that no documents exist at Wilton throwing any light on Massinger's or Shakspeare's connexion with Wilton or the Pembroke family. There are no household books, diaries, or any papers at all that relate in any way to that period."

WE have received Progress and Poverty: the Remedy, by Henry George, Fourth Edition (C. Kegan Paul and Co.); Seven Lectures on the Doctrine of Positivism, by J. Kaines, D.Sc. (Reeves and Turner); Parson Malthus, by James Bonar, B.A. (Glasgow: Maclehose); British Colonial Policy, by Sir David Wedderburn, Bart., M.P. (Macmillan); Select Works of Father Lancelotti, S.J., with a Preface by Father Galloway (Burns and Oates); Occupying Ownership (Ireland), by the late Vincent Scully, Q.C., edited by his son (Stanford); The Gospel according to Satan, by Standish Grey, M.A. (Kerby and Endean); Marriage in the Pre-Christian and Christian Dispensations, by the Rev. R. Belaney, M.A. (Burns and Oates); The Congregational College Calendar, 1881 (Hodder and Stoughton); Wine in the Different Forms of Anaemia and Atomic Gout, by M. E. Bégin (E. Gallais); Kottabos: Trinity College, Dublin, Hilary Term, 1881 (Dublin: M'Gee); Twenty-Eighth Annual Report of the Liverpool Free Public Library (Liverpool: Greenwood); Third Report of the Wigan Free Public Library (Wigan: Strowger); Third Annual Report of the Castle Museum Committee (Nottingham); Measures, Weights, and Monies of all Nations, by W. S. B. Woolhouse, F.R.A.S. (Crosby Lockwood); Life and Mind: on the Basis of Modern Medicine, by Robert Lewins, M.D. (Watts); London Guide: How to get from or to Any Part of London, Sixth Edition (Stanford); Blackie's Comprehensive School Series, Standards V. and VI.; Animal Physiology, and Fifth Reader (Blackie); Modern Christianity and a National Church, by A. Layman (Edinburgh Publishing Company); &c., &c.

OBITUARY.

PAULIN PARIS.

IN M. Paulin Paris, who died on Sunday week, France has lost not merely the doyen of her Faculty of Old French, but also the most enthusiastic, the most widely read, and, from the purely literary point of view, the best student and teacher of the subject. The character of M. Paris' erudition was, as might be expected from his age, not exactly that of the scholarship of the present day. It was more literary than philological, and busied itself less about word-forms and critical editions than about the intelligent comprehension of the spirit and form of the literature. Probably no man living—not even his distinguished son—equals M. Paulin Paris in actual range of acquaintance with the enormous MS. stores of the literature of mediæval France. Certainly no one has communicated to so many readers, both Frenchmen and foreigners, the enthusiasm for this most fascinating study which he himself felt.

Alexis Paulin Paris was born at Avenay on March 25, 1800, and had thus all but reached his eighty-first year. In his youth he was a fervent Romantic, and it was the moyenne variety of the Romantic fever which originated in him a devotion to Old French, though he began by a translation of Byron, also a strictly orthodox employment. He obtained a post in the Paris Library in 1828, and very soon began the long series of the commented reprints which have made his name famous among students of French literature. He was an active contributor to Teichener's charmingly printed Romans des douze pairs, editing Berte aus grands piés, Garin (in part), the Chanson d'Antioche, &c. The last especially is an admirable example of enthusiastic and, at the same time, intelligent work. But his most attractive and most influential book was, perhaps, the Romancero français, published in 1833, which, until Herr Bartsch published his Romanzen und Pastourellen, was the chief source available for the knowledge of early French lyric. A work of more pure erudition and of immense value was the Catalogue raisonné of the Old-French MSS. of the Paris Library; while his edition of the Grands Chroniques de Saint-Denis was an equally important contribution to history. M. Paulin Paris was also, during the last forty years of his life, one of the chief contributors to the Histoire littéraire. About fifteen years ago he began a great work, which purported to be a rendering, en nouveau langage, of the entire romances of the Round Table, though the plan was in the end somewhat narrowed. These modernisings of old work have always been looked at askance by some scholars; but M. Paris had peculiar gifts for them. He had early acquired, and always retained, the vivid and brightly coloured style at which the Romantics aimed; and he knew how, while seasoning it with epigram in the proper places—his happy description of the Provençal epic, "which has but one defect, le défaut d'être perdu," is a good example—to render the poetry and the almost equally poetical prose of his originals into a singularly graceful modern equivalent. His critical introductions to this book, moreover, contain by far the best investigation of the originals of the Arthurian story that I know. He had served as President of the Old-French Text Society; and an edition of the romance of Artus has for some time been promised to its members from his hand, though I do not know whether he made any progress with it. One of the latest works of his that I have on my shelves is a beautiful edition of Machault's Voir dit, published for the Société des Bibliophiles, in which the editor sets himself to work to unravel the secret of the heroine's name with as much vivacity as he had shown almost half-a-century before in defending the title—hateful to classics—of his Romancero. He was, indeed, far from being a mere antiquary, and his interest in literature was by no means limited to his own discoveries, as his editions of Saint-Pavin, of Tallemant des Réaux, &c., sufficiently proved. Altogether, his work showed him to be a true man of letters of the best type—a type equally distant from that of the mere bookworm and that of the purely scientific philologist, who is, I am afraid, sometimes apt to miss the literary wood in his ardent investigation of the linguistic trees.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

THE death is also announced of Lord William Pitt Lennox, the author of many works of fiction and contributions to the magazines; of Mr. William Ellis, a friend of the Mills, father and son, and a successful populariser of political economy; of Dr. Théodore de Pachtmann, Professor of Canon and Roman Law in the University of Vienna; and of the Hon. Grantley Berkeley, who, like Lord William Lennox, was a voluminous writer on sporting and kindred subjects.

THE EXTENSION OF UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

THE opening of the new north wing of University College was celebrated by a dinner given in the library last Wednesday week. Of the speeches delivered on that occasion, the two most noteworthy were by Lord Sherbrooke and Prof. Max Müller. The former, having in view the University of London rather than the college, uttered a warning against extending the examinations over too wide an area, both in quantity and in space. The latter, thinking of Oxford rather than of London, lifted up his voice in favour of the endowment of research. We would call attention to what he said on two grounds—first, as showing the practical aspect of the proposal, in opposition to some phantom scheme against which a letter of the Astronomer-Royal has recently been published; and secondly, as being a public endorsement of the system of tentative and progressive endowment originally advocated about six years ago by the late Dr. Appleton. The draft scheme which Dr. Appleton then published in a letter to the Spectator has recently been reprinted in his Life and Literary Relics, reviewed in our columns last week.

The Account of the New North Wing and Recent Additions to University College, printed by the architects for private circulation, enables us to form an opinion, not only of the appearance of the building, but also of the uses to which it is to be devoted. In the south wing, as is well known, the school is housed; and the north wing will contain the departments of the college which are growing fastest. Foremost among these is the Slade School of Fine Art, which will now afford worthy accommodation for 140 students. Next, the several departments of zoology, physiology, chemistry, and engineering will each gain new rooms, either directly or indirectly. From this we may safely infer that the education of boys, fine art, and physical science are flourishing most in Gower Street.

The total cost of the extension now opened is estimated at £35,000, towards which £21,000 has been already subscribed. The architects, however, have sketched a plan for the further enlargement and completion of the entire fabric at a cost of a little over £100,000. The principal features of this plan are to give a third storey to the main structure all round; to add return ends to the wings abutting on the street; and to complete the quadrangle by a stone screen thrown across in front from wing to wing.

THE WORKS OF SAINT-SIMON.

IN 1874 M. Armand Baschet published a volume which was almost a revelation. It was entitled Le Duc de Saint-Simon, son Cabinet, et l'Histoire de ses Manuscrits; and from it the public learned for the first time, what was familiar to the inner circle of scholars, that the history of the papers of St.-Simon was a perfect Odyssey still far from having reached its Ithaca. They learned that an order of Louis XV., dated December 21, 1760, had sequestered all the papers of the late Duke in the archives of the Foreign Office. It was known that the MS. copies of them which were in circulation "under the rose" in the second half of the eighteenth century, and the earliest published editions, were only a prey snatched from the vigilance of the Foreign Office. The liberal measure was remembered by which Louis XVIII., from motives of personal gratitude towards one of the descendants of the author of the memoirs, handed over to him in 1819 the entire MS. of the work—a gift which was the starting-point of the series of complete and continually improved editions to which we are to return immediately.

But people learned at the same time that if the Memoirs had finally reached the hands for which they were intended by St.-Simon—those, namely, of the public—there still remained in the Foreign Office a quantity of other papers and writings of St.-Simon, all of them necessarily remarkable, and some of which gave promise of being highly important. M. Baschet was enabled to publish a list of these MSS. In examining the archives of the notaries of Paris he met with an inventory drawn up on the day after St.-Simon's death, which contained the titles of 175 MS. pieces, forming the Duke's cabinet.

From that day forward nothing else was talked of in the literary world. The persons who were then at the head of the Foreign Office were entreated to open their doors to historical students. A deaf ear was long turned to these demands, till at last the accession of M. Freycinet to office was the occasion for the fall of the old management of the archives, and for the accession of a new Administration fully disposed to forsake the paths of routine and exclusiveness.

Passing by the previous editions, which are now mere bibliographical curiosities, we will only recur to the editions published from the original MS. The first, dated 1829-30, was undertaken by the Marquis de St.-Simon himself; but, although entitled "complete and authentic," it left much to be desired. Reprinted in 1840 and 1853, it did not give place to a decisive work until M. Chéruel published (Hachette) a collation made by him with the original MS. (1856-58). In 1863 Messrs. Hachette became proprietors of the original and only complete MS. of the Memoirs, and were thus enabled to undertake the publication of an improved text.

Though M. Chéruel's text attained a high degree of perfection, something yet remained to be done; for the Duke's writing, though apparently regular, presents great difficulties to the decipherer, and M. Chéruel's notes were generally inadequate.

In 1873 M. Chéruel, with the aid of the regretted Adolphe Regnier, undertook a complete revision of the text. Thus, in less than two years, a new edition, rendered as conformable as possible to the MS. of the Memoirs, was given to the public. Prepared with the most scrupulous care, this edition may be considered as the best we possess up to the present time. It comprises twenty octavo volumes. Eighteen volumes and a-half contain the text of the Memoirs; the end of the nineteenth volume is devoted to second-rate documents from the same pen (letters, small treatises, &c.). Finally, the twentieth volume, which appeared in 1877, contains the Index of the Memoirs, arranged by St.-Simon himself, and here published for the first time. We are promised a twenty-first volume, to comprise an Analytical Index.

However successful M. Chéruel's publication may have been, it is not faultless. In fact, two extremely grave defects may be observed at the outset—viz., the absence of all commentary, either historical or philological, and the want of a considerable part of the secondary works of St.-Simon, the existence and titles of which, at all events, had been made known to us by the work of M. Baschet.

These are the deficiencies that the recent publications of which we are about to speak have endeavoured to supply. Messrs. Hachette again took the initiative, and entrusted to a scholar of undoubted competence the task of realising a programme previously traced by M. de Montalembert, and of preparing a definitive edition of the complete works of the Duc de St.-Simon. The fine collection of the Great Writers of France undertaken by M. Adolphe Regnier, which has already given to the public almost faultless editions of the principal French classics of the seventeenth century, is well known. It was to fill a place in this collection that M. de Boilisle consented to undertake a fresh issue of the Memoirs; and, to ensure the success of so important an enterprise, neither time, money, nor help of any kind was refused him. M. de Boilisle, too, prepared by previous studies, found himself more than equal to his task. Inspired by the example of great French editors of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries—such as Godefroy, le Duchat, Amelot, de la Housaye, &c.—he surpassed them in everything that the efforts of modern science enabled him to add to works already so remarkable.

After long preparation he has now published the first two volumes of his work. We say of his work; for, indeed, it is not St.-Simon alone who is now placed in the hands of the public, but a work on the subject of St.-Simon—a running commentary which is a whole in itself, and of which M. de Boilisle takes all the responsibility and, it may be added, all the glory.

The notes form a genuine encyclopædia of French history and biography at the conclusion of the seventeenth and the beginning of the eighteenth century; so that, in reading these volumes, we feel at every moment an antagonistic sentiment of admiration and regret, compelled, as we are, to leave the text to examine the notes, and to leave the notes to return to the text. Possibly this commentary, just, cold, candid, always confident in itself, is not altogether what St.-Simon himself would have desired. Perhaps it is somewhat wanting in that fire which characterises the author of the Memoirs, and in which no one of his time (not even the critics and the annotators) was wholly deficient. But at least it is the only one which our times can require, and the very excess of precision and of scientific paraphernalia is not to be complained of by people who, having read the Memoirs, now desire to search them thoroughly.

The appearance of the volumes (and the complete work will comprise at least forty) had a fortunate result as regards even the second deficiency which we have recently pointed out—that is to say, the ignorance in which the public had been left concerning St.-Simon's other writings.

In a passage of his Introduction M. de Boilisle complained in firm but moderate language of the strict and inexplicable surveillance maintained over these papers. M. Léopold Delisle, before the Academy of Inscriptions, echoed the complaints of M. de Boilisle and the public; so that the change which happened some time afterwards in the political domain immediately brought about, as we have already said, the deliverance of these "prisoners of State."

So splendid a booty was not likely to wait long. To begin with, the late Director of the Archives, M. G. Faurère, took advantage of his acquired rights to claim the priority, and announced his intention of occupying the leisure recently bestowed on him in publishing the papers which even the day before he thought it his duty to conceal. On the other hand, an enthusiastic amateur threw himself on the same prey, and began to commit large portions of it to the printers on the spur of the moment. The Commission of Diplomatic Archives had enough to do in the midst of the different competitors. However it may be, we find ourselves at present confronted by two volumes of different origin, both of which appear to promise a sequel, but which both, at all events, give us the unpublished texts contained in these famous papers of St.-Simon. The first in date is that of M. Drumont, entitled Papiers inédits du Duc de St.-Simon: Lettres et Dépêches sur l'Ambassade d'Espagne (Quantin). We do not think that a hastily issued publication, without critical genius, without notes, and without commentary, is worth the trouble of dwelling on at length. It must, moreover, be acknowledged that the papers collected under the heading of the Spanish embassy are by no means of transcendent merit; and, if they throw light on certain passages in the life of St.-Simon, they are not comparable in literary value with any other of his writings.

This is not the case with regard to M. G. Faugère's volume, Œuvres inédites de Saint-Simon, T. 1.—Parallèle des trois premiers Rois bourbons (Hachette). Here again we have a real masterpiece.

The importance of this work, and of those which M. Faugère promises to give us speedily, had been announced, even before the appearance of the volume itself, by a brilliant pamphlet written on the very day following the opening of the Dépôt des Archives, Les Papiers du duc de Saint-Simon aux Archives des Affaires étrangères, by M. Georges Picot, Member of the Institute, in which the author indicated all the merits of a work composed by St.-Simon in the full powers of his age and in the maturity of his genius. The parallel between the first three Bourbon Kings—Henri IV., Louis XIII., and Louis XIV.—was to its great writer a work of gratitude, and of passionate gratitude, before all else, as well as a work of historical justice.

It will not be forgotten that, whatever the pretensions of St.-Simon, the ennoblement of his family was comparatively modern. It was the grace with which his father, then page to Louis XIII., presented to the King his fresh horse in the course of the chase that won for the young St.-Simon the royal favour, and opened his way to riches and honour. A dukedom, ratified by Parliament, the government of several places, important offices—such were the principal benefits which were transmitted in the family, and which enabled the future author of the Memoirs to make from his earliest youth what is called a great figure. A nature so peculiarly aristocratic as that of the Duc de St.-Simon must necessarily have felt unbounded gratitude to the King who had conferred on him and on his heirs so many high advantages and so many gratifications to his pride. It may thus be observed that at no moment of his life was the thought of glorifying the memory of this prince, to whom he owed so much, absent from his mind. There was not a single room in his hôtel in Paris or in his château of Ferté-Vidame without a portrait of Louis XIII. Many pages of his Memoirs are devoted to the praise of that prince.

All this seemed insufficient to the pious zeal of the Duke. That clear-sighted and just historical judgment which entered in so great a degree into the character of his genius was shocked at the neglect into which the fame of Louis XIII. had fallen, between the dazzling glories of his father, Henri IV., and his son, Louis XIV. He felt that, if the merits of princes were to be judged by the results of their government, the reign of Louis XIII. had been one of the most fruitful for France; he felt that, if individual and moral worth were rather to be considered, that of Louis XIII. was incontestably an ideal of virtue and chastity as compared with the other two Kings. He also represented to himself that, if part of the glorious events of the reign of Louis XIII. must be attributed to the genius and the will of his Minister Richelieu, it would still be just to remember that the King had chosen, maintained, and seconded him to the end.

These various sentiments and ideas gave rise to the composition of the Parallèle; an admirable work, we repeat, as much from the passion which carries on the narrative without a check from the first page to the last as for the continued effort made by the writer to regard events with an unmoved glance and to maintain an equal balance in such difficult problems.

This volume was written in 1746, in the very midst of the composition of the Memoirs. It was when St.-Simon, in his principal work, had reached the end of the reign of Louis XIV. that he paused, took breath, and combined in a more compact work his final sentiments with regard to the three princes who had founded, aggrandised, and carried to an excess the authority of the Bourbon dynasty. The value of the work may be estimated by the importance of the discussions concerning it, and of the judgments pronounced upon it. History will have in future to take into account the opinions of St.-Simon on every fresh occasion of its application to the study of these questions; and we ourselves have no doubt that, although it may not always accept them in detail, it will never be able, on the whole, to depart from the general lines which were traced by an eye so clear and a hand so sure.

The style of this bold and singular writer attains, in this work, the culminating point of its vigour and brilliancy. It would be necessary to quote it in its entirety if it were desired to give an idea of such flexibility united with such grandeur. Many passages, compared with parallel passages of the Memoirs (the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, for example), seem to bear away the palm. The language of the Parallèle, free from the too great fullness and redundancy of the Memoirs, would of itself deserve a long study. We cannot here enter into so wide a subject. We will content ourselves with indicating it, and with predicting that within ten years this work of St.-Simon will be a classic, and will find a place in all memories and on all lips. We have not said a word as to the value of this first edition and of the editor's work. There was, in fact, nothing to say on the subject; for the work has been nil and the edition far from satisfactory. Not a word of introduction or of commentary, a text frequently disfigured by erroneous readings and by a vicious orthography—such have been the meagre results of the prolonged preparation which has retarded for so long a time the appearance of this first volume of the unpublished writings of St.-Simon. It only remains for us to express a hope that M. de Boilisle may speedily reach this part of his work, and that he will bring to it the same enlightenment and the same superiority displayed by him in the first portion of his task.

GABRIEL HANOTAUX.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BENEDICT, Sir J. Weber. Sampson Low & Co. 3s.
BLACK, W. Sunrise: a Story of These Times. Sampson Low & Co. 31s. 6d.
CATALOGUE de la Collection des Médailles et Monnaies polonaises du Comte Em. Hutten-Czapaski. Vol. III. Cracow: Friedlein. 40s.
CENTURY of Dishonour, A: a Sketch of the U.S. Government's Dealings with Some of the Indian Tribes. Chatto & Windus. 7s. 6d.
DORER, E. Cervantes u. seine Werke nach deutschen Urtheilen. Leipzig: Friedrich. 5 M.
FITCH, J. G. Lectures on Teaching. Cambridge: University Press. 6s.
FOST, H. F. Schubert. Sampson Low & Co. 3s.
HARRIS, J. C. Uncle Remus, and his Legends of the Old Plantation. Trübner. 5s.
JORDAN, H. Capitol, Forum u. Sacra Via in Rom. Berlin: Weidmann. 1 M. 60 Pf.
KOSCHATZ, O. L'Ornement de l'Ukraine. Broderies des Paysans. Kief. 10s.
KROCK, C. Das preussisch-deutsche Zolltarifsystem in seiner historischen Entwicklung seit 1818. Jena: Fischer. 11 M.
LANCIANI, R. Topografia di Roma antica. I Commentari di Frontino intorno le Acque e gli Aquedotti. Rome: Spithoev. 25 fr.
LANDES-ZEUGHAUS, das, in Graz. Hrsrg. v. der Vorsteherg. d. Mühs- u. Antiken-Cabinets am St. L. Joanneum. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 60 M.
LEGGUY, E. La Question des Femmes. Paris: Hetzel. 1 fr.
LENNOX, Lord W. F. Plays, Players, and Playhouses, at Home and Abroad. Hurst & Blackett. 21s.
VIGNERON, L. Deux Ans au Sé-Tchouan. Paris: Bray. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY.

- CAIRNS, J. Unbelief in the Eighteenth Century. A. & C. Black. 10s. 6d.
HATCH, E. The Organisation of the Early Christian Churches. (Bampton Lectures for 1880.) Rivington. 10s. 6d.
KLOPFER, L. Commentarius in epistolam S. Apostoli Pauli ad Romanos. Wien: Kirsch. 4 M.
NESTLE, E. Veteris testamenti graeci codices Vaticanus et Sinaiticus cum textu recepto collati. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 5 M.
SCHULZ, H. Die Lehre v. der Gottheit Christi. Communio idiomatum. Gotha: Perthes. 13 M.
HISTORY, ETC.
BOHRMER'S Regesta Imperii. V. (1198-1272.) 2. Lfg. Hrsrg. v. J. Ficker. Innsbruck: Wagner. 16 M.
BOULGER, D. C. The History of China. Vol. I. W. H. Allen & Co. 18s.
DUPUY, A. Histoire de la Réunion de la Bretagne à la France. T. 2. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
GEASON, A. De in jure cessionis origines et natura. Berlin: Bahr. 2 M. 80 Pf.
LETHEBRIDGE, R. Short Manual of the History of India. Macmillan. 5s.
MANTELS, W. Beiträge zur libisch-hansischen Geschichte. Jena: Fischer. 8 M.
RATTAZZI et son Temps. Documents inédits; Correspondance; Souvenirs intimes. T. 1. Paris: Dentu. 8 fr.
VOORLIS, A. Otto v. Nordheim in den Jahren 1070-83. Minden: Körber. 2 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BALTZER, A. Der mechanische Contact v. Gaseis u. Kalk im Berner-Oberland. Bern: Dap. 40 M.
GALLOWAY, R. L. The Steam Engine and its Inventors. Macmillan. 10s. 6d.
GOSSELET, J. Esquisse géologique du Nord de la France et des Contrées voisines. 1^{re} Fasc. Lille.
HAUREAU, H. Histoire de la Philosophie scolastique. 2^e Partie. Paris: Pedone-Lauriel.
HAYEK, G. v. Handbuch der Zoologie. 2. Bd. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 23 M. 60 Pf.
HERTWIG, O. u. R. HEATWIG. Studien zur Blüthen-theorie. 4. Hft. Die Oeolomtheorie. Jena: Fischer. 4 M. 50 Pf.
MITTHEILUNGEN aus der zoologischen Station zu Neapel. 2. Bd. 3. Hft. Leipzig: Engelmann. 8 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- ARISTOTLE'S Metaphysics. Book I. Translated into English Prose. Macmillan. 5s.
BASSET, R. La Poésie arabe antéislamique. Paris: Leroux. 2 fr. 50 c.
HANSEN, M. De tropis et figuris apud Tibullum. Kiel: Lipsius. 1 M. 20 Pf.
PEILE, J. Notes on the Tale of Nala. Cambridge: University Press. 12s.
RUGE, M. Bemerkungen zu den griechischen Lehnwörtern im Lateinischen. Berlin: Weidmann. 2 M.
RYSET, V. Ueb. den textkritischen Werth der syrischen Uebersetzungen griechischer Klassiker. 2. Thl. Leipzig: Fernau. 2 M. 80 Pf.
VARNHAAGEN, H. E. Italienische Prosa-Version der Sieben Weisen. Nach e. Londoner Handschrift hrg. Berlin: Weidmann. 2 M.
WEIDNER, G. Der Prosa-Roman v. Joseph v. Arimathia. Oppeln: Franck. 5 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GROVE'S "DICTIONARY OF MUSIC."

St. John's College, Oxford: Feb. 19, 1881.

There is an error in Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, vol. ii., part x., p. 470, of such magnitude and importance that attention should be publicly called to it.

In the article on Notation a facsimile is given of fol. 131b of a Bodleian MS., No. 775, to prove that the stave of four lines was in use in England very early in the eleventh century.

The MS. in question is a beautifully written and well-preserved Anglo-Saxon Tropary, written in the reign of Ethelred II. (978-1016), a date resting on indisputable internal evidence, which it is not necessary to produce at length here. The tropes are accompanied throughout with their original mediæval musical setting in the form of neumes. But in a few pages, or parts of pages (e.g., 131ab), the original neumes have been carefully erased, and a much later scribe has substituted, on ruled red lines, a more modern system of notation. The palimpsest character of these pages has escaped the notice of the author of the article, who bases an important discovery in the history of music upon their supposed antiquity in these words:—

"Now a portion of the MS. was most certainly written before that date [i.e. 1024], and, if the evidence afforded by a close examination of its caligraphy [sic] may be trusted, there is reason to believe that it was transcribed throughout by the same hand, in which case we may fairly infer that the stave of four lines was known and used in this country at a period considerably anterior to its supposed invention in Italy."

Fault-finding is an ungracious task, but an error of this sort, involving a change of date in the development of musical improvement, is incapable of refutation by an ordinary reviewer, unless he is a palaeographer as well as a musician. Public attention is therefore called to it, in the hopes that the page may be cancelled in future editions of the Dictionary, and that this supposed great discovery may not obtain a permanent position in the literature of music or among the facts of history.

F. E. WARREN.

PONTEFRACHT NEAR SOUTHWARK.

London: Feb. 21, 1881.

I am indebted to Mr. Peacock for pointing out, in his review of my Three Fifteenth-Century Chronicles, that an early writer who spoke of Pomfret as near Southwark was not necessarily ignorant of geography. The mention of a Pontefract near London in Mr. Hunter's article in the Archæologia had certainly escaped my notice. But I fear I cannot absolve the author of the short chronicle, or rather "Brief Notes," in question from a charge of great inaccuracy. These notes, as I have shown, are memoranda taken down at the time of events that occurred in the days of Henry VI. and Edward IV. The writer must have been a monk of Ely; and, though he knew by report of the existence of a Pontefract near Southwark, I doubt very much whether he was right, for one thing, in imagining a Pomfret Castle there. Mr. Hunter conjectures that the Pontefract near London was a place probably known as "Broken Bridge" or "Broken Wharf." If there had been a castle connected with it we should certainly have heard something more about it. But, apart from this, the statement in the text is undoubtedly a very gross mistake; for the writer tells us that the young Duke of Somerset "came to" the Duke of York at Pomfret Castle near Southwark on Tuesday after Christmas, and, notwithstanding a truce previously made, suddenly attacked him in a wood there and slew him. From the looseness of the construction Mr. Peacock no doubt disconnected the first statement about Somerset coming to the Duke of York from the last, which refers to the Battle of Wakefield. But Tuesday after Christmas was the 30th of December in 1460—the very day the Battle of Wakefield was fought; so that it is quite clear the writer has confounded the Pomfret near Southwark with the Yorkshire Pomfret. The battle apparently began somewhat nearer Pomfret than Wakefield.

JAMES GAIRDNER.

"IARZA."

Weston-super-Mare: Feb. 19, 1881.

In my former letter (ACADEMY, February 12) Iarza is misprinted Iazza. The same name occurs in the Karnak lists of Thothmes III. (Mariette, Listes Géog., No. 60) next but one before Joppa, and therefore referring, one would think, to the same place, although Mariette takes Iarza as a Biblical Jazer, and sets it conjecturally on the east of Jordan.

If, however, this Iarza of the lists be not the place at el Arish (the Arza of Esarhaddon), but a Jazer, surely it must be the Yazur, three miles south-east of Joppa; which must certainly, I think, be the Azor of Sennacherib's campaign against Zidga, King of Askolon, for the places mentioned with it are Bene-berak (Josh. xix. 45), now Ibn Ibrak, only one mile and a-half distant (see Conder's Bible Handbook, 406, and Great Map, sheet xiii.), and Beth-Dagon (Josh. xv. 41), now Beit Dejan, two miles from each.

The same place Azor may have given name to Azuri, King of Ashdod, mentioned by Sargon (Assyrian Disc., 290).

Thus we may make sure, I think, of Iarza (Thothmes) = Arza (Esarhaddon) = Arish or N. Jasar, and Azor (Sennacherib) = Yazur near Jaffa.

HENRY G. TOMKINS.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, Feb. 28, 7 p.m. Institute of Actuaries: "The Mortality observed among the Various Classes of Bonus Policies in the British Empire Mutual Company," by Mr. G. R. Hardy.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Thirteenth-Century Architecture—France," by Mr. G. E. Street.

8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Hume," by Mr. W. A. Casson.

TUESDAY, March 1, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Blood," by Prof. Schifer.

8 p.m. West London Scientific Association: "The Glacial and Post-Glacial Periods," by Dr. Foulerton.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Languages of Africa," by Mr. R. C. Cust.

8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "Tide-Gauge, Tidal Harmonic Analyser, and Tide Predictor," by Sir William Thomson.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Descriptions of New Genera and Species of Asiatic Nocturnal Lepidoptera," by Mr. F. Moore; "Observations on Two Species of Indian Butterflies, Papilio castor and P. pollux," by Prof. J. O. Westwood; "Halictaeris gryphus and its Breeding on the Fro Islands in Norway," by Mr. R. Collett.

8.30 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "A Few Notices in Ancient Jewish Writings on the Sagacity and Habits of Ants," by Rev. A. Löwy; "Abydenus and the Book of Daniel," by Prof. Eberhard Schrader.

WEDNESDAY, March 2, 7 p.m. Entomological.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Flashing Signale for Lighthouses," by Sir William Thomson.

8 p.m. British Archaeological: "The Saxon Cross at Winwick, Lancashire," by Mr. J. Romilly Allen.

THURSDAY, March 3, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Cuneiform Characters," by Rev. W. Houghton.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Thirteenth-Century Architecture—England," by Mr. G. E. Street.

8 p.m. London Institution: "The Production of Electricity," by Prof. W. E. Ayrton.

8 p.m. Linnæan: "Reparative Processes in Plants," by S. O. Shattock; "The Apparent Retention of a suranal plate by a Young Echinometra," by Prof. F. Jeffrey Bell; "Arnebia and Macrostomia," by C. B. Clarke; "Pleuronomidae of Challenger Expedition," by Rev. R. Boog Watson.

FRIDAY, March 4, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Results of British Rule in India," by Mr. J. M. Maclean.

8 p.m. Philological: "Grammatical Gender," by Mr. E. L. Brandereth.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Elasticity," by Sir William Thomson.

SATURDAY, March 5, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Ancient Egypt," by Mr. R. S. Poole.

SCIENCE.

Peruvian Bark: a Popular Account of the Introduction of Chinchona Cultivation into British India. By Clements R. Markham, C.B., F.R.S. (Murray.)

THE title hardly gives a full idea of the scope of this interesting work. The cultivation of the Cinchona is now an important industry in our Indian possessions and in other tropical countries, but it is one of only quite recent years. The Peruvian bark of commerce is obtained from several species of this genus, the native geographical range of which is restricted to the slopes of the Andes at a height of from 2,500 to 9,000 feet, from Bolivia to Venezuela, a narrow tract considerably more than 1,000 miles in length. Here, under favourable circumstances, they acquire the size of large forest trees, with densely crowded small flowers, one species being deliciously fragrant. It is doubtful whether the medicinal virtues of the bark were known to the natives before the Spanish conquest. About the middle of the seventeenth century the Countess of Chinchona, wife of a viceroy of Peru, was cured by its use of an intermittent fever. The drug was introduced by her to the notice of European physicians and traders; and from that time, under the names of "countess's powder," "quina bark," and "Jesuits' bark," it gradually acquired its present unrivalled reputation as a cure or preventive of fever; though not, as it seems, without some odium theologicum among Protestants, in consequence of the part taken by the Jesuits in its introduction.

It was not till 1852 that the first serious attempt was made to introduce the cultivation of the valuable Cinchona trees into other congenial climates. This was by the Dutch Government on behalf of their colony in Java, and was eventually, after many failures, carried out with success through the exertions of their able botanist, M. Hasskarl. The subject had occupied the attention of the Indian Government since 1839; and in 1859 Mr. Markham was entrusted by the present Earl of Derby with a commission to introduce Cinchona cultivation into British India. The various expeditions undertaken by Mr. Markham and his fellow-labourers for this purpose into the Cinchona regions are described in detail; but the great difficulties attending both the collection and the transit were not finally overcome till 1878.

In the meantime Mr. Markham had visited India for the purpose of choosing the most favourable spots for the cultivation of the Peruvian bark. As might be expected from the limited range of the genus in its own country, the success of the experiment must depend greatly on the choice of a suitable climate; and the spots finally selected for the purpose were several districts in the Nilgiris, Coorg, and other hilly regions of the extreme south of the peninsula, at Darjiling in Sikkim, several spots in British Burmah, and in Central Ceylon. In all these districts, but especially in the Nilgiris, Darjiling, and Ceylon, the cultivation of the Cinchona has now become an occupation of great and yearly increasing importance; and it has also been introduced into Jamaica.

The industry thus established in British India is one the importance of which can hardly be over-estimated; and it must be acknowledged that in this matter the successive executives of our Indian Government have shown a commendable energy, in which they have been ably seconded by Mr. Markham and his trained band of assistants. The amount of personal labour and the resolution and organising power required for such an enterprise can scarcely be appreciated by anyone who has not read the narrative here given. But the results have fully justified the outlay. Not only is a remedy for the devastating malarial fevers of tropical countries brought within easy reach of the millions of British India, by which thousands of lives are saved and incalculable suffering prevented every year; but an important additional branch of commerce has been added to the resources of the country, employing a large number of people, from the tillers of the soil to the trained Government superintendents and quinologists. We may confidently henceforth look for a yearly increase in the produce of the plantations.

In an Appendix the author gives some interesting particulars respecting the introduction into British India of other useful South American vegetable products, especially various kinds of caoutchouc or rubber, cotton, and the famous "cuzco" maize.

I regret to have to call attention to one small but conspicuous blemish. In defiance of the accepted rules of botanical nomenclature, and notwithstanding that the indefensibility of the practice has been pointed out by every botanist of note who has written on the subject, Mr. Markham still adheres to the spelling "Chinchona" for the scientific name of the genus to which the Peruvian bark belongs. The value of the volume is much increased by several excellent maps.

ALFRED W. BENNETT.

Evolution, Expression, and Sensation. By John Cleland, M.D., F.R.S., Professor of Anatomy in the University of Glasgow. (Glasgow: Maclehose.)

TELEOLOGY dies hard. Of course it will always (humanly speaking) find supporters of one sort or other; but, even among those scientific thinkers who accept some form of evolutionism, it seems still to make a sharp struggle for life, and to live on in curious fashions, or by strange side-reasonings, in spite of everything. Mr. J. J. Murphy believes that natural selection has done most of the work of development, but that a superior power intervenes now and again to help it over the hardest places. Even Mr. Wallace (with deference be it said) appears to hold that the gulf between anthropoid and man was bridged over by a single act of miraculous or supernatural assistance. And now Dr. Cleland comes forward with another and still subtler "reconciliation," of the sort with which we are inevitably flooded in the interval between the anathematisation and the universal recognition of every novel scientific doctrine. He believes that all organisms have slowly developed from certain simple primordial forms, but he thinks the course of their development has been guided all along the line by some external intelligence. They did not merely grow; they were moulded, though moulded by slow increments. In his view, creation was not a single act, but a continuous re-adjustment. Instead of one miracle, he introduces a million. For of course each such alteration or modification must either have been produced by natural causes—and, if so, you get pure Darwinism—or by supernatural causes—and, if so, you get an endless interference from above with the mechanical laws in the bodies of organic beings. As Dr. Cleland himself puts it, in the case of the development of eyes,

"I am compelled to recognise in the simpler forms the early stages of a morphological design, moving forward in definite directions to accomplish a mode of contact between the external world and the consciousness of animals" (p. 87).

Or, as he says elsewhere,

"Development both in the individual and in the totality of life is not only a development from a simple beginning, but a development towards a completed whole. There is morphological design, and, when in any line of development the design is completed, the evolution ceases."

When will apologists begin to perceive that the best apology for the universe would lie in the belief that it was not designed at all?

Dr. Cleland's rather discursive book consists of six loosely connected essays, all more or less bearing on evolution. It may seem a hard saying about a scientific authority, but we cannot disguise the fact that its tone is often almost mediæval. We are told, for instance,

"If a servant whispers in your ear that there are robbers in the house, there will be caused much less vibration of the drum of your ear and consequent action of the auditory nerve than by the loud ringing of a dinner-bell; but there will possibly result very much greater mental disturbance. The stimuli in both cases would be applied to the same nerves; and no physical theory can represent it as possible that the channels taken in the brain by the irritation conveyed along the nerves would vary according to the meaning of the sounds."

Considering that this is just the physical theory all but universally held by modern physiologists, it is really very difficult to understand Dr. Cleland's position. But, indeed, he often strangely misstates well-known views. Thus he says that "the name of Evolutionists has, with curious obliviousness, been assumed as a distinctive title by those who believe that the evolution is merely indefinite, and entirely to be explained by heredity." Now, this is a strange statement when we reflect that heredity alone could only result in endless cycles of precisely similar lives, and that Mr. Darwin's whole theory rests upon the differentiation caused by variation, which is exactly opposed to heredity pure and simple. Once more, he remarks,

"It would be very hard to imagine that the fibres of the optic nerve emerging from the ganglionic corpuscles correspond individually with distinct rods or cones."

Here, again, the view which Dr. Cleland so airily dismisses is just that which almost every physiologist now holds, at least in a modified form. Of course it is impossible that a book should produce much effect when its sole method of reasoning consists in thus cavalierly brushing aside opposition, like Mr. Podsnap, with a wave of the hand. Darwin and Helmholtz are not to be got rid of by a simple "It would be hard to imagine." As for Mr. Herbert Spencer, Dr. Cleland never even alludes to him, though he constantly complains that evolutionists have done nothing towards correlating the physiological with the psychical side of life. Apparently, he has not heard of the Principles of Psychology. Dr. Cleland himself has his own theory upon this subject. He deliberately throws away everything that has been done in the way of nervous physiology during the present century, rejects the whole doctrine of specific energies or localisation, and holds that the cerebral hemispheres act as a whole with a single function common to every part alike. In short, he returns undisguisedly to the seventeenth century. But a finer touch, which almost reaches unminged mediævalism, is to be found in the following exquisite suggestion:—"Consider that while we are without experience of spirit-life, except in connexion with body, it would be credulity to suppose that no spirits exist save those enchained by matter."

Even scholasticism got as far as de non apparentibus et entia non sunt multiplicanda; but Dr. Cleland, in his zeal for believing, dives an age farther back than that. It is credulity to disbelieve in gorgons and harpies, and chimaeras dire, merely because we are without experience of them. Observe the affirmative strength of the proposition. Not merely, we may believe in them, or we may find grounds for transcending experience; but, it would be credulity to suppose otherwise. There are, it seems, persons so credulous that they refuse to believe in ghost stories. This is a strange use of language; yet there is plenty more of the same sort in Dr. Cleland's essays. GRANT ALLEN.

OBITUARY.

ON Wednesday, the 16th inst., passed away, in his seventy-third year, Mr. Thomas Cotterill, M.A., formerly a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. He took his degree in 1832, when he was placed third on the list of Wranglers, the senior being Heath of Trinity. He joined the London Mathematical Society in the first year of its existence, and was for a long time a member of the Council. He took great interest in the proceedings, and hardly any member was a more regular attendant at the meetings. The infirmities of age necessitated his retirement from the Council in November 1878, and the place which knew him so well henceforward knew him no more. In his later years cubic curves more especially occupied his attention—of him Clifford wrote: "Mr. Cotterill is, I believe, the first person that ever saw a curve of the third class"—and he always listened with particular interest to any paper on his pet study. He was not an extensive writer, but he willingly communicated to others out of his stores. We can only recollect the following papers:—"A Goniometrical Problem: to be solved analytically in One Move, or more simply synthetically in Two Moves" (Quarterly Journal of Pure Mathematics, No. 27, 1865); "Certain Properties of Plane Polygons of an Even Number of Sides;" "On a Correspondence of Points, such that a Curve of the n^{th} Order in one Plane corresponds to a Curve of the $4n^{\text{th}}$ in Another Plane, &c.;" "On an Algebraical Form and the Geometry of its Dual Connexion with a Polygon, Plane or Spherical;" these and a few minor communications were printed in the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

PHILIP'S New Map of Middlesex: with Portions of the Adjoining Counties, by John Bartholomew (London and Liverpool), meets undoubtedly a public want. Being on the large scale of two inches to the mile, the draughtsman was able to introduce an immense mass of detail without overcrowding his work. The parish boundaries are shown distinctly; and, although there are no hills, numerous figures are inserted to indicate the height above the level of the sea.

SIGNOR GIOVANNI MARINELLI'S "Studi i Straboniani," in a recent number of Guido Cora's Cosmos, are deserving of attention; and we quite agree with the author when he describes Strabo's Geography as the only book produced by antiquity which, in the number and acuteness of its observations in every field of geographical enquiry, can compare with the great modern works produced by Ritter and his successors. We take this opportunity to direct attention to an excellent French translation of Strabo's Geography by M. Tardieu, recently published by Messrs. Hachette.

THE last Bollettino of the Italian Geographical Society publishes the programme of the International Geographical Congress to be held at Venice between September 15 and 22 of this year. The division into groups is the same as at Paris. There is no restriction as to the use of any language whatever. An exhibition of maps, books, scientific instruments, and other objects will be opened on September 1, and medals are to be awarded to the exhibitors by an international jury. Applications for space should reach the committee (Palazzo Municipale, Venice) not later than May 15.

THE last number of Petermann's Mittheilungen contains an elaborate map of the region between Suakin and Northern Abyssinia, upon which Dr. Junker's route up Khor Baraka in March 1876 is laid down for the first time. Herr B. Hassenstein, the compiler of the map, adds valuable notes on the cartography of the country so skilfully delineated by him, while Dr. Zöppritz discusses the hypsometrical observations made by Dr. Junker and his predecessor.

DURING his expedition to Segou-Sikoro on the Niger, to which we alluded last week, Capt. Gallieni has made an interesting discovery. He finds that near Bamaku the watershed of the Niger and Senegal basins is only a few miles from the former river. But, what is more curious, the water-parting is so indistinctly marked that during the rainy season the water flows sometimes into one river and sometimes into the other.

THE last expedition sent out by the London Missionary Society to East Central Africa, under Mr. Wookey, arrived at Urambo, the capital of King Mirambo in Unyamwezi, in September; and a telegram has been received announcing that they reached Lake Tanganyika in October.

THE Rev. W. P. Johnson, of the Universities' Mission at Masasi, East Africa, has lately explored part of the course of the River Lujenda, of which we previously knew but little. Mr. Johnson did not reach its source, and that still remains to be discovered; but the natives maintain that it flows from a large lake on the east of Lake Nyassa. As this cannot be Lake Shirwa, it is supposed by some that another large sheet of water exists somewhere to the north of that lake.

THE missionary expedition on the River Congo under Mr. McCall, to which we briefly referred last June, appears to have been making good progress, though nothing had been heard of its movements for some time. A station had been founded below the Yellala Falls; and Mr. McCall afterwards started up the river for Manyanga on the northern side, a considerable distance farther up, and by last accounts was within twenty or thirty miles of that place. He would appear to have advanced beyond Mr. Stanley, though he has been a comparatively short time on the river; and there is even some possibility of his reaching Stanley Pool before the end of the present year, in which case he will have accomplished, with comparative ease, what Mr. Comber has long and vainly struggled to do from San Salvador.

M. HAROLD TARRY, a member of the Trans-Sahara Survey Commission, who is now at Cerdara, to the south of Wargla, has made some curious discoveries there. Cerdara is an important ancient town which has long been buried in the sand; and in the course of his excavations M. Tarry has brought to light a mosque, nine houses, columns, sculptures, inscriptions, and the remains of some MSS. which he hopes to be able to decipher. He has also found traces of a formerly plentiful water-supply, and he has applied to the Algerian Government for means to enable him to make an attempt to bring it into use again. Should he be successful, a large tract of country which is now a desert would be restored to a state of fertility.

DR. MONTANO, who had previously been exploring the Sooloo Archipelago in company with

M. Rey, has lately sent to Paris a long account of his researches in the Island of Mindanao, at the southern end of the Philippine Group. The interior of this large island has not hitherto been explored, and its botany is quite unknown. It is very fertile, but only partly settled, the mountainous districts inland being inhabited by wild tribes. There are two active volcanoes, one of which, Ape, was ascended by Dr. Montano.

SCIENCE NOTES.

The Chronology of Bronze Implements.—A valuable paper by Prof. G. de Mortillet, "On the Classification and Chronology of Bronze Celts," has been published in a recent number of M. Cartailhac's Matériaux pour l'Histoire de l'Homme. The most interesting part of the paper is that in which he deals with the successive development of forms. His studies lead him to the conclusion that in France, in Switzerland, and in Belgium the oldest type of bronze celt is that with straight flanges at the sides. This was followed by one with a transverse stop-ridge, which was succeeded by the true winged celt, and this in turn by the socketed form. Of still later age, and passing probably into the iron-using period, were those celts which he terms haches votives—a type destitute of a sharp cutting edge, and never intended for real service, but simply for religious purposes. M. Mortillet's boldest conjecture is that the latest type of all may be the simple flat celt, destitute of flange or rib, wing or socket, and formed usually of pure copper rather than of an alloy like bronze. Most archaeologists have, on the contrary, regarded this type of celt as the very earliest of all, inasmuch as it presents the utmost simplicity alike in shape and in composition. It is, therefore, interesting to hear from so experienced an observer as Prof. Mortillet that the conditions under which these simple celts generally occur lead him to suppose that they are altogether of later date than the bronze age, and were probably never intended to be used either as weapons or as tools.

WE understand that Mr. T. Jeffery Parker, Professor of Biology in the University of Otago, has prepared a Course of Instruction in Zoölogy (Vertebrata), which will be published during the present year by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. The work will consist of full directions for the dissection of the lamprey, skate, cod, lizard, pigeon, and rabbit, and will be illustrated by numerous wood-cuts from the author's original drawings.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Friday, Feb. 4 and 18.)

A. J. ELLIS, Esq., President, in the Chair.—The paper read was on "Sounds, Forms, and Vocabulary of Spoken North Welsh," by H. Sweet, M.A., Vice-President. The dialect described was that of Nant Gwynant, in Carnarvon. In treating of the sounds, the vowels in sut, ty were analysed as the high-mixed-narrow, and the y of yma was identified with the English ur in burn, not, as has hitherto been done, with the u of but; rh, nh, &c., were described as voiceless consonants followed by an escape of breath; and attention was called to the hitherto unrecorded mutation of w into wh in borrowed English words, as in i whats hi = "her watch." The laws of sound-change between the spoken and written language were then given, with examples of their influence on the inflections. The most important are: the dropping of unaccented vowels, as (a) deryn "bird," plural (a) derynod for the literary adar; simplification of diphthongs, as in Uyfra (u) "books," isio = eisieu "need"; dropping of certain final consonants, as in cynta (f) "first," ista = eistedd "sit"; change of unaccented e to a, as in amsar "time," rhw bath = rhywbeth "something." Lastly, attention was called to the value of the English loan-words in throwing light on English pronunciation, these words having evidently been learnt by ear, not by spelling. Hence the preservation of archaic pronunciations, as in gates "lodge" = Old-English geathis, dawnsio "dance," fashion "fashion," and even of Old-English and Old-Norse diphthongs, as in Iorwerth = Eadweard, iarl "earl," also of dialectal forms, as in brwmstan "brimstone," chyfar "clever." Mr. Sweet concluded by recommending the foundation of a Welsh dialect society.

FINE ART.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL EXPLORATION IN SAMOTHRACE.

Archäologische Untersuchungen auf Samothrake. By Conze, Hauser, and Beudorf. Vol. II. (Wien: Gerold's Sohn.)

AN expedition into the wilds of Samothrace to search for Greek sculptures and architecture would not in general raise high hopes. So much the greater must have been the confidence of the Austrian Government in its advisers on these matters when, in 1873, and again in 1875, it promptly provided for an enterprise of this nature. On both occasions the confidence was justified by the results.

The present thick quarto volume is a substantial record of the expedition of 1875; and here it may be mentioned in passing that the lapse of time between the date of that brief stay in Samothrace and the publication of the record is rather less than is usual in similar cases where ancient architectural remains have to be dealt with. It reminds us of the period supposed to elapse on play-bills to account for the changes that have intervened. From shattered and scattered fragments entire temples have to be presented, drawn out with architectural accuracy, though seldom engraved with artistic skill. Inscriptions have to be edited; and often things are carefully recorded more from the notion of their being perhaps useful some day than from a consciousness of their having any value in the present state of knowledge.

In 1873 a temple and certain other public buildings had been found, but not so completely cleared as was desirable. To this task the second expedition turned without delay, and with a success that may be seen in the numerous engravings and photographs. With this work well done there was every reason to rest content; but fortune took a specially kind turn when, close to the marble temple just mentioned, were discovered the foundations of another temple, which had been built of tufa, and was evidently of an earlier date. Both had existed for the service of deities who were to be propitiated by sacrifices poured into the earth; for attached to both are still to be seen the places constructed to receive the blood of victims slain for the "great deities" of Samothrace. Had the older temple met with some mishap, and been replaced by a new one of richer material? The Austrian expedition did not think so. There seemed no obstacle to supposing that both had existed and been used simultaneously—the older probably as the more sacred of the two. It might be objected as unlikely that the same deities should have two temples so close together in full operation at the same time; and it may be doubted whether the analogy of the Parthenon and the Temple of Athena Polias, on the acropolis of Athens, is sufficiently exact for the purpose. The new temple is one more added to the list of those that stood directly north and south—not, as according to the general rule, east and west. Of the old temple nearly the same may be said. Very old it was not, to judge from the remains.

Almost nothing was found in the way of sculpture. Yet it has been contrived that the most interesting part of the book should deal with this subject. But for a previous French excavator the expedition would doubtless have discovered the marble statue now in the Louvre known as the Victory of Samothrace. Hence it appears to have occurred to Prof. Benndorf that she came fairly within his province in writing the records of the expedition. Whether that be so or not, everyone interested in Greek sculpture will rejoice that this statue has at length been made the subject of an investigation in which nothing is wanting that could be done by critical judgment and elaborate painstaking. On pl. 64 is an etching of this figure which does perfect justice to its style, and is itself a work of art.

The first step was to attempt a restoration of the Victory with the help of the sculptor Zumbusch; but here difficulties of an instructive nature arose. It became apparent that in some respects the sculptor of the original had not clearly expressed what he meant. The drapery such as it exists is in parts unintelligible and cannot be restored. Similarly the action of the figure leaves more uncertainty than could be expected where so much of the original remains. It might be that the impossibility of making a satisfactory restoration of an ancient statue is itself evidence of high artistic qualities in the original, as in cases where the faculty required in the restorer is a true feeling for treatment and expression. But here it was a question only of intelligence in the first instance; and, if the sculptor of the Victory failed to make himself clear when so much of his work remains to judge by, he must be held to have been an indifferent artist. The great energy and technical skill of his figure have obtained for him, and no doubt will always secure, sufficient praise. To more than this he can hardly be entitled. Clearly he lived in times when Greek sculpture had ceased to produce other than variations in detail on the master-types which the age of Pheidias had left. The general tendency of these variations is pointed out by Benndorf very fully. As regards his belief that the statue had been made for Demetrius Poliorcetes, and erected by him to celebrate a naval victory, or, in general, his supremacy at sea, it is to be wished that some more direct evidence could be found. So far, the comparison of the Victory on his coinage with the statue of Samothrace would create the strongest presumption in favour of this theory, while the date thus obtained would suit perfectly the style of the sculpture.

The large number of plates, the fullness of information as to the architectural monuments, inscriptions, and other matters, together with the much-wanted discussion on the Victory, make this volume a very acceptable record of the expedition of 1875.

A. S. MURRAY.

THE EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY.

THE exhibition of the Royal Scottish Academy which opened to the public last Saturday cannot be pronounced especially rich in striking works by local artists. A fair average is indeed maintained; and marked progress in handling and feeling is shown by one or two of the younger men, especially by several whose pictures show distinct traces of study under Continental influences. But some of the canvases by Academicians—very notably one historical subject hung upon the line—reveal an ineptitude that is simply astonishing; and several of the strongest members of the Academy—Mr. Lockhart and Mr. W. D. McKay, for instance—are very meagrely represented. The former artist has only a single portrait, excellent in its chosen sobriety of colour, to set against his vivid dramatic scenes of former years; the landscapes of the latter are small and unimportant, though the October is quite perfect in its quiet rendering of distance and atmosphere.

The pictures, however, which come from London are more than usually numerous and excellent. Mr. Orchardson's Napoleon on Board the "Bellerophon" has been lent by the Royal Academy, and occupies a place of honour in the Great Room. Opposite hangs the Golden Hours of Sir Frederick Leighton, a subject painted in 1864, when the artist's style was, more exclusively than now, modelled on that of old Italy. To the right an olive-featured, long-haired musician sits at a richly decorated harpsichord, over which leans a lady, with face averted from us, listening intently. Behind is a yellow background, glowing with a brilliancy as of gold around the dark and dreamy head of the player, whose eyes are cast down as he touches a final note, and we are left to imagine—what will come next moment—the music's ending, and the meeting of impassioned face with face. Mr. Millais sends three portraits, including his full-length of The Marchioness of Huntly and Bright Eyes, a charming half-length of a girl painted only the other year, but recalling, both in its handling and its brown-eyed, ripe-lipped type of face, the artist's earlier works. Messrs. James Archer, Colin Hunter, Erskine Nicol, and Briton Rivière are all represented by important works; and Mr. Pettie has a very powerful and hitherto unexhibited character-portrait of the late Scott Plummer, Esq., with rich depth in the flesh tints, and brilliant treatment in the dress of the softness of velvet and the sharp sheen of steel.

Among the local Scottish artists none shows himself more versatile than Mr. George Reid, who passes from the grayness of his autumn landscape—the Norham of last year's Academy—to the delicate white and blue and rosy tints of San Giorgio Maggiore, and from the purity of his superb studies of Roses and Marguerites to the grave tones of his portraits of George Thompson, Esq., and Thomas Adam, Esq. His sketch of Mr. Millais, executed during a recent visit to Aberdeen, will be looked on with interest. Among the other portraits, the President Sir Daniel Macnee, and Messrs. Herdman, Macbeth, and McTaggart contribute largely. Mr. James Irvine has a powerful three-quarter-length of Wm. Veitch, D.D., and Mr. John H. Lorimer shows Robert Blair Macnochie, Esq., and The Venerable John Hardie which was exhibited in London last year.

Among the figure-pictures none has excited more attention than Mr. Robert Gibb's Thin Red Line—a regiment of Highlanders resisting a Balacava charge. The scene has been conceived with true dramatic insight, and the technical qualities of composition and handling shown in the picture compare favourably with those of many famous foreign battle-pieces. Mr. W. B. Hole in The Evening of Culloden and Queen Mary's First Levée treats important historical scenes; and Mr. Robert McGregor has The Knife-Grinder, a village subject very harmonious in its cool gray tones. Among the works of younger artists Mr. A. Melville's scene in a foreign market-place, while defective in the form and action of the main figure, is full of a strength, richness, and play of light which argues well for the future of its painter.

Messrs. Smart, Beattie Brown, Waller Paton, and Frazer show landscapes, the last-named artist contributing also a sharply lighted and splendidly coloured interior in Holyrood. Mr. J. Lawton Wingate maintains the prestige of last year's Quoilers by a poetic effect of ruddy sunset, When the Kye come Home; and Mr. David Murray in A Farm Road, Cardross, and The Clyde from Darleith Moor attains, mainly with cool grays, greens, and blues, much vividness and brilliancy of cloud effect.

J. M. GRAY.

MILLAIS AT THE FINE ART SOCIETY.

It would have been difficult to make a better selection of Mr. Millais' work than that at present on view in the new gallery of the Fine Art Society. It is small; but, though full justice cannot be done to his great powers without the Huguenot and one or two of his finest portraits, these sixteen pictures are sufficient to account for his great popularity and deserved fame. The interest of the exhibition is not, however, confined to the artist, for, as Mr. Lang says in his admirable introduction to the catalogue, Mr. Millais has been "to English painting very much what Mr. Tennyson has been to English poetry," and his works reflect changes not only individual, but national, in artistic feeling and culture, from the foundation of the noble fraternity of the P. R. B. to the "transcripts" and "poetic realism" of the present day.

Besides the pictures in his early style, we are glad to see a specimen of his work before he had any manner individual enough to be called a style. The little well-painted portrait of his early friend the late William Hugh Fenn (painted in 1848), if it show little sign of the "prentice hand," shows as little of the influence of the pre-Raphaelites. It is, however, to the very next year that the Ferdinand and Isabella (Shakespeare's Ferdinand and Boccaccio's and Keats' Isabella) belong. We can scarcely be surprised or indignant that the former picture did not arouse critics to enthusiasm, despite the fine expression of the face of Ferdinand (a portrait of one of the brotherhood who has since earned a prominent position among art critics) and the exquisite painting and drawing of the foliage. To represent Ariel as an ugly green goblin and the elves as the ghosts of wicked fishes was an original, but not happy, exercise of imagination. Mr. Millais' work was at this time experimental, the many roots of his young genius striking out in search of congenial soil; and this picture seems to have proved to him—if it did not to others—that his strength did not lie in realising visions of the unseen. The Isabella, and the picture generally known as The Carpenter's Workshop, should, however, have proved to the dullest of critics that in the painting of "the seen" an artist had arisen who was not likely to be eclipsed in his generation. For pure skill in pure painting we must almost go to the Van Eycks before we find anything comparable in the three qualities of minuteness, breadth, and force of colour to the finest passages of these marvellous works, and they showed a command over a wide range of human expression no less extraordinary. Although it is difficult to absolve the critics altogether, I do not think that we should hold up our hands in Pharisaical astonishment that these pictures should have excited little reverence in the public mind for the young, enthusiastic genius. Those who have the faculty of discriminating between genius and eccentricity will always be rare, and are seldom unerring. We can all see now that the extravagant gesture and expression of the brother who is kicking Isabella's dog and savagely cracking the nut are true and forcible, and that the want of physical beauty and distinction in the Holy Family should not interfere with our appreciation of its exquisite drawing and tender, reverential pathos; but in 1849 it was not so easy. The new pictures were not only strange, but violently so; Radical rather than Liberal, aiming at sudden disestablishment rather than reform of the old artistic hierarchy. The notion that graceful balance of composition and refined physical beauty were essentials in sacred and imaginative art, a notion that probably Mr. Millais himself now shares, was rudely shocked, and other traditions not altogether to be despised were challenged with a suddenness which was not conciliatory. Somebody has said that Albert Direr seemed to think any model was good enough for an angel; and though Mr. Millais' principle of unselection never went so far as this, it went very near it in the Joseph and Mary of The Carpenter's Workshop. Few will be inclined to laugh at or to quarrel with these pictures now; more will see in them noble qualities which the painter has not sufficiently cultivated since.

It was, however, worth while to throw away much to arrive at the goal of Cherry-ripe, perhaps the most beautiful picture of a little girl which has been painted since Sir Joshua Reynolds; and the tender beauty of expression in the Princess Elizabeth shows that his later work may yet rival his earlier in sentiment. Though we are not likely again to see the fervour of feeling and "tension" of power which carried his pre-Raphaelite work, however ugly, so triumphantly above the commonplace, the resources of his genius show no signs of exhaustion, and we may expect with confidence great and new results from the confident exercise of his mature skill. When we look at his Woodman's Daughter, with its fine little gentleman offering strawberries to the ill-favoured little rustic, we may feel thankful for at least one change in his artistic aims. Beauty, like gold, is no doubt dress, but it is difficult in a picture to make personal attraction felt without the presence of some outward and visible sign of attractiveness. The works of Mr. Dante Rossetti are, however, sufficient to prove that a vow of ugliness was not enforced on the mystic brotherhood; and if Mr. Millais ever took such a vow, the pictures exhibited the year after The Woodman's Daughter (1852)—viz., the Ophelia and The Huguenot—show that he soon abjured it. Neither of these is here, but the Order of Release (1853) is, and owes no little of its attraction to the superb physique of the Jacobite's wife.

The next two of the early pictures are the Autumn Leaves (1856) and the Vale of Rest (1858), with regard to which the remarks of Mr. Lang could scarcely be improved. He is doubtless right in attributing to the former a large influence over such artist-poets of the twilight as Mason and Walker. Of Millais' later work, we have his finest landscape, Chill October; the charming Minuet and Boyhood of Raleigh, The Princess in the Tower, The Gambler's Wife, and A Yeoman of the Guard. To these has been, or soon will be, added The North-West Passage. Though I think that Mr. Millais has played a good deal too freely of later years with his extraordinary powers, has given us too many pictures in which the triumphant exhibition of these powers has been their main interest, and has frequently trenchoned on the trivial and commonplace, the verdict of Mr.

Lang that "he is the strongest, manliest, and most certain in his aims of all modern English painters" is one which most will accept without much modification. Superlatives are dangerous, but with regard to the first at least there can be no shadow of doubt. COSMO MONKHOUSE.

ART SALES.

At a recent sale at Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods', largely attended by the purchasers of the more refined modern art, some small but beautiful and finished examples of Samuel Palmer's work fetched the following prices:—The Bright Cloud, £100 (Robinson); The Rising of the Lark, £89 5s. (Fine Art Society); The Gleaming Field, £141 15s. (Fine Art Society); and Twilight, £162 (Fine Art Society).

In the same collection—the Giles collection—were included some good impressions of the Liber Studiorum of Turner, the prices for which indicated the value now attaching to these rare prints. A third state of the Raglan Castle fell for £7 (Colnaghi); a second state of Oakhampton, £4 4s. (Colnaghi); a second state of Mildmay Marine, £6 (Fine Art Society); a second state of Hind Head Hill, £7 7s. (Fine Art Society). There were also Solway Moss, £8 18s. 6d.; a first state of Watercress Gatherers, £16 5s. 6d. (Colnaghi); a first state of Twickenham (one of only two or three subjects which are better in the pure etching which preceded this published state), £23 5s.; Inverary Castle, a first state, £22 1s. (Colnaghi); The Alps from Grenoble, a third state, £5 (Fine Art Society); a first state of the rare Ben Arthur—one of the finest of the mountain subjects—£55 2s. 6d. (Colnaghi); and Aesacus and Hesperie—a rare first state, with the white face of Hesperie turned to the spectator—£107 2s. (Colnaghi). It is probable that the last-named sum is the highest price ever given for a single print in the great serial publication of Turner.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON AND WOODS will sell in about a fortnight's time the large and varied collection formed by the late Mr. Tom Taylor—his pictures, English drawings, engravings, and library. It is understood that the greatest sale of the season will take place during the month of May. This will, in all probability, be the sale of the collection of the late Mr. Charles Sackville Bale, the veteran collector whose death was announced some two months ago.

THERE will be a sale of pictures at Messrs. Christie and Manson's on Monday next (the 28th) in connexion with the fund being raised for the widow and family of the late Mr. John T. Lucas, the artist. The pictures have been given towards this benevolent object; and among the distinguished Royal Academicians, &c., who have contributed are Mr. Calderon, Mr. Armitage, Mr. Pettie, Mr. Stacy Marks, Mr. Phil Morris, and Mr. Frank Dicksee.

THE collection of pictures belonging to the late Prince Frederick of Hohenzollern-Hechingen are to be sold by auction at Munich. The masters represented include Andrea del Sarto, Ghirlandajo, Hobbema, Ruysdael, Ph. Wouvermans, &c.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WE are glad to observe that Mr. Francis D. Ward, of the firm of Marcus Ward and Co., has been elected a member of the Royal Irish Academy. Two years ago, Mr. Ward received the Cross of the Legion of Honour.

MR. FRED. BRUCKMANN has sent us a cabinet photograph of Carlyle, which he states was recognised by the subject as his best portrait, and by Mr. Millais as the most characteristic.

THE Autotype Company has lately published a portfolio of autotypes from works by Mr. P. G. Hamerton; and, though it would be pleasant to us to see more of Mr. Hamerton's work at first-hand, we are still glad to see it through the medium of these reproductions. Moreover, the selection has been carefully made, and with especial reference to the conditions that were foreseen. Thus, there is here no inevitable failure consequent upon the mechanical method having been compelled to struggle with the translation of colour. This complication has been avoided, every autotype in the folio having been taken from a drawing in sepia, or at least a drawing in monochrome. Thus the relations of light and shade, so fatally wrong when it is many-coloured work that is dealt with, are rightly preserved. Apart, however, from the directness and simplicity of the reproduction—in insisting upon which Mr. Hamerton was wise—our interest is evoked by the works themselves, with which, by this autotype method, we are almost face to face. A Painter's Camp long ago made evident what were the fields in which Mr. Hamerton delighted to study; Central France and the Scotch Highlands have generally been his ground. He has portrayed both, and with much appreciation of the beauties of both; and though the painters of mountains have been comparatively few, yet in both grounds—in the Highlands as well as in Central France—the artist has had formidable competitors. But not to speak of the men of two generations ago—and notably of such a giant as Turner, who, as it happens, was peculiarly at home in these two fields, either one of which is generally enough for the labour of an artist—the Highlands had their painter, almost in our own time, in Sir George Harvey, and they have their painter to-day in Mr. John Smart. But Mr. Smart's vigorous and immediately impressive art is apt to be lacking in refinement and variety; the quality of exquisiteness it hardly essays to reach. And Sir George Harvey's art, though it has been highly appreciated by those most constantly familiar with the scenery it summarises, is (as the word we have this moment used in relation to it may sufficiently imply) not so much the record of a particular scene, nor the record of an impression of a particular scene—it is rather an elaborate abstract, inclusive of many features rarely found in combination in the actual place. Now Mr. Hamerton, it is evident from these autotypes before us, wants neither the refinement lacking to the one artist nor the vigour and directness lacking to the other. His drawings have in them only so much of composition as is needed to give legitimately a pleasurable effect when what we are to look at is not pure nature, but the art that, in recording nature, may select and may reject. They are frank and honest, but their honesty is not exaggerated to the point of insisting upon what is ugly and of portraying what is uncouth. The grandeur of Scottish scenery is here; and the scale of the mountains—a thing that is rarely indicated with reticence, rarely implied without sensational exaggeration—is here given with the quietude of force. Climate, too, and atmospheric effect, which play so large and often so unwelcome a part in modifying Scottish scenery—not to say in obliterating it—are faithfully observed and picturesquely represented. The artist has been painting in a land of changeable weather—of features at all events mobile, if sometimes grim. But one or two of the French landscape-drawings strike us quite as much as any of the Scotch, and show almost a French sensitiveness to a refined order of beauty. It is true that Com Drinking is, we suppose, in France, and this we should not care about save for its delicate distance of ranged poplars, which are treated admirably. But A Hamlet in the Morvan is a most significant rendering of the impression produced by the desolate strength of that remote country-side; while Decize, on the Loire, displays the artist valiantly attacking a subject which presented problems of extreme difficulty. The composition of this subject, with its many curious boats in the foreground, its great mass of trees in the very centre and quite near to us, must have been no easy task. As it is, Mr. Hamerton has successfully attacked it, treating very skilfully a theme that is complicated and of great variety.

THE Sacristy, a quarterly Review of ecclesiastical art, literature, and antiquities, is to be revived by Mr. John Hodges, under the joint editorship of Mr. Edward Walford and Mr. G. Gilbert Scott. What is called the tenth part will appear on April 1.

MR. JOHN HODGES has also nearly ready for publication an essay by Mr. G. Gilbert Scott on The History of English Church Architecture prior to the Separation of England from the Roman Obedience. It will be published in quarto, with forty illustrations, photo-lithographs and wood-cuts.

THE death of the Sub-Dean of Westminster recalls that the governing body of Westminster School some years ago obtained an Act of Parliament which enabled them to purchase from the Dean and Chapter the house lately occupied by the Sub-Dean, and two others. The houses were to be bought at a low fixed rate, as they became vacant. And it was said that the school authorities intended to pull down Lord John Thynne's house when it came into their possession. We do not know whether they now intend to make use of the powers conferred upon them, or whether the growing opinion that some important changes in the constitution of the school are absolutely necessary will make them regard the present as an unfavourable time for undertaking new works. But, whatever they determine to do, it is to be hoped that the design for pulling down Ashburnham House will not be persisted in. The house is an excellent and rich example of seventeenth-century domestic architecture, and embedded in it are some valuable remains of the old abbey buildings. As it stands, it is the best of the Canons' houses; and, if it and the two others are handed over to the school, three new houses must be built for the displaced members of the staff of the church; and that could only be done by encroaching upon the Canons' garden, which, in so crowded a neighbourhood, would be a most unwise step.

PHOTOGRAPHS of the famous statuette of Athené Nikephoros may be had of Karl Wilberg, publisher, of Athens.

WE learn from the Nation that Mr. A. F. Bandelier has recently been conducting a series of investigations, under the auspices of the Archaeological Institute of America, into the past and present life of the Indians of New Mexico. Besides much of interest to the anthropologist and student of language, Mr. Bandelier made one curious and novel discovery. In two places, stone enclosures were found outside the pueblo, or collection of huts, containing life-sized images of the puma, cut out of solid rock. These images are worshipped at the present day as the god of the chase. Nominally, the Indians are Catholics, but they retain many other traces of their primitive paganism.

A FEW weeks ago there appeared in the Paris Figaro an article headed "Leonard de Vinci a Musulman," signed "Veha." According to this article, Dr. J.-P. Richter, who has lately been examining the important MSS. by Leonardo preserved in the French Institute, had discovered that Leonardo spent eleven years of his life, from 1472 to 1483, in the service of the Sultan of Egypt, who employed him chiefly as an architect and engineer. It was assumed from this that he must have adopted the Mahomedan religion in order to be allowed to enter the mosques he was supposed to have built. Notwithstanding that the name of Dr. Richter was attached to these discoveries, we hesitated to accept them at second-hand, and waited to hear from Dr. Richter himself an account of his researches. It seems this was wise, for in the Chronique des Arts of last week the whole story, or nearly the whole, is denied. There would appear to be only this much truth in it, that it seems probable that Leonardo journeyed at one period of his life to the East, but he could only have made a very short stay there.

M. GATTEAUX, the senior member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, has lately died at the age of ninety-two. He was a sculptor and engraver of medals of some note in his day, and was employed by the Government of Louis XVIII. to celebrate on a medal the peace of 1814 and the Holy Alliance. Since then he has executed numerous works, and been a constant exhibitor at the Salon. He leaves a large collection of pictures, among which is said to be a fine Memling, to the Louvre. The Louvre has also been enriched lately by the legacy of a woman's portrait by Flandrin.

THE proposal to hold a universal exhibition at Berlin has been decisively negatived by the Municipal Council.

MR. FORD MADOX BROWN is just completing his picture of the expulsion of the Danes from Manchester, which forms one of a series the artist has agreed to paint upon the walls of the Town Hall, Manchester.

THE Countess Mniszeck, the daughter-in-law of the great Balzac, has just been condemned to pay more than forty-two thousand pounds sterling to M. Goupil, the well-known Paris picture-dealer. The lady has a passion for the fine arts, it appears, and was in the habit of ordering from Goupil, not single pictures, but whole galleries! As she did not display equal alacrity in paying for these luxuries, M. Goupil was compelled, after many private efforts, to appeal to the Tribunal of the Seine to help him out of his difficulties.

MESSRS. DOWDESWELL will, during the coming season, exhibit at their gallery in New Bond Street three large pictures, under the collective title of "Christ's Appeal." They are painted by Mme. E. Courtauld Arendrup, who some eight years since may be remembered by her picture (hung on the line at the Royal Academy) entitled Memories of the First Palm Sunday, which attracted considerable attention at the time. Since that period Mme. Arendrup has almost ceased to exhibit, having devoted herself to study, and for the last four years exclusively to the three important works mentioned above.

A VERY bright and beautiful original etching by J. P. Heseltine is published in L'Art this week. L'Art has not hitherto given us many original etchings, having been occupied mostly with the reproduction of noted and remarkable paintings; but it now announces that, besides these, it intends to give from time to time original works by French, English, German, and Dutch etchers. Last week L'Art had a magnificent etching of Gainsborough's Blue Boy, by Paul Rajon, in which the very colour of the picture seemed to be rendered, and even a grace added to that marvellously graceful work.

THE German Raphael Work, which, as we announced on January 1, has been started by the publishing firm of Adolf Gutbier, in Dresden, has proved a great success. The first edition of the work has been sold off, and a second edition will be ready in two months.

THE Paris correspondent of the Times writes: "M. Turquet, Under-Secretary of State for Fine Arts, has obtained the sanction of the Government to a Bill for establishing in Paris a decorative art museum on the model of South Kensington. The Municipality is to be asked for a site and a subsidy; the State will build the museum, and drawing-classes and a library will be added."

UNTIL the great fire of 1788, which wrought so much damage to the town of Sion and destroyed the Castle of Tourbillon (the old episcopal palace), the canton of Valais possessed a tolerably complete collection of portraits of the Valaisian bishops. The Bishops of Sion were powerful temporal princes, and even after the Valais became a republic, or rather a federation of little communal republics, the bishop still retained a nominal sovereignty, with the right of coinage, of presiding over the Diet, and of pardoning criminals, which lasted until the French Revolution. The Historical Society of the canton is anxious to restore this collection, so far as possible, and has sent out an appeal to the families which count Bishops of Sion among their collateral ancestors, and to possessors of portraits, to present either the originals, or copies of them, for this purpose. The following have been collected:—Cardinal Schinner, 1499-1522; Bishops Supersaxo, 1701-34; Blatter, 1734-52; Roten, 1752-60; Ambuel, 1760-80; Zen-Russinen, 1780-90, who was bishop at the time when Archdeacon Coxé made his interesting notes on Sion, just before the great fire; Blatter, 1790-1807; and Roten, 1830-42. It is said that no less than eighty portraits of the famous "Walliser Bischöfe" are known to exist, in addition to the above.

THE STAGE.

AT the Gaiety Theatre, for Miss Litton's afternoon performances, Mrs. Centlivre's Busybody has succeeded to the Good-Natured Man. The lady's comedy—which is more or less derived from L'Etourdi, and which in its turn did something to suggest Paul Pry—would hardly be placed by anybody on a level with the comedy of Goldsmith as literary work, but it is by no means giving it over-much praise to say that it is better than the Good-Natured Man as work for the contemporary theatre. The characters are less delicately drawn; they are more easily interpreted. The story is a story of more continual bustle—better suited to audiences that demand action and are, in truth, more appreciative of farce than of analytical comedy. Furthermore, as regards the stage performance of The Good-Natured Man, there was a good deal in it to which we were obliged to take exception. The cast was, on the whole, feeble. For the new performance the company has been strengthened; for, while Mr. Lionel Brough plays Marplot and Miss Litton Miranda, the aid of Mr. Kyrle Bellew and Mr. Henry Howe has been obtained. Thus, the lightness and fervour properly belonging to the part of Sir George Airy are adequately presented—Mr. Kyrle Bellew plays this part; while the character of the astute, yet foolish, admirer of Miranda is assumed by Mr. Howe, a veteran actor, who for the nonce drops that honest bluntness of manner which we are wont to associate with almost any performance of his. Miss Litton's Miranda is about equal in merit to her performance of the heroine in Garrick's version of The Country Wife, and this is warm praise. Miss Litton, to our mind, though skilful and flexible in poetical comedy, approaches much nearer to an ideal performance when she is occupied with the lively comedy of intrigue—prose comedy; the comedy of manners rather than of character. Eminently adroit in the one, she is more easily unexceptionable in the other. Mr. Lionel Brough is not seen quite at his best in Marplot. One follows him with amusement and interest, but a certain uncouthness in his performance may strike even those who have not learnt from personal experience of Charles Matthews in the part how much more of sharp and refined vivacity it is capable of. The slower humour of Mr. Brough has nevertheless its own value, and the actor is a general favourite.

Mlle. ALICE REGNAULT, who was for some time one of the leading actresses at the Gymnase Theatre, has just joined the company of the Théâtre Français, and she will make her first appearance in the Rue Richelieu in M. Pailleron's piece, Le Monde où l'on s'ennuie.

MR. HENRY IRVING is likely to undertake a long provincial tour next autumn, when the Lyceum Theatre will be handed over, for a time, to Mr. Hollingshead.

MR. CHARLES WARNER will appear immediately at the Adelphi in the new important melodrama which has for some time been in preparation at that theatre.

MUSIC.

The Great Musicians. A Series of Biographies of the Great Musicians. Edited by F. Hueffer. I. Wagner. II. Weber. IV. Schubert. V. Rossini. (Sampson Low & Co.)

THE announcement of a series of biographies such as the above is most opportune, for the interest in England concerning music and musicians is becoming every day greater and more earnest. The publishers have secured the valuable services of Dr. Hueffer as editor; and, beside the present volumes, contributions are announced and others promised by distinguished writers, both English and foreign. The first of the series is on Richard Wagner, and is written by the editor himself. Dr. Hueffer gives us but little information about the composer's career. He tells us that "the materials for his biography are scanty and of comparatively little interest;" and, again, that "the really important incidents of his life must for the present remain untold." With the former statement we do not quite agree, and cannot but think that a few more details respecting the Leipzig, Magdeburg, Dresden, and Paris periods would have been more acceptable than the full plots of such well-known operas as Rienzi, Tannhäuser, and Lohengrin. The writer has, however, given an extremely clear and logical account of Wagner's theories, and has admirably traced the development of his genius from Rienzi to the Ring des Nibelungen. A condensed history of opera from the sixteenth to the nineteenth century and a brief outline of Schopenhauer's metaphysics of music are also given, so that the reader may the more readily understand and appreciate the reforms inaugurated by Wagner. Dr. Hueffer determined evidently not to exceed a certain limit, and it is really marvellous how much valuable and interesting information he has crowded into a small space. At the end of the volume is given a list of Wagner's musical and literary works. The latter are published in nine volumes, and we hope that Dr. Hueffer may give us a companion volume to the present one, with an account and critical summary of the numerous pamphlets, letters, speeches, &c.

The second volume of the series is on Carl Maria von Weber, written by Sir Julius Benedict. It is just and fitting that this biography should have been entrusted to the pupil and friend of the great composer. The writer has given a graphic and truthful account of Weber's sad but romantic career. His troubles commenced early in life. Misfortunes haunted him from the day of his birth to the day of his death; and in few and simple words the history is given in this book of his many struggles and his few, though great, successes. Most exciting are the accounts of the production of Freyschütz at Berlin in 1821, of Euryanthe at Vienna in 1823, and of Oberon at London in 1826, the year of his death. From the store of his personal recollections Sir Julius has been able to add many interesting details. It is scarcely correct to say that Weber began to tread an entirely new path in the overture to Freyschütz in attempting to give an epitome of the opera to follow, for Gluck had already written, in 1767, in his Preface to Alceste: "My idea is that the overture should prepare the audience for what is to follow, and, as it were, herald the substance of the piece." It is interesting to learn that "the subject of Tannhäuser was offered to Weber by Clemens Brentano, approved by Treck, and the libretto partly written when the composer's official duties interfered with the carrying out of a project destined to be realised thirty years later by Richard Wagner." The volume concludes with an annotated catalogue of Weber's published and unpublished works.

The biography of Schubert has been written by Mr. H. F. Frost, the well-known musical critic. He truly says that "the best means of gaining an insight into the special idiosyncracies of a celebrated man are afforded by the study of his diaries and private correspondence." But Schubert was averse to letter-writing, and only a very small portion remains of his diaries. The somewhat uneventful history of the composer's life is told in plain and simple language; the chief merit of the book consists in the sound critical remarks on the various compositions. Mr. Frost discusses at some length the comparative weakness of Schubert's operatic compositions, and clearly exposes their defects and the causes of their failure. We cannot quite agree with the writer, who, after noticing an episode in Schubert's overture to Des Teufels Lustschloss curiously resembling the passage with muted violins in Weber's Euryanthe, says: "It is impossible that Weber can have been familiar with Des Teufels Lustschloss, and the likeness must therefore be purely accidental." Schubert commenced the opera in 1813, and completed it in 1814. The score was shown to his master, Salieri, who was delighted with the work. Weber went to Vienna on March 27, 1813. He stopped there two months, and made the acquaintance of Salieri. Is it not just possible that Salieri, proud of his pupil, may have shown the MS. score, at any rate of the overture, to Weber? In speaking of the "Overtures in the Italian Style," the writer says "they afford yet another instance of the strange insensibility of one musical genius towards the art-work of another." He gives instances—among others, Handel on Gluck. The former said one day of Gluck, "he knows no more of music as mein cook," but as Berlioz kindly observes, "sans doute, après avoir entendu les deux mauvais opéras italiens Pyrame et Thisbé et la Chute des Géants." Gluck's great operas were written after Handel's death. At the close of the book is a most valuable and complete chronological table of Schubert's published and unpublished works.

We must very briefly notice the remaining volume, Rossini and the Modern Italian School, by Mr. H. Sutherland Edwards. The writer gives an interesting account of Rossini's operas, and shows how much he owed to Mozart. The two last chapters are devoted to Donizetti, Bellini, and Verdi. We cannot help pointing out an extraordinary mistake at the beginning of the volume. Rossini is said to have been born the very year in which Mozart died. The former was born February 29, 1792; the latter died December 5, 1791. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

THE March number of the Musical Times will contain a long and exhaustive account of Mr. J. Villiers Stanford's new opera, The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan, which has just been produced with great success at the Hanover Opera House.

NEW ETYMOLOGICAL FRENCH

GRAMMAIR, giving for the first time the history of the French syntax. By A. CHASSANO, Lauréat de l'Académie Française. With introductory remarks by L. PAUL BLOUET, of St. Paul's School. 8vo, boards, 5s.

Paris: GARNIER FRÈRES.

London: DULAU & CO.; HACHETTE & CO.

BIBLE REVISION.

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Cramer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorized, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, 2s. 2s.; or morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman." Observer

London: S. BAGSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.

And sold by all Booksellers.

Just published, crown 8vo, price 5s.

MALVERN CHASE: an Episode of the Wars of the Roses and the Battle of Tewkesbury. An Autobiography. Edited by W. S. SYMONDS, Rector of Pseudock.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & CO.

Tewkesbury: WILLIAM NORTH, 139, High-street.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MARCH

contains—Mr. C. Villiers Stanford's Opera, "The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan"—Mr. Percy's Musician, by F. Hueffer—The Great Composers: Berlioz—The Father of the Symphony—Ponchielli's Opera, "The Tragic Son"—Monday Popular, Crystal Palace, and Mr. Hallé's Concerts—Music in Manchester—Mr. Kallé's Brighton Musical Festival—Occasional Notes—Foreign and Country News—Reviews, &c. Price 5d.; post-free, 6d. Annual subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MARCH

contains a special and full Report of the recent production of Mr. C. Villiers Stanford's Opera, "The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan," at the Hanover Opera House.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MARCH contains "O Saving Victim": Anthem by BERTHOLD TOURS, Price, separately, 1d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

TO BOOKBUYERS.—A LIST of a small

Collection of BOOKS, including some Rare, Curious, and Illustrated ones, will be sent on application to S. Y. N., Gower Office, Walsall.

LITHOGRAPHY.—GOSW, BUTTER-

FIELD, & CO. (late Butterfield & Mason) are prepared to execute First-class WORK in FACSIMILES of Old Paintings and Water-Colours, Book Illustrations, Show-Cards, and Trade Emblems.—Specimens may be seen at their Works, Bowling Green-lane Buildings, Farringdon-road, E.C.

GEORGE ELIOT.

Complete Works of George Eliot.

CABINET EDITION.

Uniform and complete in 20 vols. Printed from a new and legible type, in volumes of a convenient and handsome form, price £5.

CONTENTS.

ADAM BEDE. 2 vols.—THE MILL on the FLOSS. 2 vols.—SILAS MARNER—THE LIFTED VEIL—BROTHER JACOB. 1 vol.—SCENES of CLERICAL LIFE. 2 vols.—FELIX HOLT. 2 vols.—ROMOLA. 2 vols.—MIDDLEMARCH. 3 vols.—DANIEL DERONDA. 3 vols.—THE SPANISH GYPSY. 1 vol.—JUBAL; and other Poems, Old and New. 1 vol.—IMPRESSIONS of THEOPHRASTUS SUCHI. 1 vol.

Each Volume, price 5s., may be had separately.

"A delightful edition of George Eliot's Works. . . . In size, type, and paper, everything that could be wished."—Athenæum.

Novels by George Eliot.

CHEAP EDITIONS.

ADAM BEDE. With Illustrations. 2s. 6d.
THE MILL on the FLOSS. With Illustrations. 3s. 6d.
FELIX HOLT, the RADICAL. With Illustrations. 3s. 6d.
SCENES of CLERICAL LIFE. With Illustrations. 3s.
SILAS MARNER. With Illustrations. 2s. 6d.
ROMOLA. With Vignette. 3s. 6d.
DANIEL DERONDA. With Vignette. 7s. 6d.
MIDDLEMARCH. With Vignette. 7s. 6d.

IMPRESSIONS of THEOPHRASTUS SUCHI. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE SPANISH GYPSY. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

JUBAL; and other Poems, Old and New. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Edinburgh and London: WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

For MARCH, 1881. No. DCCCLXXXV. Price 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

IRELAND UNDER ORDINARY LAW.
THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.—PART V.
AMONG THE ALBANIANS OF SOUTHERN EPIRUS.
ON SOME OF SHAKESPEARE'S FEMALE CHARACTERS: ILL—DESDEMONA.
MR. COX'S PROTÉGÉ. IN TWO PARTS.—CONCLUSION.
HOMER'S SEA-EPIC RENDERED IN BALLAD-MEASURE.
AUTOBIOGRAPHIES.—NO. II.—LORD HERBERT OF CHREBURY.
THE HIGHLAND TARTAN. By LADY JOHN MANNERS.
THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

Edinburgh and London: WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR MARCH.

ON the MORAL CHARACTER of MAN. By the DUKE of AROLYL.
THE JEWISH QUESTION IN GERMANY. By CHARLES GRANT.
THE RATIONALE of FREE PUBLIC LIBRARIES. By Professor W. STANLEY JEVONS.
SAVAGE LIFE in INDIA. By W. KNIGHTON, LL.D.
THE LAY ELEMENT in ENGLAND and AMERICA. By JOHN HENRY HOPKINS, S.T.D.
WHAT the THREE F's did for TUSCANY. By J. A. FARRER.
ON PYRRHONISM in SCIENCE. By Professor W. C. WILLIAMSON.
THE FUTURE of INDIA. By HERBERT TAYLOR.
GUIZOT in PRIVATE LIFE. By Dr. KARL HILLEBRAND.
London: STRAHAN & CO. (LIMITED), 34, Paternoster-row.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

For MARCH, 1881. Price 2s. 6d.

EIGHTY YEARS. By Miss CHARLOTTE G. O'BRIEN.
RADICALISM: a Familiar Colloquy. By W. H. MALLOCK.
ART NEEDLEWORK. (1) By LADY MARIAN ALFORD. (2) By O. F. WATTS, R.A.
THE CREED of a LAYMAN. By FREDERIC HARRISON.
SMOKE PREVENTION. By Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart.
THE STATE of PARTIES. By T. E. KEBLE.
THE PARSIS. By Prof. MONTER WILLIAMS, C.I.E.
OUR NEXT LEAP in the DARK. By the Right Hon. EARL FORTESCUE.
TRANSPLANTING to the COLONIES. By W. M. TORRENS, M.P.
THE BASUTOS and SIR BARTLE FRERE. By WILLIAM FOWLER, M.P.
LONG and SHORT SERVICE. By Lieut.-Gen. Sir GARNET WOLSELEY, G.C.B., G.C.M.G.
HOLLAND and the TRANSVAAL. By W. H. DE BEAUFORT.
London: C. KEOAN PAUL & CO.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 227. For MARCH. Price 1s.

CONTENTS of the NUMBER.

1. THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. By HENRY JAMES, Jun. Chapters XXI.—XXIV.
2. CHRISTMAS, and ANCESTOR WORSHIP, in the BLACK MOUNTAIN. By ARTHUR J. EVANS. Part III.
3. BYRON. By MATTHEW ARNOLD.
4. CONNEMARA. By ROBERT J. MARTIN.
5. THE PENNY PRESS. By FRANCIS HITCHMAN.
6. ON a RECENT CRITICISM of MR. SWINBURNE'S. By ALFRED AUSTIN.
London: MACMILLAN & CO.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

WINTER EXHIBITION.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY

EXHIBITION OF WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS AND DECORATIVE DESIGNS, BY LIVING ARTISTS,

NOW OPEN DAILY, 10 to 6.

Admission, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S

COCOA

EXTRACT

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."

Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."

W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."

CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

"THE BEST SELECTIONS OF THE BEST GROWTHS."

WILLS' CIGARETTES.

"DUBEC" (MILD).

"YENIJEH" (FULL FLAVOUR).

SOLD BY ALL PRINCIPAL DEALERS.

Every Genuine Cigarette bears the name of

W. D. & H. O. WILLS.

MESSRS. WYMAN & SONS, Printers and Publishers, invite attention to the facilities offered by their Establishment for the COMPLETE PRODUCTION of BOOKS of every description, all Departments of the Business being carried on under the immediate Personal Superintendence of the Firm. Inclusive Estimates promptly forwarded, and liberal arrangements made with Authors for the publication of their MSS., whether Scientific, Artistic, or Works of Fiction.—WYMAN & SONS, 74 and 75, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn, London, W.C.

BOOK and MAGAZINE PRINTING.—

UNWIN BROS., the Printers of six-and-twenty various Serial Publications, furnish estimates on application. They have large premises both in London and Chilworth, Stereotype Foundry, and every Modern Appliance for the production of High-class work in Modern or Old Style.—Address, 109A, Cannon-street, E.C. Telephone communication with upwards of 700 Firms.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1889. FRANCIS HAYNSCROFT, Manager

STEPHENS DRAWING INK.

For Architects! Drawing and Artists' use.

Does not require stirring while in use.

Dries quickly, flows evenly from the pen, and becomes an insoluble colour when dry. Drawings executed with it can be washed without fear of injury. The most delicate Drawing Pens used with this ink are not impaired by corrosion. On the contrary, instruments left with the ink to dry on them are preserved as with a lacquer.

Sold in Bottles 6d. and 2s. each.

Can be procured through any Stationer.

H. C. STEPHENS, 191, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A solid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS,—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
The original, best, and most liberal.

Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free, F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £6 6s. to 50 guineas.

Drawing-room Suites, from £9 9s. to 45 guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.

Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.
Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.

Thoroughly reverts the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones

Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

WM. H. ALLEN & CO'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.

Monthly, price 1s.

CONTENTS FOR MARCH.

- KAUBUL CORRESPONDENCE. By ARMIENUS VAMBERT.
- RIGHT HON. SIR H. BATTLE E. FRIERE, BART., G.C.B., G.C.S.I. By A. N. W. With Portrait.
- THE RUSSIAN PACIFIC FLEET. By C. MARVIN.
- DERVAL HAMPTON: a Tale of the Sea—Continued. By JAMES GRANT.
- THE HOELS and the TRANSVAAL WAR. By Major HORACE DURANT.
- RUSSIAN EXPEDITION against KHIVA.—No. II. By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS.
- ARMY REFORM. By A GENERAL OFFICER.
- ACT THREE of the AFGHAN WAR. By FREE LANCE. With Sketch of the Battle-field of Kandahar.
- SIR GEORGE COLLEY'S GENERALSHIP. By CENTURION.
- SERVICE GOSSIP and LITERARY CHIT-CHAT.

MEMOIR of a GRIFFIN; or, a
Cadet's First Year in India. By Captain BELLEW.
Illustrated from Designs by the Author. A New Edition. 10s. 6d.

THE EASTERN QUESTION
SETTLED; or, a Vision of the Future. By BUDGE. 1s.

ANALYTICAL INDEX to Sir John
W. Kaye's "History of the Sepoy War" and Colonel
G. B. Malleson's "History of the Indian Mutiny" (combined in One Volume). By FREDERIC PINCOIT, M.R.A.S.
8vo, 10s. 6d.

TO CABUL with the CAVALRY
BRIGADE: a Narrative of Personal Experiences with the Force under General Sir F. S. Roberts, G.C.B. With Map and Illustrations from Sketches by the Author. By Major R. C. W. MITFORD, 14th Bengal Lancers. 8vo, 9s.

TURKEY: OLD and NEW. Historical, Geographical, and Statistical. By SUTHERLAND
MEXZIES. 2 vols., 8vo, Illustrated, 32s.

MERV, the QUEEN of the WORLD, and the Scourge of the Man-stealing Turcomans. By CHARLES MARVIN, Author of the "Disastrous Russian Campaign against the Turcomans," &c. 1ss.

IN ZULULAND with the BRITISH
THROUGHOUT the WAR of 1879. By CHARLES L.
NORRIS-NEWMAN, Special Correspondent to the London
"Standard," the Cape Town "Standard and Mail," and "Times" of Natal. 8vo, with Four Portraits, Map, and numerous Plans, 16s.

THE EXPIRING CONTINENT:
a Narrative of Travel in Senegambia; with Observations on Native Character, the Present Condition and Future
Prospects of Africa, and Colonisation. By ALEX. WILK.
MITCHELSON. 8vo, with Sixteen full-page Illustrations, 1ss.

THE PERSONAL LAW [of the MAHOMMEDANS (according to all the Schools), together with a Comparative Sketch of the Law of Inheritance among the Sunnis and the Shi'ahs. By SYED AMER ALI, Moulvie, M.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-Law, Residency Magistrate, Calcutta; Member of the Faculty of Law, Calcutta University; late Member of the Legislative Council of Bengal, &c. 8vo, 15s.

THE IRRIGATION WORKS of INDIA, and their FINANCIAL RESULTS. By H.
ROBERT B. BUCKLEY, Indian Public Works Department. 8vo, with Map, 6s.

THE VICTORIA CROSS: an Official Chronicle of Deeds of Personal Valour, achieved in the Presence of the Enemy during the Crimean and Baltic Campaigns, and the Indian, Persian, Chinese,
New Zealand, and African Wars from the Institution of the Order in 1856 to 1880. Crown 8vo, with Plate, 5s.

LONDON:

WM. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE.

TRÜBNER & CO'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE MESNEVI (usually known as the Mesnevi Sherif, or Holy Mesnevi) of Mevlana (our Lord), Jelalu'ddin Muhammed Er-rumi. Book the First. Together with Some Account of the Life and Acts of the Author, of his Ancestors, and of his Descendants. Illustrated by Selection of Characteristic Anecdotes, as collected by the Historian, Mevlana Rhamud-din Ahmed, El Edaki, El Arifi. Translated, and the Poetry Versified, in English, by JAMES
W. KEOHOUSE, M.R.A.S., &c. Post 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE SCIENCE of BEAUTY:

An Analytical Enquiry into the Laws of Aesthetics. By AVART W.
HOLMES-FORBES, M.A., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE HISTORY of INDIA from the EARLIEST AGES.

By J. TALBOT WHEELER, late Assistant-Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department; Author of the "Geography of Herodotus," &c., &c. Vol. IV. Part II. MOGHUL EMPIRE—AURUNGEZEB.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT within HISTORIC TIMES;

With Some Account of British Wild White Cattle. By J. E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. With Illustrations by Wolf, Whymper, and others.
Demy 8vo, cloth.

DR. APPLETON: his LIFE and LITERARY RELICS.

By JOHN H. APPLETON, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Staplefield, Sussex; and A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Fellow of Queen's College, and Deputy Professor of Comparative Philology, Oxford. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

KING'S COLLEGE LECTURES on ELO- CUTION;

Or, the Physiology and Culture of Voice and Speech, and the Expression of the Emotions by Language, Countenance, and Gesture.
To which is added a Special Lecture on the Causes and Cure of Impediments of Speech. Being the Substance of the Introductory Course of Lectures annually delivered by CHARLES JOHN FLEMING, Lecturer on Public Speaking and Speaking at King's College, London, in the Evolving Classes Department. Dedicated by permission to H.R.H.
the Prince of Wales. New and greatly Enlarged Illustrated Edition.
Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

THE GULISTAN;

Or, Rose Garden of Sheikh Muslihu'd-din Sadi of Shiraz. Translated for the first time into Prose and Verse, with an Introductory Preface and a Life of the Author from the Arabic Kadiab. By EDWARD B. EASTWICK, F.R.S., M.R.A.S., &c. Second Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES;

Or, Jataka Tales. From the Jatakavaliya-namā. Translated from the Original Pali, by T. W. RYIS DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 15s.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the HISTORY of the DEVELOPMENT of the HUMAN RACE.

Lectures and Dissertations. By LAZARUS GEIGER, Author of "Origin and Evolution of Human Speech and Reason." Translated from the German by DAVID ASHER, F.R.D. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE CLASSICAL POETRY of the JAPANESE.

By BASIL HALL CHAMBERLAIN, Author of "Yeigo Henkaku Jibiran." Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE BIRDS of CORNWALL and the SCILLY ISLANDS.

By the late EDWARD HEARLE ROBB. Edited, with an Introduction,
Appendix, and Brief Memoir of the Author, by JAMES E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Post 8vo, with Portrait and Map, cloth, 14s.

LETTERS from my MILL.

From the French of ALPHONSE DAUBET. By MART COREY. Fcap.
8vo, cloth, 3s.; boards, 2s.

THE LIGHT of ASIA;

Or, the Great Renunciation.
Being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Told in Verse by an Indian BUDDHIST. By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., Author of "The Indian Song of Songs." Crown 8vo, limp parchment wrapper, 2s. 6d.

THE GREAT AFRICAN ISLAND: Chap- TERS on MADAGASCAR.

By the Rev. JAMES SHERRE, Jun., of the London Missionary Society, Author of "Madagascar and its People,"
&c. Demy 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations, cloth, 12s.

LANGUAGE and its STUDY, with especial reference to the Indo-European Family of Languages. Seven Lectures by WILLIAM DWIGHT WHITNEY, Professor of Sanskrit and Instructor in Modern Languages in Yale College. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Tables of Decomposition and Conjugation, Grimm's Law with Illustration, and an Index, by the Rev. R. MORRIS, M.A., LL.D. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

PLAYS, PLAYERS, and PLAY-HOUSES, at HOME and ABROAD; with Anecdotes of the Drama and the Stage. By LORD WILLIAM PITT LEWIS. 2 vols., 21s.

OUR HOLIDAY in the EAST.

By Mrs. GEORGE SUMNER. Edited by the Rev. G. H. SUMNER, Hon.
Canon of Winchester. 8vo, with Illustrations, 15s.
"An earnest and able book."—Daily Telegraph.
"A very readable and instructive record."—Examiner.
"A most charming narrative of a tour in the East amongst scenes of the deepest interest to the Christian."—Record.

MY JOURNEY ROUND the WORLD. By Capt. S. H. JONES PARRY, Royal Madras Fusiliers.

2 vols., 21s.
"Capt. Parry is full of life, sparkle, and anecdote."—Graphic.
"A readable book, light, pleasant, and chatty."—Globe.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE

LIFE. (1787—1874.) By his daughter, Madame DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol., 8vo, 15s.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and
BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Especial Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the Nobility. Fifth Edition. 1 vol., with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER, and other
TALES and SKETCHES. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol.,
15s. 6d. [Next week.]

THE NEW NOVELS.

MISSING! By Mary Cecil Hay,
Author of "Old Myddelton's money," &c. 4 vols.

HER DESERTS. By Mrs. Alex-
ANDER FRASER, Author of "Gardian and Lover." 3 vols.
"Her Deserts" is a powerful book. Beautiful, passionate Gine takes a distinct place amid the heroines of fiction."—Sunday Times.

IDONEA. By Anne Beale, Author
of "Fay Arlington," &c. 3 vols.

"Miss Beale's novel, from beginning to end, cannot fail to be attractive to the reader. The plot is interesting, and the characters are well developed."—Court Journal.

BERYL FORTESCUE. By Lady

DUFFY HARDY, Author of "Madge," &c. 3 vols.
"This story can be read with unusual interest."—St. James's Gazette.
"This story is fresh, unconventional, and of unusual interest. It ought to be a great success."—Sunday Times.

FIXED as FATE. By Mrs. Hous-

TOUN, Author of "Recommended to Mercy," &c. 3 vols.
"This novel is likely to be popular. Its characters are sketched with much ability, showing great power and deep study of human nature. It cannot fail to add to the reputation of the author."—Sunday Times.

JEANNETTE. By Mary C. Row-

SELL, Author of "Love Loyal," &c. 3 vols.
"Not the least of the many charms of this fresh, wholesome tale is the simple English in which it is told."—Westminster Review.
"A delightfully written novel."—Messenger.

STRICTLY TIED UP. By the Right Hon. A. J. D. BEECH-FORD HOPE, M.P. SECOND EDITION. 3 vols.

"Strictly Tied Up" is entertaining. It is in every sense a novel conceived in a light and happy vein."—Illustration.

BESIDE the RIVER. By Mrs.

MACQUOID, Author of "Patty," &c. 3 vols. [Just ready.]

CHEAP EDITIONS.

Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 5s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Sir J. GILBERT MILLAIS, HUNT, LEACH, POYNTER, FOSTER,
TENNIEL, SANDS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS of POPULAR MODERN WORKS.
Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature. By Eliza Follen.
John Halifax, Gentleman. By Amelia B. Edwards.
Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.
No Church. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Christian's Mistake. By the Author of "John Halifax."
Alec Forbes. By George MacDonald.
Lionel Lincoln. By Mrs. Oliphant.
A Noble Life. By the Author of "John Halifax."
Dixon's New America. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of "John Halifax."
Annals of an Eventful Life. By G. W. Dasent, D.C.L.
David Elphinstone. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
A Brave Lady. By the Author of "John Halifax."
Hamish. By the Author of "John Halifax."
Sam Slick's Americans at Home. The Unkind Word. By the Author of "John Halifax."
A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.
My Little Lady. By E. Frances Poynter.
Phoebe, Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor C. D. Yonge.
Sir Giles. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Young Mrs. Jarvino. By the Author of "John Halifax."

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 461.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MESSRS. C. KEGAN PAUL & CO.'S NEW LIST.

Royal 4to, cloth, price £9 9s.

AN ENGLISH-ARABIC LEXICON. In which the Equivalents for English Words and Idiomatic Sentences are rendered into Literary and Colloquial Arabic. By GEORGE PERCY BADGER, D.C.L., late Chaplain, Bombay Presidency. [Now ready.]

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

SANSKRIT and its KINDRED LITERATURES: Studies in Comparative Mythology. By LAURA ELIZABETH POOR.

2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, price 25s.

NEW READINGS and RENDERINGS of SHAKESPEARE'S TRAGEDIES. By H. HALFORD VAUGHAN, sometime Fellow of Oriel College, and sometime Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford.

Crown 8vo, cloth.

THE NICOMACHEAN ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. Translated by F. H. PETERS, M.A., Fellow of University College, Oxford. [Next week.]

With Portrait, demy 8vo.

THE LIFE of WILLIAM WHEWELL, D.D., Late Master of Trinity College, Cambridge. With 'Selections from his Private and Academic Correspondence.' By Mrs. STAIR DOUGLAS. [Immediately.]

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS: Eton, Harrow, Winchester, Rugby, Westminster, Marlborough The Charter-house.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A LITTLE CHILD'S MONUMENT. By the Hon. RODEN NOEL.

"Very lovely in form are many of the poems . . . while all are exquisite in feeling."—Contemporary Review.

Small crown 8vo, cloth.

BEOWULF. Translated into Modern Rhymes by Lieut.-Colonel H. W. LUMSDEN, late Bengal Artillery.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d.

MY OLD PORTFOLIO: a Volume of Poems.

Post 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

PROGRESS and POVERTY: an Enquiry into the Cause of Industrial Depressions and of Increase of Want with Increase of Wealth. The Remedy. By HENRY GEORGE.

"Mr. George's work calls for notice not only on account of its ability, and because it contains internal evidence of being a product of the economic history of California, but because also of the magnitude of the problem it propounds and the nature of the solution it proposes."—Professor T. E. CLIFFE LESLIE, in the Fortnightly Review.

"The chapter describing the manner in which civilisation is exposed to danger through the increase of the inequality of wealth is powerful, graphic, and instructive."—Economist.

"The value of Mr. George's book lies in the presentation of views derived from the peculiar facts of American industrial and social organisation—views which may lead thoughtful European economists to modify the generality of their own conclusions rather than to adopt Mr. George's."—Saturday Review.

Second Edition.

FREE LAND. By ARTHUR ARNOLD, M.P., Author of "Social Politics," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

"Mr. Arnold's book contains a great deal of very interesting information, and from the first page to the last is thoroughly readable."—Daily News.

"This book discusses what must shortly be the leading question of the day—namely, the reform of the laws relating to land. It contains much that is excellent, for Mr. Arnold brings knowledge and intelligent suggestion to bear on the legal and social aspects of the question."—Spectator.

Fourth Edition, crown 8vo, 5s.

FREE-TRADE in LAND. By JOSEPH KAY, M.A., Q.C. Edited by his WIDOW. With Preface by the Right Hon. JOHN BRIGHT, M.P.

In a recent letter Mr. Bright says:—"I recommend you to buy and read carefully 'Free-Trade in Land,' by the late Joseph Kay, Q.C."

"The production of a thoughtful, diligent student, and of an earnest, liberal-minded politician. . . . We are bound to admit, after a careful perusal of Mr. Kay's work, that we have nothing to subtract from it. Mr. Kay is always just; he is well informed, and, although he is enthusiastic, he is accurate."—Academy.

New and Cheaper Edition, small crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s.

PICTURES from IRELAND in 1880. By TERENCE McGRATH.

"This volume is written in an excellent spirit, without rhetorical exaggeration, and evidently from an intimate knowledge of Irish social life."—Saturday Review.

"We can cordially recommend them to the leisure moments of even the gravest statesmen for their humorous wisdom, and to all the rest of the world of readers for their literary charm."—Daily News.

"Will be read with advantage by all who have taken, or are likely to take, any part in the discussion of Irish questions."—Scotsman.

RABBI JESHUA: an Eastern Story. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

ABOUT the JEWS since BIBLE TIMES. From the Babylonian Exile till the English Exodus. By Mrs. MAGNUS.

LONDON: 1, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
FFYFFE'S HISTORY OF MODERN EUROPE, by GEORGE STRACHY	163
PROF. SAYCE'S EDITION OF GEORGE SMITH'S CHALDEAN ACCOUNT OF GENESIS, by REV. T. K. CREYNE	164
RECENT BOOKS ON JAPAN, II., by COSMO MONKHOUSE	165
ROBERTSON'S MATERIALS FOR THE HISTORY OF THOMAS BECKET, by GEO. F. WARNER	166
NEW NOVELS, by REV. JAMES DAVIES	167
SCHOOL BOOKS	168
NOTES AND NEWS	169
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	171
OBITUARY	171
NOTES ON HUNGARIAN LITERATURE, by ARTHUR J. PATERSON	171
WALT WHITMAN ON CARLYLE	172
SELECTED BOOKS	172
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Extension of University College, London, by Prof. G. Croom Robertson; Shakspeare's "Villona," by C. M. Ingichy; Chaucer's "Coarseness," Byron's "Humour," and the Lyrical Capabilities of the English Language, by Peter Bayno
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	173
PALEY'S REMARKS ON MAHAFFY'S ACCOUNT OF THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF EPIC POETRY, by A. LANG	173
OBITUARY	175
NOTES OF TRAVEL	175
SCIENCE NOTES	175
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	176
NICHOLSON'S ACCOUNT OF THE ROMAN VILLA NEAR BRADING, by C. T. MARTIN	176
THE EARLY ART HISTORY OF ENGLAND, by J. H. MIDDLETON	177
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	178
STAGE NOTES	178
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	178

THE MASON SCIENCE COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL PROFESSORS.

The Trustees intend from the commencement of the Second Session of the College, on the 1st of October next, to enlarge the course of instruction.

The present chairs are Mathematics (Professor M. J. M. HILL, M.A., Cantab.), Chemistry (Professor W. A. TILDEN, D.Sc. Lond., F.R.S.), Physics (Professor J. H. POKING, M.A., Cantab., B.Sc. Lond.), and Biology (Professor T. W. BRIDGE, M.A., Cantab., F.R.S.). In the ensuing Session Professor Tilden will add Metallurgy to his course.

The Trustees invite applications (to be sent to "Mr. G. H. MORLEY, Secretary, The Mason Science College, Birmingham," on or before the 30th of April next) for the following additional Professorships and Lectureships, viz.:

1. A Professor of Physiology, with special reference to the Laws of Health.
2. A Professor of Geology and Mineralogy.
3. A Professor of Civil and Mechanical Engineering.
4. A Professor of Latin and Greek.
5. A Professor of English Language and Literature.
6. A Lecturer on the French Language.
7. A Lecturer on the German Language.

Particulars of the salaries and conditions will be sent by the Secretary on application.

By a resolution of the Trustees, candidates are especially requested to abstain from canvassing.

JOSIAH MASON, BAHIT.
J. GIBBS BLAKE, M.D., Chairman of Trustees.
G. J. JOHNSON, Hon. Sec.
Edmund-street, Birmingham, February 23rd, 1881.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 3RD OF MAY.
F. W. MADDEN, M.A., Secretary.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS. — WARBERRY HOUSE, Bishopdown Park.—PREPARATION FOR THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

LIBRARIAN WANTED for the LEICESTER LIBRARY (Reference and Circulating).—Preference will be given to applicants who have filled situations in similar libraries. Salary to commence at £100 per annum.—Address, stating age, qualifications, and present employment, to J. G. BURGESS, Accountant, Leicester.

AN ARTIST, who has had much experience in Teaching, VISITS SCHOOLS, and also RECEIVES PUPILS at his Studio.—Oil and Water-Colour Painting (Figure and Landscape), Drawing from the Cast and Models, Freehand, &c.—Address EXHIBITOR, May's, 159, Piccadilly.

LIBRARY ASSISTANT.—A GENTLEMAN wishes to obtain an APPOINTMENT as above in some good Library.—Apply to F. E. T., Church House, Newport, Essex.

MATRICULATION EXAMINATION, UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—Instruction in all the subjects of the above Examination is given at GUY'S HOSPITAL.

The Classes for the June Examination will commence on MONDAY, MARCH 21ST. The Classes are not confined to Students of the Hospital.

For further particulars address the DEAN, Guy's Hospital, S.E.

WILL CLOSE on SATURDAY, the 12th of MARCH.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS

EXHIBITION OF WORKS by the OLD MASTERS, and by Deceased Masters of the British School, including a Collection of Drawings by John Flaxman, R.A.—OPEN DAILY from 9 till 7. Admission One Shilling. Catalogues Sixpence; or bound in cloth, with pencil, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five shillings.

N.B.—The Exhibition is lighted at dusk.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

The NINETEENTH WINTER EXHIBITION will CLOSE on SATURDAY, MARCH 5TH.—5, PAUL MALL EAST, from 10 till 5.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.G.
(Twenty doors west of Made's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

The Woodbury Process is utilised for photographs of Art Manufactures, Portraits, &c., where mounting is not an objection.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Melsheimer, Corot, the Neuvilles, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS OF PAINTINGS AND DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMPTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 29 in. by 21 in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 18s. 6d.

"COME UNTO THESE YELLOW SANDS," after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

Pictures Cleaned, Restored, Framed.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Deme, Middlesex.
General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

THE LATE THOMAS CARLYLE.—

STATUETTE IN TERRA-COTTA by J. E. BOEHM, A.R.A., for SALE.—Apply, SHEPHERD BROS., Art Commission Agents, 27, King-street, St. James's, London.

SECRETARYSHIP WANTED, by a LADY, to Author, Professional, or Business Man, or to Club or Literary Society. Four years' experience. Excellent testimonials.—Address C. A. B., 88, St. Stephen's-avenue, Shepherd's-bush, W.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Commission Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's).—Choice Works ON VIEW by Henry Davison, son of T. S. Cooper, R.A., E. J. Neumann, L. J. Pott, Ernest Parson, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Stark, Jutson, &c.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.
PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.
PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq.

This Library contains 90,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a-year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £5; Life Membership, £25.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town, Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application.

ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

UNITARIAN AFFIRMATIONS.

The following DISCOURSES on the POSITIVE ASPECTS of UNITARIAN THOUGHT and DOCTRINE will be delivered, under the direction of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, in ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LANGHAM PLACE, LONDON, in MARCH and APRIL, 1881.

TUESDAY, MARCH 8.—"THE AFFIRMATION OF GOD," by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

FRIDAY, MARCH 11.—"WORSHIP AND PRAYER," by the Rev. Dr. G. VANCE-SMITH.

TUESDAY, MARCH 15.—"THE SUPREME MORAL LAW," by the Rev. W. BINNS.

FRIDAY, MARCH 18.—"MAN, the OFFSPRING OF GOD," by the Rev. H. W. CROSSKEY, F.R.S.

TUESDAY, MARCH 22.—"SALVATION," by the Rev. ALEX. GORDON, M.A.

FRIDAY, MARCH 25.—"JESUS CHRIST," by the Rev. G. BEARY, B.A.

TUESDAY, MARCH 29.—"THE BIBLE," by the Rev. Prof. J. ESTLIN CAMPBELL, M.A.

FRIDAY, APRIL 1.—"THE RELIGIOUS LIFE," by the Rev. T. W. PRECKELTON.

TUESDAY, APRIL 5.—"THE CHURCH," by the Rev. H. INSON, M.A.

FRIDAY, APRIL 8.—"THE FUTURE LIFE," by the Rev. G. WICKSTEED, B.A.

Each Lecture will be preceded by a short Service, consisting of a Hymn and Prayer. To commence at 4 o'clock in the Afternoon.

Tickets, admitting to the Course (free), may be obtained from Messrs. SMART & ALLEN, 9, London House-yard, Paternoster-row; Messrs. CLARKE & CO., 13, Fleet-street; and at the Office of the Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

Now ready, small folio, price 12s. 6d.

A NEW ARTISTIC ALPHABET.

Designed by THEODORE DE BRY, MDCCV.
From the Athenaeum.

"A capital reproduction from one of the rarest works of its kind, made in facsimile from a copy in the library of the late Sir W. Stirling Maxwell. . . . These letters have a charm of their own, which is due to careful combination of lines, delicacy and extreme spirit of delineation, picturesque grouping of incidental detail, and precise engraving."

From the Jeweller and Metal Worker.

"Messrs. G. Waterston & Sons have produced the rare work in a first-class style. . . . It should be extensively patronised by all interested in artistic ornamentation."

London: GEORGE WATERSTON & SONS, 4, Horse-street; and Edinburgh 56, Hanover-street.

THE SCIENTIFIC RESULTS OF THE VOYAGE OF H.M.S. "CHALLENGER."

Now ready, Zoology, Vol. II., copiously illustrated, in royal 4to, price 50s.

REPORT on the SCIENTIFIC RESULTS of the VOYAGE OF H.M.S. "CHALLENGER" during the YEARS 1873-4, under the command of Captain G. S. NARES, R.N., F.R.S., and Captain F. T. THOMSON, R.N., Treasurer under the superintendence of Sir C. WYVILLE THOMSON, Knt., F.R.S., &c. Provisional Title, Zoology, Vol. II.

* * * This Volume may be had also in Two separate Parts, being Parts VII. and VIII. of the entire work, as follows:—

PART VII. Report on the Corals, by H. N. MOSLEY, M.A., F.R.S., &c. Price 15s.

PART VIII. Report on the Birds, by Dr. P. L. SCLATER, F.R.S., with the assistance of the late MARQUIS OF TWEEDEDALE, F.R.S., Dr. O. FINSCH, C.M.Z.S., Prof. SALVADORI, C.M.Z.S., W. A. FORBES, F.Z.S., O. SALVIN, F.R.S., H. BAUDERS, F.R.S., and the late Prof. CARROD, F.R.S. Price 35s.

* * * Published by Order of H.M. Government, and printed for H.M. Stationery Office.

London: LONGMANS & CO.; JOHN MURRAY; MACMILLAN & CO.; HENKIN, MARSHALL, & CO.; TREVER & CO.; E. STANFORD; J. D. POTTER; and C. KNOX PAUL & CO., Edinburgh; A. & C. BLACK and DOUGLAS & FOULIS, Dublin; A. TOWN & CO. and HODGES, FROGGS, & CO.

IMPORTANT NEW GEOGRAPHICAL WORK.
Expressly prepared for the use of Candidates for Examination.
Now ready, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE OCEANS, PHYSICAL, HISTORICAL, AND DESCRIPTIVE.

With Contour-Map of the Ocean, Maps of the Atlantic, Pacific, Indian, Arctic, and Antarctic Oceans, Charts of Coasts and Currents, &c., &c., by J. FRANCON WILLIAMS, F.R.G.S.

London: GEORGE PHILIP & SON, 32, Fleet-street, E.C.; Liverpool: Caxton Buildings, and 49 & 51, South Castle-street.

Now ready, Third Edition, 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.
With an additional Part ("CONGRUITIES").

THE PRINCIPLES OF PSYCHOLOGY.

By HERBERT SPENCER. Fourth Thousand.
A detailed list of Mr. SPENCER'S Works may be had on application.
WILLIAMS & NORRIDGE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

"One of the mountains-top of Time is left in Africa to climb!"

A BOOK OF THE BEGINNINGS. By

GERALD MASSEY. Beautifully printed, on special paper, by Clay, Sons, & Taylor.

Containing an attempt to recover and reconstitute the lost Origins of the Myths and Mysteries, Types and Symbols, Religion and Language, with Egypt for the Monophiles and Africa as the Bithriplate.

CONTENTS OF VOL. I.: Egypt—Comparative Vocabulary of English and Egyptian—Hieroglyphs in Britain—Egyptian Origins in Words—Egyptian Water-Names—Egyptian Names of Personages—British Symbolical Customs identified as Egyptian—Egyptian Deities in the British Isles—Place-Names and the Record of the Stones—Egyptian Type-Names of the People.

CONTENTS OF VOL. II.: Comparative Vocabulary of Hebrew and Egyptian—Hebrew Crosses, with Egyptian Illustrations—Egyptian Origins in the Hebrew Scriptures, Religion, Language, and Letters—Phenomenal Origin of Jehovah—Elohim and Shadal—Egyptian Origin of the Exodus—Moses and Joshua, or the Two Lion-Gods of Egypt—An Egyptian Dynasty of Hebrew Deities, identified from the Monuments—Comparative Vocabulary of Akkado-Assyrian and Egyptian—Egyptian Origins in the Akkadian Mythology—Comparative Vocabulary of Maori and Egyptian—African Origins of the Maori—The Roots in Africa beyond Egypt.

WILLIAMS & NORRIDGE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Just published, Part II., folio, with Ten Chromo-lithographic Plates, price £1 10s.

THE NECROPOLIS of ANCON in PERU:

A Series of Illustrations of the Civilisation and Industry of the Empire of the Incas: being the Results of Excavations made on the Spot by W. REISS and A. STUEBEL, with the aid of the Administration of the Royal Museums of Berlin.

London: ASHER & CO., 13, Bedford-street, Covent-garden.

"It is a fascinating and almost an untrodden field of research. The whole work promises to be one of the best contributions to the ancient history of the human race that has yet appeared."—Saturday Review.

"We have never seen anything finer in chronophotography, and the illustrations have all the appearance of being faithful reproductions of the originals. This work is monumental in character, and its value to the archaeologist will be of the highest."—Times.

"This magnificent undertaking bids fair to rival in scientific interest and typographical splendour Lord Kingsborough's great work on Mexican Antiquities."—Nature.

"The labours of Messrs. Reiss and Stuebel will be very highly appreciated by students of American archaeology, who will be duly grateful for this beautiful instalment of a really valuable work."—Academy.

Now ready (One Shilling), No. 256.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For MARCH.

With Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIER and W. SMALL.

CONTENTS:

A GHAPPE from a THORN. By JAMES PAYN. (With an Illustration.) Chap. X.—Drivers and Walkers. XI.—The Picnic. XII.—A Couple of Patients. XIII.—A Suggestion.

SIR GEORGE ETHERIDGE: a Neglected Chapter of English Literature. By EDMUND W. GOSSE.

AUTUMN WANDERINGS. I.—Italian Petrus. II.—Over the Apennines. III.—Fosdinovo. IV.—La Spezia. V.—Porto Venere. VI.—Lerici. VII.—Viareggio.

HELEN in the WOOD. By A. MARY F. ROBINSON.

DIAGNO.

WHO were the FAIRIES?

THOMAS CAULFIELD.

LOVE the DEBT. (With an Illustration.) Chap. VII.—Barney McGrath. VIII.—Miss Masters. IX.—Mabel to the Rescue.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 13, Waterloo-place.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.
Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.
Insurances effected in all parts of the world.
JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

The Subscription List of the Facsimile of THE BOKE of SAINT ALBAN'S, by Dame Juliana Berners, will be closed on the 15th of March, after which date no orders can be received, except at the published price of Two Guineas.

 * A Full Prospectus of "The Boke of Saint Alban's" will be sent on application to the Publisher.*

LONDON: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

THE LESSING CENTENARY.

2 vols., post 8vo, pp. 348 and 374, with Portrait, cloth, 21s.

LESSING: his Life and Writings.

By JAMES SIME, M.A.

SECOND EDITION.

"It is to Lessing that an Englishman would turn with readiest affection. We cannot but wonder that more of this man is not known amongst us."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

"We can say that a clearer or more compact piece of biographic criticism has not been produced in England for many a day."—Westminster Review.

"An account of Lessing's life and work on the scale which he deserves is now for the first time offered to English readers. Mr. Sime has performed his task with industry, knowledge, and sympathy—qualities which must concur to make a successful biography."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"This is an admirable book. It lacks no quality that a biography ought to have. Its method is excellent; its theme is profoundly interesting; its tone is the happiest mixture of sympathy and discrimination; its style is clear, masculine, free from effort or affectation, yet eloquent by its very sincerity. It is not a page too long, and, though the reader closes it with regret, the critic must own that it is not a page too short."—Standard.

"He has given a life of Lessing clear, interesting, and full, while he has given a study of his writings which bears distinct marks of an intimate acquaintance with his subject, and of a solid and appreciative judgment."—Scotsman.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

In course of publication.

PHILOSOPHICAL CLASSICS for ENGLISH READERS.

Edited by Professor KNIGHT, St. Andrews.

In crown 8vo Volumes, with Portraits, price 3s. 6d. each.

This day is published, Vol. III.

BERKELEY. By A. Campbell Fraser, Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in the University of Edinburgh.

Vols. I. and II. contain—

DESCARTES. By Professor Mahaffy, Dublin.

BUTLER. By the Rev. W. Lucas Collins, M.A.

* * Other Volumes in preparation.

EDINBURGH AND LONDON: WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

CHEAP BOOKS at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

Second-hand Copies of "ENDYMION," 3 vols., 9s.;

Or, Strongly Re-bound for Public Libraries, 12s. per Set; in Half-Persian, 15s.; in Half-Morocco, 18s.; and

ONE THOUSAND OTHER POPULAR BOOKS

AT THE LOWEST CURRENT PRICES.

See MUDIE'S ANNUAL CLEARANCE CATALOGUE, Postage Free.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), New Oxford Street.

CITY OFFICE: 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

OIDA'S NEW WORK.

A VILLAGE COMMUNE. By Ouida.

2 vols., crown 8vo.
"Ouida's new novel is one which will be very widely read, and which will arouse the tenderest feelings and highest sympathies."
Nottingham Guardian.

THE AUTHORS OF "READY-MONEY MORTIBOY."

THE TEN YEARS' TENANT, and other

Stories. By WALTER BESANT and JAMES RICE, Authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"As charming as anything these authors have written, and will bear reading attentively more than once."—Manchester Examiner.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

THE EVOLUTIONIST at LARGE. By

GRANT ALLEN
"There can be no doubt of Mr. Grant Allen's competence as a writer on natural history subjects. . . . In the present volume he has selected such natural objects as may for the most part be met with in any country walk—a wild strawberry, a snail-shell, a tadpole, a butterfly, a bird, or a wayside flower—the more striking external features of which he seeks to explain by the light of evolutionary principles. . . . The author is as much at home among plants as among animals, and probably his most enjoyable papers are those in which he discourses on the use to the plants themselves of the colours of flowers, the sweetness of fruits, and the hardness of nuts. The essays—twenty-three in number—are neither long nor deep, but they give a broad general view of the principles and methods of evolution, couched in clear, untechnical, and oftentimes racy language, and are thus admirably adapted for their intended purpose."—Scotsman.

Post 8vo, cloth limp (uniform with Glenny's "Year's Work in Garden and Greenhouse"), 2s. 6d.

OUR KITCHEN GARDEN: the Plants We Grow, and How We Cook Them. By TOM JERROLD.

"Mr. Jerrold writes with the knowledge of a practical gardener, and, if his receipts for cooking vegetables be as reliable as his instructions for growing them, this little book will be welcome in all households where the master can grow his own vegetables."—Leeds Mercury.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

LARES and PENATES; or, the Background of Life. By Mrs. CADDY, Author of "Artist and Amateur," &c.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

OLD DRURY LANE: Fifty Years' Recollections of Author, Actor, and Manager. By EDWARD STIRLING.

Square 8vo, cloth gilt, profusely illustrated, 10s. 6d.

IN THE ARDENNES. By Katharine S.

MACQUOID. With Fifty fine Illustrations by Thomas R. Macquoid.

Square 8vo, cloth gilt, profusely illustrated, 10s. 6d.

OUR OLD COUNTRY TOWNS. With over Fifty Illustrations by ALFRED RIMMER.

Complete in 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 8s. each.

BRET HARTE'S COLLECTED WORKS.

Arranged and Revised by the Author.

Vol. 1. COMPLETE POETICAL AND DRAMATIC WORKS. With Portrait and Introduction.

Vol. 2. LUCK OF ROARING CAMP, and other Sketches—BOHEMIAN

PAPERS—SPANISH AND AMERICAN LEGENDS.

Vol. 3. TALES OF THE ALGONQUINS—EASTERN SKETCHES.

Vol. 4. GABRIEL CONROY.

Vol. 5. CONDENSED NOVELS, STORIES, &c.

The Twenty-first Annual Edition, for 1881, cloth, full gilt, gilt edges, £2 10s.

WALFORD'S COUNTY FAMILIES of the UNITED KINGDOM: a Royal Manual of the Titled and Untitled Aristocracy of Great Britain and Ireland. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A., late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford. Containing Notices of the Descent, Birth, Marriage, Education, &c., of more than 12,000 distinguished Heads of Families in the United Kingdom, their Heirs Apparent or Presumptive, together with a Record of the Patronage at their disposal, the Offices which they hold or have held, their Town Addresses, Country Residences, Clubs, &c.

NEW VOLUME OF THE MAYFAIR LIBRARY.

Post 8vo, cloth limp, 2s. 6d.

THE BOOK OF CLERICAL ANECDOTES:

a Gathering of the Antiquities, Humours, and Eccentricities of "The Cloth." By JACOB LARWOOD.

Price One Shilling, Illustrated.

BELGRAVIA, for MARCH.

CONTENTS:

JOSEPH'S COAT. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY. Illustrated by Fred Barnard.

A MOUNTAIN WATER CURE. By A. COMYNS CARL.

ONLY A MILLION. By CHARLES GIBBON.

RAMBLES ABOUT ETON—III. By ALFRED RIMMER. With Three Illustrations.

RETROSPECT. With an Illustration by H. Gandy.

ANOTHER WORLD DOWN HERE. By W. MATTHEW WILLIAMS.

THE SHOWMAN'S GHOST.

PRESAGES of COMING ILL. By W. GEORGE BLACK.

A ROMANCE of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By W. H. MALLOCK.

Price One Shilling.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE,

For MARCH.

CONTENTS:

THE COMET of a SEASON. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P.

A HOLY MISSION. By ALEX. CHARLES EWALD.

DR. JOHNSON and the FLEET STREET TAVERNS. By PERCY FITZ-GERALD.

THE WILD FOWL of CANADA. By ALFRED RIMMER.

THE WILL-O'-THE-WISP and ITS FOLK-LORE. By T. F. THRELSTON.

BYE.

A SUCCESSFUL AFRICAN JOURNEY. By F. A. EDWARDS. With a Map.

THOMAS CARLYLE. By R. HERNE SHEPHERD.

SCIENCE NOTES. By W. MATTHEW WILLIAMS.

TABLE TALK. By SYLVANUS URBAN.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

SOME STANDARD

AND

MISCELLANEOUS WORKS

PUBLISHED BY

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY. From the German of MAX DÜNKER. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., of Balliol College, Oxford. The first 4 vols. are now published in demy 8vo, 21s. each.

THE HISTORY of ROME. From the German of THEODOR MOMMSEN. [By the Rev. W. P. DICKSON.] With an Introduction by Dr. SCHMITZ. The Library Edition, with Index, 4 vols., demy 8vo, 75s.; or the Popular Edition, with Index, 4 vols., crown 8vo, 46s. 6d.

THE HISTORY of GREECE. From the German of ERNST CURTIUS. By A. W. WARD, M.A. 5 vols., demy 8vo, price 18s. each.

THE FIFTEEN DECISIVE BATTLES of the WORLD, from Marathon to Waterloo. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. Twentieth Edition. With Plans. In crown 8vo, 6s.
Also a LIBRARY EDITION, in 8vo, with Plans, price 10s. 6d.

THE RISE and PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. Twelfth Edition. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE HEAVENS: an Illustrated Handbook of Popular Astronomy. By AMEREE GUILLEMIN. Edited by J. NORMAN LOCKYER, F.R.A.S. Revised Edition. Demy 8vo, with over 200 Illustrations, 12s.

ESSAYS: Classical and Theological. By the late CONNOR THIRLWALL, D.D., Bishop of St. David's. Edited by the Rev. Canon PEROWSE. Demy 8vo, 20s.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL. From the French of Mons. GUIZOT. By A. SCOBLE. With Four Portraits. Price 6s.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of Mons. GUIZOT. [By A. SCOBLE.] With Two Portraits. Price 6s.

THE LIVES of WITS and HUMORISTS. By the late JOHN TIMMS, F.S.A. In 2 vols., with Portraits, price 12s.

THE LIVES of the LATER WITS and HUMORISTS. By the late JOHN TIMMS, F.S.A. In vols., price 12s.

THE LIVES of PAINTERS. By the late JOHN TIMMS, F.S.A. With Portraits. Price 6s.

THE LIFE of THEODORE HOOK. By RICHARD DALTON BARHAM. Price 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Messrs. CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & CO.

WILL PUBLISH,

UNIFORM WITH "PICTURESQUE EUROPE,"

In MONTHLY PARTS, price 2s. 6d.,

PICTURESQUE AMERICA.

With

48 EXQUISITELY ENGRAVED STEEL PLATES,

And Several Hundred Engravings on Wood, from Original Drawings specially made for the Work.

PART I. ready MARCH 25th, 1881, price 2s. 6d.

To be Completed in 48 Parts.

. Prospectuses are now ready at all Booksellers' and the Railway Bookstalls.

CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & Co., Ludgate-hill, London.

CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & CO.'S
New Volumes and New Editions.

New ready, royal 4to, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, £3 3s.

LONGFELLOW'S POETICAL WORKS.

Fine-Art Edition. Illustrated throughout with Original Engravings by some of the best English, American, and Continental Artists.

. The New Fine-Art Edition of LONGFELLOW'S POEMS forms a Handsome Volume of over 500 pp., illustrated throughout with exquisite Original Engravings.

NEW and CHEAPER EDITION, just ready, price £1 1s.
GREAT PAINTERS of CHRISTENDOM,
The, from CIMABUE to WILKIE. By J. FORBES-ROBERTSON. Illustrated throughout. 41s pp., royal 4to, cloth, gilt edges.

Now ready, price 6s.

ENGLISH and IRISH LAND QUESTIONS.
Collected Essays.By the Right Hon. G. SHAW-LEFEVRE, M.P.,
First Commissioner of Works and Public Building.

New ready, a POPULAR EDITION, price 3s. 6d.

DR. BREWER'S

DICTIONARY of PHRASE and FABLE.

. This Popular Edition (being the Twelfth Edition) is Revised and Corrected to date, and is Enlarged by the addition of a concise Bibliography of English Literature.

New ready, price 6s. (Third Year of Issue).

THE

EDUCATIONAL YEAR-BOOK, for 1881.

"This book is a long way in advance of any previous scholastic directory."—Academy.POPULAR EDITION (being the Fifteenth Edition), now ready, 3s. 6d.; post-free, 4s.BURNABY'S RIDE to KHIVA, including an Account of Russia's Advance Eastward."A charming and instructive book."—Times."Furnishes a key to the comprehension of the general scheme of Central Asia, from Persia to China."—Saturday Review.SEVENTH and CHEAP EDITION, in 1 vol., 640 pp., demy 8vo, with Coloured Maps, cloth, 10s. 6d.; post-free, 11s. 4d.

RUSSIA. By D. Mackenzie Wallace, M.A.

The Library Edition is published in 2 vols., 24s.

"A delightful book, and instructive and attractive."—Scotsman.

CASSELL'S MONTHLY SHILLING LIBRARY

OF

New and Original Works.

A Second Edition of Vol. I., entitled HISTORY of the FREE-TRADE MOVEMENT in ENGLAND, a New and Comprehensive Work on this Important Subject, by AUGUSTUS MONGREDIEN, Author of "Free-Trade and English Commerce," is now ready, price 1s.; or in cloth, gilt edges, 2s.

CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & CO.,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.THE NEW ADDITION TO LOW'S STANDARD
SIX-SHILLING NOVELS ISBEN-HUR: a Tale of the Christ. By L. WALLACE. Small post 8vo, 6s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS OF JULES VERNE'S NOVEL.

MICHAEL STROGOFF, the COURIER of the CZAR. By JULES VERNE. With Illustrations. Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.MICHAEL STROGOFF. In 2 parts, boards, with Illustrations, 1s. each.THE STORY of a SOLDIER'S LIFE; or, Peace, War, and Mutiny. By Lieut.-General ALEXANDER EWART, C.B., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen from 1859 to 1872. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Two Chromo-lithographs, cloth extra, price 32s.NICE and her NEIGHBOURS. By the Rev. Canon HOLK, Author of "A Book about Roses," "Little Tour in Ireland," &c. With many charming Illustrations of the Scenery in and around Nice. Square 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 10s.THE STORY of a MOUNTAIN. By E. RECLUS, Author of the "Nouvelle Géographie Universelle," "The Earth," &c. Translated by BERTHA NESS, Squire 8vo, with many Illustrations, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.WEBER. By Sir Julius Benedict. Dedicated by permission to Her Majesty the Queen. New Volume of the BIOGRAPHIES of the GREAT MUSICIANS. Edited by FRANCIS HUEFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.SCHUBERT. By H. F. Frost. New Volume of the BIOGRAPHIES of the GREAT MUSICIANS. Edited by FRANCIS HUEFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

Now ready, a New and Cheaper Edition of

THE ADVENTURES of a FIELD CRICKET. By Dr. ERNEST CANDEZE. Translated by N. D'ANVERS. Illustrated. Cloth extra, 5s.

New ready, in 1 vol., royal 8vo, pp. 1,036, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 21s.

A LIBRARY of RELIGIOUS POETRY: a Collection of the Best Poems of all Ages and Tongues. With Biographical and Literary Notes.

NEW NOVELS.

In 3 vols., ready at all Libraries.

MR. WILLIAM BLACK'S SUNRISE: a Story of These Times.

In 3 vols., ready at all Libraries.

A FOURTH EDITION of MR. GEORGE MACDONALD'S NEW NOVEL,

MARY MARSTON.

In 3 vols., now ready at all Libraries.

FLOWER o' the BROOM. By the Author of "Rare Pale Margaret."

In 3 vols., now ready at all Libraries.

AN ENGLISH SQUIRE. By C. R. Coleridge, Author of "Lady Hetty," "Hanbury Mills," &c.

MAGAZINES & PERIODICALS NOW READY.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for MARCH.

Fully Illustrated. 160 royal 8vo pages, 1s.

Now ready, 4to, price 1s. 6d.

MEN of MARK for MARCH. With Permanent Cabinet Photographs, specially taken for this Work only, of LORD CHELMSFORD—JOHN PETTIE, R.A.—The BISHOP of BANGOR. With Biographical Notices.

Now ready, price 2s. 6d.

PATHWAYS of PALESTINE: a Descriptive Tour through the Holy Land. By Canon TRISTRAM, F.R.S. With splendid Permanent Photographs of JERUSALEM: Pilate's House—The POOL of BETH-ESDA.

Now ready, price 1s., the MARCH Number of SUNRISE: a Story of These Times. By WILLIAM BLACK.

Now ready, folio, Part XIII., price 1s., of

THE SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM. Examples of the Works of Art in the Museum and of the Decorations of the Building. With Brief Descriptions. This Number contains Seven Etchings, &c.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 1881.

No. 461, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

A History of Modern Europe. By C. A. Fyffe, M.A., &c. Vol. I.—From the Outbreak of the Revolutionary War in 1792 to the Accession of Louis XVIII. in 1814. (Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co.)

THIS book would have been the death of M. Comte, for instead of being written, as he says history ought to be, without any proper names, it has from twenty to thirty of these unmeaning words to a page of large print. And it falls under the newest Positivist curse on Macaulay, Gibbon, and Thucydides et id genus omne, as principally dealing with "the lives of the supreme rascals," with "dynastic wars and military histories and royal histories." In abridgments the facts are generally more trustworthy than the philosophy. But this rule is not exemplified by Mr. Fyffe; for, while his views and deductions are often original and almost always sound, his narrative requires frequent corrections of detail. Everyone knows that Mr. Cobden, besides proving that Thucydides is trash compared with the advertisements in the Times, wrote a pamphlet to show that, in the war of 1793 between England and France, England was the unprovoked aggressor. This discovery is not accepted by Mr. Fyffe, who thus winds up a judicious summary of the causes of mutual offence:—"No more sufficient ground of war ever existed between two nations." He justly observes that both in England and France, after the Convention had thrown down the glove to recognised governments, and Louis had been executed, "political passion made any other issue than war impossible." But the assertion that the French declaration of war "only anticipated the intention of the English Government" is groundless. Mr. Fyffe does full justice to Pitt's struggle against the current of popular anger; but he forgets the negotiations carried on at the Hague between Lord Auckland and the French envoy Dumaude, which prove that, even after the departure of Chauvelin from London, Pitt still clung to the hope of peace, and was by no means thinking of war.

Another of "the supreme rascals" is the Austrian statesman Thugut, who is saddled by Mr. Fyffe with offences of which he was innocent, and otherwise too severely handled. As Foreign Minister in 1797, he passes for the author of the Treaty of Campo Formio, which secured considerable advantages to Austria at the expense of the empire. Mr. Fyffe says:—"The price which Austria paid was the betrayal of Germany, a matter that disturbed Thugut as little as the betrayal of Venice disturbed Bonaparte." Now it so happens that Thugut advised the Emperor Francis up to the last not to conclude the peace negotiated by Cobenzl, and, when the text of the Treaty was brought to Vienna, loudly denounced it, and called on the Emperor to refuse his ratification and continue the war. Mr. Fyffe's errors with respect to Thugut and Austria are less owing to partisanship than to his oblivion of the fact that books are written in Vienna and in other parts of Germany as well as in Berlin. A history of the revolutionary age cannot have permanent value if its account of German transactions is mainly based on Prussian compilers like Hausser and Sybel, without reference to such writers as Hüffer or Vivenot. And although the author of a summary is not expected to explore archives, he ought to make some slight separate investigation into the causes célèbres of his subject. The literature on the question of the murder of the French envoys at Rastadt by Austrian hussars has overflowed its due banks, and if Mr. Fyffe had taken a few dips into the original stream he would have acquired a distinct notion of the controversy which still rages round the extinct French diplomatists, instead of exhuming an old Prussian legend which even Sybel has definitely set aside. He says "a variety of evidence renders it almost certain that the attack was ordered by Thugut himself for the purpose of recovering documents," &c. A variety of evidence shows that Thugut did nothing of the kind; and Mr. Fyffe is equally at sea when he discovers an indication of the Minister's culpability in the fact that "investigations begun by the Archduke Charles were stopped by order of the Cabinet." These investigations were stopped, not because Thugut wanted concealment, but because he considered that an affair of such gravity was too serious to be treated in a hole and corner by a mere military court, and must have an open investigation by the Diet.

Another cause célèbre is Nelson's conduct in repudiating the treaty between Cardinal Ruffo and the Neapolitan Republicans. The details of the case lie within a nutshell. Anyone who spends an hour or two over the Nelson Despatches, with the Appendix on the Capitulation, and a few other essential volumes, can form an independent opinion on "the part borne by Nelson in this work of death." However, Mr. Fyffe takes his facts from Colletta, who deals with these transactions in a purely mythical spirit, as must be plain to anyone who remarks his way of mentioning Lady Hamilton. According to Colletta's uncritical and fantastical account, Nelson brought King Ferdinand to Naples in the fleet, whereupon the treaty was repudiated in a royal manifesto, of which the historian gravely gives the exact text. Mr. Fyffe repeats this, manifesto and all, the truth being the King at the time in question was in Sicily, and that the manifesto is a pure invention. Mr. Fyffe is quite right in denouncing the sanguinary repressions which followed, but he need not have multiplied the actual number of victims by three.

An examination of our author's account of German affairs between the Peace of Amiens and the Peace of Tilsit gives similar results, although, since the appearance of Hardenberg's authentic memoirs, with Ranke's original narrative and Mr. Seeley's Life of Stein, accuracy with respect to the main events of the period ought to be easily attainable. Mr. Fyffe does not appear to have consulted Hardenberg and Ranke, although both autobiography and commentary are as fundamental for the Napoleonic era in Germany as Clarendon and Macaulay for our Restoration. Anyone who knows the details of the Prussian annexation of Hanover, of the breach by Napoleon of the neutrality of the Prussian territory of Anspach, of the mission of Haugwitz to Vienna before Austerlitz, of the negotiation of the Treaty of Schönbrunn, and of the Ministerial vicissitudes of Hardenberg, Haugwitz, and Stein, will be able to correct Mr. Fyffe. The news of the violation of Anspach was by no means "sufficient," as Mr. Fyffe thinks, "to goad Frederick William into decided action," neither were orders "sent to the generals to prepare for war," nor did the Czar thereupon come to Berlin "to fix the terms upon which the coalition should receive Prussian support." The King flatly declined to move a step, he had no idea of joining a coalition, and the Czar's visit to Berlin was in pursuance of his previously expressed wish for an interview. Mr. Fyffe is superficial about the Treaty of Schönbrunn, being unaware of the order to Haugwitz to prolong his negotiations in consequence of the change in the situation effected by the Battle of Austerlitz, and the rumoured understanding between Austria and France, which frightened the Prussians into a determination to evade the Treaty of Potsdam. He has also failed to understand the Prussian Ministerial changes and complications, and their proper sequence. He says that in 1805 Hardenberg "gave up the first place in the King's counsels to Haugwitz," on account of the Hanover transaction; the fact being that Haugwitz was then on half-pay, and did not resume office till 1806 in compliance with the desire of Napoleon. Mr. Fyffe also makes Hardenberg take office again on the retirement (read dismissal) of Haugwitz after Jena, whereas that Minister's post was taken by Gen. Zastrow; Hardenberg did not take office again until April 1807, when he became virtual Prime Minister in consequence of pressure from Alexander. Mr. Fyffe is also in error with respect to the remarkable circumstances under which Stein retired (read was dismissed) after Eylau.

Mr. Fyffe's clear and vigorous style tells well in his military chapters, where a reasonable mean is kept between the voluminosity of Kinglake and the curttness of Livy's "this year there was war with the Hernicans and Volsicans." He has, however, neglected to state the manoeuvre by which Nelson crushed half the French fleet at the Nile while the remainder lay helpless. Trafalgar is dismissed allusively and unintelligibly in two lines, whereas a whole page is allowed for Gen. Mack's surrender at Ulm. Marengo is quite misunderstood. In the Peninsular War Rolica is not named; neither is the brilliant passage of the Douro, nor Graham's victory, which the Duke called "the glorious battle of Barossa." The campaign of Caldiero is forgotten; so are the battles of Bar-sur-Aube and Fère Champenoise. Mr. Fyffe's two maps are fearfully and wonderfully drawn and coloured. If copies find their way to Germany they will be preserved with religious care as specimens of the cartography of the barbarians. But severe censorship in this department cannot be expected of an author who describes the Duke of York as returning from his glorious campaign in Holland "to earn his column at Charing Cross"!

Non ego parvis offendar maculis—especially when the blots are accompanied by generalisations and deductions like those of Mr. Fyffe, who is always far above the mere compiler's level. He has attained, for instance, a correctness not usually reached in his estimates of the disunion of Germany and of the nature of the war of 1813, being aware that the latter was a Prussian, not a German, movement, and that the former, however scandalous it may seem if looked at through the spectacles of 1870, was only inevitable, and in some respects even advantageous, a century ago. He discriminates well between the real and the pretended benefits of the French Revolution, showing that the essentials of the revolutionary creed had been anticipated by the reforming Sovereigns of the preceding age, and that all France did was to show that reform could be initiated by the people as well as by the throne. Then he rightly observes that the period 1792–1814 left to certain parts of Europe the ideas of constitutional freedom and nationality and some local improvements in legislation, but that in Austria its events aroused violent and durable reaction; while in England progress was suspended, so that Pitt, in intention the most Liberal, or Radical, of Ministers, was converted into an obstructive. But it is loose thinking to characterise the present time as one in which science has "silently altered the physical conditions of existence," and to describe incidental concomitants of the policy of the Napoleonic age, like Italian unity and quasi-German freedom, as its "creations." And the "energy" of the epoch seems inappropriately described as "purely political." For, looking to the inevitable result of the examples of America and England, and to the fact that the Revolutionary period followed an epoch when, as Mill has remarked, Emperors, Ministers, and even Bourbon Kings and Popes, were Liberals and Reformers, it can hardly be doubted that the meagre and, in some respects, evanescent European improvement described by Mr. Fyffe would have been easily reached by the ordinary road without the intervention of the stupendous machinery of tyranny, murder, rapine, ruin, rascality, and war expended on its attainment. An age which could only solve its problems at such fearful cost, in which statesmanship collapsed so utterly at the touch of the "supreme rascals," was not one of true "political energy," like the times of Pericles or Peel. In conclusion, Mr. Fyffe contrasts his period on intellectual grounds with the Renaissance. The two epochs are, however, on this score more like than unlike, for to the Napoleonic age belong Faust, Child Harold, Waverley, and Corinne, as well as the discoveries and speculations of Volta, Cuvier, Laplace, Dalton, and Young; while its artistic creations include the Perseus of Canova, the church of the Madeleine, the Eroica symphony, and the Barbiere.

GEORGE STRACHEY.

The Chaldean Account of Genesis. By George Smith. A New Edition, thoroughly Revised and Corrected (with Additions) by A. H. Sayce. (Sampson Low & Co.)

THE enthusiasm produced in England and America by George Smith's remarkable discoveries in the Babylonian tablets seems to have somewhat abated; it was, indeed, feverish, and could bear a little damping. Smith himself warned the public that "the present condition of the legends and their recent discovery alike forbade him to call this anything more than a provisional work" (Introduction to the original edition, p. vii.); but the public mostly overlooked the caution. The lamented author is not to be severely judged for the immature character of his work and for the misconceptions to which it gave rise. It was partly a question of money. Seeing the liberality of the British public towards the promoters of exploration in Western Palestine, it was but natural to desire that a part of this munificence might be diverted to the infinitely more remunerative field of cuneiform research. Now, however, arises the question, Can this hasty and immature work be so supplemented and corrected as to supply a trustworthy view of the present state of discovery?—though, indeed, there is a previous question, Is it worth while to attempt, except in a very slight degree, to popularise such difficult and ever-moving researches? This previous question I shall not myself feel in a position to answer in the affirmative until the English-speaking public opens its purse-strings for Babylonia as it has, in such a remarkable manner, done for Western, and will, I earnestly hope, do for Eastern, Palestine. My friend Mr. Sayce, however, has consistently endeavoured to discover and to popularise pari passu, and he has gifts for both functions such as even to my mind almost, if not quite, justify his present attempt. I only regret that he has not seen his way (probably for very "practical" reasons) to add philological details, such as gave such a unique value to Friedrich Delitzsch's German edition of the original work.

The main features of Mr. Sayce's edition are, first, corrections of the translations from the cuneiform. The reader will naturally turn in the first instance to the Creation series. Mr. Sayce's translation of the exordium differs considerably from the "provisional" one of George Smith; it has already in all essentials been given in these columns (January 1, 1876, p. 4), and should be compared with that of Lotz in his Die Inschriften Tiglath-Pileasars I. A fragment which Smith only gave "under reserve" (third edition, p. 67) appears to Mr. Sayce (p. 63) to have nothing to do with the creation of the dry land, but to be rather a local legend relating to Assur, the old capital of Babylonia. In the fifth creation tablet, George Smith's "It was delightful, all that was fixed by the great gods," becomes "(Anu) made suitable the mansions of the (seven) great gods," though Mr. Sayce retains Smith's remark that the opening words of the fifth tablet are parallel to "And God saw that it was good." The parallelism, however, is no longer so close, and the reading "made suitable," if it suits in the fifth tablet, does not suit equally well in the fragment of the seventh. Certainly I for one do not sympathise with Smith's excessive eagerness to find so minute an agreement between the narratives of Genesis and that (or those) of Babylonia. Another very important group of corrections relates to the fragment which Smith interpreted of the Fall. Mr. Sayce, following Oppert, gives an entirely different view of it (p. 76) as a hymn to the Creator (Hea), and attaches the very suggestive remark that it must have emanated from "the monotheistic party" (Sir H. Rawlinson's phrase) among the ancient Babylonians. "The various duties of the popular faith are all resolved into the one supreme God, the maker of the world and man, who was worshipped at Babylon under the names of Bel and Merodach, at Eridu under that of Hea, and at Nipur under that of Anu."

It is unnecessary to compare all the translations at length; suffice it to say that Mr. Sayce fully recognises the insight which so often enabled George Smith to give at least a general idea of the contents of the fragments. A reference may, however, be allowed to Mr. Sayce's translations of the fragments already explained by George Smith of the story of the Tower of Babel. Mr. Sayce takes the same general view of these texts as his predecessor, and ventures on the remark that "the corrected translation will remove the doubts raised by Mr. Smith's translation as to his correctness in associating them with that event." My own doubts are not fully removed—at least if we are to be tied up to Mr. Sayce's interpretation. Something alien to the Biblical narrative one cannot but expect, but the translation appears to me to be framed under the unconscious influence of the Biblical narrative. The Semitic student can easily judge for himself by referring to the texts published (with transliteration and translation by Mr. Boscawen) in the fifth volume of the Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology. In connexion with the story of Babel, Mr. Sayce refers (it is not in the original edition) to a possible Babylonian parallel to that of Sodom and Gomorrah.

The Babylonian story of the Deluge in the eleventh lay of the Izdubar series has excited equal attention with that of the Creation. It has one great advantage over the latter, in that it is nearly perfect. A first fragment of it has been brought home, as Mr. Sayce tells us, by Mr. Rassam, George Smith's successor in the work of exploration; and it turns out to be of special value, being derived from a Babylonian library, and thus furnishing an independent proof of the trustworthiness of the Assyrian copies of the old Babylonian texts. (It agrees entirely with the parallel parts of the Assyrian narratives.) Several interesting points suggest themselves. I still fail to see that "the Biblical and cuneiform accounts both agree in representing the Flood as a punishment for the sins of mankind." It may indeed have been so represented in the un mutilated tablets, but it is not expressly stated in the texts before us any more than in the version of the Flood story in Berosus. Mr. Sayce, doubtless for some good reason, makes no reference to Friedrich Delitzsch's scepticism as to the altar of sacrifice, one of the supposed parallels between Genesis and the lay. He has much improved and supplemented the remarks of his author on the Deluge, taking the same line as M. Lenormant in his admirable study on this subject. In fact, the mosaic work involved in editing a book like George Smith's has been performed with a much greater degree of success than might have been expected.

Mr. Sayce's latest contributions to the study of Babylonian literature are mentioned in the Preface. Throughout, the translations have been brought up to what the accomplished editor regards as our present knowledge of Assyrian. Among other points he has shown, on the ground of data supplied by Mr. Pinches, that the name of the pilot of Xisuthrus should be read, not Urhamsi, but His-Hea ("the lion of Hea"). He has also given a specimen of a bibliographical work of unique interest, which is nothing less than a list of the ancient epics and legends of Chaldea (none of them later than about 2000 B.C.), with the names of their reputed authors. Another singular discovery is that of "a small and well-preserved tablet which contains a catalogue of the gardens belonging to Merodach-Baladan, the contemporary of Hezekiah, and grouped according to the districts in which they were situated." As a brave and enterprising warrior and an unconquerable patriot we knew him before, but he now appears in a new light as a lover of gardening; he had no less than sixty-seven seed-gardens, besides six other pleasure-gardens.

T. K. CHEYNE.

RECENT BOOKS ON JAPAN.

Unbeaten Tracks in Japan. By Isabella L. Bird. (Murray.)

Japan. By Sir E. J. Reed, K.C.B., F.R.S., M.P. (Murray.)

The Classical Poetry of the Japanese. By Basil Hall Chamberlain. (Triibner.)

A Grammar of Japanese Ornament and Design. By Thomas W. Cutler. (Batsford.)

(Second Notice.)

OF all the many interesting episodes in Miss Bird's travels in Japan there is none which can compete in novelty with her visit to the Ainos of Yezo. In that island, to which these aborigines are now confined, they number, according to the last census, only 12,281 souls, but are probably much more numerous. They support themselves by hunting and fishing, and live in villages often partially occupied also by Japanese. Biratori, the largest of the pure Aino villages in the region visited by Miss Bird, contains fifty-three houses or huts; and she was received with much hospitality at the chief's residence, where she stayed for some days and nights. "Eastern savagery," she writes, "and Western civilisation met in this hut; savagery giving, and civilisation receiving; the yellow-skinned Ito [her Japanese attendant] the connecting link between the two, and the representative of a civilisation to which our own is but an 'infant of days.' " The Ainos went on with their usual occupations, undisturbed by her presence; and, with the exception of the chief's mother—"a weird, witch-like woman of eighty, with shocks of yellow-white hair"—without showing any suspicion. From her post of vantage, at the top of the "guest-seat," she watched the chief-wife cook, the women split bark, and the men drink saké, and afterwards crept under her mosquito-net and slept undisturbed among the savages.

They seem to be at once the most stupid and the most conservative of savages, and have been gradually pushed aside by the cleverer race, in spite of their finer physique and many noble qualities, from simple incapacity to imbibe fresh ideas. Often handsome and grand in appearance, with manners of fine courtesy, and, according to Miss Bird, European rather than Oriental, both in feature and manners (the quality as well as the outward manifestation of their politeness being markedly different from that of the Japanese) they, with their shelves of Japanese curios, their extraordinary simple religious rites (which seem to consist in offering libations of saké to the fire and wooden posts, "with a quantity of white shavings falling from near the top"), their large brains and small wits, offer problems to the ethnologist which seem at present to be far from a satisfactory solution. One of the most curious of their "religious" customs is the "worship" of the bear. Each village yearly has its young bear, which is suckled by a woman, and, when it is too big to be safe, is confined in a cage till it is full grown. Then they hold their festival, kill it and eat it, and set up its head on a pole. In the crudity and inconsistency of their religious notions, their scepticism as to a future state, their fear of ghosts, and general confusion as to supernatural powers, they appear to have more affinity with the Japanese than in anything else. Even, however, in their far-away seclusion, in the centre of their immemorial contentment with tradition, a germ of reform, not to say radicalism, seems to be sprouting. The drinking of saké or rice-beer is not only consecrated by time, but by religion; it is to the gods that they offer the saké, and they think that the gods will be displeased if they do not drink it. Yet it has occurred to some, including Pipichari, the adopted son and probable successor of Benri, the present chief of Biratori, that saké makes men brutes. This young reformer seems to be not only a total abstainer but a diplomatist, for, when Miss Bird gave the Ainos a lecture on temperance and she was met by the reply, "We must drink to the gods, or we shall die," Pipichari said, "You say that which is good; let us give saké to the gods, but not drink it." For which heretical utterance he was severely rebuked by Benri the pious, with the bloodshot eyes.

It is evident that Miss Bird enjoyed this part of her trip more than any other. The freedom from restraint, the wild surroundings, and the new sensations invigorated her; and her spirits were further raised by a really good horse. The influence of these stimulants is observable in her writing, which, always picturesque and observant, takes a lyric movement after her first gallop. Her letter from Sarafuto begins with a description which is unequalled for its vividness of impression. "Even the few gray houses of Yubetz were spiritualised into harmony by a faint blue veil which was not a mist; and the loud croak of the loquacious and impertinent crows had a cheeriness about it, a hearty mockery, which I liked." Here, with her "unbeaten tracks," we must leave her.

Of a very different order are Sir E. J. Reed's two thick and closely packed volumes, in which his personal experiences form but a small and unimportant part. Although he visited the country "under the highest auspices," and made "the personal acquaintance of the leading personages of the country," including the Prime Minister, who did him the honour to make the most gratifying references to the ships "constructed for the Imperial Government under his care," the few pages in which Miss Bird recounts her slight experiences of the higher class of Japanese give the reader a more vivid impression of the cultivated society of Japan than the whole of Sir E. J. Reed's volumes. It is not in narrative or description that his forte lies, but rather in the power of collecting and assimilating a vast amount of information on a variety of subjects in a short time, and arranging it for the benefit of others. The composition of this work is a tour de force. And, though it is somewhat felt that it is impossible for one man to speak with authority on so many different subjects—history, mythology, art, literature, education, religion, and modern politics—one cannot help admiring the courage and patience with which Sir E. J. Reed has achieved his self-set task. Nor is it fair to insist on the fact that the work is to a great extent a compilation, because he frankly admits it, and mentions his authorities with a candour and gratitude which might make many authors blush. It may be said also that the style in which he writes, though not picturesque, is clear, and would be agreeable but for the author's determination to have his "little joke," especially with regard to the superstitions of the people. He cannot be presented with a "little carved god as a souvenir" of a shrine at Nara without the remark, "I am strongly inclined to believe that, if he should prove to do me little or no good, he will most assuredly not work me any sort of mischief—which cannot as a rule be confidently said either of gods or men."

It is evident that certain departments of Japanese knowledge must remain for ever closed books to the vulgar. A specialist only can have the patience to grapple with a history of such length and of so little European interest—the names of whose heroes are alone sufficient to stagger any ordinary speller. Neither does the history of the religions of Japan offer a cheerful or interesting field of study. It is, however, none the less desirable that, as a means of understanding this clever and loveable nation, we should have clear and accurate knowledge of their past; and Sir E. J. Reed has done a useful service in his attempt to give a popular account of Japanese history, of which it can at least be said that it is more amusing than that of the Korea. If it contains no such romantic episodes as the Crusades, no records of immortal prowess like Marathon, it at least enshrines the names of several emperors who desired the welfare of their subjects, reformed barbarous customs, and showed examples of self-denial. Their religions also, if deficient in strong feeling and high aspiration, have at least few tales to tell of horrible bloodshed and ambitious priestcraft. A people who believe, or believed, themselves descended from the gods, who have no sense of sin in this world nor higher hope in the next but of Nirvana, who are neither by nature avaricious, passionate, nor selfish, want many of those springs of excitement, base and noble, which constitute the interest of European history and the soul of Western art. Passionate love, desire of empire, struggle for existence and wealth, religious enthusiasm—all these things, which include so much of the romance and poetry of humanity, seem to have been hitherto denied to them.

This, at least, we seem to have learned of them at present: that they have gone through the centuries with a strangely limited area of emotion, cut off almost entirely from intercourse with other nations, and dependent upon China and the Korea once a century or thereabouts for all novelties—religious, philosophic, literary, or artistic. These they have always seized upon greedily, and have gradually developed out of them for themselves a distinct and remarkable civilisation, in which every little piece of mental soil is cultivated with the same care as their fields and gardens. Surely no nation ever worked more assiduously in “improving” the occasions allowed them. The religions they had were perhaps poor, but they made the most of them; their system of writing most impractical, but they developed it till it takes fifteen years even for natives to master it; their architecture of the simplest, but how have they elaborated it with wonderful roofs and intricate carvings; their art so elemental and traditional, but varied to infinity within its limits. Dowered with little natural originality of the creative sort, they seem to have always been readily apprehensive of foreign ideas, and to have adopted them, making slowly such variations as suited their peculiar individuality. Now, however, the time of their seclusion is over; foreign ideas have arrived, not from China and the Korea, but from Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg, and London. Confucius is confronted with Mill and Huxley, junks with ironclads, and Buddha with Christ. The desire for gain, which the ancient Japanese, seeing its evils, determined to keep out of the country, has invaded it; the manufactures and arts, hitherto pursued with a scrupulous (we may say a religious) honesty and pride of good work, are becoming corrupted; and their national character (their unique charm) tampered with; their habitual, but harmless, “lying” turned to cheating, and their government encumbered with a national debt. Truly, these are great changes—whether, in the long run, to be of advantage to the country we will not prophesy. The mystery of their past is not so great as the mystery of their future.

Sir E. J. Reed believes in New Japan, and has confidence in the civilising powers of railroads; but it seems at least doubtful whether the stimulation of commerce and increased facilities of communication are likely at present to increase the happiness or morality of this strange people. The greatest grounds for hope in the future of Japan is the faculty they have always shown for assimilating foreign ideas without destruction of native individuality; and the experience of the last quarter-of-a-century has demonstrated a capacity for swift and radical changes unexampled in the history of the world, combined with a wise conservatism and national pride. Even in their arts, which from previous experience of Eastern nations might be expected to wither into mummification, there have been extraordinary signs of vitality. The destruction of the feudal power of the Daimiyos might well have been the death-blow of originality to arts so very traditional and so intimately interwoven with the old order of things; but the Government, headed by the wise young Mikado, seem determined to have good lacquer-work as well as ironclads. Though the beautiful trousseaux of grandees' brides no longer stimulate the manufacture of those beautiful articles of gold-lacquer which are so eagerly sought after by European connoisseurs, the exquisite art has not been allowed to decay. Though the flooding of our shops with cheap Japanese “blue and white” and inferior pseudo-Satsuma may excite the fears of the aesthetic, there are signs of novelty even in these commercial products, and the most ordinary of them is not without taste. In the more expensive articles, such as cloisonné enamels, discoveries and improvements have been made quite recently; and in many of the newest and most elaborate of their vases, especially those which are encrusted with modelled birds and flowers, the influence of European art is felt, and felt not altogether disadvantageously. It would indeed surprise many to learn how late is the introduction of several features of Japanese art they most admire. In the case even of those much-coveted netsukes, the demand for them in Europe, though it has doubtless produced much imitative and inferior work, has also acted as a stimulant to invention and the production of larger and less traditional designs.

In short, though these books of Sir E. J. Reed and Miss Bird show that the future of New Japan may be watched with extraordinary interest and hope, it would be pleasant to hear a voice from the other side. Are there no conservatives in Japan? Is there no one who can restore for us the old life, and tell of the apprehensions of those who loved the Old Japan and mistrust the New?

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

Materials for the History of Thomas Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury. Edited by James Craigie Robertson, M.A. Vol. IV. (Rolls Series.)

THE more important biographies of Becket having already appeared, the contents of this volume are somewhat miscellaneous. They consist of the two Lives first printed by Dr. Giles under the names of Roger of Pontigny and the “Anonymus Lambethiensis,” some short fragments, Passions and legal “causae,” extracts relating to Becket from chronicles, and the biographical compilation known as the Second Quadrilogus. With regard to the authorship of the first-named work Mr. Robertson is only half-inclined to agree with its original editor. The chief grounds for ascribing it to Roger of Pontigny are that the writer claims in the preface to have ministered to Becket in exile, and that a monk named Roger is said to have been “the holy man’s minister” at Pontigny by another biographer, who asserts at the same time that he wrote a Life of his patron. As the last statement is important, it is strange that Mr. Robertson has omitted to mention it. There is besides one other piece of evidence in the work itself. This is a passage in which the author explains that he does not dilate on the sanctity of Becket’s life at Pontigny lest he should cast a slur upon his own brethren by provoking comparison, this being apparently the meaning of “ne fratribus nostris notam ingeramus,” where Mr. Robertson needlessly proposes to read the neut. plur. “nota.” Altogether, Roger’s case is plausible enough, though, as the editor points out, there are difficulties which justify hesitation. From certain slight indications—such as the way of speaking of hides of land on p. 23—it may be inferred that the work was intended for foreigners, but there is nothing to show the writer’s own nationality. It is fullest and most minute in the account of the council at Northampton and Becket’s escape into France; and, if it is necessary to suggest an alternative name for the author, it is just possible that he was one of the three favoured attendants who accompanied him in his flight, one of whom, the “famulus” Roger de Brai, may even be identical with the monk Roger who attended him at Pontigny. But whoever wrote it, the work, though not of the first class, is of considerable value, and supplies some interesting details. We owe to it, for example, one of the most characteristic flashes of the Archbishop’s spirit in his retort upon Earl Hamelin at Northampton; his actual words, “If it were permitted and I were a knight, with my own hand I would prove thee a liar,” being nowhere else recorded. In the mention of names and details generally it has a decided advantage over the less circumstantial Life which follows. The latter is taken from a unique MS. at Lambeth; but it is curious that the same preface, in which the author asserts that he was present at Becket’s death, is found prefixed to a fragment of a totally different Life in the Bodleian. Although, therefore, the murder is related at length, the authenticity of the particulars, which are peculiar to this work, is not beyond suspicion. But what most distinguishes it from all the other biographies is that Becket’s mother is named in it Roesa, instead of Matilda. As he is known to have had a sister Rohesia, the author probably confounded mother and daughter; although it may also be argued from the name of the latter that he is right after all, and that she was so called after her mother.

Of the three fragments from Lansdowne MS. 398, the second merely contains an account of the Archbishop’s consecration; the main interest of the other two, so far as they are here printed, is in connexion with the events

NEW NOVELS.

Hiram Greg. By J. Crowther Hirst. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Mary Marston. By George MacDonald, LL.D. In 3 vols. (Sampson Low.)

Beryl Fortescue. By Lady Duffus-Hardy. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Harold Saxon: a Story of the Church and the World. By Alan Muir. In 3 vols. (Smith & Elder.)

after his death, and particularly with the impunity enjoyed by his murderers. Both authors alike seem to have been especially scandalised at their hunting and hawking after the crime as if nothing had happened; but, while the one vents his indignation upon the bishops for their neglect to excommunicate them, the other is more sarcastic and outspoken against Henry II. The final submission of Tracy and his comrades, with the penance imposed upon them by the Pope, is recorded by the later writer only, who also tells, with evident relish, the story of the repentance of Becket's old enemy Bishop Foliot, a somewhat different version of which is given in William of Canterbury's collection of miracles. The first of these fragments is apparently from a commemorative homily; but more distinctly for liturgical use on the festival of St. Thomas are the three short anonymous Passions, which, although they have little intrinsic value or authority, are interesting as specimens of their class. On this account they have properly found a place in the volume, which is hardly the case, perhaps, with some of Mr. Robertson's extracts, and especially those passages from such well-known and easily accessible works as the De Nugis of Map and the Vita Magna S. Hugonis.

On the other hand, he has certainly been well advised in including the Quadri-logus, notwithstanding that he has already printed at length the biographies out of which it is pieced together. As its title imports, these are four in number, the authors being John of Salisbury, Alan of Tewkesbury, William of Canterbury, and Herbert of Boscama, with the addition, however, of the Passion of Benedict of Peterborough for the events of the martyrdom, previous to which Alan's work comes to an end. In Mr. Robertson's notice of the compilation there is not much that is new; but he confirms the opinion that the so-called Second Quadri-logus, printed at Brussels in 1602, really represents an earlier form of the work than the First Quadri-logus, which appeared at Paris in black letter as early as 1495. In adopting the Second Quadri-logus, therefore, he has taken the simplest and oldest text, as it probably came from the hands of the compiler, Elias of Evesham, in the last year of Richard I.; and he has added to its value as a useful harmony of the best authorities by marginal references to his own collection. There is one point, however, upon which he might have said more. Besides the two Quadri-logi, the compilation exists also in another form. This is an enlarged edition made by Roger of Croyland in 1212-13, but never printed. Mr. Robertson, of course, mentions this edition, but he leaves it in doubt whether it was made before or after the later Quadri-logus, and whether the one was taken from the other or each was an independent enlargement of the original work. Altogether, in fact, the Preface of this volume, like its predecessors, does not err on the side of over-fullness; but it is satisfactory as far as it goes, and the text, as usual, is carefully edited.

GEO. F. WARNER.

If it be a token of merit to construct "a silk purse out of a sow's ear," Mr. Crowther Hirst has succeeded here as a novelist. In the opening chapter of Hiram Greg, he introduces his hero lingering behind at a Sunday morning walk of school-teachers belonging to Heather Street Chapel, in a Lancashire clough, near Millvale, and intent on pledging his troth to Helen Briggs—like himself, a hard-driven sample of the working-class. Hiram is plainly a leader amid his fellow-workmen, and by his strength of mind is saved from the violent extremes of the Chartists of his days. He assists the moderate members of his party in the endeavour to restrain a mob, in which Helen's father figures as one of the most reckless incendiaries. But this does not save him from arrest and conviction for participation in a riotous attack on a mill-owner's house, where the evidence against him is furnished by Charlotte Wharton, the daughter of the mayor. A great part of the first volume is taken up with the efforts of Helen Briggs and others to clear Hiram; and, when these fail, the young fellow steadfastly resolves to quit Millvale at once, and put the sea between himself and the scene of his undeserved disgrace. But just as he breathes the air of a new country his day-dream is crushed by the sad tidings of the death of his Helen, from having listened to the false seductions of one Henderson, a worthless but wealthy partner of Mr. Wharton, who has weaned her from her troth by working on her resentment at Hiram's non-return to Millvale. Miss Wharton thereupon breaks off her engagement with Mr. Henderson, and subsequent reverses bring her father and mother to a lower level in society. At first all seems desperate with Hiram; but his innate good principle, honesty, and ready courage make him the very man for a settler. He saves his master in a flood of waters at the risk of his own life, and is rewarded by the gift of a sheep-run. From this date all goes well; and we are indebted to the author's shrewd acquaintance (personally or at second-hand) with the colonies for not a few vivid traits of bush-life. In the meanwhile, life in Lancashire proceeds in all else much as usual; while Charlotte Wharton, who had in effect been the cause of Hiram's self-banishment, has by change of circumstances become the chief stay of the little school and place of worship in Heather Street. When Hiram is heartened to visit his old home, he finds her intimate with two excellent old ladies who had befriended Helen in her fall. The hero has been using his opportunities, and from an operative and a Chartist fought his way to the prospect of a seat in the colonial Legislature. What wonder that the dénouement of this clever, vigorous, and fairly vraisem- blable novel is that Hiram's lot is in due course linked with that of the well-educated Charlotte? The Lancashire dialect, the insight into the details of the Chartist riots, and other kindred descriptions indicate a Lancashire author; the episode of provincial theatrical companies is less original.

Mary Marston might pass for the serial tale in a magazine of the religious type, so shrewdly does it cultivate the subtleties of spiritual development. Mary is the daughter of the junior and Nonconformist partner in the chief mercer's shop at Testbridge. From this centre circulates Mary's course of active benevolence, inculcated by her father. Her first field is offered by a girl of seventeen, Letty Lovell, a young friend residing with an aunt and cousin, Mrs. Wardour and her son Godfrey, at a place called Thornwick. A chance acquaintance facilitates Mary's admission to Godfrey's magnanimous endeavours to educate his little cousin on Sunday evenings, through readings in poetry which we are bound to say are laudably orthodox. Letty, being a poor relation, is looked at askance by her aunt, but over-tenderly, as it seems, by Godfrey, an independent yeoman, fond of a good horse, whose stirrup-leathers Letty cleans as a volunteer, so making a partial way into her cousin's heart. To this Thornwick, then, Mary Marston repairs on Sunday evenings, the one foraging expedition of the week—"that which going to church ought to be, and so seldom is." On the whole, a survey of the interior does not promise much for the damsel lodged there, judging from the superfine notions of Letty's male teacher, and the lynx-eyed jealousy of her duenna. Close to Thornwick is an old park, Dummelling, where, at the time of our story, dwell Mr. and Lady M. Alice (people called her "Malice") Mortimer, and their lovely daughter Hesper, whom they are intent on selling to a rich reprobate, Mr. Redmain. Just now Mr. Mortimer determines to open his decaying halls to welcome his tenants at a harvest-home. All the country is invited. Letty has to go without her natural chaperons, and, inexperienced in life, finds no check to the undesirable acquaintance of a certain Tom Helmer, a fast young fellow, who worms out of her her secret lounge, and two or three days later jumps out of the branches of an old oak into Letty's heart. Worried by a severe aunt and a grand-aided cousin, what wonder if the silly child, consenting one night to a stolen interview with Tom, finds herself shut out of Thornwick, has to wander half the night in the dark, and find her way to Mary Marston's house at Testbridge, indebted for life and shelter to the sympathies of a wretched mongrel dog, the description of whose touching companionship and its requital are among the most telling episodes of the story. A hue-and-cry after Letty leads to her discovery at Testbridge; and irate, out-witted Godfrey drives Tom Helmer to marry her, as we might say, at the whip's point. Anon the Mortimer match is consummated amid much development of manoeuvring stoicism on the part of "Lady Malice" and her beautiful daughter Hesper, a young lady who seems to be gifted with everything to become her high station except a heart. Mr.

Redmain, the happy bridegroom, is a professed sceptic, whose favourite study is each individual's base motives. Mary Marston, cut adrift from the shop at Testbridge by her father's death, is persuaded to go to town and take service as a superior lady's-maid with Mrs. Redmain, who experiences the drawbacks in her new household of a tribe of domestics, each a law to themselves, and of a cousin, Septima, miscalled Sepia, who is a desperate, characterless imitation of a beauty. One of Hesper's triumphs in dressing as the "Evening Star" at a fancy ball is brought about by Mary's tact and savoir faire, and by her utilising the stitching powers of poor Mrs. Helmer, up three pairs of stairs in lodgings. While the beauty and the lady's-maid fraternise in dress-making, Mary exercises her gift of preaching in and out of season with considerable success. As for Tom Helmer, who has become a writer for the Firefly, a society paper, he attends Mrs. Redmain's receptions, gets entangled in the toils of Sepia, and at last finds Mary's good offices of timely help in preparing him to face the long and fatal illness which ends his days prematurely. Meanwhile Mary quarrels with Mrs. Redmain on a question of leave to go to Letty's lodgings to see her husband. After a while we meet her again at Dummelling. Mr. Redmain sends for Mary from her temporary home at Testbridge; and, while he calls her to his counsels and is "almost persuaded to become a Christian," profits also by her common-sense to circumvent the plots of Sepia. The novel is one of unquestionable interest.

Beryl Fortescue is evidently the work of a novel-writer keenly set against a hackneyed plot. The Rev. Mr. Fortescue, with his wife and daughter, comes to fill the living of Guestenthorpe, and on arrival sympathises with a persecuted woman, whom the villagers can hardly keep their hands off, as Dan Heber's mistress. A visit to his home reveals that the poor creature is a Maori woman, whom Dan had married in his travels; and scarcely has the rector settled in, ere the poor woman dies, worn out with her troubles, leaving her child, Terry, to the care of Mr. Fortescue and a kind neighbour. Now Mr. Fortescue's daughter is a lovely girl likely to find Guestenthorpe too quiet, but ready enough to welcome the young squire, Max Majoribanks. Things plainly point to such a dénouement as desirable; and as early as Max's coming-of-age festivities the frank, manly lad pops the question, and receives a compliant answer. "Many a slip," however, runs the saw. Mr. Fortescue exacts a promise of three years' travel from Max, who forthwith puts the sea between himself and competing claimants for his favour. True to his colours, he comes back to claim Beryl, and all seems serene, though the presence of the little Maori girl (Terry), who has grown into an uncontrolled savage beauty, augurs ill. Max, it is plain, is weak and yielding; lets himself be snapped up by Terry on the roadside, and taken, volens volens, up to town with his own money, there to stand treat to the Sydenham Palace. Terry is, of course, pursued by Mr. Fortescue, and is run to earth, nothing abashed, at Max's chambers, under lock and key. What can the rector do but forbid any further engagement with Beryl? What so natural as that Max should be tempted by Terry to wed her instead, and to carry her abroad, where she comes by her death in a mysterious robbery and murder on the Lake of Geneva, in which a Greek travelling companion, Mr. Eustrathius, is implicated? Max, twice balked, comes home the third time, and now a widower, to find Beryl the wife of the man who had murdered Terry. It would be tedious to unfold how the perfidious Greek comes by his death and deserts; but we may say the story teaches forcibly that a new incumbent should cultivate his proper flock rather than its waifs and strays.

The moral of Harold Saxon is apparently to show up "clerical agency offices," and the tricks which have to become familiar to aspirants to a proprietary chapel. There is not much story of connected interest. A violent old farmer, of more money than wits, having bought a grand house, and being desirous to outshine his proud and poor baronet neighbour, cultivates that neighbour's clerical brother, Harold Saxon the elder, a hot Calvinist divine; and encourages a young son, who is reading for orders, to aspire to the hand of his only daughter, Gertrude Treasure, making him a deed of gift of ten thousand pounds that it might not be said he was dependent on his wife. Within a day of young Harold going away to seek his fortunes, Gertrude invites a certain twin-brother, Donoughmore O'Brien, to lunch at her father's, and during the meal discerns her fate, as the youth does his, through the freemasonry of love. Forthwith, the other twin, Anthony, takes poison on discovering that he is forestalled; while old Mr. Treasure, bent on shooting his favourite parrot because it declines to swear a round oath, gets his own eyes shot out, and so cannot see the disloyal ways of Miss Gertrude and her second lover. Meanwhile, young Harold, a curate in Whitechapel, puts himself into communication with Mr. Augustus Fly, a dealer in church properties, whose disreputable antecedents are sketched with somewhat overdrawn caricature. By his intervention, together with that of his confederate, Mr. Woolf, Harold Saxon, junior, becomes the incumbent of Theodosia Chapel, Great Axebridge, a seaside town, with many fashionable churches and preachers, the coteries of which afford an ample field for scenes of clerical life such as our author portrays with greater gusto than good taste. Young Harold of course never weds Gertrude, who is spirited off to the seaside and secretly married to Donoughmore, with whom she lives, when not in a cataleptic swoon, at Bramscombe's Folly.

JAMES DAVIES.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

M. Bué's First Steps in French Idioms (Hachette) contains an alphabetical list of idioms occupying about ninety pages, followed by an extremely instructive set of notes on the idioms quoted. We might instance those on Cette reine comme hallebarde et miséricorde, amende honorable, une autre paire de manches, revenir à ses moutons (referred to an old farce where a draper, robbed by one person of sheep, by another of cloth, mixes up the two stories before the magistrate). Especially ingenious is M. Bué's explanation of Qui vive—from the Italian chi viva, which he derives from chi vi va (who there goes); as well as that of un sot en trois lettres, either from sot in three letters (not to be confused with seau, sceau, saut) or (which seems forced) from trium literarum homo. F.U.R. The book concludes with one hundred examination papers for exercises on the idioms. In spite of M. Bué's name as a teacher, it may be doubted whether idioms can be learnt except by reading and conversation. A man could not get into London society by studying a West End Directory. This remark applies with less force to Prof. Cassal's Glossary of French Idioms, Gallicisms, and other Difficulties (Trübner), for his book is specially intended to serve as a vocabulary to a Reader by the same editor, on which ground he includes notices, biographical and social, to explain allusions in the text. These are occasionally unnecessary—e.g., those on Café Anglais, Henri VIII., Boulevard Jardin des Plantes. Knowledge of others could only be expected to come from pure cram; while the Professor, in sympathy for the voracious "progressive student," who is with difficulty induced not to devour the whole of any author he may taste, gives hints as to what should be read, seen, or studied. His course includes all Gibbon's Decline and Fall, some Kant, Mably, Plato's Republic, La Chanson de Roland, Thucydides, not to mention other stiffish reading. It is satisfactory to find that he has added such light literature as Corinne, some of Alfred de Musset, and Le Conscrit; and that he says of Paul de Kock, "Il ne va jamais trop loin." It may almost be doubted whether this book will add much to Prof. Cassal's reputation as a teacher.

Herr Strouwelle's French Genders (Williams and Norgate), seventy pages, will hardly afford more instruction than is contained in ordinary grammars in half-a-dozen pages. Is the printer or the editor responsible for "movable"—so spelt several times?

Without having put to the test of use M. Roulier's Second Book of French Composition (Hachette), we may say that the rules seem complete enough, and the pieces selected for translation illustrative and free from dullness. If there is a fault it is that progress is too gradual; but this might be met by taking more than one rule at a time and parts only of each exercise. This plan has the merit of making provision for a second term's work with perhaps some of the same boys.

The same publishers have brought out Part I. of Saintine's Picciola, a story which won the higher Monthyon Prize and the Legion of Honour for its diffident author, and of which Napoleon III. wrote from Ham that he had found it a lesson—even a solace. The notes by M. Paul Baume, though perhaps too much in the nature of a vocabulary, render the book available for junior classes, and for girls especially we can recommend its use.

Messrs. Macmillan's Progressive French Reader (First Year), by M. G. Eugène-Fasnacht, of the Bedford Modern School, contains about ninety pages of varied selections, graduated to some extent, supplemented by notes and vocabulary—or, rather, by two vocabularies; for the meanings of words in the earlier part are given in order of subjects, as they occur, as well as in the alphabetical vocabulary. This seems unnecessary, a moderate amount of dictionary work being good for beginners; but the explanations of some more common differences of construction contained in the Introduction might well be learnt by heart as a foundation for French translation. The book is likely to supply a want by obviating constant changes of books by advancing pupils.

We have also received the same author's

French Reader (second year) and his Progressive French Course (third year). The former contains a good supply both of prose and verse, with notes grammatical and historical; the latter, devoted entirely to syntax, distinguishes the more important rules by heavier type; while the exercises, French into English and English into French, are graduated in difficulty, but are not intended for boys below the ordinary standard of a fifth form.

Messrs. Hachette have sent us two French reading-books, the first being d'Aubigné's Histoire de Bayart, to an ordinary French-printed edition of which have been added notes, grammatical and explanatory, by M. Jules Bué. We question the utility of the bio- and geographical dictionary, which gives us to a half-mile the distance from Turin to Asti, yet would leave the eager student to seek for Bologna south-west of Ferrara; while the Thyrrhenian Sea is made less familiar to us than it need be. Little can be learnt from this part of the book except by cramming; but the idiomatic notes are quite worthy of M. Bué, and are in many cases of real value, though we have found a few more words of which derivations might be suggested—this being really the safest way of forming a student's vocabulary. The second is a selection from mediæval literature up to the time of Louis XI. (Choice Readings from French History, Part I., by Gustave Masson). The apparatus supplied consists of synoptic tables of French mediæval dialects, their characteristics and principal texts, with versions of the first psalm of each century from the twelfth to the sixteenth, notes on the pieces chosen by M. Masson, and glossaries of Langue d'Oïl and Langue d'Oc expressions. The early part of the text leaves, of course, little scope for selection, the Serments de Strasbourg and the Chanson de Roland being inevitable. The book appeals to a much more limited circle of readers than the editor's previous works, but is a most convincing answer to the still-lurking idea that England cannot attract foreign scholars as teachers of foreign languages.

The same firm have also brought out a little book on French Pronunciation and Reading, by Louis Desru. If pronunciation can be taught "by the book," the author has every right to hope for success, his work being complete and logical, except in so far that some rules are given in English, some in French, without apparent reason for the change. We do not quite grasp M. Desru's definition of quantity as "omission of the voice more or less strong;" and, though he names three kinds of reading—oratorical, serious, and familiar, or conversational—he does not attempt in any way to explain how the three kinds differ, but limits his remarks to the last. His thirty-five pages of illustration would, of course, serve for a class reading-book; they include M. Guizot's Letter on Punctuation.

Their First German Book, by A. Leopold Becker, of Tiverton School, professedly intended for beginners, travels over a good deal of ground somewhat rapidly, and adheres, we see with regret, to the weak and strong declension system. It contains, however, plenty of exercises and examination papers, and a few reading lessons, and may prove useful.

Outline of English History. First Period. B.C. 55 to A.D. 1603. By S. R. Gardiner, Professor of Modern History at King's College, London. (Longmans.) No manual of English History for children lately published can compare with this little book, which will be heartily welcomed by all interested in education. Instead of being a collection of detached scraps of information, of very unequal importance, interspersed with needless dates and names, it really is what the Preface promises, "the story of our country's history." Children will not learn from it that Henry I. died from eating lampreys, nor that his son was drowned in the "White Ship;" nor will they be wearied with the names and dates of all the battles of the Wars of the Roses; but they will learn—what no History written for them has yet taught—that every nation, like every individual, has a continuous life and growth. No event affecting the development of the English nation is passed over, while such as have left no lasting results are either omitted, or only lightly touched on. More than this, the thoughts and feelings, the needs and the sufferings, which formed the roots of the nation's growth, are not left untold; and not only will the reasoning powers of children be stimulated by the tracing of cause and effect, but their best sympathies will be awakened by all that is noblest in their country's history. They will realise, as they are seldom enabled to do, the rarely remembered truth that

"Thoughts that great hearts once broke for, we Breathe cheaply in the common air;
The dust we trample heedlessly
Throbb'd once in saints and heroes rare
Who perished, opening for their race
New pathways to the commonplace."

But that which above all distinguishes this little book is the remarkable fairness with which Prof. Gardiner deals with those subjects which are too often misrepresented from political or religious bias. This rare sense of justice is apparent throughout, but strikingly so in those chapters which deal with monasteries and with the Reformation. The simple language, the clear explanations of difficulties, and the excellent maps add to the value of the book, which is not only the work of a scholar, but of one who evidently sympathises with the children for whom he writes. In a work with so much to recommend it, it matters little that a few of the derivations given are doubtful, that trial by ordeal is not described quite exactly, or that the chronology of an event is slightly incorrect, as is the case with Queen Elizabeth's speech to her troops at Tilbury. These slight inaccuracies will, no doubt, be corrected in the next edition.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE are informed by the authorities of the Oxford and Cambridge University Presses that the publication of the Revised Version of the New Testament will take place about the middle of May.

A NEW volume of The Sacred Books of the East is ready for publication. It contains the first instalment of the canonical writings of the Buddhists, translated from the so-called Pāli, the sacred language of Ceylon. The volume consists of two parts: first, a new translation, by Prof. Max Müller, of the famous Dhammapadam, a collection of metrical sentences, ascribed to Buddha, with an Introduction treating of the history and chronology of the Buddhist canon; secondly, a translation of the Suttanipāṭa, by Prof. Fausbøll, of Copenhagen. A translation of this work, published in 1874, by Sir M. Coomara Swāmy, is not quite complete, nor always to be depended on.

PROF. JOSEPH MAYOR has prepared for publication in a separate and expanded form a "Sketch of Ancient Philosophy from Thales to Cicero," which formed part of the Introduction to his lately published edition of Cicero's treatise De Natura Deorum. The book will be shortly published by the Cambridge University Press.

MR. WILLIAM ELLIS, whose death at the age of eighty was recorded in our columns last week, was well known among educationists for his efforts to extend the teaching in schools of political economy in its more distinctively social aspects. Long before Board schools existed Mr. Ellis gave large sums of money and much personal exertion to found and support elementary schools in which such instruction should be given, and many of his writings were directed to advance the same end. His interest in this subject had not slackened, for we learn that at the time of his death he was assisting Mrs. Fenwick Miller in her preparation of a school-book of a novel character upon "Social Economy," as the Education Department terms it. The plan of the book was fully sketched out and a considerable portion written, and its appearance will not be delayed by the death of Mr. Ellis. It will be shortly issued by Messrs. Longmans and Co., who some years ago published Mr. Ellis's book called Aids to the Young in their Efforts at Self-Guidance, which, although much appreciated by teachers, has been long out of print.

PROF. ROBERTSON SMITH is employing the leisure enforced on him by the Commission of the Free Church of Scotland to deliver a course of twelve lectures on Old-Testament Criticism to popular audiences in Edinburgh and Glasgow. The experiment, made at the request of a large number of prominent Free Churchmen, has proved a success, the average attendance at the course in the two cities being little short of 1,700. We understand that the lectures will be published in April by Messrs. A. and C. Black, of Edinburgh, under the title The Old Testament in the Jewish Church.

MESSRS. HODDER AND STOUGHTON'S forthcoming works include a new volume by the Rev. Prof. A. B. Bruce, on The Chief End of Revelation; an important Handbook of Christian Evidences, by the Rev. Prof. R. A. Redford, entitled The Christian's Plea; Our Daily Life: its Duties and its Dangers, by the Rev. Canon Bell; India, Past and Present: a Popular History of its Conquest, with a Chapter on Afghanistan, Map, and Illustrations, by the Rev. Bouchier Wrey Savile; Robert Hall, by E. Paxton Hood, and Thomas Chalmers, by Dr. Donald Fraser, being the fifth and sixth volumes of the Biographical series, "Men Worth Remembering;" Heredity, Marriage, Labour, and Socialism, four volumes completing the authorised English edition of the Rev. Joseph Cook's widely known "Boston Monday Lectures;" Dr. Wainwright's critical volume, Scientific Sophisms: a Review of Current Theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men; a popular account of Exeter Hall, with a steel Portrait of Lord Shaftesbury and other Illustrations; and new editions of Africa, Past and Present, by An Old Resident, and J. B. Gough's latest work, Sunlight and Shadow.

THE second volume of Prof. Lewis Campbell's edition of Sophocles, completing the work, will be published in March by the Clarendon Press. It contains the Ajax, Electra, Trachiniae, Philoctetes, and Fragments. The plan of editing is uniform with that pursued in the first volume. There is a short Introduction to each play, the various readings of the chief MSS. are printed under the text, and the explanatory notes are at the foot of the page. The Fragments are also furnished with brief English notes, both critical and explanatory. The work now brought to a close (consisting of about 1,100 pages) includes (1) a revision of the text; (2) a continuous interpretation of the text as adopted; (3) introductions to the seven plays; (4) an essay on the language; (5) an account of the MSS., with some examination of the relation in which the chief MS. stands to the rest.

MESSRS. HURST AND BLACKETT will shortly publish a new novel by the author of Uraula's Love Story, &c., entitled Love Knots, in three volumes.

THE extracts from the Liber Veritatum of Gascoigne, now on the eve of publication by the Clarendon Press, are the only contemporaneous comment on affairs of Church and State in England during the first half of the fifteenth century (1403-58). They have been selected and edited from the original MS. in Lincoln College, Oxford, by Prof. Thorold Rogers, M.P., with a Preface and Introduction. Apart from the light which they throw on political events, they are singularly illustrative of the sentiment which influenced the orthodox reformers in the sixteenth century—viz., those who wished to sever England from the Papal Court without abandoning the creed of the Roman Church.

WE understand that Canon Farrar has in the press a new volume of sermons in which, under the title Mercy and Judgment: a Few Last Words on Christian Eschatology, he deals specially with the subject in reference to the volume What is of Faith? recently published by Dr. Pusey. Messrs. Macmillan & Co. will be the publishers.

THE Nurse's Handbook is the title of a little book announced by Mr. Elliot Stock for the use of those who visit among the poor.

PROF. DILLMANN, the President of the Fifth International Congress of Orientalists, to be held at Berlin, has sent out his invitations for September 12-17. All Oriental scholars who wish to take part in the proceedings have to take tickets (10s.), to be obtained from F. A. Brockhaus, publisher, Leipzig, or Asher and Co., Berlin. Those who intend to read papers have to write to the President or the members of the committee—Profs. Lepsius, Olshausen, Kuhn, Sachau, Weber, &c.

A NEW edition (the fourth) will shortly be published of the first volume of Prof. Conington's Vergil in the "Bibliotheca Classica," edited by Prof. H. Nettleship. It will contain additional Notes, a fresh Memoir, and three original essays on "The Ancient Critics of Vergil," "Ancient Vergilian Commentators," and "The Text of Vergil."

MR. F. R. STATHAM, who contributes an article to the current number of the Fortnightly entitled "How to get out of South African Difficulties," has in preparation a book on South Africa. From Mr. Statham's experience as a journalist, both in the Cape Colony and in Natal, his book ought to be of permanent value, as well as of special interest at the present time.

A THIRD edition of Mr. Herbert Spencer's Principles of Psychology, with an additional part entitled "Congruities," is announced by Messrs. Williams and Norgate.

A FRENCH translation of the address delivered by Dr. Ingram at the Trades' Union Congress at Dublin in September last will appear in the March number of the Revue Occidentale.

THERE is announced as in preparation A Collection of Ancient Carols, previous to the Eighteenth Century, with Accompanying Tunes, the words edited by Robert Charles Hope, of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, editor of Barnabe Googe's Popish Kingdome, the music edited by William Creser, Mus. Doc. Oxon., organist and choir-master of St. Martin's, Scarborough; also, A History of the Seals and Armorial Bearings of the University and Colleges of Cambridge, to be illustrated with twenty-six coloured plates and sixty engravings of seals, by W. H. St. John Hope, B.A., of St. Peter's College, Cambridge.

THE Revue Critique for February 14 contains a review, by M. J. J. Jusserand, of Prof. Stubbs's Constitutional History of England, which is characterised as "de ceux qu'il est nécessaire de posséder et qui, jusqu'à un certain point, font époque parce que, à leur date, ils se sont trouvés les meilleurs."

A PROPOSAL was recently made to remove Lord Amberley's Analysis of Religious Belief from the Free Library of Galashiels. Though supported by two ministers, the proposal was rejected in the library committee by a majority of ten to six.

THERE is considerable activity in the publishing trade at Manchester. An elegant edition of the works of John Critchley Prince has just been issued; and we have now to record the appearance of the first volume of a handsome collection of the writings of Mr. Edwin Waugh, which will extend to ten volumes. A popular edition of the works of Mr. Ben. Brierley is in preparation, and also a cheap and uniform issue of the novels of Mrs. G. Linnaeus Banks. Mr. J. T. Slugg's Reminiscences of Manchester Fifty Years Ago will be issued shortly.

WITH reference to the statement in our last number that, under the new Free Libraries Bill, "the accounts of all free libraries are to be submitted to the House of Commons once a year," we are requested to explain that by the "accounts" spoken of are meant, not balance-sheets, but returns. It may be added that the Bill does not consolidate or amend the Scotch and Irish Acts, but only those relating to England.

THE Berlin correspondent of the Times writes:—"An interesting publication is expected here shortly in the shape of a selection from the political correspondence between the Prince Consort and King William, now the German Emperor."

PROF. MARCH reports, in the North American Review, the help that the Americans are giving to the Philological Society's new English Dictionary. Two hundred and seventy-eight American authors and fifty-five others, in 1,008 volumes, have been undertaken by 150 readers, of whom Pennsylvania gives the largest number, twenty-five; while Japan yields two, Canada two, and Italy one.

"The American authors selected are such that they will be pretty sure to yield quotations for all the words used to name the physical features, productions, and other objects of the country, and the peculiar acts, habits, and relations to be found here. The common words will also be fairly illustrated."

PROF. MARCH's address on the re-opening of the handsome Pardee Hall—containing the Museums, Laboratories, Library, Lecture and Reading Rooms of his college, Lafayette, Pennsylvania—has been published. The original Hall was given by Mr. Ario Pardee in 1873, and was burnt in June 1879. With the insurance money on it, its present handsome successor was built, and was opened in November 1880.

THE first volume of the Minor Works of Wilhelm Grimm will be published almost immediately.

WE are sorry to hear that the literary monthly Review published in Finnish at Helsingfors has ceased to exist. Beside the forty-two Finnish papers appearing in the Grand Duchy, one is published at St. Petersburg and another at Calumet, in Michigan, in the interests of Finnish emigrants to the United States.

AMONG recent Polish publications attention is called to M. K. W. Wojcicki's work on social and intellectual life at Warsaw from 1800 to 1830, and the volume published on the occasion of Kraszewski's jubilee.

THE Norman Society of Antiquaries has just published its thirtieth volume, containing some valuable documents and studies bearing on the Hundred Years' War, and an unedited Life of St. Margaret by Wace.

Polybiblion calls attention to the Bulletin Mensuel issued by Messrs. Morgand and Fatout. The February number contains a biography and portrait of Frantz Banzonnet, chromolithographs of two magnificent old bindings, and facsimiles of the title-pages of various very rare books. It likewise chronicles the sale of drawings, &c., by Gravelot, Boucher, Moreau, Saint-Aubin, and others at prices so high as to wring from our contemporary the regretful remark, "Ce sont là morceaux de millionnaire, et il n'y a guère qu'un prince de la finance ou un lord de la Grande-Bretagne qui puisse songer à les posséder."

THE Rev. Samuel Beal, Professor of Chinese in University College, London, will give, on March 23 and 24, at three p.m., two lectures on "The Northern Accounts of the Two First Buddhist Councils." These lectures will be open to the public without payment or ticket.

At the next meeting of the New Shakapere Society Mr. Furnivall will read a short paper "On the Odd Notion of Dr. Leo that in Timon of Athens, III. iv. 112,

"'Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius Vllorxa,' the Word Vllorxa means Five Poundz, or Ten Angels, £30 6s. 8d."

THE first instalment of M. Mroček-Drozovsky's Historical and Philological Commentary on the Russkaya Pravda, the earliest monument of Russian legislation, is almost ready for the press. Besides the general Preface, an exhaustive account of the primitive leathern money of Russia will be given in the first part.

THE special distinction of the Elstow Bunyan (Walker and Co.) is that the sides of the cover mainly consist of "boards" "warranted made of the oak taken from Elstow church" last year. It is alarming to know that the old building is being "restored," for to lovers of old buildings no word has a more ominous and ghastly sound than "restoration." We can only hope for the best, prepared for the worst. Meanwhile, here are before us two slices of its old oak helping to form a handsome binding for a handsome volume. Having sated our eyes with the exterior, we find inside, on excellent paper, a well-printed copy of the immortal allegory, with illustrations by W. Gunston and others, and a Prefatory Memoir, illustrated by charming drawings of Elstow church, and various old doors and other things that are, or may be, associated with Bunyan. The memoir (its grammar is not all that might be wished: "neither of Bunyan's marriages are entered here," "the terms . . . is not to be accepted") shows some independent research, as well as an adequate knowledge of the standard authorities. Mr. Cary-Elwes' claim for Chalgrave as Bunyan's birthplace is well stated, and deserves consideration. The best point made is that Bunyan is not the author of all the marginal writings in the well-known copy of Foxe's Martyrs now in the public library at Bedford. It a little raises our idea of his cultivation to know that the worst of those doggerel verses are probably not his. But surely there is a plentiful lack of judgment in saying that, "though he states he soon forgot all he learnt [at school—in a grammar school—probably the Harpur Charity School at Bedford], there can be no doubt he was not only a proficient reader of English classics, especially the Bible, but imbibed the passion for literary work which afterwards distinguished him"! We must not forget to mention that this edition has a useful Index.

WE have received The Chinese Opium Smoker (S. W. Partridge and Co.). It consists of twelve illustrations, reproduced from the Chinese, together with descriptive letterpress to each. The illustrations are certainly very effective and, indeed, interesting for more reasons than one. If only the letterpress had more of description and less of moralising, we fancy that its object would be better achieved.

WE have also received The Eastern Question

Solved: a Vision of the Future, by "Budge" (W. H. Allen and Co.); The Land Question, Ireland, No. VIII.: Mr. Bonamy Price on the Three F's (William Ridgway); Boston Monday Lectures for 1881 (R. D. Dickinson); Unlaw in Judgments of the Judicial Committee and its Remedies: a Letter to Canon Liddon by Prof. Pusey (Parkers and Rivingtons); The Formation and Growth of Society out of Christian Marriage, by the Rev. B. Belaney (Burns and Oates); English Institutions and the Irish Race, by A. M. Topp (reprinted from the Melbourne Review); The Scientific Roll and Magazine of Systematised Notes, conducted by Alexander Ramsay—"Climate," Vol. I. (Bradbury, Agnew and Co.); The New National Reading Books, Standard IV. (National Society's Depository); Lessons in Gaelic for the Use of Schools and Self-Instruction, by J. E. N. (Dublin: Gill and Son); Murby's Imperial Grammar for the Code of 1880, Standards IV., V., and VI. (Thomas Murby); &c., &c.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Cornhill Magazine for March is an exceptionally good number. Mr. Gosse contributes a paper on "Sir George Etherege," in which he calls attention to a neglected volume of MS. in the British Museum, the Letter-Book of Etherege when he was envoy at Regensburg, 1685-87. Mr. Gosse raises many questions of importance concerning the history of the English stage, such as the origin of rhyme in the drama and the influence of Molière in England. The letters of Etherege seem to contain much interesting information about the social life of Germany at the end of the seventeenth century. We trust that Mr. Gosse may return to them at some future time. J. A. S.'s "Autumn Wanderings" across the Alps to Viareggio is too diffuse and not sufficiently precise to be a good sample of the "Sentimental Journey" of an aesthete. G. A. solves the question, "Who were the Fairies?" by answering that they are survivals of the traditions of the Neolithic period. "Bhagoo" will be read with great interest when it is known that it is a sketch of the actual life of a Hindoo and his fortunes under the British rule. It is written with a mixture of humour and pathos that makes it vivid and impressive. The general conclusion of the writer as to the results of British rule on the natives is worth quoting.

"By a rigorous taxation we help him to accumulate those debts which, by reason of his improvidence and ignorance, he is too ready to incur. But we do little towards making him more provident or less ignorant; and, when he shows the brute side of a nature we have helped to brutalise, we hang him up between earth and heaven, and hold forth about 'his righteous doom,' and vapour of how 'we hold the land in trust for the natives.'"

Macmillan's Magazine is strong in literary criticism. Mr. Matthew Arnold writes about Byron as he has recently done about Wordsworth, and advocates an attempt to separate Byron's good work from the mass which he produced. In the course of his remarks Mr. Arnold explains his "criticism of life" theory of poetry. He tells us that this expression was meant to apply to all literature, and that poetry must first fulfil that definition before it is subjected to the laws of strictly poetic beauty and truth. Mr. Arnold says many good things incidentally about Shelley and Leopardi as well as Byron. Mr. Alfred Austin discusses Mr. Swinburne's recent criticism of "Tennyson and de Musset," protesting forcibly against the exaggerations in many of Mr. Swinburne's literary judgments. Mr. Hitchman gives an account of "The Penny Press," by which he means the cheap weeklies read by the lower classes. Mr. R. J. Martin writes on "Connemara," with especial reference to the condition of land-holding in that part of Ireland.

THE last number of Harper is one of much interest. The article most attractive to Englishmen is that by Mr. Lathrop, called "Literary and Social Boston," with its admirable portraits of Messrs. Emerson, Howells, Whipple, Aldrich, and others. The illustrations, as usual, are abundant and excellent.

THE Rivista Europea of February 16 has an article on "Paul and Seneca," written without any bias in favour of religion, but considering simply the historical appropriateness of the moral teaching of St. Paul. Its entire impartiality would be impossible in an English writer of any school of thought.

OBITUARY.

SIR G. POMEROY COLLEY, of whose sad death everybody has been thinking during the past week, was not a professional author. Indeed, he was too much of a soldier to be much of a writer. But he possessed all those talents and all those tastes which go to make up the literary man. Whether he was using his pen or was engaged in conversation, his learning and his culture were alike conspicuous. The modesty of his nature was another quality which impressed itself on all who met him.

MANY of our readers will share the regret with which we announce that M. Paul Meyer, Professor in the College of France, has lost the English wife whom he came to this country to marry but a few months ago.

THE Finnish poet, Prof. Fredrik Cygnaeus, died at Helsingfors on February 7, aged seventy-four. His patriotic verses, which were collected in five volumes in 1870, enjoyed great popularity in Finland. He was also the author of two successful dramas—Claes Flemings Tider and Hertig Johans Ungdomsdrömmar.

THE death is also announced of the Rev. Moses Margoliouth, Vicar of Little Linford, Bucks, the writer of a great many works upon theology and upon the past and future of the Jewish race; of Mr. John W. Dwinelle, of California, the author of a Colonial History of San Francisco; and of J. J. Haus, the senior professor in the University of Ghent, and the author of several valuable treatises of criminal jurisprudence.

NOTES ON HUNGARIAN LITERATURE.

IN the two last numbers of the Literarische Berichte aus Ungarn—which reproduces in German such information about Hungarian literary and scientific matters as is likely to interest non-Hungarians*—the most interesting article is Herr Sturm's on the epic trilogy of Hungary's greatest poet, M. Arany. So far as a generous and sympathetic analysis written by a man who is himself a poet can give the reader an idea of a poem he has not read, this article is fairly satisfactory. To those who wish to know something about modern Hungarian poetry, its perusal may be confidently recommended. On February 7, 1846, the Kisfaludy Society offered a prize of fifteen ducats for a narrative poem whose hero should be some historical personage still living in the people's memory. John Arany was then thirty years old, and filled the office of town clerk in his birthplace, Szalonta, in the county of Bihar. A year later he was recognised as one of the greatest poets of his nation, his poem Toldi having gained the prize. In the strict sense of the word, Nicholas Toldi was not as historical personage, but his name was preserved in popular tradition, and a certain connoction existed between the poet and his hero. The Aranyss were vassals of the Toldis, but, being driven out by the Turks from their homes in Nagyfalú, the old seat of the Toldis, they became heyduks in the armies of the Rákóczi, from whom they received patents of nobility, and Szalonta, the estate of the Toldis—who by this time had become extinct—to hold upon heyduk tenure. This interesting connexion doubtless suggested his subject to the poet. His only materials, besides the popular tradition, were a rude rhyming chronicle of the sixteenth century; and it is interesting to see how the modern poet has used, amplified, refined, and ennobled the rough ore of his predecessor, Illosvai. In 1848 Arany had begun a continuation of his poem, the MS. of which he showed to his friend the poet Petöfi; but, owing to the troubles that followed that disastrous year, Toldi's Evening, in which the end of the hero's life is narrated, was not published until 1854. The last-written, but in the order of the trilogy the second part, Toldi's Love, appeared at the end of 1879. As the poet has himself explained it, this long delay of twenty-five years was due to various subjective causes. In the first place the subject was none of his choosing; his friends, beginning with Petöfi, urged him, "as he had already made hands and feet, to add a trunk thereto." He saw that in this intermediate part he must represent his hero in love; but, at the same time, he felt himself hampered by the tradition and what he had himself written in the two parts already composed. It was evident that Toldi's love-story must not end happily. When to these embarrassments, arising from his subject, we add the distractions of official work, the attractions of more congenial subjects, and the sorrows which befell most of us as we advance in life, perhaps twenty-five years of lassitude and vacillation are easily accounted for. Finit coronat opus. The importunities of his friends have been justified by the result, and Toldi's love-story is one of those tours de force in which the difficulty of the subject has compelled the poet to put forth all his powers, while it fetters the attention of the reader.

Another most interesting article is M. Salamon's Denkrede on the Hungarian historian, Bishop Horváth, pronounced before the Hungarian Academy on May 28, 1880. It is especially marked by the elevated tone in which it is composed, communicating to the reader the author's reverential sympathy for the object of his panegyric. But besides its moral characteristics and its literary charms, which are very fairly preserved in the German version, it has solid claims on anyone who wishes to understand the modern history of Hungary. M. Salamon indicates with brevity and clearness the peculiar position, between 1825 and 1848, of the Hungarian nation towards its own past. Next, reviewing the historical works in Hungarian, Latin, and German which were then available to the Hungarian public, he shows how far they were from satisfying its new requirements. The treatment of Hungarian history seemed to have fallen exclusively into the hands of the poets, when, in 1836, the Academy awarded the prize for a History of Industry and Commerce in Hungary to Michael Horváth, a young Catholic priest. He was, in fact, the only competitor. This prize seems to have revealed to Horváth his vocation. From that time to the end of his life, including eighteen years of political exile, he devoted himself to writing the history of Hungary. M. Salamon lays emphasis on the fact that Horváth wrote Hungarian history. In the composition of history there are three stages—the collection of materials, the critical sifting of the same, and lastly the composition of the history. It might be plausibly argued that each step in the process should be delayed until the previous one had been completed; but Horváth, like Richelieu, to whom M. Salamon compares him, saw that such a course would be logical, but not practical. As a Prussian general, in the war against Napoleon I., said, "If you will only do what is absolutely the best, you will end by doing nothing." Horváth began by issuing, in 1841, a short compendium of Hungarian history in one small volume; then, between 1843 and 1846, he enlarged the work into four volumes. Shortly afterwards followed the troubles of 1848-49, in which Horváth took part as bishop and Minister of Public Instruction. In 1860, while an exile, he brought out a corrected edition, also in four volumes. Lastly, in 1871-73, he published an enlarged edition in eight volumes, continuing the history to 1825, instead of stopping, as previously, at 1790. He had published, before his return home, two historical works which may be regarded as continuations of his history—one, in two volumes, on the twenty-five years from 1823 to 1848, and the other, in three volumes, on the struggles of 1848-49. M. Salamon, who, in spite of his enthusiastic admiration, is far from attributing perfection to his master's work, expresses his regret that Horváth, instead of attempting a complete history of the struggle in which he was himself personally engaged, had not confined himself to giving, in the form of memoirs, his own personal experience and knowledge. He also points out that Horváth was a child of his times—i.e., of the times when he was young—and that his ideas about history were too much influenced by those of classical antiquity to satisfy the present generation of Hungarians, affected as they are by modern, or, as they are generally called, scientific conceptions of history.

* See ACADEMY, February 22, 1879, p. 167.

Our space does not allow of our doing more than mentioning the notice of M. Pulszky's Memoirs, of M. Jakab's History of the Unitarian Church in Transylvania, and of M. Salamon's History of Budapest. Literary activity in Hungary is still principally occupied with history, and, in that department, with the collection of data.

With the end of the year 1880 the Literarische Berichte aus Ungarn has changed its name and its form. We have before us the first number (eighty-eight pages) of the Ungarische Revue (Brockhaus), which is to appear on the 15th of every month. It closely resembles its quarterly predecessor, though perhaps somewhat lighter in form. The prospectus, printed on the cover, promises "a comprehensive picture, not only of the literary and scientific, but also of the whole intellectual and public life" of Hungary, together with the views and opinions of foreigners upon Hungarian matters. The three large print articles treat of the Deutscherhetze in Hungary, the conspiracy of Martinovics, and an account of the Humanist, Galeotto Marzio. The last-named is an extract from the Analecta ad Historiam Renascentium in Hungaria Litterarum Spectantia by the Hungarian scholar, Dr. Abel. ARTHUR J. PATTERSON.

WALT WHITMAN ON CARLYLE.

WALT WHITMAN, writing of the death of Carlyle in the Critic of February 12, says:—

"As a representative author, a literary figure, no man else will bequeath to the future more significant hints of our stormy era, its fierce paradoxes, its din, and its struggling parturition periods than Carlyle. . . . Two conflicting agnostic elements seem to have contended in the man, sometimes pulling him different ways like wild horses. He was a cautious, conservative Scotchman, fully aware what a foetid gas-bag much of modern radicalism is; but then his great heart demanded reform, demanded change—an always sympathetic, always human heart—often terribly at odds with his scornful brain. . . .

Though he was no Chartist or Radical, I consider Carlyle's by far the most indignant comment or protest against the fruits of fendalism to-day in Great Britain. . . . For the last three years we in America have had transmitted glimpses of Carlyle's prostration and bodily decay. . . . A week ago I read such an item just before I started out for my customary evening stroll between eight and nine. In the fine cold night, unusually clear (February 5, 1881), as I walked some open grounds adjacent, the condition of Carlyle, and his approaching—perhaps even then actual—death, filled me with thoughts, eluding statement, and curiously blending with the scene. The planet Venus, an hour high in the west, with all her volume and lustre recovered (she has been shorn and languid for nearly a year), including an additional sentiment I never noticed before—not merely voluptuous, Paphian, steeping, fascinating—now with calm, commanding, dazzling seriousness and hauteur—the Milo Venus now. Upward to the zenith, Jupiter, Saturn, and the Moon past her quarter, trailing in procession, with the Pleiades following, and the constellation Taurus, and red Aldebaran. Not a cloud in heaven. Orion strode through the south-east with his glittering belt, and a trifle below hung the sun of the night, Sirius. Every star dilated, more vitreous, nearer than usual. Not as in some clear nights, when the larger stars entirely outshine the rest. Every little star or cluster just as distinctly visible and just as high. Berenice's Hair showing every gem, and new ones. To the north-east and north, the Sickle, the Goat and Kids, Cassiopeia, Castor and Pollux, and the two Dippers. While through the whole of this silent, indescribable show, enclosing and bathing my whole receptivity, ran the thought of Carlyle dying. (To soothe and spiritualise, and, as far as may be, solve the mysteries of death and genius, consider them under the stars at midnight.)

"And now that he has gone hence, can it be that Thomas Carlyle, soon to chemically dissolve in ashes and by winds, remains an identity still? In ways perhaps eluding all the statements, lore, and speculations of ten thousand years—eluding all possible statements to mortal sense—does he yet exist, a definite, vital being, a spirit, an individual—perhaps now wafted in space among those stellar systems which, suggestive and limitless as they are, merely edge more limitless, far more suggestive systems?"

"I have no doubt of it. In silence, of a fine night, such questions are answered to the soul, the best answers that can be given. With me too, when depressed by some specially sad event or tearing problem, I wait till I go out under the stars for the last voiceless satisfaction."

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- AYRES, A. Life and Work of W. A. Muhlenberg. Sampson Low & Co. 16s.
- BECHT, E. Verzeichnisse der alten Handschriften u. Drucke in der Domherren-Bibliothek zu Zeitz. Berlin: Weidmann. 5 M.
- BLUNT, Lady Anne. A Pilgrimage to Nejd, the Oracle of the Arab Race. Murray. 2s.
- CARLYLE, T. Reminiscences. Ed. J. A. Froude. Longmans. 18s.
- DELPIT, J. Catalogue des Manuscrits de la Bibliothèque municipale de Bordeaux. T. 1. Bordeaux: Imp. Delmas.
- HEFNER-ALTENCK, J. H. de. Costumes, Œuvres d'Art et Usages depuis le Commencement du Moyen-Âge jusqu'à la Fin du 18^{me} Siècle. Livr. 5-9. Frankfurt-a-M.: Keller. 10 M.
- IMBAULT-HUART, O. Recueil de Documents sur l'Asie centrale. Paris: Leroux. 15 fr.
- LOISEL, A. Histoire de la Langue française jusqu'à la Fin du XVI^{me} Siècle. Paris: Thorin.
- MACGEORGE, A. Flags: Some Account of their History and their Uses. Blackie. 12s. 6d.
- MANTEROLA, J. Cancionero Vasco. III. San Sebastian. 10 fr.
- MOREL-FATIO. Catalogue des Manuscrits espagnols de la Bibliothèque nationale. Livr. 1. Paris: Imp. Nat.
- NORR, Roden. A Little Child's Monument. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 3s. 6d.
- SÉBILLOT, P. Littérature orale de la Haute-Bretagne. Paris: Maisonneuve. 7 fr. 50 c.
- WARREN, J. E. Einleitung in das Studium der Statistik. Hrg. v. C. Gandil. Leipzig: Henrichs. 5 M.
- WILDER, V. Mozart, l'Homme et l'Artiste. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
- ZOLA, E. Le Naturalisme au Théâtre. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY.

- RÉVILLE, J. La Doctrine du Logos dans le quatrième Évangile et dans les Œuvres de Philon. Paris: Fischbacher.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BERNECKE, E. Beiträge zur Chronologie der Regierung Ludwig IV., d. Heiligen, Landgrafen v. Thüringen. Königsberg: Beyer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
- BOILHAU, J. J. Vie inédite de la duchesse de Luynes, p. P. T. de Larroque. Paris: Vlo.
- LENZ, E. Das Synedion der Bundesgenossen im zweiten athenischen Bunde. Königsberg: Beyer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
- OSTERLICH, H. Historisch-geographisches Wörterbuch d. deutschen Mittelalters. I. Lfg. Gotha: Perthes. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- URKUNDBUCHREGISTER f. den Kanton Schaffhausen. 1. Abth. 187-1330. Schaffhausen: Schoch. 2 M. 50 Pf.
- VOORL, F. Da Hegealpo, qui dicitur, Josephi interprete. Erlangen: Deichert. 1 M. 50 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- COHEN, E. Sammlung v. Mikrophographien zur Veranschaulichung der mikroskopischen Struktur v. Mineralien u. Gesteinen. 2. Lfg. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 16 M.
- FRASER, Prof. Berkeley. Blackwood. 3s. 6d.
- HACKERL, E. Das System der Medusen. 1. Thl. E. Monographie der Medusen. 2. Abth. System der Acraspeden. Jena: Fischer. 60 M.
- HOOKE, Sir J. D. Flora of British India. Part VIII. L. Reeve & Co. 10s. 6d.
- MANN, J. J. River Bars. Crosby Lockwood & Co. 7s. 6d.
- MICHELL, S. Mine Drainage. Crosby Lockwood & Co. 15s.
- REINICH, P. F. Neue Untersuchungen über die Mikrostruktur der Steinkohle d. Carbon, der Dyas u. Trias. Leipzig: Weigel. 50 M.
- ROUN, W. Der Kampf der Theile im Organismus. Leipzig: Engelmann. 4 M.
- STRUBE, O. Observations de Pulkova. Vol. 11. Observations faites à la Lunette méridienne. St. Petersburg. 36s.
- TAYLOR, O. Introduction to the Ancient and Modern Geometry of Conics. Cambridge: Deighton, Bell & Co. 15s.

PHILOLOGY.

- CICERONIS, M. T., pro Cn. Plancio Oratio. Ed. H. A. Holden. 4s. 6d.
- ELTER, A. De Joannis Stobaei codice Photiano. Bonn: Strauss. 2 M.
- MERGERT, H. Lexikon zu den Reden d. Cicero. 3. Bd. 1. u. 2. Lfg. Jena: Fischer. 2 M.
- MEYER, E. Der Dialect v. Ile-de-France im 13. u. 14. Jahrh. I. Thl. Vocalismus. Breslau: Koebner. 1 M.
- NUMANN, F. J. De Oshone Lampasceno ejusque fragmentis commentatio. Breslau: Koebner. 1 M.
- RAYNAUD, G. Elle de Saint-Gilles: Chanson de Geste. Accompagnée de la Rédaction norvégienne, traduits par E. Koebner. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 8 fr.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE EXTENSION OF UNIVERSITY COLLEGE,
LONDON.
University College: Feb. 28, 1881.

Will you allow me to say a few words on the inference you drew in last week's ACADEMY from the recent extension of University College, "that the education of boys, fine art, and physical science are flourishing most in Gower Street"? The Boys' School has occupied the south wing for some years, and is not now in question. The Slade School of Fine Art has been on a peculiar footing from the first, and merely passes from smaller to larger rooms in the now completed north wing. What I desire to point out is that the remaining space gained by the recent extension of this wing has been allotted to various sections of physical science, not because these are flourishing more than other parts of the College work, but because of the great change that has come to pass in the conditions of scientific instruction. It might as well be argued that physical science is flourishing most at Oxford or Berlin. There is no active academic centre anywhere at which it has not been found necessary of late years to provide enormously increased room for practical work in science. Here, on the first important extension of the buildings of the College proper—planned, as they originally were, before the new era of scientific activity—it was inevitable that the claims of such subjects as chemistry, physiology, &c., should first be considered. But so much are the departments of literature and philosophy also in course of expansion that the Council is only waiting for more money to come in before proceeding to recast and enlarge all that part of the College where they are now most inadequately housed.

It is a great mistake to suppose that University College is now, any more than ever it was, content to be such a school of mere physical science as may now be found in several provincial towns. Classical work is being vigorously prosecuted by Profs. Goodwin and Church, with the help of Prof. Charles Newton in archaeology, and, presently, of Prof. Postgate in comparative philology; and, to mention but one of the chairs of modern literature, where is the study of English in all its forms, early or late, being directed with greater breadth or energy than by Prof. Henry Morley? The number of students in these subjects by no means falls short of that in the scientific classes, when the medical students are discounted. Even in the least favourable case that could be thought of in a College South of the Tweed—the subject of mental philosophy—more than fifty students were at work last year. It is time, indeed, that some ungrudging recognition should be made of the labours of men like Malden, Key, Long, Goldstick, and others, with their present successors, to rear in London a school of the Literæ Humaniores that could hold its own with the newest fields of scientific interest. The recognition has been long delayed, but it can now be made to some purpose if the College is speedily helped towards the next extension which its authorities have in view.

G. CROOM ROBERTSON.

SHAKSPEARE'S "VLLORXA."

Ilford, Essex: Feb. 23, 1881.

This morning's post brought me a presentation copy of Zwei Abhandlungen aus dem Jahrbuche der Deutschen Shakespeare-Gesellschaft, by my friend, Dr. F. A. Leo. The second discussion is about the mysterious word "Vllorxa" in Timon of Athens, which the learned author believes to be part of a financial statement of account (vll or xa, i.e., five pounds or ten angels) inserted by mistake into the line where we find it. On p. 14 of the pamphlet he quotes from Knight's Life of Shakspeare a passage in which that worthy editor gives, from what he accepts as a page of accounts "in the handwriting of Sir Arthur Mainwaring," the following entry:—

"6 August, 1602. Rewardes to the vaulters, players, and dauncers. Of this Xⁿ to Burblidge's players of Othello lxiiij^x xviii^x x^d."

The excuse to which Mr. Knight was entitled cannot be extended to Dr. Leo, who had the best means at his elbow of knowing that the entire page, which indeed is to be found in the volume of Mainwaring's accounts, at Bridge-water House, is not in the handwriting of Sir Arthur, nor yet in that of any other person of that time, but is a rank forgery of modern date. Twenty years ago it was independently examined by the best authorities of the day, among whom, Mr. Richard Gairdner, Mr. W. B. D. D. Turnbull, Sir Frederic Madden, Sir T. Duffus Hardy, and Mr. N. E. S. A. Hamilton certified to its spuriousness. See The Egerton Papers, Camden Soc. Pub., 1840, p. 342; and my own statements in A Complete View of the Shakspeare Controversy, 1861, pp. 261-65.

For the slight inaccuracies in Knight's extract, of course Dr. Leo is not responsible; but he would have avoided them had he consulted the facsimile I give in my book.

O. C. M. INGLEBY.

CHAUCER'S "COARSENESS," BYRON'S "HUMOUR," AND THE LYRICAL CAPABILITIES OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

London: March 2, 1881.

While thanking Mr. G. Saintsbury for his notice of my "Two Great Englishwomen," with an Essay on Poetry," in the ACADEMY of the 26th ult., I beg you will give me space for a word of comment on one or two of his remarks that touch on matters of far greater interest than me or my book.

I trust that I am not incapable of feeling the charm of Chaucer's Fabliaux; but if Mr. G. Saintsbury will refresh his recollection of the "Miller's Tale" and some other things in Chaucer, and then say that the detection of coarseness, and bad coarseness, therein argues a "vulturine" faculty, I shall be surprised.

Mr. G. Saintsbury says that Byron had wit, but was so destitute of humour that I, in imputing it to him, prove myself to have none. Byron, as all the world knows, was resplendently witty. So brilliant and abounding was his wit that it has thrown his humour into the shade. But he had a vein of humour, true and racy, which was beginning to show itself as his affectations fell off in his later time. I am willing to rest the question on his delineation of Suwarrow. If there is no humour in that, I know not what humour is; if it is fine in humour, as distinguished from wit, then there may be a lack of sympathetic perception in my respected critic. If there is no humour in Byron's Suwarrow, I should have difficulty in finding any in Scott's Dalgetty or Carlyle's Teufelsdröckh.

I never heard the word "machine" used in the sense of "trap;" but I have heard it used in many senses, manufacturing and scientific—for which I refer Mr. Saintsbury to Mr. Ruskin—that are deathfully prosaic, and therefore not fitly associated with the loveliest of living forms, the best thing in all the world, a good and beautiful woman.

That English, as compared with German or Scotch, is too stately and inflexible for lyric poetry I took to be one of the accepted commonplaces of criticism. If Mr. Saintsbury will try to translate Olärfchen's song in Egmont, or Heiden-röslein, or any characteristic lyric of Heine's, or if he will compare translations from Schiller and Goethe, by Lord Lytton, Aytoun, and Martin, with the originals, he will, I think, come to share the general opinion on the subject. That there is a glorious lyric poetry in England proves only that the genius of her lyrists has been transcendent enough to disguise or surmount all difficulty.

I thank Mr. Saintsbury simpliciter for his ingenious explanation of Jane Eyre's "port-manteau," and will convey it to my readers if the book reaches a second edition.

PETER BAYNE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- MONDAY, March 7, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
 5 p.m. London Institution: "Vulgarisms," by Mr. E. B. Nicholson.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Canon Lecture, "The Scientific Principles Involved in Electric Lighting," by Prof. W. G. Adams.
 8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "Language and the Theories of its Origin," by Mr. R. Brown.
 TUESDAY, March 8, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Blood," by Prof. Schäfer.
 8 p.m. Anthropological Institute: "Note on Assam Dwellings," by S. E. Peal; "Short Account of the Wild Tribes inhabiting the so-called Naga Hills on our North-eastern Frontier of India," by Major R. G. Woodthorpe.
 8 p.m. Spelling Reform Association: "The Old and Modern English Values of the Vowel Symbols." Discussion.
 WEDNESDAY, March 9, 8 p.m. Geological.
 8 p.m. Microscopical: "A Species of Acarus believed to be unrecorded," by Mr. A. D. Michael.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Ascents of Chimborazo and Cotopaxi in 1880," by Mr. Edward Whymper.
 THURSDAY, March 10, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Cuneiform Characters," by Rev. W. Houghton.
 8 p.m. Mathematical: "An Application of Elliptic Functions to the Nodal Cubic," by Mr. R. A. Roberts.
 8 p.m. Society for the Fine Arts: "Art with Reference to the Stage," by Mr. Walter J. Allen.
 8 p.m. Society of Telegraph Engineers and Electricians.
 FRIDAY, March 11, 7 p.m. Quekett.
 8 p.m. New Shakspeare Society: "The Tempest founded on an Older Play," by Dr. Brinsley Nicholson.
 9 p.m. "Language and Literature of the Scottish Highlands," by Prof. J. S. Blackie.
 SATURDAY, March 12, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Ancient Egypt," by Mr. R. S. Poole.
 8 p.m. Physical: "The Absorption Spectra of Organic Bodies," by Col. Festing and Capt. Abney.

SCIENCE.

Remarks on Professor Mahaffy's Account of the Rise and Progress of Epic Poetry. By F. A. Paley. (George Bell.)

MR. PALEY has made the publication of Mr. Mahaffy's History of Greek Literature an occasion for once more stating his opinions about the date of "the compilation" of our Iliad and Odyssey. He complains that some persons, he "will not say scholars, would strangle the enquiry by laughing it down." Truth cannot be laughed down, but some of Mr. Paley's arguments do lend a handle to the scoffer. The question of the date at which writing could have been employed for the preservation of the epics is an essential one in this enquiry. Mr. Paley, who thinks 400 B.C. the earliest probable date (p. 9), produced some singular arguments in his controversy (in Macmillan's Magazine) with Mr. Mahaffy. He printed some archaic Greek characters, observing that probably few of the readers of Macmillan could make them out, and inferred that it was scarcely possible to write an epic in characters so clumsy and so difficult! In his present pamphlet he uses the "clumsiness of boustrophedon" (p. 11) as an argument against early written epics, and he speaks of the late date of "pen-and-ink writing." These are arguments which provoke ridicule. Does Mr. Paley not know that Egyptians, Cyprians, Assyrians, all used characters far more clumsy than those of early Greece, and that pen and ink and paper are not necessary materials of literature? The Odyssey and Iliad might be scratched in rude "Cadmeian" letters on plates of lead just as easily as Pine's Horace was engraved on plates of copper. Assyrian literature, on Mr. Paley's principles, cannot exist at all. If Mr. Paley (who is so sceptical about the early inscriptions on the Nubian colossus) does not understand these facts, what is the worth of his opinions about the date of a written epic? He actually argues that an epic could not well be written in characters which seem clumsy to him, and on material with which he is unfamiliar. And he is surprised (p. 6) that Mr. Mahaffy is not moved by the cumulative weight of arguments like these! If the separate arguments are lighter than air, their "cumulative weight" is also imponderable.

If this were a question of pure scholarship alone, or of the rendering of difficult passages, or of comparative philology merely, I should not venture to dispute a sentence that Mr. Paley has written. But it is a complex question, in which a feeling for logic, and a knowledge of early manners and customs, play a great part. Mr. Paley seems not to be well equipped with logic or with knowledge of the history of customs, art, and institutions. First, let us examine his logic. He avers (p. 1) that the Iliad and Odyssey were "compiled," meaning, of course, adapted, re-arranged from older materials, and epitomised," only a short time before the age of Plato. As an example of this process, he says (p. 12) that on the incident of the quarrel between Achilles and Agamemnon, and the counsel of Zeus alluded to in the "Cypria," "the present Iliad was built up." Well, but the present Iliad presents an enormous mass of literature not contained in or closely connected with these incident. That literature, these legends, Pindar and the tragic poets almost "entirely ignore" (p. 12), says Mr. Paley. Let us grant this position for the sake of argument, and what follows? One of two things: either Pindar and the tragic poets did not know what they "ignore," or they had some reason or reasons for choosing topics elsewhere. The opponents of Mr. Paley first deny that the Tragedians and Pindar ignore our Iliad as much as he says they do, and, next, offer reasons for the choice of other topics. But Mr. Paley cannot accept these views. The mass of our Iliad, he thinks, must have been unknown to the tragic poets. Then where did it exist? He says our Iliad was "compiled" and "epitomised." From what sources? How came these sources to be unknown to the tragic poets? Mr. Paley, who says (p. 9) "we have no reason for believing that the greater part of what now passes as Homer was known to them at all," is in a dilemma. Either the matter of our Homer is new—in which case the theory of "compilation" is exploded—or the material is old, and then he must account for the fact that the Tragedians did not know it at all. Which alternative will he prefer?

Here is another example of Mr. Paley's logic. He says (p. 9), "The age in which a literary written Homer, a work meant to attract readers and not, as hitherto, hearers only, may fairly be fixed, is about 400 B.C." Now, first, granting that this statement is true, it has no bearing on the age of the text. We know that in the twelfth century of our era, the French chansons de geste did not exist as "literary written poems meant to attract readers." Readers were too scarce. But a thoroughly good written text did exist, from which the jongleur, the reciter, refreshed his memory. We believe readers were much more common in early Greece, and that Homer was read much earlier than Mr. Paley supposes. But all that is apart from the question. If a written text existed in the possession of professional reciters, that is enough for the defenders of our early written Homer. But this is not the chief point. The point is that Mr. Paley thinks the existence of a written Iliad and Odyssey improbable, but he holds that "longer and older epics did exist" (p. 13), from which our Odyssey was compiled. These epics, longer than our Odyssey, "in all probability had not been recorded in writing" in the age of Plato (p. 8). Then how did the long epics exist? This admission makes it certain that the existence of our Iliad and Odyssey was not impossible. Longer epics existed, either in memory or in writing, and therefore memory, or writing, must have more than sufficed to retain the shorter epics which we know.

Mr. Paley has another argument which can satisfy no comparative student of epic poetry. Whenever the Iliad, or the Odyssey, alludes to ancient songs, and to incidents mentioned in ancient songs, Mr. Paley decides that these songs must have been the poems called "Cyclic," which are, therefore, older than our Homer. For example, there is mention in the cyclic poem called "Cypria" of a quarrel between Achilles and Agamemnon. Mr. Paley at once concludes that the Iliad is borrowed from and "built up out" of this incident in the "Cypria." Again, it never occurs to him that the author (or compiler) of the Odyssey may be referring to a part of the mass of heroic story, which had not yet been constructed into an epic. The Odyssey is full of allusions to the ship Argo, and Jason. This is not strange, for the Jason legend exists among Finns and Tartars and Aztecs, and must be far older than the Odyssey. But Mr. Paley infers that the "compiler" of the Odyssey must be deriving his knowledge from a constructed epic, the "Argonautica." This "Argonautica," Mr. Paley says, "is well known to, and often alluded to by, Herodotus (iv. 145)." There is no mention of any poem in Herodotus iv. 145. Mr. Paley also adduces Herodotus iv. 179. There is no mention of any poem in iv. 179. Herodotus says, ἔστι δὲ καὶ ὁδε λόγος λεγόμενος. Mr. Paley declares that the "Argonautica" "are definitely referred to in the Odyssey itself." There is no such "definite reference" to any poem in the whole extent of the Odyssey. From Mr. Paley's language any English reader would infer that the compiler of the Odyssey uses words like these, "as is sung in the 'Argonautica,'" or the like. Jason, the Argo, and their adventures are spoken of in the Odyssey, and the Argo is said to be a matter of interest to all men. Mr. Paley gives Herodotus vii. 193 as an allusion to the "Argonautica." In that passage Herodotus merely remarks, "There it is said that Heracles was left by Jason and his company." Now Mr. Paley might as logically say that this is a "definite reference" to Theocritus, Idyl xiii., as aver that the Odyssey "definitely refers" to a poem called the "Argonautica." It is from this "Argonautica" that Mr. Paley holds most of our Odyssey to have been conveyed. And whence does he infer this? Why, from the fact that characters who appear in the Odyssey are referred to in the Alexandrian epic of Apollonius Rhodius! He remarks that either "Argonautica" and Odyssey must have been copied from a common source, or that one of the poems must have been copied from the other. "If the latter were the case the balance is in favour of the superior antiquity of the 'Argonautica.'" Why should the latter be the case? Where is there any evidence that a regular epic poem on the Argo existed before the time of Apollonius Rhodius? As for the antiquity of the story of the Argo, that, as we have already remarked, is immemorial. Only Mr. Paley is capable of supposing that because the Odyssey mentions the Argo (Od. xii. 69) therefore the Odyssey is compiled from a poem called "Argonautica." I will repeat an old illustration of the weakness of this reasoning. The "Song of Roland" is, beyond possibility of question, our oldest chanson de geste. The "Song of Roland" contains allusions to events not mentioned in detail, but supposed to be familiar to an audience. These details are the topic of prolix poems of a date ascertained to be at least a century later than the "Song of Roland." On Mr. Paley's principles, the later poems must be the earlier, and the "Song of Roland" must be "compiled" from them.

Yet Mr. Paley is not incapable of perceiving that a poet may use floating traditional lays not yet formed into a long epic. Thus, when the tragic poets, or Herodotus, or the vase painters refer to incidents in our Homer (which ex hypothesi they should ignore), Mr. Paley readily supposes that they knew not our Homer, but floating cantilènes. The privilege permitted to them is denied to the author of the Odyssey. How can we argue with him? If our Odyssey alludes to an event, that event must be recorded in a cyclic poem. If Herodotus alludes to an Odyssean event, he must have known it from a floating ballad.

So far, we have argued on Mr. Paley's own lines. We have seen that he thinks:

1. That our Homer is a late compilation from older materials.
2. That those older materials are almost absolutely unknown to the tragic poets.
3. That, though our Homer was probably not committed to writing before B.C. 400, much longer epic poems were in existence before that date.

We have asked Mr. Paley (1) where the materials of our Homer were concealed in the time of the tragic poets; (2) in what manner the older epics existed; in human memory, or in MS.? Will Mr. Paley reply that, when he says "longer epics," he means, not epics at all, but something else? This point needs to be cleared up.

We do not intend here to discuss Mr. Paley's theory of the late and corrupt character of the epic dialect. Mr. D. B. Monro's criticism (in the Journal of Philology) of Mr. Sayce's arguments may be referred to as a proof of the division of philological opinions. But opinion is not divided about the state of manners and institutions described in Homer. Qualified students of these matters recognise a perfectly definite and well-understood organisation of human life which has its parallel in many other early societies. The art of war, the marriage customs, the naval equipment, the assemblies, the architectural arrangements all differ from the manners of later Greece—the Greece of Pindar; and all find their analogies in early Germany, in Iceland, in Africa. But Mr. Paley dismisses these considerations with the remark, "The details of domestic or camp life were probably the creations of fancy, in general unison with the traditions that had been preserved." Fortunate fancy! Then as to art:—"Accounts of pictures and goblets and other works of art must not be supposed to record the state of things existing B.C. 850." Why not? The Phœnician and Assyrian works of art of the ninth and eighth century do tally with Homer's descriptions with notable accuracy. Mr. Paley may be referred to Brunn, Die Kunst bei Homer, to the Cesnola collection, and to Mr. A. S. Murray's History of Greek Sculpture. That Dr. Schliemann's "Ilios" is not like Homer's has nothing to do with the matter. Even Dr. Schliemann admits that Homer's Troy is not his.

So much space has been occupied in the discussion of Mr. Paley's theories that we have no room to discuss his facts. As to the date of Greek writing, we do not suppose that any expert agrees with Mr. Paley. As to the Pindaric and tragic treatment of Homeric themes, it is useless to repeat arguments and facts which make no more impression on Mr. Paley than his hypothesis has made on the world of scholars. We conclude with observing that the epic, which (p. 1) was "not composed, but compiled," is found (p. 18) to be "essentially the creation of one mind"! How can the same man be an "epitomiser" and a great creative genius? One must add that Mr. Paley still thinks that the Erectheum alluded to in Od. vii. 81 must be the new temple of 430 B.C. And why? Because it is called πικνὸς δόμος. These words "seem to describe superior workmanship." Now, (1) much Greek architectural workmanship of a date long prior to 430 B.C. is what Mr. Paley calls "superior." (2) Work which seems "inferior" to Mr. Paley might well have seemed excessively superior to a poet living in the ninth century B.C. (3) Homer uses πικνὸν δόμον as a constant phrase; for example (Od. vi. 134), the lion is driven by stress of hunger καὶ ἐς πικνὸν δόμον ἔλθειν, where we need not infer that the workmanship of the δόμος would have seemed superior to Mr. Paley. What can be the value of a theory which needs such supports, and is so full of inconsistencies that it calls the same person an editor (p. 43) and a creator? Does Mr. Paley really see nothing inconsistent in the theory of a "creator" who is on no account to be imagined to "compose" and of an "editor" whose work must, above all things, be held to be creation? A. LANG.

OBITUARY.

PROF. JAMES TENNANT, who held the Chair of Mineralogy in King's College, London, for not less than forty-two years, died at his residence in the Strand on the 23rd ult., at the age of seventy-three. From 1838 to 1869 Mr. Tennant was also Professor of Geology in the same college, and for seventeen years he was teacher of geology and mineralogy in the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. Although an ardent lover of science, Mr. Tennant was not a great writer, his principal work being a treatise on mineralogy in Orr's Circle of the Sciences, which he contributed jointly with the late Rev. W. Mitchell, who wrote the mathematical portion. Mr. Tennant was an authority on precious stones, and some years ago made a critical examination of the jewels in the crown of England. He took great interest in the discovery of diamonds in South Africa, and at the time of his death possessed one of the finest stones ever found in that country. Mr. Tennant was never married, and much of his leisure was devoted to the meetings of scientific societies, where his genial presence will be greatly missed. He enjoyed in a marked manner the friendship of the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, who possesses a splendid cabinet of minerals; and when his health broke down, two years ago, he accompanied the Baroness in a yachting expedition in the Mediterranean.

THE death is also announced of Gen. de Longueur, aged seventy-seven years, the author of numerous works upon the geology and antiquities of Poitou and the valley of the Yonne.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

WE hear that during next year a party of members of the Alpine Club are expected to explore the Southern Alps in the Canterbury province, New Zealand. Some of the mountains in the colony attain a considerable height, Mount Cook, the loftiest, which has never yet been scaled, having, it is said, an elevation of between 13,000 and 14,000 feet.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW AND Co. will publish, during the spring, Mr. Joseph Thomson's account of his recent journey in East Central Africa. The work will be illustrated by a map, based partly upon the author's own survey of the unexplored regions which he traversed. Mr. Thomson will, we believe, leave England in about two months' time in order to undertake the geological exploration of the River Rovuma for the Sultan of Zanzibar.

A LETTER just received from Père Schmitt, at Mboma, on the Congo, does not speak hopefully of the Belgian expedition under Mr. Stanley, whose precise objects do not appear to be understood on the spot. He has already been more than two years at work; and, according to the writer, it is thought that he will not have reached Stanley Pool even in four years' time. He is undertaking a gigantic task in road-making, which will swallow up enormous sums of money; and it is feared that the roads, when made, will prove to be labour thrown away, as they will be useless for wheeled traffic, and consequently for the transport of steam vessels. Indeed, Père Schmitt mentions that the large waggons which Mr. Stanley has had sent out to him had to be carried by porters up to the Vivi plateau, where they are now lying useless. Mr. Stanley, however, is not discouraged, but continues to press on with his work, and, as usual, without taking counsel with anyone.

M. SAVORGNAN DE BRAZZA, it appears, has not wasted any time on the Lower Congo, after achieving his great success in reaching the upper part of the river from the Ogowe, as we learn that he reached the Gaboon on December 16. In two days' time he started again for the Ogowe and the basin of the Congo, in company with Père Delorme, whom he has promised to take with him to his first station, near Mashogo, on the Upper Ogowe, in the country of the Okandi. This tribe, according to M. de Brazza, is devoted to agriculture, and food is plentiful in their country. M. de Brazza has now taken with him in sections a small steam vessel, which has lately been built of steel expressly for his explorations; and, after reaching the upper course of the Ogowe, he hopes to be able to get it conveyed to the River Alima, or one of the other affluents of the Congo, and so reach the great river. Should this project prove successful, he will have been the first to place a steam vessel on the Upper Congo, and he will have it in his power to prosecute almost any scheme of exploration he may think fit to enter upon.

THE Upper Zambesi missionary expedition have established their head-quarters at Gubuluwayo, in the Matabele country, and from recent letters seem to be on good terms with Lo Bengula and his people. They are gradually learning the language, and are already able to make themselves fairly well understood; but they do not appear to find Matabele-land a very promising mission-field. One of their number recently paid a visit to the Entab-Enioka, or Serpents' Mountain, some ten miles from Gubuluwayo, in order to obtain wood for building purposes; and in traversing its forests he was able to appreciate the varied beauties of the country—torrents, cascades, picturesque landscape, and luxuriant vegetation. Birds of every description of plumage abound and make the forests resound with their song—one, somewhat like a rook, uttering a peculiarly piercing cry, which can be heard at a great distance.

DR. ALVAREZ has lately left Buenos Ayres for Patagones, near the mouth of the Rio Negro, in order to undertake the exploration of the coast line between that settlement and Bahia Blanca.

THE March number of Good Words contains a graphic description by Mr. Joseph Thomson of the difficulties he encountered in his journey along the western shore of Lake Tanganyika from Iendwé, on the River Lofu, to Mtwara, north of the Lukuga Creek, which he was induced to visit in consequence of having heard from the natives farther south that there were some Europeans a day's march from the Lukuga. Capt. A. H. Markham, R.N., also contributes to the same number another interesting paper on his yachting cruise in 1879 to Novaya Zemlya and the adjacent seas.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Geological Survey of Canada.—The last annual Report of this Survey, recently issued under the care of Mr. A. R. C. Selwyn, forms a well-illustrated volume of nearly four hundred pages. By far the greater part of the volume is occupied by a valuable report by Dr. G. M. Dawson on the geology and geography of the Queen Charlotte Islands, the result of exploration during the summer of 1878. This report is illustrated by several coloured geological maps, and by numerous engravings, mostly after photographs by the author. To the report is appended an interesting description of the Haida Indians who inhabit these islands. As we believe that this is the first detailed account of the Haidas ever published, it will be of great value to ethnologists. The Haidas appear to be one of the best-defined groups of tribes on the North-west coast of America. Some of the invertebrata collected during the expedition are described by Mr. J. F. Whiteaves and by Mr. S. J. Smith, while the flora has been worked out by Prof. J. Macoun. The meteorological observations taken in the islands and on the coast of British Columbia are also discussed in an Appendix.

THE Cambridge University Press has in preparation an edition of Sir William Thomson's Mathematical and Physical Papers, which, with those on Electricity already published by Messrs. Macmillan, will complete the papers which have appeared up to the present time.

THE Clarendon Press is about to issue a new edition of the late Admiral W. H. Smythe's Cycle of Celestial Objects—a book which by universal consent has done more to promote popular astronomy in England than any other work of the kind. The new edition has been edited by Mr. G. F. Chambers, F.R.A.S. This volume, though professedly only a new edition, may be regarded as almost a new work. Whereas the original edition comprised only 850 objects, the new one has no fewer than 1,604. But it is not merely in the number of the objects dealt with that the usefulness of the new edition will consist. It will be found that Mr. Chambers has cut down here, expanded there, and revised everywhere Admiral Smythe's printed matter, so as to embody the progress of the science down to the year 1880. What this means in the case of hundreds of double stars annually undergoing re-measurement, and many of them annually undergoing change, can only be understood by those who have been called upon to perform similar work. But this is not all. Admiral Smythe's observations having been made in England, his labours only extended to those stars and nebulae which were visible in England; but Mr. Chambers, by means of materials gathered from various sources, has extended the book to the whole of the Southern hemisphere, and has thus made it an observer's handbook for the large English-speaking populations of India and the Australian and American continents. The new Cycle will be found to contain a great number of double star measures by Burnham and others, many of them as recent as 1880. The places of the objects have been uniformly set out for the epoch of 1890, so that in this respect the book will be up to date for many years to come. A chromo-lithograph of twenty-four typical star discs in different shades of colour, intended for the methodical record of star colours, forms an appropriate frontispiece.

MESSRS. C. KEGAN PAUL AND Co. have in the press three new volumes for "The International Scientific Series." The first, which will be issued immediately, is entitled Sight: an Exposition of the Principles of Monocular and Binocular Vision, by Joseph Le Conte, LL.D., of the University of California, who has made this subject his specialty. The next will be on Illusions, in which Mr. James Sully aims at giving us a complete account of the psychology of the subject, and deals not only with sense illusions, but also with other analogous forms of error, such as illusions of memory. The third volume will be a copiously illustrated monograph on Volcanoes: What they Are and What they Teach, by Prof. Judd, of the Royal School of Mines.

A Memorial of Joseph Henry has just been issued from the Government Printing Office at Washington. It consists of the obsequies, the memorial exercises at the Capitol, and the memorial proceedings of societies. A portrait engraved on steel faces the title-page.

MR. J. E. H. GORDON'S Treatise on Electricity and Magnetism has just been published in a French translation by MM. J. B. Baillière et Fils. M. J. Raynaud is the translator, and M. A. Cornu contributes an Introduction.

AMONG the publications for the past year of the Icelandic Literary Society is an Icelandic translation of a physical treatise by Prof. Balfour-Stewart.

At the recent half-yearly meeting of the Scottish Meteorological Society the Council reported that a committee had been formed to establish an observing station on the top of Ben Nevis, the highest mountain in Great Britain, 4,406 feet above the sea. This project has long been talked about; and it is hoped that, when the scheme takes shape, a permanent endowment will be obtained from the annual parliamentary grant of £15,000 for meteorological purposes. Mr. Buchan, the secretary of the society, drew attention to the fact that January last had been the coldest month in Scotland of which records exist. The lowest temperature authentically recorded was 15° F. below zero at Stobo Castle in Peeblesshire.

THE Belgian Minister of Public Works has just issued, under the editorship of M. Witmeur, the Report of the Commission for the study of the means of extending the employment of iron by new industrial applications.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.—(Monday, Feb. 21.)

SIR H. C. RAWLINSON, President, in the Chair.—The Rev. John Caine read a paper "On the Kois or Gonds of Central India," in which he pointed out that this tribe is now divided into eight castes, the Gomma Kois, the descendants of those who formerly resided on the uplands of the Bastar plateau, being the most numerous. Each group of villages is presided over by a head-man, whose chief business is to settle all tribal disputes and to inflict fines for the breach of caste-rules. The people are generally timid, inoffensive, and truthful, but have not improved morally by contact with their Hindu neighbours. As a rule they hold the Pandava family in great veneration, Bhima and Arjuna being their chief gods; at the same time they also recognise certain secondary deities. They have a vague belief in the future state of the soul. The corpses of adults are burned, the ashes of the corpse being often collected and placed under large slabs of stone. Bride-catching is also a common custom with them. Their language is Dravidian, with many resemblances to Tamil and Telugu.—Mr. Cyril Graham gave an account of "The Leaghiian or Avari Language," which still survives along the highest peaks of Daghestan, on the east side of the Caucasus, the speakers of it, under their famous chief, Shamil, having been the last to submit to the arms of Russia. Their present population numbers about a hundred and fifty thousand. In 1873 Mr. Graham travelled through this district, and was much aided in his researches by Loris Melikoff, then Commander-in-Chief. At Gunib he met with a highly cultivated Munshi, who called his attention to the Avari language, one notable feature of which is the "click" which may be heard at the beginning, middle, or end of certain words. At Tiflis he made the acquaintance of M. Adolphe Berger, who placed in his hands the MS. (the result of many years of patient research) which, having been translated by Mr. Graham from the original Russ, formed the basis of his paper.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—(Thursday, Feb. 24.)

EDWIN FRESHFIELD, Esq., V.-P., in the Chair.—Mr. J. T. Micklethwaite read a paper upon the images inside Henry VII.'s Chapel, of which ninety-five still remain out of an original total of 107. The images outside were removed in the last century, lest, as is alleged by Dart, they should fall upon the heads of those who were going to the Parliament House. These figures all represented prophets and other worthies of the Old Testament. Those inside, with the exception of ten bearded figures of laymen in sixteenth-century costume at the west end, represent Christian saints. These ten figures, Mr. Micklethwaite suggested, might be intended for pagan philosophers, whose images are placed in the choir stalls at Durham opposite the Sybils. The eastern chapel was probably intended to contain the shrine of Henry VI., but the plan was altered on the failure of the attempt to procure his canonisation. The missing figure in this chapel, under which "H. R." can still be traced, no doubt was that of the king, as also the missing figure on the south side in the second bay. The next figure in both these places is probably St. Thomas of Canterbury, whose statue is very rarely to be seen in an English church. The general scheme of the figures is as follows:—At the east end is our Lord, supported by Gabriel and Mary; then, on both sides, the apostles and early saints; at the arch, the fathers of the Church, and perhaps, in the empty niches, were the founders of the monastic Orders; beyond these are other saints, including English kings and bishops; and last of all the philosophers. Mr. Micklethwaite referred particularly to the missing figures, and suggested reasons for their absence. Those in the north-east chapel were removed to make way for the monument of the Duke of Buckingham; those in the south chapel, in consequence of the injunctions of 1536, because lights had been burnt before them; and the statues of Henry VI., because offerings had been made to them. Gregory, in the arch, was taken away because he was attired as a Pope, while the lower figures in the same place perhaps suffered from the reforming zeal of some of the prebendaries in 1567. Beneath some figures are scrolls, in which the names was to be painted; but the intention was never carried out. St. Alban, the protomartyr of Britain, finds no place here, perhaps on account of the rivalry between his monastery and St. Peter's. In the first bay beyond the arch on the south side is a figure of St. Wilgefortis, the lady who prayed for a beard to escape from matrimony. For this reason her image is sometimes taken for that of a masculine saint. There was another image of her at St. Paul's, to which wives who wanted to get rid of their husbands used to pay their devotions.

SOCIETY FOR THE PROMOTION OF HELLENIC STUDIES.—(Thursday, Feb. 24.)

THE Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford, in the Chair.—The Hon. Secretary read a paper by Mr. Fergusson stating three objections to the theory advanced by Mr. A. S. Murray as to the existence of a broad flight of steps leading to the Erechtheum. These were:—(1) that they would have been enormously in excess of the requirements; (2) that they would obliterate one of the most important features in the west front of the temple of Athene Polias; (3) that no trace of them has been found, which, from their supposed construction, seems almost impossible.—Mr. E. Myers read some comments on Prof. Gardner's paper on the Pentathlon published in the first volume of the society's Journal.—The Chairman read a paper by the Rev. E. L. Hicks on a Greek inscription at Trinity College, Cambridge.—This, the writer argued, must have come from Halikarnassos, and probably refers to a revolution which took place at Troezen in B.C. 303.—The Hon. Secretary, Mr. George A. Macmillan, read a paper by Prof. Mahaffy questioning the authenticity of the Olympian Register so far as the first fifty Olympiads are concerned, on the ground that this earlier portion was the work, about 400 B.C., of Hippia the rhetorician.—A letter was also read from the Bishop of Lincoln on the site of Dodona.

FINE ART.

A Descriptive Account of the Roman Villa near Brading. By Cornelius Nicholson, F.S.A. (Elliot Stock.)

THOUGH the name Vectis or Vecta occurs in the Antonine Itinerary and in Ptolemy's Geography, as well as in Tacitus and other historians, there is no name known for any Roman station in the Isle of Wight; unless, perhaps, one of the unaccountable names given by the puzzle-headed geographer of Ravenna refers to some otherwise unknown town or camp. Till the present century no Roman remains had been found in the island except five coins in a field near Carisbrook, which, according to Sir Henry Englefield, might have been accidentally dropped there. Since that time, however, a quantity of coins have been discovered at Shanklin, at Barton Wood, near Osborne, and in other places; pottery has been found at Brixton, and the sites of Roman villas at that place, at Clatterford, and at Carisbrook. Some of the stones also at the station of Clausentum have apparently been quarried in the island.

The villa at Brading is larger than those previously discovered, but the whole of the area has not yet been laid open, so that Mr. Nicholson has not been able to give a plan, and has not supplied even a map of the neighbourhood. It might have been advisable to defer the publication until the discoveries could be more completely described, for the only portions of which any definite account is given are the pavements, which are certainly very fine, as far as the photographs will allow one to judge. Some of the designs are mythological, as Ceres and Triptolemus, and Hercules and Omphale; and others moral, as the fox and the grapes; and one, which the author describes as a man with cock's head and spurs, probably symbolical. Mr. Nicholson suggests that it is a satire on St. Peter; but was the incident of the cock crowing outside the high-priest's house likely to have been sufficiently well known to suggest such a device? The supposed ass-headed crucifix is not a parallel instance, for an ass conveys an idea of insult; whereas the cock's head represents φρόνησις, and constantly occurs with that meaning on Gnostic gems, being one of the component parts of the Abraxas. Whether this design has any Gnostic meaning it is difficult to judge, as the photograph does not show the details very clearly; but it is possible. As to the ass-headed crucifix already referred to, it has been proved by Mr. C. W. King, from comparison with other similar devices, not to be a satire on Christianity, but the work of a pious Gnostic, venerating the combined attributes of Christ and Anubis, the head being really that of a jackal, not of an ass.

It is to be hoped the exploration of the villa will be continued, and the pavements preserved, instead of the tesserae being given away in baskets as happened in a similar case some years ago. C. TRICE MARTIN.

THE EARLY ART HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

It has generally been accepted as an established fact that, in order to make ourselves acquainted with the Renaissance and development of modern forms of art, both pictorial and plastic, it is sufficient to turn our attention to what took place in Italy in the thirteenth century, to the neglect of all other countries and periods.

But, so far as regards Italy, more careful investigation and a more scientific system of criticism have proved the falseness of the old theory, derived from popular tradition and fostered by Vasari, that the painting of the Renaissance sprang almost miraculously into existence with the life and genius of one man—Cimabue; and that the nobler forms of sculpture, which, taking a truer view of the province and scope of the plastic art, aim at representing the highest ideals of physical beauty rather than the struggles and sufferings of the human soul, similarly sprang suddenly into fresh life about the year 1230, through the fact of one Pisan sculptor having discovered, as it were, the long-forgotten beauties of Græco-Roman art.

So it may be considered certain that we have too much neglected the fact that other countries, and especially England, have had a continuous art history of their own, going on contemporaneously with, but quite independently of, that slow Renaissance in Italy which culminated towards the end of the fifteenth and beginning of the sixteenth century in such a burst of magnificence that our eyes have been partially blinded to the works of real genius produced at an earlier date in other countries. It would of course be useless to attempt to find English instances of painting or sculpture which can in any sense rival the best productions of Italy in the fifteenth century; but, going back to an earlier period, we can, I think, find work done by English contemporaries of Cimabue and Andrea Pisano which does not suffer by comparison with any thirteenth-century Italian painting or sculpture.

Westminster Abbey will supply examples familiar to all; and, to begin with the sculptor's art, let us examine the effigies of Henry III. and Eleanor of Castile, modelled and cast by William Torell, goldsmith and citizen of London, about the year 1291. In spite of the name having a somewhat foreign sound, there is no doubt about the Torells being a thoroughly English family, since both in Domesday Book and in other documents this surname occurs as belonging to landowners in various counties of England. These effigies, which are on the north of Edward the Confessor's Chapel, are both bronze recumbent figures, large life-size, cast in one piece, probably by the "cire perdue" process, and are thickly gilt. Obviously neither of them is intended for a portrait, and they are specially valuable as showing that the sculptor has realised to himself an ideal of the stately and the beautiful in the human form, and had the skill to carry out this ideal. It is difficult to say which of the two is of higher merit, though perhaps the exquisite feminine beauty of Eleanor's face must carry off the palm. There is a wonderful sublimity about these statues, a calmness in their aspect and a simplicity of means in their execution, which it would be difficult to estimate too highly when we consider their object and position. There is none of that striving after dramatic effect, or eagerness to display a scholastic knowledge of anatomy, which so often disfigures the works of later sculptors. A striking instance of this excessive realism may be seen in Henry the Seventh's Chapel in the effigy of Margaret of Richmond by the Florentine Torrigiano.

It would be impossible to point out any work produced at this period (the end of the thirteenth century) in Italy which can be said to surpass these statues either in beauty or technical skill. They might even be placed by the side of the earliest of the bronze gates of the Florentine Baptistery without being put to shame, though this gate is the work of Andrea Pisano, and was not begun till forty years later than these effigies by Torell. The test is a hard one, and the difference in scale and subject prevents any very close comparison; but I think we must feel that in William Torell we have a fellow-countryman as worthy to take a place among the names great in art as any of the more illustrious Italians of the thirteenth century.

Passing on to pictorial art, we have in England important instances of tempera painting used to decorate large wall surfaces earlier in date than any that can be found in Italy; as, for example, the church of Kempley in Gloucestershire, the whole walls of which appear to have been decorated with large paintings of figure subjects early in the twelfth century. Those in the chancel are very perfect, and represent the vision in the Apocalypse of Christ in Majesty, surrounded by the twelve apostles and other saints, all life-size, covering both walls and vault.

Another important example exists in Chaldon church, Surrey, where the chancel walls are decorated with a series of subjects representing the "Scala humanæ Salvationis," also twelfth-century work.

At this period, the whole pictorial talent of Italy seems to have been concentrated on the production, with the help of Byzantine Greeks, of those magnificent works in mosaic which encrust the walls of so many churches in Ravenna, Venice, Rome, Palermo, and other cities. The beauty of these mosaics is, however, derived from the lustre of the material and the sumptuousness of the colouring, rather than from the higher artistic qualities of composition and drawing. And rude as these English paintings at Kempley and Chaldon are, it does not appear that any Italian artist at this early period (the twelfth century) was able to exhibit greater skill in his outline, or grace in the attitudes and grouping of his figures.

The history of English art is commonly regarded as if it began with the great portrait painters of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and little notice has been taken of the fine and thoroughly national paintings with which the walls of almost every church and the panels of every rood-screen had been so lavishly decorated for some centuries before; to say nothing of the thousands of illuminated MSS., rich with exquisitely painted miniatures, all full of national characteristics, both in the treatment of the motives and in the carefulness of their execution, the best examples of which are certainly unsurpassed, and perhaps not equalled, by the miniature paintings of any country on the Continent.

Passing on to the latter part of the thirteenth century, we have in Westminster Abbey an important series of paintings, though small in scale, executed by an English contemporary of Cimabue. And so far from thirteenth-century England being behind Italy in art development, it is with the works of Giotto rather than with those of his master that we may compare those native examples. These paintings, of which little notice is generally taken by visitors, form the chief decoration of a frontal, or perhaps a retable, which once belonged to the fittings of the high altar. The form and size of the object itself would suit either purpose, and it may possibly have been used sometimes for the one and sometimes for the other. It is a rectangular piece of framed and richly panelled wood-work about eleven feet long by three feet high, the general design of which is formed by three central painted figures under canopies; on each side of these are four star-shaped panels filled with painted groups of figures; and beyond these, on each side, another single figure under a canopy like the central ones. The wood is covered with a fine stucco, or gesso, to the thickness of cardboard, as is always the case with old painting on panel, and generally when they are on stone. Walter of Durham's painting on the lower part of Queen Eleanor's tomb is one of the few exceptions to this rule, as there the colour has been applied to the bare stone. This fine gesso was formed of whitening and marble dust, mixed with white of egg, and applied with a brush in thin washes, thus preparing an exquisitely smooth and sufficiently absorbent surface for the painter. The paintings we are now dealing with are in tempera; and the oil-like appearance which their surface seems to have is owing, as Mr. Burgess pointed out in his valuable monograph on this frontal, to their being coated with a mastic or other gum varnish. The use of this oil varnish makes it very difficult sometimes to distinguish between painting in tempera and oil, the chief distinction between the two being not so much in the look of the surface as in the manner in which the touches are laid on with the brush. In tempera work, flat over-tints, or glazes, are often produced by minute cross-hatching with a small brush, to avoid working up the ground; while in oil-painting the colours were generally laid on in a broader and less cautious way. The whole frontal is enriched in a brilliant but somewhat tawdry manner by numerous false gems, pasto cameos, and bits of coloured glass, set behind with painted foil. The paintings still in existence are these:—In the centre a figure of Christ, the right hand raised in benediction, and in the left hand an orb; at his right is a figure of the Blessed Virgin Mary holding a lily; and on his left, St. John Evangelist holding a book. All the single figures are standing. The draperies are all arranged with great care and dignity, and the faces and hands are painted with wonderful minuteness, and are very skilfully modelled. The other single figure which remains on the dexter side is the best preserved of all, and represents St. Peter holding the keys. The attitude of this figure is a little stiff and mannered, but the flesh-painting is very good. The three remaining paintings in the small star-shaped panels represent three of Christ's miracles—namely, (1) The raising of the daughter of Jairus, (2) The miracle of the loaves and fishes, (3) The giving sight to the blind man. The whole design of this frontal, the forms of the canopies, the shape of the crockets, and the occurrence of the lion of Castile on the background show clearly that this is a work of the end of the thirteenth century, executed during the lifetime of Cimabue, and probably before Giotto had begun to paint. The remaining pictures have suffered much from years of ill-treatment (the whole frontal, in fact, was used as the top of a cupboard), but we can still judge very fairly well as to their merits both in colour and drawing. They have, no doubt, in their composition and the attitudes of the figures a resemblance to the works of the early Florentine school; but for all that they have a distinct originality and character of their own, especially in the rendering of the faces, which must strike anyone who has attentively studied the contemporary paintings of Italy. It would, of course, be unfair to compare these miniature-like paintings with Giotto's large works in fresco, but I think we may fairly assert that our Westminster example is not unworthy to take a place beside one of his predelle, or some of the small figures with which he often surrounded the main figures on a cross or triptych.

J. HENRY MIDDLETON.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

PROF. NEWTON will give an extra lecture on Friday, the 11th inst., at four p.m., on "The Sculptures of the Temple of Zeus at Olympia: Alkamenes, Paeonios." The public will be admitted without payment or ticket.

In April will be published, in one volume, by Messrs. Longmans, The Bronze Implements, Arms, and Ornaments of Great Britain and Ireland, by John Evans, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., &c. This volume is intended to form a companion and sequel to the work on Ancient Stone Implements, Weapons, and Ornaments of Great Britain, by the same author. It will be profusely illustrated by wood-cuts, 540 in number. Though primarily intended as a guide to British antiquities, it will also contain much matter relating to the Bronze age in all parts of the world.

M. RHONÉ has received a commission to visit the East, and Egypt more particularly, for the purpose of studying Arab and Christian antiquities.

The Académie des Beaux-Arts has elected Mr. Alma Tadema its London correspondent in the section of painting.

MR. WILLIAM B. C. FYFFE, chiefly known hitherto for his historical pictures, is engaged upon a full-length portrait of the Lord Mayor.

An exhibition of Old Masters will be opened at the Hague about the middle of this month, under the patronage of the King and Queen of Holland, who have contributed to it about twenty pictures from their private collection. The exhibition, it is said, will be rich in the works of the mighty Dutch masters, for a number of old families round the Hague, whose treasures, in the way of art, have seldom been seen, have taken a great interest in it, and have promised to contribute largely. The exhibition is for the benefit of those who have suffered from the inundations.

M. TIMBAL has, according to the Chronique des Arts, left his beautiful original drawing by Raphael for "la belle Jardinière" to the Louvre. The Gazette des Arts gave a reproduction of this drawing some time ago. M. Timbal has also bequeathed to the Louvre a bas-relief in marble of the fifteenth century, and an antique.

THE current number of the Zeitschrift für bildende Kunst opens with an important article by Dr. J.-P. Richter on "Leonardo da Vinci in the East." This article has also been published in the form of a pamphlet, which we hope to notice next week. The other articles of the number are a review of the Academy exhibition at Berlin by A. Rosenberg and a criticism of modern French sculpture by C. von Fabriczy. For its artistic wealth, the Zeitschrift has the portrait of a handsome young woman by Carl Gusson, etched by Woernle, and an original etching by Prof. Linnig, a powerful portrait of the great German master, Friedrich Preller, whom Linnig knew intimately. This rough but very characteristic etching is much to be prized. The venerable painter looks something like Titian as we see him in his well-known last portrait of himself.

THE sale of some of the pictures of Philippe Rousseau, the celebrated French painter of still life, or as the French call it, natures mortes, took place last week at the Hôtel Drouot. This sale was styled in French journals "un évènement artistique," for Philippe Rousseau's pictures are generally sold as soon as finished, and rarely come into the market. They fetched good prices; one of them, Les Huîtres, sold for 7,100 frs.

M. ALBERT WOLFF, of the Figaro, is organising a subscription for the widow and son of Auguste Andrieux, the artist whose works had at one time considerable success, and who died last spring in the utmost discouragement and poverty.

THE February number of the Revue des Arts décoratifs contains a short appreciative account of the South Kensington Museum and its management, and small, but very good, wood-cuts of Sir Frederick Leighton's frescoes.

IN accordance with a decision of the Under-Secretary of State for the Fine Arts, a public exhibition of the works of art bought for the national museums will be held quarterly in the Louvre, in the Salle des Tapisseries. The first of these exhibitions will be opened immediately.

THE death occurred a few weeks since of Frederik Müller, the well-known publisher of Amsterdam. His best-known works were his Detailed Description of the Historical Engravings relating to the History of the Low Countries and his Descriptive Catalogue of Dutch Portraits. He had collected materials for a second edition of the latter, raising the number of portraits catalogued from 7,000 to 40,000. He had also planned and actually commenced a bibliography of the Netherlands, in which he was to have the assistance of the leading Dutch scholars. He filled the office of President of the Amsterdam Society of Antiquaries, and had the good fortune to discover an unpublished MS. of Spinoza, entitled Tractatus de Deo, and some correspondence of Descartes, since edited by M. Foucher de Careil.

THE death is also announced of M. Adolphe Moulleron, at the age of sixty, the head of the French school of lithography. His most celebrated work was Rembrandt's Night-Watch, shown at the Paris Exhibition of 1867. M. Ph. Burty, in the République Française, quotes the following utterance by Delacroix:—"Si j'étais assez riche, j'installerais chez moi M. Moulleron, et je lui demanderais de lithographier tout mon œuvre. Son Duel de Faust avec Valentin, d'après mon tableau, a des finesses que je ne savais pas y avoir mises."

THE STAGE.

IN concluding an arrangement by which Mr. Irving and Mr. Edwin Booth will appear for a while upon the same stage—at the Lyceum Theatre during the month of April—it is probable that both actors have had in view some other performance than that of Othello, which is already announced. Indeed, a second piece has been mentioned in some quarters as likely to be played during the course of the interesting engagement that has just been arranged for, and that is the Venice Preserved of Otway. Othello would hardly by itself afford sufficient cause for the union of the particular talents promised us, because, unless either Mr. Irving's Othello or Mr. Booth's should develop qualities not previously betrayed, there will hardly be an Othello of the very highest quality between the two, while it is scarcely to be doubted that the Iago of either actor will be great and memorable. Mr. Booth's, indeed, we have already seen, and it is one of his most complete performances. Mr. Irving's, not yet known, has always been somewhat eagerly waited for; we expect it to be full of subtlety and of vivid realism. But we may confidently hope that, while Mr. Irving retains the companionship of the American actor, some piece—be it the Venice Preserved or any other—which affords complete scope to the powers of both tragedians will be selected for performance.

AT Sadler's Wells Theatre a brief revival of Hamlet has followed the revival of Macbeth. The cast in Hamlet is not so strong as was that of Macbeth, though Mr. Hermann Vezin plays the Prince with his habitual command of elocutionary grace, and though that conscientious actress, Miss Carlisle, appears as Ophelia. The cast in the revival of Macbeth included not only Mr. Hermann Vezin, but Miss Bateman (Mrs. Crowe) and Mr. Charles Warner, whose performance, however much it may be wanting in the finishing touches which can be given only by time, is decidedly not lacking in the greater qualities of vigour and passion. Mr. Warner will, we hope, be encouraged to resume his Shaksperian parts, and with added study, when the "tyranny" of Michael Strogoff shall be "overpast." At Sadler's Wells we are promised Mary Warner immediately, with Mrs. Crowe in the leading character.

THE arrangements of the Meiningen theatrical company, which begins its six weeks' performances in England about the end of May, are in part made public; and we are glad to see that a fairly representative selection from its repertory has been made. Of course a special source of interest in the Meiningen dramatic performances will be in the fact that, almost alone among great Continental companies, the Meiningers undertake the plays of Shakspeare, down even to some of those with which we English are more familiar in the closet than on the stage. But the announcements of the company, we perceive, make a good deal of the high patronage which is already ensured for the venture in London; and also of the "perfect" correctness of all the costumes and accessories. The patronage of an exalted personage has been given before now, of necessity, to entertainments less educational than these Shaksperian performances, and the Meiningers might, therefore, have followed, without offence, the example of the Comédie Française in making less particular display of it. Again, the correctness of costume and accessory is an attraction with which, in the present day, we are, if anything, somewhat too familiar. Moreover—as witness the recent interesting dispute with regard to Masks and Faces—it is a matter as to which it seems impossible for the best authorities to be agreed. We take leave to say that neither the public nor the Meiningen actors should forget that these German performances will be judged neither by the brilliancy of the patronage accorded to them nor by their realisation of correct scenic detail, but simply and solely by the quality of the acting. We confess ourselves impatient to see whether the fine and careful Meiningen training—the like of which surely we have not got in England—has been bestowed upon artists of tolerable mediocrity, or upon men and women of genius. Julius Caesar may help to show us.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

LAST Saturday week Schubert's third symphony in D was performed at the Crystal Palace, for the first time, as the programme-book informs us, since it left the hands of its young author in 1815. The autograph is the property of Dr.

Edward Schneider, Schubert's nephew. In this work the composer's individuality begins to manifest itself. After a short introduction comes a bright and sparkling allegro. The subjects are simple and tuneful, and the working-out section very interesting. The second movement, allegretto, is particularly charming and graceful. The minuet has much character; it is far in advance of either of the minuets in the first two symphonies. The finale is full of life and vigour. The performance was excellent, and we feel sure that this interesting work will soon be heard again. Reinecke's Concert-Stück in G minor for piano and orchestra was excellently played by Miss Hopekirk, whom we should have preferred to hear in a work of more sterling merit. She also gave with great success solos by Gluck and Rubenstein.

The principal feature of last Saturday's concert was the performance of Schubert's fourth symphony, "The Tragic." It has not been heard at the Palace since 1870.

The first concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on Thursday, February 24. Herr Xaver Scharwenka was the pianist, and introduced his second pianoforte concerto in C minor. It is in many respects a very clever work, but bears strong traces of the influence of Chopin. The opening of the slow movement is, however, quite in the Wagner style. The concerto gave Herr Scharwenka full opportunity of displaying his neat and brilliant execution. The programme included an overture, Waverley, by Berlioz. It is the composer's first work, and it bears but little trace of his later style. The performance of Beethoven's fourth symphony was not good; yet the band was excellent, and this year we are informed that there are two rehearsals for each concert. We shall take an opportunity of noticing more particularly Mr. Cusins' conducting at the next concert, when Berlioz' Romeo et Juliette symphony, a work of great importance and enormous difficulty, is to be performed for the first time, we believe, in England.

Herr Joachim made his first appearance this season at the Monday Popular Concerts last Monday week. He met with a cordial and enthusiastic welcome. He gave, in conjunction with Messrs. Ries, Straus, and Signor Piatti, a magnificent rendering of Beethoven's great quartet in C sharp minor (op. 132). Mdme. Marie Krebs was the pianist, and interpreted in an intelligent manner Beethoven's sonata in E (op. 109). The variations were specially well given. She played with Herr Joachim four charming numbers from the new set of Hungarian dances for violin with pianoforte accompaniment by Brahms and Joachim. Mr. Oswald was the vocalist.

We must briefly notice the last Monday Popular Concert. Mdme. Schumann, who has not been in England since 1877, made her first appearance, and was, of course, received in the most enthusiastic manner. She gave a magnificent interpretation of her husband's Etudes symphoniques. She is still one of the greatest pianists of the day, and her reading of the variations displayed intellectual power of the highest order, combined with deep poetical feeling. We sincerely hope that Mdme. Schumann will give us as much as possible of her husband's music, which is now thoroughly understood and appreciated; and no one can interpret it more faithfully and earnestly than Mdme. Schumann. In the second part of the concert, she played, with Herr Joachim, Brahms' sonata in G. In the hands of two such artists the reading was, of course, all that could be desired.

Mr. Walter Bache gave a pianoforte recital last Tuesday at St. James's Hall. The programme included pieces by Bach, Beethoven, Liszt, Chopin, &c. Mr. Bache played with his usual ability, distinguishing himself particularly in the Chopin and Liszt selections.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL

For MARCH 1.

Beachcombers.
A Word or Two about Bibliomania.
John Harley's Marriage.
Spider-Showers.
Nearly Starved in the Midst of Abundance.
Easy Helps to the Spread of Popular Science.
Graffiti or Wall Scribbles.
Familiar Friends at Sea.
Anecdotes of Sign-Painting Artists.
A Chapter in Real Life.
Cologne Cathedral.
Kennedy in India. By W. Chambers.

THE FORTUNES OF BERTRAM OAKLEY.
By J. B. HARWOOD. Chapters VIII.—XII.

London and Edinburgh: W. & R. CHAMBERS.

1881.

Now ready, Twenty-first annual publication, price 50s., elegantly bound. Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

THE COUNTY FAMILIES of the UNITED KINGDOM: a Royal Manual of the Titled and Untitled Aristocracy of Great Britain and Ireland. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A., late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford. Containing Notices of the Descent, Birth, Marriage, Education, &c., of more than 12,000 distinguished Heads of Families in the United Kingdom, their Heirs Apparent or Presumptive, together with a Record of the Patronage at their disposal, the Offices which they hold or have held, their Town Addresses, Country Residences, Clubs, &c.
London: CHATTO & WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

BIBLE REVISION.

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Crammer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorized, 1611, 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman." Observer

London: S. BAOSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.

[And sold by all Booksellers.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MARCH contains—Mr. C. Villiers Stanford's Opera, "The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan"—Mr. Pops the Musician, by F. Hueffer—The Great Composers: Berlioz—The Father of the Symphony—Pouchelle's Opera, "The Prodigal Son"—Monday Popular, Crystal Palace, and Mr. Hallé's Concerts—Music in Manchester—Mr. Kneib's Brighton Musical Festival—Occasional Notes—Foreign and Country News—Reviews, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MARCH contains a special and full Report of the recent production of Mr. C. Villiers Stanford's Opera, "The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan," at the Hanover Opera House.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MARCH contains "O Saving Victim": Anthem by BERTHOLD TOURS. Price, separately, 1d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s., post-free.

STUDIES IN PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

The Sun; Transit of Venus; Spectrum Analysis; the Moon; the Stars and Planets; Comets and Meteors; Atmospheric Electricity; Whirlwinds; Glaciers; the Telephone. By W. J. MILLAR, C.E., Secretary to the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland; Author of "Principles of Mechanics," &c.

"This work consists of chapters from several sciences—astronomy, electricity, heat, light, &c. They cover a good deal of ground, and include objects as wide apart as whirlwinds and spectrum analysis, glaciers and the telephone."—Liverpool Albion.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

TO PROPRIETORS OF NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, Brief the Week's News, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTIONS OF PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or plain. Estimates furnished to Projectors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 63, THE ARCADE, LONDON.

BRANCH OFFICES, 60, CHANCERY CROSS;

And Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street.

Life Assurances of all descriptions. Specially low rates for young lives, and for non-participating Policies. Prompt settlement of Claims. A new and greatly simplified form of Proposal, also the Society's newly revised Prospectus, will be forwarded on application.

J. G. PRIESTLEY, Actuary.

STEPHENS DRAWING INK.

For Architectural Drawing and Artists' use.

Does not require stirring while in use.

Dries quickly, flows evenly from the pen, and becomes an insoluble colour when dry. Drawings executed with it can be washed without fear of injury. The most delicate Drawing Pens used with this Ink are not impaired by corrosion. On the contrary, instruments left with the ink to dry on them are preserved as with a lacquer.

Sold in Bottles 6d. and 2s. each.

Can be procured through any Stationer.

H. C. STEPHENS, 191, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

PEPPER'S QUININE AND IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood. Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System. Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion. Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties. Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

GEORGE BELL & SONS' NEW BOOKS.

Fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

ENGLISH SONNETS by LIVING

WRITERS. Selected and Arranged, with a Note on the History of the Sonnet, by S. WASHINGTON.

"The selection is a singularly attractive one, and its value is enhanced by the interesting 'Note,' as the author modestly calls it."—Saturday Review.

Fcap. 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

GREEK WIT: a Collection of Smart Sayings and Anecdotes. Translated from Greek Prose Writers. By F. A. PALEY, M.A.

COVENTRY PATMORE'S POETICAL WORKS.

AMELIA, TAMERTON CHURCH TOWER, &c., with Essay on English Metrical Law. Post 8vo, 6s.; Roxburgh, 7s.

THE ANGEL in the HOUSE. Fifth Edition. Post 8vo, 6s.; Roxburgh, 7s.

THE VICTORIES of LOVE. Fourth Edition. Post 8vo, 6s.; Roxburgh, 7s.

THE UNKNOWN EROS. I.—XLVI. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.; Roxburgh, 8s. 6d.

UNIFORM EDITION. Complete in 4 vols. Post 8vo, Roxburgh, 28s.

FLORILEGIUM AMANTIS: a Selection from Coventry Patmore's Poems. Edited by R. GARNETT. Fcap. 8vo 5s.; Roxburgh, 6s.

NEW ADDITION TO BELL'S READING BOOKS.

Post 8vo, 1s.

POETRY for BOYS. Selected and Arranged by DAVID MUNRO.

"A tasteful little selection; and we have only to add that, while it includes the usual stock pieces which have taken their permanent place in our literature, it contains also several fresh extracts which we do not remember to have seen before."—Educational Times.

Eighth Edition, Revised, fcap. 8vo, 5s.

TEXT-BOOK of MUSIC. By H. C.

BAXISTER, Professor of Harmony and Composition at the Royal Academy of Music.

This Manual contains Chapters on Notation, Harmony, and Counterpoint; Modulation, Rhythm, Canon, Fugue, Voices, and Instruments; together with Exercises on Harmony, an Appendix of Examination Papers, and a copious Index and Glossary of Musical Terms.

Fourth Edition, Revised, fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CONCISE HISTORY of MUSIC, from the Commencement of the Christian Era to the Present Time. For the Use of Students. By the Rev. H. G. BOYDALL HUNT, B. Mus. Oxon.; Warden of Trinity College, London; and Lecturer on Musical History in the same College.

Medium 8vo, 21s.

MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS, in CAP-

TIVITY: a Narrative of Events from January, 1569, to December, 1584, whilst George Earl of Shrewsbury was the Guardian of the Scottish Queen. By JOHN DANIEL LEADER, F.S.A.

"Mr. Leader has done his work thoroughly well, and has spared no pains in searching out and bringing forward every scrap of information that can elucidate his subject." Saturday Review.

NEW ADDITION TO BOHN'S STANDARD LIBRARY 2 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

LAPPENBERG'S HISTORY of ENGLAND under the ANGLO-SAXON KINGS. By the late B. THORE, F.S.A. New Edition. Revised by E. C. OTTE. In 2 vols.

USED AS THE STANDARD OF ORTHOGRAPHY IN THE POSTAL TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY.

1,628 pp., 3,000 Woodcuts. Price 21s. New Edition, with a Supplement of over 4,000 New Words and Meanings.

Prospectuses, with specimen page, sent post-free on application.

London: 4, York-street, Covent-garden.

THE EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ASSURANCE CORPORATION (LIMITED).

CAPITAL, £1,000,000 IN 100,000 SHARES OF £10 EACH.

First Issue of 50,000 Shares, 10s. per Share payable on Application, 10s. per Share on Allotment; £1 per Share Three Months after Allotment. No further call is contemplated. Should no Allotment be made, the Deposit will be returned in full.

DIRECTORS.

CHAIRMAN—LORD CLAUD J. HAMILTON, M.P., Deputy-Chairman Great Eastern Railway.
C. F. H. BOLCKOW, Esq., Chairman Bolekow, Vaughan, & Co. (Limited), Middlesbrough.
HENRY CURRER BRIGGS, Esq., Chairman Henry Briggs, Son, & Company (Limited), Whitwood Collieries, Normanton, Leeds.
ARTHUR B. FORWOOD, Esq. (Messrs. Leech, Harrison, & Forwood), Liverpool.
Sir STUART S. HOGG, Director General Steam Navigation Company.
HENRY W. MAYNARD, Esq., Director London and St. Catherine's Dock Company.
ROBERT MILBURN, Esq., Director City of London Brewery Company (Limited).
PHILIP H. WATERLOW, Esq., Chairman Waterlow & Sons (Limited).

DIRECTORS IN SCOTLAND.

W. HALDEN BEATTIE, Esq. (Messrs. William Beattie & Sons, Builders), Edinburgh.
JAMES HAMILTON, Esq. (late of Barclay, Curle, & Co., Shipbuilders), Treasurer to the Corporation of Glasgow.
JOHN K. WATSON, Esq., Manager Edinburgh Gas Light Company.
JOHN YOUNG, Esq. (Messrs. Edington & Sons), Phoenix Iron Works, Glasgow.

(With power to add to their number.)

It is proposed to form Local Boards in other principal centres of industry throughout the Kingdom.

BANKERS—The NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK OF ENGLAND (Limited), 112, Bishopsgate Street, London, and Branches;

The CLYDESDALE BANKING COMPANY, Glasgow, and its Branches.

BROKERS—W. CUTHBERT QUILTER, Esq., 14, King's Arms Yard, London, E.C.;

Messrs. MITCHELL, WATSON, & WINK, 75, St. George's Place, Glasgow.

SOLICITORS—Messrs. WATSON, SONS, & ROOM, 12, Benverie Street, Fleet Street, London, E.C.;

Messrs. MONCRIEFF, BARR, PATERSON, & CO., 45, West George Street, Glasgow.

AUDITORS—Messrs. QUILTER, BALL, & CO., 5, Moorgate Street, E.C.

CONSULTING ACTUARY—WILLIAM FARR, Esq., M.D., C.B., F.R.S., &c. (late Chief of Statistical Department of the General Register Office).

SECRETARY (pro tem.)—J. WHITTALL, Esq.

TEMPORARY OFFICES—41, COLEMAN STREET, LONDON, E.C.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The primary object of this Corporation is to enable employers to protect themselves by means of insurance against the liability imposed upon them by the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and its necessity is already amply proved by the numerous applications for rates received since its registration from some of the largest and most influential firms in the kingdom.

The establishment of this Company will enable employers to dispense with the necessity of endeavouring to arrange with their workmen to contract themselves out of the Act, and, by offering insurance facilities to both masters and men, will solve a question which has already caused a certain amount of ill-feeling between them.

Employers of labour of every description, from and after the 1st day of January, 1881, are held liable to make compensation for personal injuries suffered by workmen in their service from any of the causes specified by the Statute.

As there must occur many accidents for which the employer will clearly not be responsible under the Act, the Corporation will also insure against all accidents without regard to the question of whether or not the employer would be liable under the Act. The Corporation also propose to undertake accidental insurance in all its branches, including the payment of periodical sums to employes and others temporarily incapacitated through accident.

Of all classes of securities few have been so profitable to investors as insurance shares. An insurance company is exceptionally constituted for the conduct of a safe and profitable business; support once secured is seldom lost, and the premiums are a steady source of annual income.

The liability of employers to their workmen, though new to the United Kingdom, has long been recognised by the laws of several foreign countries, and insurance companies to provide against such liability have for years past been in operation on the Continent. The following table will show the amount paid, and present market price of the shares of some of the principal companies doing this class of business, and also gives examples of some of the leading accident companies in this country:—

Name of Office.	Established.	Paid up per Share.	Present Market Price.
LE SOLEIL (Accident Company)	1865	£5	£13 0
L'UNION INDUSTRIEL "	1876	5	20 0
COMPAGNIE GENERALE "	1876	5	10 0
RHENANIA "	1867	15	35 0
SOCIETE SUISSE "	1875	8	16 10
ZURICH ACCIDENT "	1872	8	15 0
RAILWAY PASSENGERS' "	1849	1	7 10
LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE	1877	1½	3 5

The Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, being admittedly a necessity, and embracing so large a branch of insurance business, may confidently be presumed to offer the opportunity for sound and profitable investment.

Full prospectuses and forms of application for shares can be obtained at the offices of the Corporation, and of the Brokers, Bankers, and Solicitors.

Temporary Offices—41, Coleman Street, London, E.C.,

1st March, 1881.]

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That on WEDNESDAY, 27TH OF APRIL NEXT, the Senate will proceed to ELECT EXAMINERS in the following departments:—

Examinerships.	Salaries.	Present Examiners.	Examinerships.	Salaries.	Present Examiners.
ARTS AND SCIENCE.	(Each.)		LAW.	(Each.)
Two in Classics - - -	£200	{ James S. Reid, Esq., LL.M., M.A. { Vacant.	Two in Jurisprudence, Roman Law, Principles of Legislation, and International Law - - -	£100	{ Prof. W. A. Hunter, M.A. { T. Waraker, Esq., LL.D.
Two in The English Language, Literature, and History - - -	120	{ Prof. Henry Morley, LL.D. { Prof. A. W. Ward, LL.D., M.A.	Two in Equity and Real Property Law - - -	50	{ W. H. G. Bagshawe, Esq., B.A., Q.C. { J. M. Solomon, Esq., M.A.
Two in The French Language and Literature - - -	100	{ B. P. Buisson, Esq., M.A. { Prof. Cassal, LL.D.	Two in Common Law and Law and Principles of Evidence - - -	50	{ Arthur Charles, Esq., B.A., Q.C. { Vacant.
Two in The German Language and Literature - - -	50	{ Prof. Althaus, Ph.D. { Prof. Schaible, Ph.D., M.D.	Two in Constitutional History of England - - -	25	{ Rev. Hereford B. George, M.A. { Prof. Edmund Robertson, M.A.
Two in The Hebrew Text of the Old Testament, the Greek Text of the New Testament, the Evidence of the Christian Religion, and Scripture History - - -	50	{ R. Lubbock Bensly, Esq., M.A. { Rev. W. F. Moulton, D.D., M.A.
Two in Mental and Moral Science - - -	80	{ James Sully, Esq., M.A. { Vacant.
Two in Political Economy - - -	30	{ Herbert S. Foxwell, Esq., M.A. { Prof. J. E. Thorold Rogers, M.A., M.P.	Two in Medicine - - -	150	{ W. H. Dickinson, Esq., M.D. { C. Hilton Fagge, Esq., M.D.
Two in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy - - -	200	{ J. Hopkinson, Esq., D.Sc., M.A., F.R.S. { B. Williamson, Esq., M.A., F.R.S.	Two in Surgery - - -	150	{ Prof. John Wood, F.R.S. { Vacant.
Two in Experimental Philosophy - - -	120	{ Prof. W. G. Adams, M.A., F.R.S. { William Garnett, Esq., M.A.	Two in Anatomy - - -	100	{ Prof. Redfern, M.D. { Vacant.
Two in Chemistry - - -	200	{ Prof. Debus, Ph.D., F.R.S. { Prof. Dewar, M.A., F.R.S.	Two in Physiology - - -	100	{ P. H. Pye-Smith, Esq., M.D., B.A. { Vacant.
Two in Botany and Vegetable Physiology - - -	75	{ W. T. Thiselton Dyer, Esq., M.A., F.R.S. { Sydney H. Vines, Esq., D.Sc., M.A.	Two in Obstetric Medicine - - -	75	{ J. M. Duncan, Esq., M.D., LL.D. { Henry Gervis, Esq., M.D.
Two in Comparative Anatomy and Zoology - - -	100	{ Prof. E. Ray Lankester, M.A., F.R.S. { Prof. A. Milnes Marshall, D.Sc., M.A.	Two in Materia Medica and Pharmaceutical Chemistry - - -	75	{ Prof. E. B. Baxter, M.D. { Prof. F. T. Roberts, M.D., B.Sc.
Two in Geology and Palaeontology - - -	75	{ Prof. P. M. Duncan, M.B., F.R.S. { R. Davies Roberts, Esq., D.Sc., M.A.	Two in Forensic Medicine - - -	50	{ Thomas Stevenson, Esq., M.D. { Vacant.

The Examiners above-named are re-eligible, and intend to offer themselves for re-election.

Candidates must send in their names to the Registrar, with any attestation of their qualifications they may think desirable, on or before TUESDAY, MARCH 29TH. It is particularly desired by the Senate that no personal application of any kind be made to its individual Members.

University of London, Burlington-gardens, W.,
March 1st, 1881.

By order of the Senate,
ARTHUR MILMAN, M.A.,
Registrar.

ESTABLISHED 1831.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on
MOEDER'S IRON SYSTEM.
The original, best, and most liberal.
Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £5 6s. to 50 guineas.

Drawing-room Suites, from 15 9s. to 45 guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE. BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY

MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS.

Are free from SMELL.

Are manufactured

Without Phosphorus.

Are perfectly harmless

To the Operatives employed

Are very DAMP PROOF.

LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."

Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."

W. W. STODDARD, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."

CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache,
Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies,
Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS! ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds

The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £239,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS.

Bonus allowed to Insurers after Five Years.

£1,630,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, and West end Office, 8, Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing-cross, or

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drooping feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW NOVEL BY HENRY JAMES, JUN.

WASHINGTON SQUARE: The Pension Beaurepas:

A Bundle of Letters. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"The very clever sketches . . . are, on the whole, even more marvellously clever. . . . There is no doubt that it is genius of the most marked order—genius for painting character."—Spectator.

"'Washington Square' is indeed a finished piece of workmanship. . . . We do not know of anything more complete than the portraiture of the heroine of this tale."—St. James's Gazette.

THROUGH the RANKS to a COMMISSION.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

As this book bears no writer's name, the Publishers feel bound to state that they have seen documents and letters from well-known persons which are more than enough to guarantee the genuineness of the narrative.

NEW NOVEL.

LOUKIS LARAS; or, the Reminiscences of a Chiote

Merchant during the Greek War of Independence. From the Greek of D. BIKÉLAS. Translated, with Introduction on the Rise and Development of Modern Greek Literature, by J. GENNADIUS, late Chargé d'Affaires at the Greek Legation in London. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"The pleasant narrative of Mr. Bikélas could not have been brought out in a more attractive form."—Athenæum.

Eighteenth Annual Publication, Revised after Official Returns.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK: Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the Civilised World, for the Year 1881. By FREDERICK MARTIN. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"All the information that could possibly be desired by politicians, merchants, and public speakers and writers relative to the Constitution and Government, the Church and education, the revenue and expenditure, the army and navy, the area and population, the commerce and industry, of every civilised country in the world is to be found readily accessible within the small limits of this admirable year-book."—Standard.

CATHERINE and CRAUFURD TAIT, WIFE and

SON of ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY: a Memoir. Edited, at the request of the Archbishop, by the Rev. W. BENHAM, B.D., Vicar of Murden, and one of the Six Preachers of Canterbury Cathedral. With Two Portraits engraved by Jeans. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE MAKERS of FLORENCE: Dante, Giotto,

Savonarola, and their City. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. With Illustrations from Drawings by Professor Delamotte, and a Steel Portrait of Savonarola, engraved by C. H. Jeans. Third and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME.—MACMILLAN'S SIX-SHILLING POPULAR NOVELS.

A BELEAGUERED CITY: being a Narrative of Certain

Recent Events in the City of Semur, in the Department of the Haute Bourgogne. A Story of the Seen and Unseen. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

"The story is a very powerful one, and very original to boot."—Times.

ENGLISH MEN of LETTERS. Edited by John

MORLEY. New Volume. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

DRYDEN. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

SERMONS preached in a COLLEGE CHAPEL. With an Appendix. By J. R. ILLINGWORTH, M.A., Fellow of Jesus College, and Tutor of Keble College, Oxford. Crown 8vo. [Immediately.]

PRACTICAL POLITICS. (Issued by the National Liberal Federation.) 1. THE RELATIONS of LANDLORD and TENANT. By JAMES HOWARD, M.P. 8vo, 1s.—2. FOREIGN POLICY. By Right Hon. M. E. GRAFT DUFF, M.P. 8vo, 1s.—3. FREEDOM of LAND. By Right Hon. G. SHAW-LEFEVRE, M.P. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

4. BRITISH COLONIAL POLICY. By Sir David

WEDDERBURN, M.P. 8vo, 1s.

MANUAL of ANCIENT GEOGRAPHY. From the German of Dr. H. KIEPERT. Crown 8vo, 5s.

ANTHROPOLOGY: an Introduction to the Study of Man and Civilisation. By E. B. TYLOR, D.C.L., F.R.S. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE, No. 257,

For MARCH. Price 1s.

CONTENTS OF THE NUMBER.

1. THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. By HENRY JAMES, JUN. Chaps. XXI.—XXIV.
2. CHRISTMAS, and ANCESTOR WORSHIP, in the BLACK MOUNTAIN. By ARTHUR J. EVANS. Part III.
3. BYRON. By MATTHEW ARNOLD.
4. CONNEMARA. By ROBERT J. MARTIN.
5. THE PENNY PRESS. By FRANCIS HITCHMAN.
6. ON A RECENT CRITICISM of MR. SWINBURNE'S. By ALFRED AUSTIN.

BOOKS FOR SPECIAL EXAMINATIONS.

OXFORD LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.

SUBJECTS FOR 1881.

JUNIOR.

CAESAR'S GALLIC WAR. Books II. and III.

Edited, with full Notes, by W. GUNION RUTHERFORD, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d. [Macmillan's Elementary Classics.]

XENOPHON'S ANABASIS. Books I.—IV. Edited, with Notes, by Professors W. W. GOODWIN and J. W. WHITE. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. [Macmillan's Classical Series.]

SENIOR.

LIVY. Books XXI. and XXII. Edited, with full

Notes, by Rev. W. W. CAPES, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. [Macmillan's Classical Series.]

VIRGIL.—AENEID, V. Edited, with full Notes, by

Rev. A. CALVERT, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d. [Macmillan's Elementary Classics.]

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.

SUBJECTS FOR 1881.

SENIOR.

CICERO. The Catiline Orations. From the German

of KARL HALM. Edited, with full Notes, and Additions, by A. S. WILKINS, M.A. New Edition. 3s. 6d. [Macmillan's Classical Series.]

THUCYDIDES. Book IV. Chaps. 1—41. The Capture of Sphacteria. Edited by C. E. GRAVES, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d. [Macmillan's Elementary Classics.]

LONDON UNIVERSITY EXAMINATIONS.

SUBJECTS FOR 1881.

MATRICULATION.

HOMER'S ILIAD, XXI., is contained, with full

Notes, in the Story of Achilles. Edited by J. H. PRATT, M.A., and WALTER LEAF, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 6s. [Macmillan's Classical Series.]

FIRST B.A.

XENOPHON'S MEMORABILIA. Edited, with full

Introductions and Notes, by A. R. CLUER, B.A. Fcap. 8vo, 6s. [Macmillan's Classical Series.]

SECOND B.A.

JUVENAL'S SATIRES, XII. and XVI. Edited, with very full Notes, by Professor J. E. B. MAYOR, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d. [Macmillan's Classical Series.]

PLATO.—EUTHYPHRO and MENEXENUS. Edited, with full Notes, by C. E. GRAVES, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d. [In preparation for Macmillan's Elementary Classics.]

BUTLER'S HUDIBRAS. Edited, with Introductions and Notes, by A. MILNES, M.A. [In preparation.]

FIRST LESSONS in GREEK: adapted to Goodwin's

Greek Grammar, and designed as an Introduction to the Anabasis of Xenophon. By JOHN WILLIAMS WHITE, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of Greek in Harvard University. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

"It is our own fault if, at the time we arrive at the end, our scholarship is not both sound and varied. . . . We should very much like to see this valuable book tried in one or two of our best schools."—Examiner.

MACMILLAN'S CLASSICAL SERIES.—NEW VOLUMES.

OVID.—FASTI. Edited, with Notes and Introductions, by G. H. HALLAM, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Assistant-Master at Harrow. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

PLAUTUS.—MILES GLORIOSUS. A Revised Text, with Notes. By R. Y. TYRRELL, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, and Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Dublin. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

MACMILLAN'S ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.—NEW VOLUME.

CAESAR. Scenes from the Fifth and Sixth Books of the Gallic War. Edited, with Notes, &c., by C. COLBECK, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Assistant-Master at Harrow. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO., BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 462.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

W. H. ALLEN & CO.'S LIST OF NEW AND FORTHCOMING PUBLICATIONS.

NEW BOOKS.

THE HISTORY of CHINA. By Demetrius CHARLES BOULGER, Author of "England and Russia in Central Asia," &c. Vol. I. With Portrait, 18s.

THE EXPIRING CONTINENT: a Narrative of Travel in Senegambia, with Observations on Native Character; Present Condition and Future Prospects of Africa and Colonisation. By ALEX. WILL. MIECHINSON. 8vo, with Sixteen full-page Illustrations and Map, 18s.

TURKEY, OLD and NEW. Geographical, Historical, and Statistical. By SUTHERLAND MENZIES. 2 vols., 8vo, Illustrated, 32s.

IN ZULULAND with the BRITISH throughout the WAR of 1879. By CHARLES L. NORRIS-NEWMAN, Special Correspondent of the London "Standard," Cape Town "Standard and Mail," and the "Times" of Natal. 8vo, with Plans and Illustrations, 16s.

MEMOIRS of a GRIFFIN; or, a Cadet's First Year in India. By Captain BELLEW. Illustrated from Designs by the Author. A New Edition. 10s. 6d.

THE GARDEN of INDIA; or, Chapters on Oudh History and Affairs. By H. C. IRWIN, B.A. Oxon., Bengal Civil Service. 8vo, 12s.

TO CABUL with the CAVALRY BRIGADE: a Narrative of Personal Experiences with the Force under General Sir F. S. Roberts, G.C.B. With Map and Illustrations from Sketches by the Author. By Major R. C. W. MITFORD, 14th Bengal Lancers. 8vo, 9s.

ANALYTICAL INDEX to SIR JOHN KAYE'S HISTORY of the SEPOY WAR, and COL. G. B. MALLESON'S HISTORY of the INDIAN MUTINY. Combined in One Volume. By FREDERIC PINCOTT, M.R.A.S. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

MERV the QUEEN of the WORLD and the SCOURGE of the MEN-STEALING TURCOMANS. By CHARLES MARVIN, Author of "The Disastrous Turcoman Campaign," and "Grodokoff's Ride to Herat." 8vo, with Portrait and numerous Maps, 18s.

SKETCHES of ARMY LIFE in RUSSIA. By F. J. GREENE, Lieutenant of Engineers, U.S. Army, late Military Attaché to the U.S. Legation in St. Petersburg, and Author of "The Russian Army and its Campaigns in Turkey in 1877-78." Crown 8vo, 9s.

STORIES of the CITY of LONDON: Retold for Youthful Readers. By Mrs. NEWTON CROSLAND. Crown 8vo, with Ten Illustrations, 6s.

These Stories range from the early days of Old London Bridge, and the settlement of the Knights Templars in England, to the time of the Gordon Riots; with incidents in the life of Brunel in relation to the Thames Tunnel narrated from personal recollections.

THE VICTORIA CROSS: an Official Chronicle of Deeds of Personal Valour, achieved in the presence of the Enemy during the Crimean and Baltic Campaigns, and the Indian, Persian, Chinese, New Zealand, and African Wars; from the Institution of the Order in 1856 to 1880. Edited by ROBERT W. O'BRYNE, Esq. Crown 8vo, with Coloured Plate, 5s.

ABERIGH-MACKAY (G.)—TWENTY-ONE DAYS IN INDIA: being the Tour of Sir Ali Bala, K.C.B. By GEORGE ABERIGH-MACKAY. Post 8vo, 4s.

"A book of very great value. Every subject is exhaustively treated."—Sunday Times, Jan. 12, 1880.

SIGNOR MONALDINI'S NIECE: a Novel of Italian Life. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The story of 'Signor Monaldini's Niece' is full of interest, and, above all, of beauty. The young lady herself is one of the most charming girls and one of the truest heroines that the world of words has seen for many a year."—St. James's Gazette, July 1, 1880.

THE ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE. Devoted to all the Government Services. Monthly, price 1s.

CHIUSHINGURA; or, the Loyal League: a Japanese Romance. Translated by F. V. DICKINS, Sc.B. With Notes and Appendix, and numerous Engravings on Wood by Japanese Artists. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

LUCK, and WHAT CAME of IT: a New Novel, in 3 vols., by DR. CHARLES MACKAY, Author of "Baron Grimboch," "Under the Blue Sky," "A Mau's Heart," &c., &c. 31s. 6d.

THE EASTERN QUESTION SOLVED: a Vision of the Future. By BUDGE. 1s.

PRECIS of OFFICIAL PAPERS: being Abstracts of all Parliamentary Returns. Monthly, price 3s. Part 7 now ready.

THE INDIA LIST, CIVIL and MILITARY. Issued by permission of the Secretary of State for India. January, 1881. 10s. 6d.; cloth, 12s., bound. [Now ready.]

THE IRRIGATION WORKS of INDIA and their FINANCIAL RESULTS. By H. ROBERT B. BUCKLEY, Indian Public Works Department. 8vo, with Map, 9s.

HITOPADESA: a New Literal Translation from the Sanskrit Text of Professor F. JOHNSON. For the use of Students. By FREDERIC PINCOTT, F.R.A.S. 6s.

OUR SCIENTIFIC FRONTIER. By W. P. ANDREW, Author of "India and her Neighbours," "The Indus and its Provinces," "Memoir on the Euphrates Route," &c. With Sketch-Map and Appendix. 8vo, 6s.

NEW WORKS IN THE PRESS.

THE LYRICAL DRAMA: Essays on Subjects, Composers, and Executants of Modern Opera. By H. Sutherland Edwards, Author of "The Russians at Home and Abroad," &c.

WITH the KURRUM VALLEY FORCE in the CABUL CAMPAIGN of 1878-1879. By Major J. A. S. Colquhoun, R.A.

A DICTIONARY of ETHNOLOGICAL and PHILOLOGICAL GEOGRAPHY. By R. G. Latham, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., &c.

SKETCHES from NIPAL, Historical and Descriptive; with Anecdotes of the Court Life and Wild Sports of the Country in the Time of Maharaja Jang Bahadur, G.C.B.; to which is added an Essay on Nepalese Buddhism. By the late A. A. OLDFIELD, M.D., many years Resident at Kathmandu. 2 vols., Illustrated.

INCIDENTS of a JOURNEY through NUBIA to DARFOOR. By Sidney Ensor, O.E.

THE HISTORY of INDIA, as Told by its Own Historians; the Local Muhammadan Dynasties. Vol. I. Guzerat. By John Dowson, M.R.A.S., late Professor of the Staff College. Forming a Sequel in two or more volumes to Sir H. M. Elliott's Original Work on the Muhammadan Period of the History of India, already Edited, Annotated, and Amplified by the same Author. Published under the patronage of H.M.'s Secretary of State for India.

CHILI, Notes of a Visit during the War 1878-1879. By R. Nelson Boyd, Author of "Coal-Mines Inspection."

FOREIGN SECRETARIES of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. Grenville to Palmerston. By Percy M. Thornton.

WHISPERINGS in the WOOD. From the Swedish of Zacharius Trepelius. By Albert Aberg.

LADIES on HORSEBACK. By Mrs. Power O'Donoghue, Authoress of "The Knave of Clubs," "Horses and Horsemen," "Grandfather's Hunter," "One in the Thousand," &c., &c.

AN ARABIC MANUAL. By Professor E. H. Palmer.

CATHOLIC DOCTRINE of the ATONEMENT: an Historical Enquiry into its Development in the Church; with an Introduction on the Principle of Theological Developments. By H. NUTCOMBE OXENHAM. A New and Enlarged Edition. 12s. 6d. [In a few days.]

LONDON: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
FROUDE'S REMINISCENCES OF CARLYLE, by W. WALLACE	181
TOZER'S TURKISH ARMENIA, by ARTHUR ARNOLD	182
DIXON'S HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND, by the Rev. N. POCOCK	183
A HISTORY OF SLAVONIC LITERATURES, by W. R. MORELL	184
NEW NOVELS, by Mrs. LANG	185
RECENT VERSE	186
NOTES AND NEWS	187
OBITUARY	189
RECENT ADDITIONS TO THE MSS. AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM	189
SELECTED BOOKS	190

CORRESPONDENCE:—

The Temple at Jerusalem, by James Fergusson;
The Heidelberg Library, by Dr. W. Ilmo; Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, by W. Barclay Squire; The Inscribed Plate found at the Roman Baths in Bath, by the Rev. H. M. Scarth; Geological Survey of Canada, by E. C. Rye; Performance of "Hamlet" from the First Quarto: a Disclaimer, by Dr. William Pole

POINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	191
PIERRET'S EGYPTIAN MYTHOLOGY, by Miss AMELIA B. EDWARDS	191
CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE	192
OF TRAVEL	192
SCIENCE NOTES	193
PHILOLOGY NOTES	193
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	193
LEONARDO DA VINCI IN THE EAST, by Mrs. C. HEATON	194
EXCITATIONS AT THE BURLINGTON FINE ARTS CLUB, by FREDK. WEDMORE	195
WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS AT THE DUDLEY GALLERY	196
OBITUARY	196
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	196
GR NOTES	197
BERLIOZ' "CHILDHOOD OF CHRIST," by J. S. SHEDLOCK	197

THE MASON SCIENCE COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL PROFESSORS.

The Trustees intend from the commencement of the Second Session of the College, on the 1st of October next, to enlarge the course of instruction. The present chairs are Mathematics (Professor M. J. M. HILL, M.A. Cantab.), Chemistry (Professor W. A. TILDER, D.Sc. Lond., F.R.S.), Physics (Professor J. H. POYNTING, M.A. Cantab., F.R.S. Lond.), and Biology (Professor T. W. BRIDGE, M.A. Cantab., F.R.S.). In the ensuing Session Professor Tilder will add Metallurgy to his course.

The Trustees invite applications (to be sent to "Mr. G. H. MORELY, Secretary, The Mason Science College, Birmingham," on or before the 30th of April next) for the following additional Professorships and Lectureships, viz.:—
 1. A Professor of Physiology, with special reference to the Laws of Health.
 2. A Professor of Geology and Mineralogy.
 3. A Professor of Civil and Mechanical Engineering.
 4. A Professor of Latin and Greek.
 5. A Professor of English Language and Literature.
 6. A Lecturer on the French Language.
 7. A Lecturer on the German Language.

Particulars of the salaries and conditions will be sent by the Secretary on application. By a resolution of the Trustees, candidates are especially requested to abstain from canvassing.

JOSIAH MASON, Balfour,
 J. GIBBS BLAKE, M.D., Chairman of Trustees,
 G. J. JOHNSON, Hon. Sec.

Edmund-street, Birmingham, February 23rd, 1881.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 3RD OF MAY.

F. W. MADDEN, M.R.A.S., Secretary.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WARBERRY

HOUSE, Bishopdown Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. K. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

IN THE NEW FOREST.—A WOODEN

STUDIO for SALE. Well built, of double Wood. Size, 32 by 16 feet. SIX-ROOMED COTTAGE to be LET with it.—Address, V. A., Holly Cottage, Lyndhurst.

STUDIOS.—Remaining Set.—With Two Anti-rooms, Lavatory, &c. Well placed in Bayswater, near two Stations. Rent £50 per annum.—E. & F. SWAIN, 82, High-street, Nottingham, W. (7,375.)

ENGLISH LANGUAGE, LITERATURE,

ELUCUTION, and COMPOSITION.—The Rev. ALEX. J. D. DORSEY, B.D., will OPEN CLASSES every day next week, at 13, PRINCE'S SQUARE, W. For LADIES, at 2, 3, and 4; for GENTLEMEN, at 5, 6, and 8.

SYMONDS' LIBRARY.—FINE ARTS

and ANTIQUITIES.—The CATALOGUE of the COLLECTIONS of the late Dr. SYMONDS, of Chilton, is now ready. Post-free for Two Stamps.—WILLIAM GEORGE, Historical and Antiquarian Bookseller, 26, Park-street, Bristol.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT

BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

THURSDAY, MARCH 17, 3 P.M.—H. H. STATHAM, Esq., FIRST of FOUR LECTURES on "ORNAMENT, HISTORICALLY and CRITICALLY CONSIDERED." Half-a-Guinea the Course.

SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 3 P.M.—Rev. H. R. HAWES, M.A., FIRST of FOUR LECTURES on "SOME AMERICAN HUMORISTS." Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription for all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

MILLAIS EXHIBITION.—A LOAN

COLLECTION of the WORKS of Mr. J. E. MILLAIS, R.A., is NOW ON VIEW at the FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 118, NEW BOND STREET. Admission, 1s. Notes on Pictures, 6d.

MILLAIS EXHIBITION.—The Contributions include: Autumn Leaves—Boyhood of Raleigh—Carpenter's Shop—Cherry Ripe—Chill October—Ferdinand and Ariel—The Gambler's Wife—Lovers and Infidels—The Mirror—North-west Passage—Order of Release—Portrait of the Painter—Princes in the Tower—Vale of Rest—Woodman's Daughter—A Loomer of the Guard—and a new Picture, The Princess Elizabeth in Prison at St. James's.

ART UNION of LONDON.—Subscription

One Guinea.—Every Subscriber receives an impression of an important Plate by A. Wilmore after Oswald W. Brierly, "THE LOSS of the 'REVENGE,'" besides a chance of one of the numerous valuable prizes. The List will CLOSE MARCH 31. The Trust is now ready.

112, Strand, February, 1881. LEWIS POCOCK, EDMUND E. ANTROBUS, Hon. Secs.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

At the MEETING on TUESDAY, MARCH 22ND, at 4 P.M., instead of MONDAY, March 21st, Professor BEAL will read a Paper "ON CHINESE INTERCOURSE with INDIA during the SEVENTH CENTURY A.D."

W. S. W. VAUX, Secretary R.A.S.

SECRETARYSHIP WANTED, by a

LADY, to Author, Professional, or Business Man, or to Club or Literary Society. Four years' experience. Excellent testimonials.—Address C. A. B., 88, St. Stephen's-avenue, Shepherd's-bush, W.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Com-

mission Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's).—Choice Works ON VIEW by Henry Dawson, son, T. S. Cooper, R.A., E. J. Newman, L. J. Pott, Ernest Parton, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Stark, J. J. J. J., &c.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIP WITHOUT

EXAMINATION.—The HERBERT TRUSTEES are prepared to grant, at their meeting in JUNE next, ONE SCHOLARSHIP of £200 per Annum, for Two Years, to a Graduate of any University in Great Britain and Ireland, between the ages of Twenty-one and Twenty-eight, to enable him to study Theology and Mental and Moral Philosophy at Universities in Germany, Holland, or Switzerland (or elsewhere), subject to the approval of two Trustees.

Full particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, to whom applications for the Scholarship must be forwarded before MARCH 31st, 1881.

PERCY LAWFORD, Secretary.

University Hall, Gordon-square, London, W.C.

TO BOOKBUYERS.—Just ready, for MARCH, 1881, Mr. HOWELL'S CATALOGUE of BOOKS, including many Early Editions of Popular Authors, curious and dainty books, &c. May be had gratis.—EDWARD HOWELL, Church-street, Liverpool.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS.

All the BEST NEW BOOKS, English and Foreign, are in circulation at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

Fresh Copies are added as the demand increases, and an ample supply is provided of all Forthcoming Works of general interest as they appear.

The whole Collection considerably exceeds ONE MILLION VOLUMES, and consists chiefly of Works of established reputation and value.

The organisation of the Library is complete in every department.

FIRST-CLASS SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM,

For a Constant Succession of the Newest Books.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY SUBSCRIPTION, TWO GUINEAS PER ANNUM,

For the Free Delivery of Books in every part of London.

FIRST-CLASS COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTION, TWO GUINEAS and upwards,

According to the number of Volumes required.

CLASS B. SUBSCRIPTION.—Twenty-five Volumes at one time FIVE GUINEAS per Annum, and Five Volumes for every Guinea additional.

REVISED LISTS OF BOOKS

Lately added to the Library, and Catalogues of Surplus Copies withdrawn for Sale, are now ready, and will be forwarded postage-free on application.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), New Oxford Street.

CITY OFFICE: 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

DECORATIVE ART EXHIBITION,

THE NEW GALLERIES, 103, NEW BOND STREET.

NOTICE.—An EXHIBITION of SELECT WORKS of DECORATIVE ART, under the Patronage of H.R.H. PRINCESS LOUISE, MARCHIONESS of LORNE, and about sixty Noblemen and Gentlemen interested in the Decorative Arts, and to be managed by a Committee of Artists and Writers on Art, will be held during the ensuing season in Galleries and Rooms (together 265 feet long by 40 feet in rear) now being built at 103, NEW BOND STREET.

The Exhibition will include Decorative Paintings, Designs, and Sculptures; Work of Art in Gold, Silver, and other Metals; Pottery and Pottery; Enamels and Glass; Carvings; Mosaics and other Inlays; Art Furniture and House Decorations; Enameldery, Textiles, and other objects of choice decorative character.

The rules and regulations may be obtained by intending exhibitors on application at the Galleries to the Director, Mr. T. J. GULLICK.

ON EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS and

DRAWINGS by the American Artist, the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art."—Gallery, 14, Grafton-street, Old Bond-street.

At all the Libraries.

NEW WORK ON NEW ZEALAND.

Just published, 372 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

POENAMO.—SKETCHES of the EARLY

DAYS of NEW ZEALAND. Romance and Reality of Antipodean Life in the Infancy of a New Colony.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 29, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

One Shilling, post-free.

TENNYSON'S "DE PROFUNDIS."

Remodelled by METAMORPHOSIS.

London: E. W. ALLEN, Stationers' Hall-court.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Mudie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

The Woodbury Process is utilised for photographs of Art Manufactures, Portraits, &c., where mounting is not an objection.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS of PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMPTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 28 1/2 in. by 21 in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

"COME INTO THESE YELLOW SANDS," after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

Pictures Cleaned, Restored, Framed.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Dene, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

On Tuesday, March 22, will be published,

THE LIFE OF COLIN CAMPBELL, LORD CLYDE.

Illustrated by Extracts from his Diary and Correspondence.

By Lieutenant-General SHADWELL, C.B.

With Portrait, Maps, and Plans. In 2 vols., 8vo.

"Some of Lord Clyde's friends being under the impression that he had prohibited the publication of any of his papers, I desire to say a word in explanation. The impression is a mistaken one, although it cannot be denied that his consent was given with reluctance. . . . The trustees have hitherto been unwilling to disregard Lord Clyde's apparent objection to a memoir, but, after a lapse of seventeen years, they consider that no sufficient reason now exists for leaving such a distinguished soldier altogether unnoticed, and they feel satisfied in exercising the discretion which he has given them."—Extract from Preface.

EDINBURGH AND LONDON: WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

This day is published, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THOMAS CARLYLE.

An Essay Reprinted from "Blackwood's Magazine."

By General Sir E. B. HAMLEY, K.C.M.G.

EDINBURGH AND LONDON:
WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

Recently published, 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Campaigning in South Africa.

Reminiscences of an Officer in 1879.

By Captain W. E. MONTAGUE,

91th Regiment; Author of "Claude Meadow-leigh," &c.

EDINBURGH AND LONDON:

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

Next Week will be published.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF

THE TRANSVAAL OF TO-DAY.

By ALFRED AYLWARD,

Commandant, Transvaal Republic; Captain (late) Lydenberg Volunteer Corps.

Second Edition. Crown 8vo, with a Map, price 6s.

"This is an exceedingly clever and spirited vindication of the Boers of South Africa—often paradoxical, often definite, but always bright, graphic, and uncommonly clever. Mr. Aylward suggests some very real dangers which the English Government is too apt to ignore."—World.

"We recommend Mr. Aylward's book to all who take an interest in South Africa, and who wish to form a correct idea of the kind of warfare in which our troops are now engaged."—Academy.

"The most interesting, opportune, and original book on the Transvaal which has ever been published."

Home News.

"Altogether, if only on the audi alteram partem principle, this is a volume decidedly worth reading."

Graphic.

"No other writer has, as yet, succeeded in giving us a really intelligible and satisfactory account of the state and position of the Boers."—Observer.

EDINBURGH AND LONDON: WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST & BLACKETT'S
NEW WORKS.

PLAYS, PLAYERS, and PLAY-

HOUSES, at HOME and ABROAD; with Anecdotes of the Drama and the Stage. By LORD WILLIAM PITT LEWIS. 2 vols., 21s.

OUR HOLIDAY in the EAST.

By Mrs. GEORGE SUMNER. Edited by the Rev. G. H. SUMNER, Hon. Canon of Winchester. 8vo, with Illustrations, 15s.

"An attractive volume; very agreeable reading."—John Bull.

"A most charming narrative of a tour in the East amongst scenes of the deepest interest to the Christian."—Record.

MY JOURNEY ROUND the

WORLD. By Capt. S. H. JONES PARRY, Royal Madras Fusiliers. 2 vols., 21s.

"A very pleasant book, well worth reading."—Spectator.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE

LIFE. (1787–1874.) By his daughter, Madame DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol., 8vo, 15s.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and

BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Special Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the Nobility. Fifteenth Edition. 1 vol., with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.

"A work of great value. It is the most faithful record we possess of the aristocracy of the day."—Post.

THE NEW NOVELS.

BESIDE the RIVER. By Mrs.

MACGOWAN, Author of "Patty," &c. 3 vols.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER. By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

MISSING! By Mary Cecil Hay,

Author of "Old Myddelton's Money," &c. 3 vols.

HER DESERTS. By Mrs. Alex-

ANDER FRASER, Author of "Guardian and Lover," 3 vols.

"Her Deserts" is a striking novel, which cannot fail to engross all readers, and will probably be one of the most attractive of its author's works."—Post.

"Her Deserts" is a powerful book. Beautiful, passionate Oline takes a distinct place amid the heroines of fiction."—Sunday Times.

IDONEA. By Anne Beale, Author

of "Fay Arlington," &c. 3 vols.

"A story of no common order, well worth reading."—Sunday Times.

"Miss Beale's novel, from beginning to end, cannot fail to be attractive to the reader. The plot is interesting, and the characters are well delineated."—Court Journal.

BERYL FORTESCUE. By Lady

MURPHY HARDY, Author of "Madge," &c. 3 vols.

"This story can be read with unusual interest."—St. James's Gazette.

"This story is fresh, unconventional, and of unusual interest. It ought to be a great success."—Sunday Times.

FIXED as FATE. By Mrs. Hous-

TON, Author of "Recommended to Mercy," &c. 3 vols.

"Mrs. Houston writes in a pleasant and agreeable vein. We have been much interested in her story."—Academy.

JEANNETTE. By Mary C. Row-

SELL, Author of "Love Loyal," &c. 3 vols.

STRICTLY TIED UP. By the Right Hon. A. J. B. BERE-FORD HOPE, M.P. SECOND EDITION. 3 vols.

LOVE-KNOTS. By the Author of

"Ursula's Love Story," &c. 3 vols.

[Just ready.]

CHEAP EDITIONS.

Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 5s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by

Sir J. GILBERT MILLAR, HUNT, LEECH, POYNTELL, FOSTER,

TENNIEL, SANDS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature. By Amelia B. Edwards.

John Halifax, Gentleman. By Mrs. Oliphant.

The Crescent and the Cross. By Eliot Warburton.

Nathalie. By Miss Kavanagh.

A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of "John Halifax."

Adam Sedgwick. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Slick's Wise Saws. Cardinal Wiseman's Pope.

A Life for a Life. By the Author of "John Halifax."

Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb. Margaret and her Bricks-and-Mortar.

Sam Slick's Old Judge. Darien. By Eliot Warburton.

Sir B. Burke's Family Romance. The Laird of Norlaw. By Mrs. Oliphant.

The Englishwoman in Italy. Nothing New. By the Author of "John Halifax."

Frederic's Life of Jeanne d'Albret. The Valley of a Hundred Fires. Burke's Romance of the Forum.

Adèle. By Miss Kavanagh. Studies from Life. By the Author of "John Halifax."

Grandmother's Money. Jefferson's Book about Doctors. Mistress and Maid. By the Author of "John Halifax."

Les Misérables. By Victor Hugo. St. Olave's. Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

Sam Slick's American Humour. Barbara's History. By Amelia B. Edwards.

Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant. No Church. Christian's Mistake. By the Author of "John Halifax."

Alec Forbes. By George MacDonald, LL.D.

Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant. A Noble Life. By the Author of "John Halifax."

Dixon's New America. Robert Falconer. By George MacDonald, LL.D.

The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of "John Halifax."

Annals of an Eventful Life. By O. W. Dewart, B.C.L.

David Elphinstone. By George MacDonald, LL.D.

A Brave Lady. By the Author of "John Halifax."

Hannah. By the Author of "John Halifax."

Sam Slick's Americans at Home. The Unkind Word. By the Author of "John Halifax."

A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant. My Little Lady. By E. Frances Poynter.

Phoebe, Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant. Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor C. D. Yonge.

Sir Gibbie. By George MacDonald, LL.D.

Young Mrs. Jarline. By the Author of "John Halifax."

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S

NEW WORKS.

THE POLITICAL DIARY of LORD ELLENBOROUGH, 1829-1830. Edited by LORD COLCHESTER. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

THE MEMOIRS of PRINCE METTERNICH, 1815-1829. Edited by his Son, PRINCE RICHARD METTERNICH. Translated by RODINA NAPIER. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

ACROSS PATAGONIA. By Lady FLORENCE DIXIE. Demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations from Sketches by Julius Beerbohm, engraved by Whympers and Pearson, 15s.

NEW NOVELS

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

A CHILD of NATURE. By ROBERT BUCHANAN, Author of "The Shadow of the Sword." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

QUEENIE'S WHIM. By ROSA NOUCHETTE CARRY, Author of "Wood and Married," "Nellie's Memories," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

HIRAM GREG. By J. CROWTHER. First. 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"... This clever, vigorous, and fairly vraisemblable novel."—Academy.

THE MYSTERIES of HERON. DYKE. By the Author of "In the Dead of Night." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

FOLLY MORRISON. By FRANK BARRETT. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

ADAM and EVE. By Mrs. PARR, Author of "Dorothy Fox." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

TWO NEW ADDITIONS TO

"BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS."

SECOND THOUGHTS. By Rhoda BROUGHTON, Author of "Cometh Up as a Flower," "Nancy," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

DOROTHY FOX. By Mrs. PARR, Author of "Adam and Eve." Crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

THE SACRED BOOKS of the EAST.

Translated by various Oriental Scholars, and Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER.

THE QURAN. Translated by Prof. E. H. PALMER. Vols. VI. and IX. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 21s.

Vol. X., Part I.—The DHAMMAPADA, translated from the Pāli by F. MAX MÜLLER; Part II.—The SUTTA NIPĀTA, translated from the Pāli by V. FAUSBÖLL; being Canonical Books of the Buddhists. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

THE LITURGY and RITUAL of the CELTIC CHURCH. With Facsimile of the Stowe Missal. By F. E. WARREN, Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 11s.

THE BOOKS of JOB, PSALMS,

PROVERBS, ECCLESIASTES, and the SONG of SOLOMON, according to the Wycliffite Version made by NICHOLAS DE HEREFORD about A.D. 1381, and Revised by JOHN PURVEY about A.D. 1388. Formerly Edited by Rev. JOSHUA FORSHALL, F.R.S., and Sir FREDERICK MADDEN, F.R.S., and now Reprinted. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

THE USE of the TENSES in HEBREW, and some other SYNTACTICAL QUESTIONS. By S. R. DRIVER, M.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

CICERO de ORATORE. With

Introduction and Notes by A. S. WILKINS, M.A., Professor of Latin, Owens College, Manchester. Book II. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

THE ROMAN POETS of the RE-

PUBLIC. By W. Z. SELLAR, M.A., LL.D.; Professor of Humanity in the University of Edinburgh, and formerly Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 11s.

PRIMER of FRENCH LITERA-

TURE. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

ANGLICE REDDENDA; or,

Extracts for Unseen Translation. For the Use of Lower and Middle Forms. Selected by C. S. JERRAM, M.A. New and Enlarged Edition. 2s. 6d.

A LATIN DICTIONARY, Founded on Andrews' Edition of Freund's Latin Dictionary. Revised, Enlarged, and in great part Rewritten by CHARLTON T. LEWIS, Ph.D., and CHARLES SMOOT, LL.D., Professor of Latin in Columbia College, New York. 1670. 4to, cloth, £1 11s. 6d.

ITALY and HER INVADERS.

A.D. 376-476. By T. HONGKIN, Fellow of University College, London. Illustrated with Plates and Maps. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, £1 12s.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL HIS-

TORY of ENGLAND, in its ORIGIN and DEVELOPMENT. By WILLIAM STUBBS, D.D., Regius Professor of Modern History. Library Edition. 3 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, £2 8s.; also crown 8vo, in 3 vols., 12s. each.

THE WELLINGTON DE-

SPATCHES, Memoranda, and other Papers (Selections from). Edited by SIDNEY J. OWEN, M.A., Reader in Law and History, and Tutor at Christ Church; Reader in Indian History in the University of Oxford; formerly Professor of History in the Elphinstone College, Bombay. With an Introductory Essay, Maps, and Plans. Demy 8vo, cloth, £1 4s.

"Mr. Owen has already earned and deserved a reputation as an Indian Historian. His prefatory essays display great care and a thorough knowledge of his subject. . . . We shall in some measure indicate the value of the editor's labours when we say that Mr. Owen, in addition to a most instructive Introduction, has given us a synopsis by which we may trace, without the least trouble, our great commander's connexion with and views concerning places and events, and that he has added to the collection despatches penned by the Duke long after he left India, and treating of matters of present and permanent interest; and, lastly, that capital maps and military plans accompany the volume."—Times.

London: HENRY FROWDE,

Oxford University Press Warehouse, 7, Paternoster-row.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

SUNRISE.—Mr. William Black's New

Novel, "SUNRISE": a Story of These Times, 3 vols., is now ready.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY STUDIES: ESSAYS. By FRANCIS HITCHMAN. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 16s.

CONTENTS: Chap. 1. John Wilkes—Chap. 2. The Founder of Methodism—Chap. 3. Charles Churchill, Parson and Poet—Chap. 4. David Garrick—Chap. 5. Richard Cumberland—Chap. 6. "The Cook's Oracle"—Chap. 7. Jean Bissell and Balcon Corney—Chap. 8. Dr. Dibdin and the Roxburghe Club—Chap. 9. Joseph Priestley—Chap. 10. The Author of "Sandford and Merton"—Chap. 11. Erasmus Darwin.

PARTS IV. and V. of LECTURES on ARCHITECTURE. Translated from the French of E. VIOLETT-LE-DUC, by BENJAMIN BUCKNALL, Architect. With many very fine Illustrations by the Author, including double-page Steel and other Plates. Royal 8vo, each 10s. 6d. [Now ready.]

Of Part I. Mr. GLADSTONE writes: "The translation has every appearance of being excellent." (Part VI., completing the Work, is in the press.)

THE TWENTY STYLES of ARCHITECTURE:

Illustrations of the finest Edifices in the World. By the Editor of "The Hundred Greatest Men." Demy 4to, One Guinea. [Ready.]

The object in the method employed has been so to present the subject that a few hours' study will enable one to become acquainted with the leading principles of Architecture, and to distinguish the different styles.

NEW WORK BY PHIL ROBINSON.—Now ready.

UNDER the PUNKAH. By the Author of

"In my Indian Garden." Small post 8vo, 5s.

CONTENTS: Chap. 1. The Man-Eating Tree—Chap. 2. My Wife's Birds—Chap. 3. The Parrot—Chap. 4. The Bull-finch—Chap. 5. The Cuckoo—Chap. 6. The Linnet—Chap. 7. Hunting the Soko—Chap. 8. Legend of the Nameless Priest—Chap. 9. Sight-Seeing—Chap. 10. Eastern Smells and Western Noses—Chap. 11. Gaminis—Chap. 12. Stone-Throwing—Chap. 13. Tailors—Chap. 14. The Hara-Kiri—Chap. 15. 1st. Puer—Chap. 16. Death, the Daughter of Mercy—Chap. 17. Dogs we have all Met.

NICE and her NEIGHBOURS. By the Rev. Canon HOLE, Author of "A Book about Roses," "Little Tour in Ireland," &c. Square 8vo, with many charming Illustrations of the Scenery in and around Nice, cloth extra, gilt edges, 16s.

WEBER. By Sir Julius Benedict. Dedicated by permission to Her Majesty the Queen. New Volume of the BIOGRAPHIES of the GREAT MUSICIANS. Edited by FRANCIS HURFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

SCHUBERT. By H. F. Frost. New Volume of the BIOGRAPHIES of the GREAT MUSICIANS. Edited by FRANCIS HURFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

NEW NOVELS NOW READY At Every Library.

MR. WILLIAM BLACK'S NEW NOVEL, SUNRISE: a Story of These Times. 3 vols.

MR. CAROLI: an Autobiography. Edited by L. G. SEGUIN, Author of "Walks in Algiers," &c. 3 vols.

A FOURTH EDITION IS READY OF
MARY MARSTON. By George MacDonald. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

FLOWER o' the BROOM. By the Author of "Rare Pale Margaret." 3 vols.

AN ENGLISH SQUIRE. By C. R. COLEIDGE, Author of "Lady Hetty," "Hanbury Mills," &c. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

A THIRD EDITION IS READY OF
A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. 3 vols.

THE NEW ADDITION TO LOW'S STANDARD SIX-SHILLING NOVELS IS

BEN-HUR: a Tale of the Christ. By L. WALLACE. Small post 8vo, 6s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS OF JULES VERNE'S NOVEL.

MICHAEL STROGOFF, the COURIER of the CZAR. By JULES VERNE. With Illustrations. Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

MICHAEL STROGOFF. In 2 Parts, with Illustrations, boards, each 1s.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1881.

No. 462, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Reminiscences of Thomas Carlyle. Edited by James Anthony Froude. In 2 vols. (Longmans.)

"I SHOULD have kept Thomas Carlyle closer to me; his counsel, blame, or praise was always faithful, and few have such eyes." These words, "verily" poor Edward Irving's, and among the last he uttered, will be recognised by the careful reader of these volumes on a second perusal as their substance in a nut-shell. Second perusal we say, for, after a first, it is not so much of Thomas as of Jane Welsh Carlyle that the reader thinks—the bright, delicate, patient Tenderness that for forty years "wrapped like the softest of bandages" the rugged Truth that was all hers first, and the world's only afterwards—and, if he is ordinarily sympathetic, he is likely to be so much troubled with a temporary weakness in his own eyes as to have no time to think of the strength of Carlyle's. But after a second reading it is to him that the heart even more than the head turns once more—the loyal counsellor (though sometimes discouraging as a wet blanket and sometimes irritating as a mustard-blister), the sure support in all moral troubles, and with such eyes! Indeed, these eyes are such that it becomes a question, the most important that this book raises, whether Mr. Froude has wisely exercised his discretion as editor, and should not have concealed or destroyed many of his late friend's microscopic observations. These are certain to give pain to some people who are living, and to the relatives of many others who are dead—all the more so that they are equally certain to be read with delight by the general public, which is Philistinish and mischief-loving, and rolls as sweet morsels under the tongue "hits" at important and, above all, self-conscious persons. It is hardly possible to refrain from believing that Carlyle in writing these sketches took a thoroughly Scotch and magnificently impish delight in "paying off" whoever may have seemed to him deficient in respect to his wife, himself, or the two clans of Carlyle and Welsh, whose champion and chieftain he became. Of course, it is open to Mr. Froude, and to the immense number of people whom these Reminiscences will delight in virtue of their "hits," to say, by way of justification for their publication, that the faithful rendering of impressions can do no harm. It is the fact, moreover, that Carlyle "hits" all round. He allows that he himself was "ill to put up with." Much as he respects Mrs. Welsh, his wife's mother, he cannot help letting the world know of her little vanities; he notes her "feather-in-cap" the last time he saw her. Yet Society—unless, indeed, it has become as "intolerable" as the amusements of life generally—is Society, and has its reticences and magnanimities, if not its sanctities. Hitherto it has been vaguely understood to be a joint-stock company, whose members give up a little of themselves for the common pleasure, and in which the Burnsian, not to say Christian, rule prevails—to "Gently scan your brother man, Still gentlier, sister woman."

But if this rule, already more honoured in the breach than the observance, is to be abolished altogether—if Society is to mean a number of men and women meeting to make unkindly personal judgments from imperfect data, and in general measuring themselves against each other like cats in a suburban back garden, and if these observations may appear in print on any day—on the principle apparently of "at the balance let's not be mute"—then, no self-regarding, much less unselfish, people will enter Society. At all events, and beyond all question, Mr. Froude would have done well for the reputation of Carlyle, and would not have taken from the picturesqueness of these volumes, had he omitted references, "graphic" though they be, to essentially private people in Scotland and London, who, so far as can be seen, have done nothing to deserve to be thus pilloried.

To lovers and students of Carlyle, however, these Reminiscences are of the first value. In the form of sketches of James Carlyle, Edward Irving, Jeffrey, and Jane Welsh Carlyle—his father, who gave him being, education, and his most important characteristics; his friend; his literary patron; his wife, consoler, and guardian angel—we have, in fact, a most vivid autobiography. We see Carlyle struggling with poverty, with scepticism, with the "mud-gods," with unpopularity, with dyspepsia (there is, by-the-way, no evidence that he had such a struggle with passions as Burns or even Wordsworth had), until he triumphed over all except the last, only to lose his wife and "field-marshal," who almost literally had borne the burden and heat of the day, and whom he mourns for with a grief that in almost any other man would be called egotistic, if not maudlin.

"Ah me! she never knew fully, nor could I show her in my heavy-laden, miserable life, how much I had at all times loved and admired her. No telling of her now, 'Five minutes more of your dear company in the world. Oh! that I had you yet but for five minutes to tell you all.'"

Carlyle is nothing if not ethical and religious. Here once more we have the doctrine of a sincere and valiant struggle against the world, with its temptations, its "prurient blockheadisms," and even its "Demosthenes Disraelis." There is nothing for it but "desperate hope," to be "obstinate for the best," and victory may rest with "the hand-ful of the brave."

As for style, these volumes give Carlyle at his best, midway between the early, excellent, but not altogether ripe "Essays," and the extravagances and positive incoherencies of the "Latter-day Pamphlets," and even of

"Frederick." Here we have his Burnsian intensity of epithets, his Poussinesque realisms of description, his exquisite Scotch diminutives of the "little thoughtkin" order, his native "Annandale Rabelais," even a little of his extravagant and not quite genuine Berserkerism. Finally, Carlyle came sufficiently in contact with a number of remarkable people to sketch them. Wordsworth, De Quincey, Southey, Lamb, Chalmers, Harriet Martineau, John Stuart Mill are portrayed less fully, but not less faithfully, than his father, his wife, Irving, and Jeffrey. Until, however, we have "the other side" in respect of these, it would be unfair to consider such judgments as final. On the whole, the impression they leave is unpleasant in spite of their piquancy, and suggests not Carlyle, but dyspepsia speaking through him.

The two volumes may be differentiated by saying that the first, containing "James Carlyle" and "Edward Irving," is the more loveable; the other, giving his history as associated with Jeffrey and his wife, is the more generally interesting. Both are emphatically books to be read rather than criticised, and the conditions of space prevent us from either telling their "plot" or giving more than a few typical quotations.

JAMES CARLYLE, OF ECOLEFECHAN.

"In several respects I consider my father as one of the most interesting men I have known. He was a man of perhaps the very largest natural endowment of any it has been my lot to converse with. None of you will ever forget that bold, flowing style of his, flowing free from his untutored soul, full of metaphors (though he knew not what a metaphor was), with all manner of potent words, which he appreciated and applied with a surprising accuracy you often would not guess whence; brief, energetic; and which, I should say, conveyed the most perfect picture, definite, clear, not in ambitious colours, but in full white sunlight, of all the dialects I have ever listened to. Nothing did I ever hear him undertake to render visible which did not become almost ocularly so. Never shall we again hear such speech as that was. The whole district knew of it and laughed joyfully over it, not knowing how otherwise to express the feeling it gave them. Emphatic I have heard him beyond all men. In anger he had no need of oaths; his words were like sharp arrows that smote into the very heart. The fault was that he exaggerated (which tendency I also inherit)—yet in description, and for the sake chiefly of humorous effect. He was a man of rigid, even scrupulous veracity. I have often heard him turn back when he thought his strong words were misleading, and correct them into measurable accuracy. On the whole, ought I not to rejoice that God was pleased to give me such a father; that from earliest years I had the example of a real man of God's own making continually before me? Let me learn him; let me write my books as he built his houses, and walk as blamelessly through this shadow world, if God so will, to rejoin him at last Amen."

COLERIDGE.

"On one of the first fine mornings, Mrs. Montague, along with Irving, took me out to see Coleridge at Highgate. My impressions of the man and of the place are conveyed faithfully enough in the 'Life of Sterling;' that first interview in particular, of which I had expected very little, was idle and unsatisfactory, and yielded me nothing. Coleridge, a puffy, anxious, obstructed-looking, fattish old man, hobbled about with us, talking with a kind of solemn emphasis on matters which were of no interest (and even reading pieces in proof of his opinions thereon). I had him to myself once or twice, in various parts of the garden walks, and tried hard to get something about Kant and Co. from him, about 'reason' versus 'understanding' and the like, but in vain. Nothing came from him that was of use to me that day, or in fact any day. The sight and sound of a sage who was so venerated by those about me, and whom I too would willingly have venerated, but could not—this was all. Several times afterwards, Montagu, on Coleridge's 'Thursday evenings,' carried Irving and me out, and returned blessing Heaven (I not) for what he had received. Irving and I walked out more than once on mornings too, and found the Dodona oracle humanly ready to act, but never to me, or Irving either I suspect, explanatory of the question put. Good Irving strove always to think that he was getting priceless wisdom out of this great man, but must have had his misgivings. Except by the Montagu-Irving channel, I at no time communicated with Coleridge. I had never on my own strength had much esteem for him, and found slowly in spite of myself that I was getting to have less and less. Early in 1825 was my last sight of him; a print of Porson brought some trifling utterance: 'Sensuality such a dissolution of the features of a man's face;' and I remember nothing more. On my second visit to London (autumn 1830) Irving and I had appointed a day for a pilgrimage to Highgate, but the day was one rain deluge and we couldn't even try. Soon after our settling here (late in 1834) Coleridge was reported to be dying, and died; I had seen the last of him almost a decade ago."

HARRIET MARTINEAU.

"To admire Harriet Martineau's literary genius, or even her solidity of common-sense, was never possible for either of us; but she had a sharp eye, an imperturbable self-possession, and in all things a swiftness of positive decision which, joined to her evident loyalty of intention and her frank, guileless, easy ways, we both liked. Her talent, which, in that sense was very considerable, I used to think would have made her a quite shining matron of some big female establishment, mistress of some immense dress-shop, for instance, if she had a dressing faculty, which perhaps she had not; but was totally inadequate to grapple with deep spiritual and social questions, into which she launched at all times, nothing doubting."

MONEY-MAKING.

"My books were not, nor ever will be, 'popular,' productive of money to any but a contemptible degree. I had lost by the death of Bookseller Fraser and change to Chapman and Hall; in short, to judge by the running after me by owls of Minerva in those times, and then to hear what day's wages my books brought me, would have astonished the owl mind. I do not think my literary income was above £200 a-year in those decades, in spite of my continual diligence day by day. 'Cromwell' I must have written, I think, in 1844, but for four years prior it had been a continual toil and misery to me. I forget what was the price of 'Cromwell,' greater considerably than in any previous case, but the annual income was still somewhat as above. I had always £200 or £300 in bank, and continually forgot all about money. My darling rolled it all over upon me, and not one straw about it; only asked for assurance or promissory engagement from me. 'How little, then?' and never failed to make it liberally and handsomely do. Honour to her (beyond the ownership of California, I say now), and thanks to poverty that showed me how noble, worshipful, and dear she was."

THE BURNING OF THE "FRENCH REVOLUTION."

"Mill was very useful about French Revolution, but with all his books, which were quite a collection on the subject, gave me frankly, clearly, and with zeal all his better knowledge than my own (which was pretty frequently of use in this or the other detail), being full of eagerness for such an advocate in that cause as he felt I should be. His evenings here were sensibly agreeable; for most part talk rather wintry ('sawdustish,' as old Sterling once called it), but always well informed and sincere. How well do I still remember that night when he came to tell us, pale as Hector's ghost, that my unfortunate first volume was burnt. It was like half-sentence of death to us both: and we had to pretend to take it lightly, so dismal and ghastly was the horror of it, and try to think of other matters. He stayed three mortal hours or so—his departure quite a relief to us. Oh! the burst of sympathy my poor darling then gave me, flinging her arms round my neck, and openly lamenting, condoling, and encouraging, like a noble second self. Under heaven is nothing beautifuler. We sat talking till late; 'shall be written again' my fixed word and resolution—to try which proved to be such a task as I never tried before or since. I wrote out 'Feast of Pikes' (vol. ii.), and then went at it—found it fairly impossible for about a fortnight; passed three weeks (reading Marryat's novels); tried cautious, cautiously, as on ice—paper thin once more—and, in short, had a job more like breaking my heart than any other in my experience. Jeannie alone of beings burnt like a steady lamp beside me. I forget how much of money we still had—I think there was at first something like £300, perhaps £280, to front London with—nor can I in the least remember where we had gathered such a sum, except that it was our own, no part borrowed or given us by anybody. 'Fit to fast till French Revolution is ready'—and she had no misgivings at all. Mill was penitent, liberal; sent me £200 (in a day or two), of which I kept £100, actual cost of house while I had written burnt volume (upon which he brought me Biographie Universelle, which I got bound and now have). Wish I could find a way of getting the now much macerated, changed, and fanaticised John Stuart Mill to take the £100 back, but I fear there is no way."

Let us close with a question which would be solemn trifling were it put in regard to any man less "thorough" than Carlyle. It will be admitted—he admits himself—that dyspepsia was the cause of nine-tenths of his misery, and it has only too clearly coloured, if not poisoned, a large portion of his writings. By his own confession it made him think of suicide during the time of his Buller tutorship. Could this dyspepsia not have been cured? He says he consulted a medical man in Scotland, whose advice was to drop tobacco. He experimented for six months, and came to the conclusion that his adviser, whose name, however, he does not give, was a "jackass." But what would have happened if he had fought longer with his particular vanity, or if he had consulted another physician? According to legend, it was a steak and onions that cost Napoleon the Battle of Leipsic. It becomes a question having a serious, as well as a humorous, side what would have happened to modern thought and criticism if Carlyle had had the courage to put his pipe out.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

Turkish Armenia and Eastern Asia Minor.

By the Rev. H. F. Tozer, M.A., F.R.G.S. (Longmans.)

MR. TOZER is a writer and a traveller of much experience—a quality peculiarly valuable in treating of a country which has of late formed the subject of several books. He knows how to avoid that which is trite and uninteresting. He is aware that accuracy of information is not the strong point of every writer, and that hasty impressions of travel are often committed to paper which have only such ephemeral value as liveliness of style may impart. Mr. Tozer is a traveller of a different and a more valuable order. His book is one of the best sources of useful information at command in regard to territory as to which this country has accepted vast and ill-defined responsibilities. Even so early as the thirtieth page we find that Mr. Tozer knows much of Oriental ways. Writing of Sivas, he says:—"In the neighbourhood of our dwelling we ascended through the narrow streets of that part of the town which lies at the foot of the castle hill by a flight of stone stairs, which, by the use of the familiar Oriental number, are spoken of as 40." It is only by travelling that one becomes aware how universal is the application of the number forty to the features of Oriental architecture. And this holds good from the highlands of Asia Minor to the summit of the Hindoo Koosh. If there is a famous building with something over a score of columns, or a town with a like number of minarets, it will be styled the hall of forty columns or the city of forty towers. The familiar number has appeared to all Englishmen in the story of the Forty Thieves, and it will be found again and again in such books as the Arabian Nights' Entertainments.

We do not remember any traveller who has dwelt with so much persistence on the absence of trees, which, Mr. Tozer says, is so remarkable a feature of the interior of Asia Minor and of Armenia. Our author says:—"Indeed, we found that until we approached the coast at Trebizond, after making the circuit of both these countries, we never saw a full-grown tree, except in the neighbourhood of towns and villages, where they were planted by the hand of man." But, though trees do not flourish, every traveller in Turkey observes that Turks of the wealthier class get fat. This is the consequence of a life for the most part lazy, and of the nature of their food. Meat is not fattening; and Mr. Tozer, who took part in many Turkish banquets, noticed that of meat the Turks eat little. The cooking, he says, is good, "as it is ordinarily, unless too much butter is used; for a maxim prevails which is too often put in practice—"the more grease the more honour." Grease is the characteristic of Turkish food which is most repellent to the English taste; and it is this large consumption of grease which gives the Turkish men and women that unwholesome obesity so common among the leisure class throughout the Sultan's dominions. The absence of trees in Asia Minor appears to be mainly due to the qualities of the soil, and to the absence of moisture during a long season of the year. It has not been occasioned by the destruction of forests and the subsequent washing away of soil from the mountains. It seems to have always been a characteristic of Asia Minor. Strabo remarks upon it as prevailing throughout the interior of the eastern part of the peninsula. But equally there is no doubt that under the Romans Asia Minor produced much corn and wine; and that during the early period of the Byzantine Empire it was a most flourishing and populous province.

Again the experienced traveller is seen in Mr. Tozer's assertion, which is incontestably true of all Western Asia, that "female seclusion is practised by the Christians almost as strictly as by the Mahometans; indeed, except when we visited Armenian families, throughout our journey the female sex may be said not to have existed for us at all." This is, it may be said, owing partly to the example of the dominant caste; partly to the insecurity, under Turkish rule, of female honour; and partly also to the wretched condition of Turkish towns, which fosters habits of seclusion in those whose labours are generally within doors. Armenian women not unfrequently wear a very opaque face-veil; sometimes it reaches from below over the mouth to the nose, in the way in which Englishmen adjust a "wrap." With all Eastern women this practice becomes by habit desired as a protection against the weather. But that Christian women should adopt the veil so largely is undoubtedly in the main due to the bad reputation which, as the result of Turkish customs, attaches to a woman who is seen in the streets with her face exposed.

There is a good deal of disease in the towns of Asia Minor, for which the carelessness of the population with regard to their drinking-water must be held to a great extent responsible. It is forbidden by the sacred law of Islam that a believer should deliberately pollute this element of life. But the faithful are quite reckless as to any indirect contamination. It does not seem to occur to the Mussulman mind that to place refuse near a stream is in many cases, especially in wet weather, equivalent to placing it in the stream. Alluding to the copious spring of limpid water which wells out into an extensive stone basin or reservoir at the entrance of the village of Everek, Mr. Tozer says, "In this the boys of Everek are fond of bathing, so that, as the water supply of the place comes from here, the natives have the unusual arrangement of washing in the water first and drinking it afterwards." This, however, is a very mild indication of the impurities in the water which is consumed in Oriental towns. It is not too much to assert that a reasonable progress in the arts of civilisation would lessen the death-rate of Asia by one-half. It is a common error to suppose that Turkish soldiers are unused to a cold climate. In reality Asia Minor, which is the great recruiting ground for the Turkish army, would be less healthy than it is had it not a remarkably severe climate in winter; and, as Mr. Tozer observes, "those who are inured to its extremes of temperature must possess very hardy constitutions."

Perhaps the most interesting part of this volume is reached when the writer enters

Armenia, which occupies, as he says, a great part of the triangle lying between three seas—the Mediterranean, the Euxine, and the Caspian. The elevation of the country, which probably averages more than three thousand feet above the sea, has given the people a robust and energetic character—one which Mr. Tozer thinks "will exercise a marked influence in determining the future of the East." The leading bankers of Constantinople are generally Armenians. These people are also to be found engaged in trade in the capitals of Europe and throughout all Asia, including British India. The hamals, or porters, of Constantinople are, as a rule, Armenians, and may be taken as types of their race—which is characterised in its political and social life by industry, perseverance, and long-suffering endurance. One of the physical glories of Armenia is Mount Ararat, and another is Lake Van, which has an area about twice as large as the Lake of Geneva, and is more than five thousand feet above the sea-level. The water of Lake Van is too salt for drinking. There is no visible outlet; and for thousands of years the human mind has puzzled over the absence of these "strong" salts in the Tigris, which is supposed to have its head-waters in the same region. The most important place in Armenia is the city of Erzeroum, concerning which Lord Beaconsfield prophesied in 1879 that it would soon be the scene of the strongest fortifications in that part of Asia. So far as we can gather from Mr. Tozer's account, nothing has been done, and even repair has been left undone, since the war. He found that the troops in Erzeroum had received no pay for four years, "and nothing but loyalty to the Sultan, and devotion to their religion, kept them from mutinying." It might also, perhaps, be said that a lingering hope of getting some arrears held their allegiance. The monthly pay, even of the zaptiehs—when it is paid—is, together with a bread ration, about 3s.; and, as Major Trotter has reported to the Foreign Office, "they are generally believed, in order to obtain a living, to get their share of almost every robbery that occurs, if indeed they are not in many instances the actual criminals."

Mr. Tozer's travels end at Trebizond; and the worst fault we can find with his work is that, both in regard to Erzeroum and Trebizond, he deals too exclusively with the records of antiquity, when the matter of greatest interest would be the actual condition of these places as seen by an unofficial traveller, and especially the effect of the annexation of the adjoining territory to Russia upon the great trade route which passes from Trebizond through Erzeroum to Persia and Central Asia. Yet, even apart from the absence of information such as is most needed, we must add that marks of hasty compilation may be observed in the latter part of the work which are to be regretted. This often happens in an otherwise excellent book of travels. However, in spite of all defects, Mr. Tozer's work may, on the whole, be commended as a good and useful mixture of ancient and modern information concerning a part of the world to which the eyes of Englishmen will some day be again directed with deeper interest than that which prevails at present.

ARTHUR ARNOLD.

History of the Church of England from the Abolition of the Roman Jurisdiction. By Richard Watson Dixon, M.A., Vicar of Hayton, Honorary Canon of Carlisle. Vol. II. Henry VIII., A.D. 1538–47; Edward VI., A.D. 1547–48. (Routledge.)

MR. DIXON has changed his publisher as well as his printer since the appearance of his first volume, which we reviewed February 16, 1878. We should have been glad to speak in the same generally favourable terms of this as we did of the preceding part of the History; but one defect which we noticed—viz., the author's inadequate appreciation of character—comes out more strongly now than before. And this is one of the causes of his failure to grasp the nature of the changes inaugurated in the first two years of Edward's reign, beyond which the present volume does not reach.

Our author appears to have formed no true conception of the characters of the principal agents in the changes of religion that were being gradually forced on the nation; neither, again, is he sufficiently acquainted with the literature of the period to appreciate the real state of the case. It is next to impossible to understand the history of the Reformation unless it is remembered that Lutheranism never had the slightest hold over English people, and that the changes of Edward's reign were all designed in the direction of Zwinglianism, while in those of Elizabeth's reign this theory had to give way to the more pronounced utterances of Calvinism. We recommend Mr. Dixon, before he proceeds farther, to read Sanders, and master at least the true outline of the history before he continues the perilous task he has entered on. He is quite capable of writing as good a history of this reign as he did of the preceding reign, if only he had the requisite knowledge of the subject. It would take a volume to exhibit the evidence of the conclusion that inevitably comes out from the facts. We can but state that conclusion in the barest way in this article. And it is this: that there was a deliberate intention from the first to carry the alterations of religion to the extent which appears in the Second Prayer Book and Forty-two Articles of Edward's last year. The Calvinistic doctrine professed in the household of Somerset, and perhaps really believed by him, was the thin veil by which he may have succeeded in disguising from himself the grasping ambition and absorbing covetousness which characterise all his proceedings. Cranmer was the merest tool and passive instrument in his hands, occasionally offering a feeble resistance, but always overborne by the stronger hand of his chief. His dream of uniting Lutherans and Zwinglians and opposing a united front to Rome was soon dispelled, and he went with the current, he being solitary in the council and almost alone among English bishops, whose prejudices were in favour of Lutheranism, for, indeed, he was the only one who had witnessed anything of its practical working just before he was recalled from his embassy to fill the archiepiscopal see of Canterbury.

Not only is Mr. Dixon entirely at sea as regards English politicians and divines, but he does not seem to understand the position of the foreigners whom Cranmer invited over to help him to establish unity among the divided sects of Protestantism. To speak of Peter Martyr as "the head of the Lutheran conclave at Lambeth" is a simple absurdity. Even Bucer could scarcely be spoken of as a Lutheran, though he always did his best to represent the differences between Luther and Zwingli as being of little or no importance. And when our author speaks of Ridley as not likely to maintain anything contrary to Catholic doctrine, is it possible that he could ever have read Ridley's works, or does he not recollect that Cranmer attributed his conversion from Lutheranism to Zwinglio-Calvinism to "my lord of London."

It would have been far better if Mr. Dixon had finished this volume at the end of the reign of Henry VIII. This would have been a more natural point to end a volume at, and he would have had time to read ahead of the period about which he writes, for there are many indications of his being but imperfectly acquainted with much of the proceedings of this and the following reign. For instance, he speaks of Gardiner as being the only high ecclesiastic who throughout the reigns of Henry and Edward thoroughly knew his own mind, and alludes to changes of opinion shown by him in after-times. Now, this is simply a misrepresentation of this eminent prelate, whose changes of opinion should have been spoken of as in the past and not in the future. Gardiner's early career in backing up the King against the Pope is certainly disgraceful; but the changes adopted in Edward's reign proved to his mind that the separation from the rest of the Western Church was a mistake, and he once for all retracted that mistake when he was thoroughly convinced that he was in error, and his subsequent conduct was consistent throughout. Indeed, it is difficult to conceive a greater contrast than that presented by the bullying and overbearing style of Dr. Stephens, as he was commonly at that time designated, badgering the Pope in the matter of the divorce, and the dignified conduct of the same man as Bishop of Winchester and Lord High Chancellor after England was again reconciled to the papal obedience.

We are not without hope that what we have said may induce so candid an enquirer after truth as Mr. Dixon evidently is to reconsider the judgment he has arrived at about the reforming party in Edward's reign. We had hoped to find in him an ally who would help to spread the true view of the hideous transactions of the reformers of this time. But like his predecessor in this department of history, the late Dean of Chichester, he has been unable to shake off his early prejudices as regards the character of Cranmer. He has quoted, at length, the letter which this cowardly and hypocritical prelate wrote to the King on the subject of Cromwell's condemnation; yet if Cranmer's character were to be judged solely by this letter, and the similar effusion which he penned in the case of Anne Boleyn, there would be enough to condemn him as one who was willing to sacrifice his friends to save himself. Or, again, how is it possible to imagine a man of common uprightness being all along associated with such a monster of iniquity as Henry VIII., and never incurring the displeasure of the King? We think, also, that Mr. Dixon requires to be cautioned against trusting to Fox so much. That writer did not, in general, mutilate or misrepresent documents; but the conversations he gives between bishops and their victims are entitled to no credit unless they are confirmed by other contemporary evidence.

We are sorry to find fault with Mr. Dixon; and we gladly turn to the earlier part of his volume, where there is a valuable account of the nefarious transactions connected with the surrendry (we wish he would not invent new words like surrendry) of the monasteries. He has traced the visitors from county to county, and has pointed out some of the numerous mistakes in the carelessly executed volume on the subject published by the Camden Society. We think, too, he has formed a fair and impartial estimate of the state of the monasteries at the time, and his testimony is of the more value because he cannot be suspected of any undue admiration of the monastic state.

In conclusion, we venture to suggest to Mr. Dixon a line of reading which will throw a flood of light upon the projected changes in the reign of Edward VI., viz., the notes printed in the margins or at the end of the chapters of the New Testament of Tyndale's version issued by authority from 1548 to 1553. The version itself was chosen in preference to that of the Great Bible, or Cranmer's version, because of its Calvinism; and the notes which were newly added to these little volumes were intended gradually to prepare the people for the abolition of episcopacy and the reception of Calvinistic doctrine.

NICHOLAS POCKOCK.

A HISTORY OF SLAVONIC LITERATURES.

Istoria Slavianskikh Literatour. A. N. Pipina i V. D. Spasovicha. "History of Slavonic Literatures." By A. N. Pipin and V. D. Spasovich. (St. Petersburg.)

THIS second edition of the work of Messrs. Pipin and Spasovich fills a real void in Slavonic literature. While confined to the Russian language, its circulation has necessarily been limited, but it has been now made accessible to a greater number of readers by the German translation of Herr Pech, himself of Slavonic origin. A little time ago, the work of M. Courrière was noticed in the columns of the ACADEMY. That book, on a similar subject, was hastily written, and contained many inaccuracies. The present publication has only one deficiency which prevents its being complete—the subject of Russian literature is wholly omitted. The discussion, however, of this will follow, as the editors tell us, in a separate volume. In many of the intricate questions of Slavonic philology and literature we observe that M. Pipin, while fairly stating the case on both sides, does not give the weight of his opinion to either. Thus he leaves undecided the relations between the Cyrillic and Glagolitic alphabets; and, although he speaks in a very suspicious way about the (supposed) monuments of early Bohemian literature, concerning which so keen a controversy has been raging during the last fifty years, we cannot very satisfactorily divine his own views. He shows, however, a complete knowledge of the literature on the subject, down to the last production of Sembera. Among the most serious attacks must be mentioned those lately made against the Mater Verborum Codex by Messrs. Patera and Baum. The reputation of Hanka, frequently jeopardised, is now becoming more and more tarnished.

Bulgarian literature is fully treated of in this work; much about it will be new to those not previously acquainted with M. Jireček's books. The malignant influence of Phanariot hostility upon the struggles of this unfortunate people for national life has not been overlooked. The description given of the corrupt state of society among the Constantinopolitan Greeks is fully borne out by what we read in such books as Edward Clarke's travels. The Prussian ambassador in 1779 thus describes the Phanar (cited by Pipin i. 100):—

"Le fils y apprend de bonne heure à assassiner si adroitement son père pour quelque argent qu'il ne sauroit être poursuivi. Les intrigues, les cabales, l'hypocrisie, la trahison, la perfidie, surtout l'art d'extorquer de l'argent de toutes mains y sont enseignés méthodiquement."

It was in consequence of the plots of the Greek priests that the unfortunate brothers Miladinov, editors of the best collection of Bulgarian ballads hitherto published, were thrown into a Turkish prison and met with a violent death.

In the Serbo-Croatian portion of this work due prominence is given to the labours of Dosithei Obradović and the Illyrian school under Ljudevit Gaj. Altogether the Servians may be congratulated on the very creditable figure they have made since their emancipation from the Turkish yoke. Many of the poems of Preradović, Jovanović, and Radičević are conspicuous by their genuine feeling and elegance of expression. The reader who desires to make himself acquainted with what the Serbo-Croats have done in literature (for the two are essentially the same people, although under different governments) should betake himself to the Antologija Pjesništva Hrvatskoga i Srbskoga, edited by August Senoa at Agram in 1876.

In the second volume (for the Polish portion especially) M. Pipin has had the advantage of the assistance of M. Spasovich. The great names of Polish literature are dwelt upon at proportionate length, such as Kochanowski, Mickiewicz, Krasinski, and Slowacki, writers who ought to be better known to the English public than they generally are. In the first we have the chief poet of the Renaissance in Poland. Kochanowski was fully persuaded of his own immortality; but his prophecy, uttered after the manner of Horace, has not yet been fully verified—

"Moscow and the Tatars shall hear of me,
And the English inhabitants of a remote world,
The German and the warlike Spaniard know me,
And he who drinks the deep waters of the Tiber."

Of many of the more celebrated poems an analysis is given, such as the Marya of Malczewski and the fantastic Irydion of Krasinski. By-the-way, it may be mentioned that, although this strange mystic is almost unknown in England, there is a translation into English by an American lady, Martha

Cook, published at Philadelphia in 1875. And I may also recommend those who wish to become acquainted with the great Polish trio, Mickiewicz, Slowacki, and Krasinski, to read Cybulski's Geschichte der polnischen Dichtkunst (Posen, 1880).

The Bohemian portion of the work is very ample, and carried down to the latest productions in the language. This will prove serviceable to those who cannot make use of the admirable Anthologie of M. Jireček; but the plan of M. Pipin's work covers much more ground. Ample space is given to the writings of Vrchlicky (Emil Frida), a remarkable poet, who deserves to be better known, and the sweet lyrics of Zeyer, Neruda, M^{me}. Krasnohorska, Sládek, and others. This complete and well-written work concludes with an account of the scanty literature of the Lusatian Wends, who form a small island, as it were, in a Teutonic ocean. It is, indeed, astonishing, and may console any depressed nationality, when we reflect what this courageous little people has done, cut in two as they are, and divided between Saxony and Prussia. In spite of vexatious laws and the affected contempt of their German masters, they still publish a variety of useful books, and their Casopis, or journal, appears twice a year. The Dictionary of this language, published by Dr. Pfuhl in 1866, is of considerable value, not merely to the Slavonic scholar, but to the student of comparative philology generally.

Of the discussions of the editors on that bugbear of certain minds, Panslavism, I shall, on the present occasion, say nothing. In some points one feels inclined to challenge the opinions of MM. Pipin and Spasovich; thus the refusal to concede a high place to Vrchlicky, because he has but rarely chosen national subjects, seems unjust to his great merits. On the whole, however, the criticism exhibited in the book is sound, especially on the subjects of Slavonic mythology and the forgeries of Verковиć. Two points may be casually mentioned upon which the editors appear to have gone wrong. Linde, the Polish philologist, was not of German, but of Swedish, extraction (see Zapiski Shishkova, ii. 361); and it is a somewhat whimsical statement that the very clever Latin lyrics of the Jesuit Sarbiewski are still studied in the English schools. His poems are indeed read by the learned, but by them only, and a few lines from them have become stock quotations among people who have little or no idea of their author. Before concluding my notice I must mention with commendation the little historical summaries prefixed to the chapters, which are very useful, and the complete table of the Slavonic languages and dialects, which is more accurate than those given by Schafarik, and Schleicher.

WILLIAM R. MORFILL.

NEW NOVELS.

Washington Square: The Pension Beaurepas: A Bundle of Letters. By Henry James, Jun. In 2 vols. (Macmillan.)

Queenie's Whim. By Rosa Nouchette Carey. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Idonea. By Anne Beale. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Story of Autumn. By Mrs. Comyns Carr. (Remington.)

IN Washington Square Mr. James has struck a new chord and achieved a new success. He has not only had the audacity to choose for his heroine a girl plain, awkward, and wholly devoid of charm, and the skill to enlist all our sympathies on her side, but he has allotted the other parts in his drama to three people whom we either disapprove or dislike, while we yet regard their strategic movements with absorbing interest. Finally, he has dared to fill a volume and a-half with the discussion of a possible marriage between the rich heiress and her penniless suitor, though contriving to the very last to keep us in suspense as to the result. Nothing, it may be said, can exceed the simplicity of the problem to be solved. Catherine Sloper—who we feel sure was destined by nature to be called Charlotte—was the daughter of a New York physician in good practice, who had married a rich lady now dead. At the age of twenty she had not outgrown her childish unattractiveness, and it was consequently a matter of surprise and gratitude to her to become the object of the attentions of handsome young Morris Townsend. Her father, considering the matter from the point of view of the most unprejudiced observer, decided at once that the young man was mercenary, and that a stop must be put to the whole affair. In this, however, he found that he had reckoned without his daughter. Catherine opposed a dutiful but steady front, and was supported in her resistance by the counsels of her aunt, Mrs. Penniman, ever anxious to be romantic by proxy. Mrs. Penniman is one of the most delightful people it has been our lot to meet with in fiction. Her elaborate affectations, her untiring efforts to produce a sense of mystery about her surroundings, and the extraordinary inappropriateness of her expressions when speaking of the result, all make up a whole which is one of the very best sketches of the sort that has ever been done. Only once have we seen anything at all like her, and that was in the representation of Dame Pluche by M^{me}. Jouassain. Mrs. Penniman is absolutely without moral sense as we understand it. It was nothing to her that she was encouraging Catherine to disobey her father, that she was urging her to risk her happiness in a clandestine marriage, and that she was receiving in her brother's house a guest of whom she knew he disapproved, for Mrs. Penniman had long since sacrificed truth, sense, and taste on the altar of Romance. So she was quite at ease when she made an appointment with the unwilling Mr. Townsend in a low restaurant in the purlieus of New York, going with a reticule on her arm in order to look "like a woman of the people," the object of the interview being to entreat him to marry Catherine at once and trust to the doctor relenting afterwards. She had no scruples when, in giving her sister an account of an interview she had had with Catherine, in which the latter had not only declined to pour out any confidences, but had very nearly turned her aunt from the room, she observed that Catherine had told her "she had a genius for consolation," because to have stated the facts as they really were would have spoilt the attitude of love-lorn maiden which it was proper her niece should assume. No better foil could have been provided for Catherine. In her we see a maiden about as different from the introspective heroines of latter-day novels as can well be imagined. Her nature, commonplace in most respects, was lifted into something almost like heroism by its steadfastness. She was true, not only to her idea of her lover and to her duty to her father, but also to her duty to herself. In spite of continued want of sympathy and occasional brutality on the part of her father, she was willing to wait till she could gain his consent, without ever showing, in voice or manner, that she considered herself harshly treated—a neglect of her opportunities deeply resented by Mrs. Penniman. It was only when she had been stung by a long course of irony and insult that she made up her mind to take the matter into her own hands; but even then her revolt, though open, was reticent. One fine touch we cannot help noticing. When near the close of his life, Dr. Sloper asked Catherine to give him a promise that she would never marry the man whose mercenary schemes had been years before placed beyond a doubt. She declined to give the promise, though a large portion of her fortune was at stake. She knew she could never marry Morris Townsend as he had revealed himself to be, but she instinctively felt that the refusal must be the result of her own nature, and not the result of external pressure. Mr. James has frequently been charged with not being able to tell a story; but is there one among his novels where we can guess with certainty how the characters will act, or what the end is to be? Even in Washington Square we tremble at the last; for when the Ethiopian had changed his skin to that extent that Mrs. Penniman had held her tongue for seventeen years on the subject of Catherine's matrimonial intentions, we cannot predict that a similar change may not have taken place in Catherine herself. Fortunately, she found she could not piece together the broken Dagon, and replace him on his pedestal. Those who have been oppressed by the dreariness of the foreign tour taken by Dr. and Miss Sloper will turn with delight to the boarding-house experiences of Miss Miranda Hope in Paris. A Bundle of Letters contains the sketches of the inmates of this Parisian establishment by each other's pens, beginning with a young lady of enquiring mind from Bangor, U.S., to whom everything was real interesting, who could see no impropriety in anything out of the Decalogue, but whose innocence and simplicity had instinctively shielded her. We have the sweet, elegant, somewhat prolix letter of the high-born English girl, whose long, clinging, embroidered dress, decorated with a row of "spinal buttons," called forth the admiration of the gentlemen and the reprobation of the ladies. A young American aesthetic gentleman pours forth his experiences to his kindred spirit in Boston, and classes days according to the schools of painting to which they belong, and speaks of a past episode in his life as "gray and cottony—he might almost say woolly," in tone. These and many more equally characteristic make up some of the most amusing pages Mr. James has ever written.

There is much that is clever and even interesting about Queenie's Whim. The characters are, for the most part, true to life, and there are some pretty studies of simple, homely, country people dwelling on the edge of the lakes and the moors. But we should have been better pleased had the heroine, who is intended to be a modest maiden, not fallen in love quite so promptly with the hero, himself on the verge of an engagement with another young lady. This young person, the daughter of a neighbouring clergyman, forcibly reminds us of Miss Majoribanks in the excellent way in which she performs her own duties and tries to perform other people's. She also is in love with the masterful hero, Garth Clayton; but, in her efforts to manage the affair after her own fashion, alienates him completely. The antagonism between the two girls, which is totally incomprehensible to the object of their affection, is very well indicated. Queenie—for such is the odious name of the heroine—has on her side the advantages attaching to a new-comer; but she is terribly handicapped by a fortune that is left to her while she is visiting Garth's sisters, for Garth has repeatedly and somewhat unnecessarily declared his intention never to marry a woman with money. The "whim" is that she suppresses the fact of the money for some time, in order that Garth may fall in love with her while she is the village schoolmistress at Hepshaw. Of course he finds out, and declines to speak, and it requires the intervention of Emmie, Queenie's little sister, to put things straight. Emmie is meant to be pathetic, but only succeeds in being rather wearisome. However, she writes on her death-bed the orthodox letter to Garth, hears him make his confession, sees him put the ring on her sister's finger, and departs in peace.

Idonea is one of those tales which appear in such numbers during the year, and are meant to satisfy the craving for excitement existing in the human mind in the most harmless manner. There are plenty of poisonous-looking snakes in this garden of Eden; but, on closer acquaintance, we find that their fangs are drawn. In Idonea there is a lady who has left home under very suspicious circumstances; and, after thinking the worst of her for many years, her relations discover that she is the most virtuous of her sex, and has been caring for the two children of a friend. Then there is the wicked baronet, who tries to make love to Idonea, and engages himself to another lady, but who is unmasked on the eve of the ceremony by his lawful wife. The heroine herself, a bright, pleasant girl, is the most successful study in the book; but we cannot speak so highly of either her lover or brother. Miss Beale has crowded her canvas with too many figures, with the result of a blurred conception on the mind of the reader.

A Story of Autumn is the history of one old maid told by another. The heroine is the shy daughter of an old country rector, and at the age of seventeen gets engaged to a man of the world many years her senior. The marriage is, however, broken off at the last minute by the malice of one of her cousins, who discloses the fact that the hero, Capt. Ducane, would have been married long before had not wilful misrepresentation caused a separation between him and his fiancée. On hearing this, Madge breaks off her engagement without alleging any reason, either to her lover or her father, who take the matter more quietly than could have been expected. The story is prettily told, and has some touches of description which show that Mrs. Comyns Carr is an observer of nature. Is she not, however, inaccurate in a minute point of costume when she dresses a young lady thirty-two years ago in a sealskin jacket? Such things were unknown to our mothers, and would assuredly have been deemed out of place for a young girl.

LEONORA B. LANG.

RECENT VERSE.

Scenes and Songs. By Gerald Bendall. (Barrett.) We cannot better criticise Mr. Bendall than by saying that his volume suggests to the reviewer the writing of a poem to be entitled "Any Critic to any Poet." We once knew a reviewer of the old school—may his soul rest in peace!—who, after reading a certain volume of verse, exclaimed, "Oh, you sir, why aren't you better?" The question of that ancient friend of ours has recurred to us constantly during the perusal of Scenes and Songs. The chief thing in the book—"The Assassination of Buckingham"—would have been altogether admirable if there never had been such a person as Mr. Robert Browning; while even as it is it exhibits a carefulness in its verse to which Mr. Browning rarely condescends, side by side, it must be admitted, with occasional dips into the bathos to which Mr. Browning also does not condescend. The next thing in the book would have been wholly admirable if there never had been such a person as Mr. Morris; while the author's management of the mixed anapaestic and spondaic trimeter would also be a thing to be admired without alloy if Mr. Tennyson and Mr. Swinburne had not written. As it is, we can only say that Mr. Bendall, if he desires to show how well he can hunt old trails, has completely achieved his quest. That he might do something better than this is tolerably evident, and we can produce no stronger proof than the penultimate poem in the book. It is not the best thing contained therein, but it is the most original:—

"METHUSELAH AND THE ANGEL.

- "Methuselah lived on a mountain
Five hundred years and a day,
And at eve as he sat by his fountain,
An angel came down the way.
"You live without roof, tile, or rafter
To cover your reverend head;
Why not build for the years that come after
A dwelling?" God's messenger said.
"Asked the patriarch, 'How many seasons
Must pass ere my life will be o'er?'
Quoth the angel, 'I've very good reasons
For supposing five hundred or more.'
"O! life is a vapour, a bubble,'
Said the sage without turning his face;
'And it seems to me scarce worth the trouble
To provide for so trifling a space."

This is doggerel if anybody chooses to say so. But the man who can write in this original fashion, and who can give his writing the finished turns which he has given to his poems which are merely imitative, could, if he put his horses together, do something that would last.

The Golden Queen. By E. A. Sloano. (Griffith and Farran.) We fear there is nothing to be said for Mr. Sloano. His book is a poem in five cantos entitled "Woe! Woe!" At least, it deals with the Indian tribes of North America, and it contains such couplets as the following:—

"He paused a moment, there to take a view
What well-directed industry could do."

The Golden Queen is worth a moment's pause in order to see what ill-directed industry can do.

XXXVI. Lyrics and XII. Sonnets. By T. B. Aldrich. (Boston, U.S.: Houghton, Mifflin and Co.) It has been said that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery. If it be so Mr. Andrew Lang must be sincerely flattered by this book. The title, the arrangement of the title, the format, and the ornament on cover and title-page are evidently copied directly from his recent volume of Ballades in Blue China. We have no objection to the model, but it is perhaps not superfluous to refer American authors to a certain very well-known story of Bishop Latimer. The contents of the volume are extracted from previously published works of Mr. Aldrich's, and therefore they require no detailed criticism. We have seen stronger American verse; but the fashion of title, it is well to warn aspiring American bards, may be pushed too far. Numerical description of contents is doubtless honest, but when the contents are simply selections it grows otiose. We might come, it is clear, to the style of emigrant ships: "Embarked 173 and three-quarters statute adults on such-and-such a day."

Thirty Years' Poems Old and New. By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." (Macmillan.) This elegantly printed and well-filled volume contains, perhaps, ten thousand verses, more or less, and detailed criticism of it would be somewhat out of place. Except a few ferocious champions of her own sex, everybody admits the literary skill, the admirable moral tone, and the amiable domestic tendencies of Mrs. Craik. Perhaps she is not a heaven-born poetess. But she not seldom reaches a region which is very near to the heavenly country; and no better example of this faculty of hers can be given than some lines which are widely known, but not so widely known, perhaps, as they should be.

"AN OLD IDEA.

- "Stream of my life, dull placid river, flow.
I have no fear of the ingulfing seas;
Neither I look before me nor behind,
But lying mute, with wave-dipped hand, float on.
"It was not always so. My brethren, see
This oar-stained trembling palm. It keeps the sign
Of youth's mad wrestling with the waves that drift
Immudably, eternally, along.
"I would have had them flow through fields and flowers
Giving and taking freshness, perfume, joy.
It winds through—here. Be silent, O my soul.
The finger of God's wisdom drew its line.
"So I lean back and look up to the stars,
And count the ripples circling to the shore,
And watch the solemn river rolling on Until it widens to the open sea."

The amateurs of "criticism of life" have nothing to complain of here, and technical criticism can almost, if not entirely, excuse a certain laxness of string. Much else of the same sort is to be found in this volume, and not a little which is as worthy in matter and more carefully adjusted in manner.

Songs in the Twilight. By the Rev. C. D. Bell. (Nisbet.) Verse of a wholly or mainly devotional character which is not presumptuous or wholly inept is by the law of its being exempt from severe criticism. It has a public and a purpose of its own with which purely literary censorship has nothing to do. Mr. Bell's volume has a rule of this sort.

A Sheaf gleaned in French Fields. By Toru Dutt. (O. Kegan Paul and Co.) That the translations of that lamented and remarkable example of Asiatic precocity, Miss Toru Dutt, should have gone into a new edition is, if we look to their merit only, not in the least surprising. The author had an extraordinary feeling for literature, and a wonderful faculty for transverting. Standing, as she did, at a distance almost equally great from English and from French, she was probably free from some of the difficulties which beset ordinary translators. Certain it is that few Englishers have been so successful in giving the flavour of French verse from du Bellay to Baudelaire to English verse as Toru Dutt. Her critical views as given in notes are, as was only to be expected, sometimes a little crude, but they show extraordinary acuteness. For personal interest mingled with interest purely literary the volume had, and has, a very unusual claim on readers both in France and England.

Verses. By E. M. Harris. (G. Bell and Sons.) The distinguishing note of these Verses—a note which lifts them a long way above their fellows—is a rare union of subdued humour with considerable science of verse. Miss Harris is not a comic poetess—God forbid!—but she rarely writes in a high key, and her low keys are very delicately adjusted so as to catch the ear with a music which is neither vulgar nor “precious.” Poetry of this kind (for in its way it is certainly poetry, and not merely verse) suffers from quotation, because the amount of it which should be quoted in order to attune the reader's ear to its peculiar melody is somewhat too great for a short notice. The book, however, has given us no little pleasure; and it may be taken as one of the innumerable proofs of the folly of those critics who think that, if they were to set before them the principle of accepting verse merely because it is good verse, nothing but immorality and irreligion would pass muster. The true poetical critic knows better. There is not a single line in Miss Harris's book which a blushing curate might not read to his maiden aunt with a certainty of her approval of its sentiments, and yet it commends itself to any critic who demands of verse that it shall be verse, and not something else.

Pygmalion in Cyprus. By G. E. Lancaster. (Clowes and Son.) Mr. Lancaster's Preface is, we must confess, more interesting to us than his poems, and yet even to his Preface we cannot accord much space. Mr. Lancaster puts a question to the world and his critics which many writers of verse have put before. He says: “Cur ego versiculos non scribam? I have thought, I have felt, and the other fellows, though they may have thought and felt too, have not thought my thoughts or felt my feelings.” We give his sense if not his words. The answer is obvious. There is no reason why Mr. Lancaster should not write verse which is doubtless a satisfaction to him; there is every reason why he should not publish it. For he must remember that the reader has no more thought his thoughts or felt his feelings than the other poets have. But the other poets, or least some of them, succeed in making the reader think their thoughts and feel their feelings. Mr. Lancaster, to judge from our experience (and we have read his verses in no unfriendly spirit), does not do this.

John the Baptist: an Epic Poem. By H. C. Leonard, M.A. (J. Clarke.) We may have remarked before that an epic poem in fifty or sixty pages is a thing to be thankful for. If we have, we can only apologise to Mr. Leonard for putting him off with a second-hand criticism. We cannot think of any more appropriate.

Dolores: a Theme with Variations. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) Dolores is a tale in verse of considerable length delivered in varying metres. Except epics and tragedies, tales in verse are probably the most difficult things to do. There are at this present moment exactly two Englishmen and no more who can do them. The author of Dolores does not add a third to the number.

Poetry for Boys. Selected by D. Munro. (G. Bell and Sons.) Mr. Munro says that he does not know any book containing a selection of lyrical poetry only for school use. The Golden Treasury suggests itself, but perhaps he would reply that this appeals rather to adults than to school-boys. His own is a very good selection, full of interest, not limited to any school of poetry, and including the best things of most schools. If we have a fault to find with it it is that, with a very few exceptions, it is confined to poets of the last two centuries. Boys should not so learn English poetry. But if we remark the absent we have no fault to find with the present.

The Birthday Book of German Literature By J. W. L. (T. Lanrie.) Of birthday books there is no end. But if they must exist we have seen many worse and not many better than J. W. L.'s. The fault of it—a common one with its class—is that the quotations are frequently lacking in personal and direct application.

The Ingoldsby Lyrics. (Bentley.) This volume is an indispensable accompaniment to the Ingoldsby Legends. There have been so many editions of these latter, and their contents have been so various, that Mr. Barham has almost necessarily included in this volume some things which possessors of the famous book in its complete form already know. But much will be new even to faithful students of their Ingoldsby; and among the novelties we may mention “A London Eclogue,” an interview between Lord Anglesey and Daniel O'Connell, which may or may not take the place of pansies (“for thoughts”) in the bouquet at the present time.

Fancy, and other Rhymes. By J. Sibree. (Tribner.) Mr. Sibree's is such a very small book that we have no heart to quarrel greatly with it. The chief poem contains a kind of sketch of the great poets and poems of the world. Fancy loquittur. We do not know that we like the account of the genesis of these things which Fancy gives; but Fancy is nothing if not fanciful.

Shakespeare's Dream, and other Poems. By William Leighton. (Lippincott.) This is a thin but stately quarto containing the poetical visions that Mr. Leighton's soul has seen. It is introduced by a not unnecessary apology to the poet whose name it takes in vain. Here is Mr. Leighton's account of the divine William:

“Through all the action of each moving scene
We hear the Pythia's wild responsive cries,
While in each pause her ecstasies between
The poet's notes of melody arise.

“Nor e'er Apollo from Olympian skies
Sent through his priestess shrieks so true reply,
To his fond worshippers empassioned sighs.
As breathes, O Shakespeare, from your poesies
The questionings of the soul to still and satisfy.”

Shakspeare and shrieks is, we must admit, a good concatenation, and does credit to the imaginer. Love's Labour's Lost has, however, saved us the trouble of criticism. “For Alisander, alas! you see how 'tis. A little o'erparted.” Mr. Leighton is, we doubt not, an excellent neighbour and a very good bowler; but as an introducer of Shakspeare to the world in verse he is a little o'erparted.

Sonnets, and other Poems. By Maurice Penderick. (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.) We have not often come across a more difficult book to criticise than Mr. Penderick's. It is not bulky; it contains some fifty or sixty sonnets, and perhaps sufficient miscellaneous poems—all of them short—to fill up the century. In expression and in thought the pieces are almost invariably good. “Cupid and the Upas” only wants a sharper and more original mould impressed on it to be a very striking poem, and the same might be said of most of the rest. Mr. Penderick's voice is by no means an echo for the most part; but, as it has the opposite fault to the fault of the mere echo, it is undecided. The lines, smooth and flowing, just come short of the necessary crispness of movement; the expression, apt enough in its way, just comes short of remarkable appropriateness; the thought, acute and sometimes novel, just fails of striking utterance. At the same time it is fair to say that there are writers now living who have been exalted to the skies by Cabinet Ministers and archbishops whose best work is inferior to Mr. Penderick's.

Alma Mater, and other Poems. By W. Richardson. (Glasgow: Hadden.) Mr. Richardson tells us (or rather he borrows the words to tell us) that “there is a pleasure in poetic pains that only poets know.” The peculiar poetic pains which Mr. Richardson has experienced would seem to be an entire inability to master sense, grammar, rhythm, and rhyme. That this is painful we can well believe; as for its being pleasurable we must take Mr. Richardson's word for it. He seems to have been at some time or other a student of the University of Glasgow; and he has put together in these pages some seven or eight thousand (at a rough estimate) of the formless, and frequently almost meaningless, verso which may be observed in the poets' corners of the lower kind of country newspapers. Here is a stanza of Mr. Richardson's anent Hypatia:—

“He instigated wiley monks, that busy, grasping lot,
Who burn with zeal intolerant to all free speech and thought,
To go and do a fiendish deed—in ambush lie await,
And seize her when no one was near with furious, raging hate.”

Here is another on William the Conqueror:—

“There lived a Norman duke, no stronger one could he,
Begat [!!!] by fair Arletta, a tanner's daughter she,
And whom his father met beneath the cliff,
Falaise,
Who swore to her by God she was above all praise.”

It would be cruel to criticise Mr. Richardson if he had not deserved it by profaning Erkkinig and Die Grenadiere with translations into his doggerel. He dedicates his rubbish to “the gentle spirit of humanity”—i.e., classic learning. That spirit might have taught him not to insult the masterpieces of Goethe and Heine.

NOTES AND NEWS.

A PROPOSAL is under consideration by the leading spelling reformers of Germany to hold an international congress in Berlin at the same time as the congress of Orientalists in September. The subjects suggested for consideration are the formation of a common alphabet for Europe, of a common alphabet for the East, and, finally, of a universal alphabet.

MESSRS. LONGMANS AND CO. announce an important work by Mr. Thomas Brassey, entitled Recent Naval Administration. The whole work will consist of eight volumes, of which the two first, on “English and Foreign Ships of War,” with illustrations by the Chevalier E. de Martino, are already in the press. The same publishers have also nearly ready for publication The History of Ancient Egypt, in two volumes, with a map and numerous illustrations, by Prof. Rawlinson.

MR. TENNYSON'S song of the sisters, "O Diviner Air," from his new volume of poems, has been set as a duet by Mr. Arthur Sullivan, and will appear in that form in the Leisure Hour for April.

MR. F. REGINALD STATHAM'S book on South Africa, which we announced last week as in preparation, will, we understand, be published immediately by Messrs. Macmillan and Co.

THE same publishers will shortly issue a small volume on The English Garden, by Mr. Henry A. Bright, whose similar book, on A Year in a Lancashire Garden, appeared last year.

On a Raft and through the Desert is the title of an account of travels through Mesopotamia by Mr. Tristram J. Ellis, which will shortly be published in two volumes by Messrs. Field and Tuer, of "Ye Leadenhalle Presse." The author has illustrated his narrative by thirty-eight etchings, including scenes in Kurdistan, Mosul, Baghdad, on the Euphrates and the Tigris, and in the great Syrian desert.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS AND NORGATE have in the press a new translation of the Prophecies of Isaiah, by the Rev. J. M. Rodwell, translator of The Book of Job, The Koran, &c.

In the examination of certain documents in the national archives at Paris relating to the order of Knights of Jerusalem, an autograph signature of Corneille has been discovered. It is appended to a list of the lands occupied by the poet under the commanderie of Sainte-Vaubourg, at Val-de-la-Haye, near Rouen, bearing date 1653. The interest of this discovery is twofold—first, because only five or six genuine autographs of Corneille are known to exist; and second, as attesting the wealth which the poet once had, and lost. The autograph has been placed under a glass frame in the gallery open to the public.

WE understand that Cassell's Household Guide is now being revised, with a view to its re-issue in serial form at an early date.

WE are promised from a Leipzig firm an important monograph on the religion of the Sikhs, by Dr. Ernst Trumpp, professor in the University of Munich, whose edition of the Adi Granth, or Sikh Scriptures, was published by the Indian Government in 1877.

OTHER forthcoming German publications are August von Kotzebue: Urtheile der Zeitgenossen und der Gegenwart, by W. von Kotzebue; and a biography of Cyril of Alexandria, by Dr. J. Kopallik, of Vienna.

NOT a few of our readers will be glad to hear that, as one of the results of the late change of Ministry in Spain, Don Pascual Gayangos has received an appointment as Director of Public Instruction.

The Tribune Reflects is the title of a satire, by Mr. St. John Brenon, on the Land League Agitation, which Messrs. Reeves and Turner will publish next week.

MR. H. H. STATHAM will, on Thursday next (March 17), give the first of a course of four lectures at the Royal Institution on "Ornament, Historically and Critically considered;" and the Rev. H. R. Haweis will, on Saturday next (March 19), give the first of a course of four lectures on "American Humorists."

WE take the following from the Publishers' Weekly of New York:—Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin and Co. announce Early Spring in Massachusetts, a volume comprising selections from the journal of Thoreau. These have been chosen and edited, with an Introduction, by Mr. H. G. O. Blake, who received all Thoreau's MSS. at the death of Sophia Thoreau. Messrs. Gebbie and Co. have nearly ready the first volume of The Library of Choice Literature, edited by Mr. A. R. Spofford, Librarian of Congress, and Mr. Chas. Gibbon. The work will be completed in eight volumes, and will be illustrated with steel engravings. They will also issue early next month a second edition (revised to date) of L. B. Phillips' Biographical Dictionary.

THE Surtees Society is now issuing Dialogi Laurentii Dunelmensis, pp. xxxviii.—92, edited by Canon Raine, and the first volume of the York Breviary, pp. xxi.—cols. 944, edited by Mr. Lawley.

A LITTLE work entitled, Who was Scotland's First Printer? by Mr. Robert Dickson, F.S.A., shows that although Walter Chapman has hitherto enjoyed the distinction of being thought the first printer in Scotland, that honour really belongs to Andrew Miller, who printed a book as early as the year 1505.

THE New York Times states that Francis Parkman is diligently working upon his history of the French Seven Years' War and the career of Montcalm, for which during his recent visit to Europe he made large accessions in the way of unpublished matter. He is obliged to wait for further important materials from England before the work can be completed. It has grown upon his hands into two volumes instead of one, and still another volume will be required before his story of the French occupation of North America will be complete.

THE first part of the Schweizerische Idiotikon, by Tobler and Staub, is announced as ready for publication by J. Huber, of Frauenfeld.

M. ULYSSES MATHÉY-HENRI, of Locle, has presented to the Public Library of Neuchâtel a collection of documents and notes illustrating Neuchâtel history. They cover no less than 9,000 folio pages, and are the results of forty years of research and labour.

HERR ALFRED HARTMANN is collecting and editing the works of Georg Krutter, the Solothurn poet. A complete edition of his writings has long been wished for in Switzerland. It is expected that they will fill four volumes. The expense is borne by the so-called Töpfergesellschaft of Solothurn.

MR. HENRY DUNNING MACLEOD will deliver a lecture on "The Modern Science of Economics" at the meeting of the Institute of Bankers on Wednesday next.

THE American Shaksperians are happily taking to chaff Judge Holmes's book showing that Bacon wrote Shakspeare's plays. Mr. J. F. Clarke, in the North American Review, has turned Judge Holmes's argument round, and proved that Shakspeare wrote Bacon's works; while the Literary World (of Boston) has just demonstrated, in Judge Holmes's style, that Bacon wrote Fletcher's works as well as Shakspeare's. Now that ridicule has got well hold of the Bacon theory, the latter's speedy death is sure.

MR. W. J. ROLFE is proceeding diligently with his School and College Series of Shakspeare's plays. The Taming of the Shrew and All's Well that Ends Well will be out next week. Of Coriolanus, 250 pages are in proof. The Comedy of Errors and Cymbeline will be the next in order.

DR. HUGO BRUNNER, of Gudensberg, has just published at Halle an able dissertation on the Old-French poem of Aucassin et Nicolette. Dr. Hermann Seeger, of Halberstadt, has also published at Halle his Doctor's Dissertation on the Language of Guillaume, le Clerc de Normandie, and on the author and sources of the Old-French "Life of Tobias."

DR. R. PÜSCHEL has edited, and Herr Damköhler, of Berlin, will shortly publish, Le Livre du Chemin de long Estude, by Cristine de Pizan. The editor has collated seven MSS., preserved at Paris, Brussels, and Berlin.

DR. BLASS has just published a second edition of his Hyperidea, incorporating the results obtained by a fresh collation of the papyri in England last summer. A new edition of his Antiphon is likewise in the press.

It may be news to some that a fortnightly Review, intended to serve as the organ of the leading Mussulman scholars, has been appearing for the last six months in Constantinople, under the title of Medjmouaia Ebou-Zia. The yearly subscription is twelve shillings, and the agents are Messrs. Lorentz and Keil, of Constantinople.

THE late Judge Charles E. Forbes has left about 300,000 dols. (£60,000) to establish a free library in the town of Northampton, Massachusetts. The will provides that one-half shall be known as a book fund, and the income shall be used to obtain scientific and historical works principally, although every phase of literature is to be represented except sectarian religious works. Should the town not accept this bequest within three years then the whole of his property goes to Harvard College to found certain professorships.

AT the meeting of the Clifton Shakspeare Society held on the 26th ult., reports in connexion with 1 Henry IV. were presented upon the following subjects:—"Historical References," by Mr. C. P. Harris, B.A.; "Rare Words and Phrases," by Mr. L. M. Griffiths; "Plants and Animals," by Dr. J. E. Shaw. Papers on "Falstaff," by Miss Constance O'Brien and Mr. J. W. Mills, B.A., were read. Some comments were made on the question whether Shakspeare was indebted to a living original for the character of Falstaff. It was pointed out that it had been thought there were sufficient points of resemblance between Falstaff and Bobadil in Every Man in his Humour to justify the belief that there was at the time some man, well known to Shakspeare and Ben Jonson, whose failings were by them either exaggerated or caricatured in these respective characters.

ON the 20th ult., the church of Northaw, in Hertfordshire, was entirely destroyed by fire, together with all the parish registers. Fortunately, Mr. J. E. Cussans, when collecting materials for his History of Hertfordshire, had recently made copies of all the inscriptions in the church, together with some of the registers from 1564 to 1753. These have been usefully printed in the Hertfordshire Standard.

WE regret that the Annual Report of the University College and Free Library Committee at Nottingham for 1879-80 should not be more satisfactory than it is. The most progressive part of the work seems to be the opening of local reading-rooms. Perhaps it is not altogether undesirable that institutions of so much promise in the future should make their way at first slowly and with effort.

ON Friday, the 18th inst., will be published at Glasgow the first number of Quiz, a comic illustrated weekly paper.

A COMMITTEE has been formed at Madrid, under the presidency of the late Prime Minister, Señor Canovas del Castillo, to celebrate the bi-centenary of the poet Calderon, who died on May 25, 1681. A poetical competition in connexion with the event will be held in England, Germany, and other countries.

AT the last meeting of the Académie Française it was resolved not to give any prizes this year for poetry, all the pieces sent in being marked by "une faiblesse déplorable." The same subject, "Eloge de Lamartine," has been appointed for 1883. Next year the Académie will award its prize for eloquence, the subject being "Eloge de Rotrou."

M. WURTZ, the eminent chemist and member of the Institute, has just been nominated mayor of the seventh arrondissement of Paris. The list of Paris mayors also includes the names of M. Henri Martin, the historian; MM. Koechlin-Schwartz and Emile Ferry; besides that of M. Denis Poulet, a working-man, whose Sublime is said to have been made great use of by Zola in his Assommoir.

A SERIES for domestic reading, or rather for young readers, is announced from Naples, under the title of the "Biblioteca Azzurra," which is, of course, meant to suggest the well-known Bibliothèque rose. The first of the series will be a translation of The Ogilvies, which was, we believe, the first work written by the author of John Halifax, Gentleman. The translation is by Signora Salazara, who is also the editor of the series.

IN an article in the Revue politique et littéraire M. Flammarion gives a sad account of the condition of the archives of the French Ministry of Marine, which, it will be remembered, includes the Colonial department. Not only are the documents badly arranged, but there is nothing worthy of the name of catalogue or index. It would be impossible to exaggerate the importance of these records from the historical point of view. They include 641 volumes of royal decrees and Ministerial despatches from 1662 to 1789, beginning with the time of Colbert; and 280 volumes concerning the early period of the French settlements in India. It is proposed that, following the example of the Foreign department, a mixed commission of naval officers and historical experts should be appointed to superintend the necessary work of cataloguing.

WE extract the following from the Revue critique:—A new edition is announced of the Maximes of Larochehoucauld, edited by M. J. F. Thénard; also two new volumes by M. Paul Albert, one containing criticism on the principal poets of the nineteenth century from André Chénier to Victor Hugo, with a Preface and extracts by M. Sully-Prudhomme, the other being a résumé of his lectures delivered at the College of France upon the origin of Romanticism. Prof. Zimmer, of Berlin, will shortly publish a reproduction of the three Old-Irish glossaries (Codex Paulinus of Wurzburg, Codex Bedae, and Codex Prisciani of Karlsruhe) upon which the Grammatica Celtica of Zeuss was mainly based. The work will also contain a considerable number of fragments of Old Irish collated by Prof. Zimmer in the various libraries of Europe, together with a critical commentary and a dissertation upon the abbreviations to be found in ancient Irish MSS.

THOSE Shakspeare libraries whose custodians are proud of possessing the earliest prints of all Shakspeare's documents should take note of the fact that the Bill, Answer, and Replication in the unsuccessful Chancery suit of the poet's father and mother, John Shakspeare and Mary his wife, against John Lambert, their nephew, for the recovery of Mary Shakspeare's Ashbies property, were first printed in 1827 in vol. i. of the Calendar of the Proceedings in Chancery, in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth; to which are prefixed Examples of Earlier Proceedings in that Court, from Richard II. to Queen Elizabeth, folio.

THE Vienna University is developing its English Department. Besides its regular professor, Dr. Schiffer, it has now a privat-docent for the history of English language and literature, Dr. Alois Brandl, who, on March 3, delivered his first lecture, "On S. T. Coleridge and his Relation to German Literature," and who, in the summer term, will lecture on English literature in the eighteenth century. Moreover, Dr. A. Schöer, of Vienna, is now in England preparing his editions of the Anglo-Saxon version of the Rule of St. Benet, and the rare and racy "Comedye concernynge the Lawes of Nature, Moses, and Christ, corrupted by the Sodomytes, Pharisees, and Popystes, most wycked Compyled by Johan Bale; Anno M.D.XXXVIII." We have only one complete and one incomplete copy of this book, and shall have to thank Germany for its reprint, as we had seven years ago to thank it for the reprint of Alceida. The latest notice of the importance of the book is by a French critic, Dr. J. J. Jusserand.

IN the ACADEMY of March 5, p. 170, col. 2, read "£3 6s. 8d." for "£30 6s. 8d.," as the equivalent of ten angels.

WITH reference to the review in the ACADEMY of February 2 of The Brides of Ardmore, by Agnes Smith, the authoress writes to us as follows:—

"With the exception of the concluding paragraph, the Preface is as much fiction as any part of the book. So far from my having discovered any 'diary,' the very name of the ancient convent of Killeheehan is all but forgotten locally. I thought myself justified by the high example of Scott (Old Mortality) in trying to increase the illusion of my readers by this device."

DR. INGLEBY wishes us to correct an error in his letter on "Shakspeare's 'Vllorxa.'" The first-named palaeographer should have been "Mr. James Gairdner," not Richard, the gentleman referred to being the Assistant-Keeper of the Public Record Office.

THE editors of the Westminster Review write to us that the article on "Paul and Seneca," in the Rivista Europea of February 16, originally appeared in the October number of the Westminster. The author of the article has also written to us to the same effect; and we can certify that he is an Englishman.

Ambulance Lectures, by Dr. L. A. Weatherly (Griffith and Farran), has now reached its eighth thousand. What is more, it merits the wide circulation which it has attained.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have sent us a third and cheaper edition of The Makers of Florence, by Mrs. Oliphant. The fine portrait of Savonarola, engraved by Jeens, is still here, with numerous other illustrations; and the paper and printing leave nothing to be desired.

WE have also received:—Woman's Fortitude: a Tale of the Cawnpore Tragedy, by Edward Money (Whittingham); Every Man has his Golden Chance, by Mrs. Riddell, with other Proverbs and Stories for Boys and Girls (Office of London Society); the Calendar of the Mason Science College, Birmingham, for 1880-81 (Birmingham: Cornish Bros.); Gold in India: a Paper read before the Society of Arts by Hyde Clarke (Effingham Wilson); Employers and Employed; The Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and the Alterations in the Law effected thereby, by G. Rose-Innes (Effingham Wilson); The Assembly of 1881, and the Case of Professor Robertson Smith, by A. Taylor Innes (Edinburgh: John MacLaren); The Retention of Candahar, by Gen. Sir Henry Green (Stanford); Proceedings of the Royal Artillery Institution, Woolwich, Vol. XI., No. 5 (Woolwich: Royal Artillery Institution); &c.

OBITUARY.

M. A. L. JOANNE, whose death is announced from Paris, was one of the most prolific of French littérateurs. Born at Dijon in 1813, he was educated at the Collège Charlemagne, and early started in life as a journalist. In 1841, he published the first of his popular and accurate books of travel, which ultimately, under the familiar name of the Guides-Joanne (Hachette), have reached the formidable total of 120 volumes. In conjunction with M. E. Fergues, he translated several English books, including Uncle

Tom's Cabin and Macaulay's Essays. Perhaps his most important work was L'itinéraire général de la France, which appeared between 1865 and 1869 in ten volumes.

DR. GEORGE AUGUST MATILE, late of Neuchâtel, has just died at Washington, in the United States. He was born at La Sagne in 1806, when the present Swiss canton was still a principality of the Prussian royal House. From 1839 to 1848 he was Professor of Law at the Academy of Neuchâtel. He was a fervid Royalist, and, in consequence of the revolution which finally separated Neuchâtel from Prussian supremacy, Dr. Matile emigrated to America, and lived for several years in Philadelphia. He has contributed work of permanent value to the History of the Canton and the Swiss Confederation. The chief of these—Monuments de l'Histoire de Neuchâtel—was published in successive volumes in 1844 and 1849, and was carried on at the expense of King Friedrich Wilhelm IV. of Prussia, to whom it was dedicated under his title of "Prince Souverain de Neuchâtel et Valangin." The two splendid folio volumes contain a collection of original documents illustrating Neuchâtel history from A.D. 998 to 1396. There are above eight hundred documents, collected from fifty Swiss and foreign archives, and printed in their entirety. The work is indispensable for the student of the history of Bern, Freiburg, Solothurn, and the other neighbouring cantons. Dr. Matile also published in 1840 a second valuable contribution to the history of his fatherland, the Chronica Lausannensis Chartularii.

M. PIERRE FRANÇOIS EUGÈNE CORTAMBERT, the veteran French geographer, died at Paris on March 5. Born at Toulouse in 1805, he commenced his life-long work of popularising the study of geography by publishing his Géographie universelle in 1826. Among his numerous other works may be mentioned a revised edition of Malte-Brun's Géographie universelle (1860). It has been stated that he was head librarian of the geographical department in the Bibliothèque Nationale; but we believe that it is his son, M. Richard Cortambert, who occupies this post.

OF Mr. James Spedding, the great Bacon student, who died on the night of the 9th inst. from the results of a street accident, we hope to write at length next week.

RECENT ADDITIONS TO THE MSS. AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

SINCE our last notice of additions to the MSS. in the British Museum, the collections have been increased by many volumes and documents of interest. Among them are:—An Evangelistarium, or Gospel Lessons, in Greek, of the twelfth century; a Horologion, or Daily Church Services, in Greek, of the same time; a Sticherarion, or Greek Hymnal, of the seventeenth century; a copy of Robert Holcote's Latin Commentary on the Book of Wisdom, of the fourteenth century; a Book of Hours of the Virgin, with miniatures of French art, of about the year 1536. A small volume, being the register of the Hastings Court of Lyme Regis for the years 1309-28, is perhaps one of the oldest specimens of a paper-book of English manufacture. Another small volume contains a chronicle of Mexican history to the year 1576, with some later additions, and is valuable on account of the native picture-character in which it is partly written. Among the presents which have been received is a grant of arms conferred on Mark Trevor, who, at the Restoration, was created Viscount of Dungannon for his loyalty and special services at Marston Moor, where, we are told, "he encountered that Arch Rebel and tyrant, Oliver Cromwell, and wounded him with his sword." By bequest of Lord Bexley, who is better remembered as Nicholas Vansittart, for so many years Chancellor of the Exchequer in Lord Liverpool's Administration, the Museum becomes possessor of several volumes of his papers. They comprise, beside his general correspondence, a volume of diplomatic letters and papers connected with his mission to Denmark on the occasion of the difficulty with that Court in 1801; papers of Jeremy Bentham on subjects of finance; and a curious collection of letters of a Mrs. Biggs, self-constituted agent for the British Government to examine the political condition of France in 1812-16. Several volumes and pieces of music have been added, the most ancient being a sheet containing the Ancient Hunting Notes of the seventeenth century. There are Church services and anthems by Pachelbel, Anfossi, Charles King; cantatas by B. Marcello; and various pieces, sacred and profane, in the autograph of Samuel Wesley.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BANVILLE, Théodore de. Contes pour les Femmes. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
 BUTCH, A. F. Die Blüthenornamentik der Hoch- u. Spätklassik. 2-4. Lfg. Leipzig: Huth. 7 M.
 CHESNEAU, E. L'Éducation de l'Artiste. Paris: Charavay. 3 fr. 50 c.
 DUTUIT, E. Manuel de l'Amateur d'Estampes. Ecoles flamande et hollandaise. T. I. Paris: Lib. Centrale des Beaux-Arts. 28 fr.
 GAUTIER, T. Les Vacances du Lundi: Tableaux de Montagnes. Paris: Charpentier. 7 fr. 50 c.
 GUERKE, la. franco-allemande de 1870-71. Réd. par la Section historique du grand État-Major prussien. Trad. par E. Costa de Serda. 18^e Livr. Berlin: Mittler. 12 M.
 HODGSON, Shadworth H. Outcast Essays and Verse Translations. Longmans. 8s. 6d.
 LAGARDE, P. de. Deutsche Schriften. 2. Bd. Göttingen: Dieterich. 2 M.
 LULLIER, C. Mes Cachots. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
 MÉLIERE, P. Lettres à M. Panizzi, 1850-70, p. p. L. Fagan. T. 2. Paris: G. Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
 ROCHAS-D'ARLON, A. de. Principes de la Fortification antique. Paris: Ducher.

THEOLOGY.

- LIAS, J. J. Joshua. (Pulpit Commentary.) O. Kegan Paul & Co. 12s. 6d.

HISTORY, ETC.

- CAPASSO, B. Monumenta ad Neapolitani Ducatus historiam pertinentia. Tomus I. Napoli: Furchheim. 40 fr.
 DELAHANTRE, A. Une Famille de Finance au XVIII^e Siècle. Paris: Huetzel. 20 fr.
 DUKRA, J. Die Reisen d. Kaisers Hadrian. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 4 M. 80 Pf.
 GESCHICHTSBLÄTTER, Hannische. Jahrg. 1879. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 4 M.
 LAUREL, A. La Réforme au XVI^e Siècle. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
 LUBNER, G. De amnestia anno cccciii. a Chr. ab Atheniensibus decreta. Kiel: v. Maack. 2 M.
 MAURER, K. Ueb. die Wasserwehre d. germanischen Heidenthums. München: Franz. 2 M. 40 Pf.
 PRÉPARE, L. de. Histoire de la Réunion de la Franche-Comté à la France. Paris: Champion.
 ROCKINGER, L. Ueb. Altera Arbeiten zur bairischen u. pfälzischen Geschichte im geheimen Hau- u. Staatsarchiv. 3. Abth. München: Franz. 4 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BAILLON, H. Dictionnaire de Botanique. 11^e, 12^e et 13^e Fasc. Paris: Hachette. 15 fr.
 BENFKE, E. W., u. E. CONEN. Geognostische Beschreibung der Umgegend v. Heidelberg. 3. Hft. Strassburg: Trübner.
 FONTANNES, F. Description des Ammonites des Calcaires du château de Crusol. Basel: Georg. 24 M.
 HAAS, A. Versuch a. Darstellung der Geschichte d. Kriemungsmasse. Tübingen: Fues. 3 M.
 HORAVSKÝ, R., u. M. AUBINGER. Die Gasteropoden der Maeres-Ablagerungen der 1. u. 2. miozänen Mediterran-Stufe in der österreichisch-ungarischen Monarchie. 2. Lfg. Wien: Hölzel. 16 M.
 LE CONTE, J. Sight: an Exposition of the Principles of Monocular and Binocular Vision. O. Kegan Paul & Co. 5s.
 MACCULLAGH, J. Collected Works of, edited by J. H. Jellatt and S. Houghton. Longmans. 15s.
 RIBOT, Th. Les Maladies de la Mémoire. Paris: Germer Baillière. 2 fr. 50 c.
 VETTER, B. Die Fische aus dem lithographischen Schiefer im Dresdner Museum. Cassel: Fischer. 18 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BADGER, G. P. An English-Arabic Lexicon. O. Kegan Paul & Co. £9 9s.
 BRENTANO, E. Zur Lösung der Trojanischen Frage. Heilbronn: Henninger. 3 M. 50 Pf.
 DISSEMINATIONES philologicae Argentoratenses selectae. Vol. 3 et 4. Strassburg: Trübner. 12 M.

- JOUANCOUX, J. B. Etudes pour servir à un Glossaire étymologique du Patois picard. 1^{re} Partie. Amiens: Imp. Jeunet.
 KOEHLER, C. S. Das Trierleben im Sprichwort der Griechen u. Römer. Leipzig: Fernau. 4 M. 50 Pf.
 RIGVEDA, der. Zum 1. Male ins Deutsche übers., m. Commentar u. Einleitg. v. A. Ludwig. 4. Bd. Des Commentars 1. Thl. Prag: Tempsky. 12 M.
 SCHLICHTERSEN, J. Da fida historica Sili Italici quaestiones historicae et philologicae. Königsberg-Pr.: Hartung. 1 M. 80 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE TEMPLE AT JERUSALEM.

20 Langham Place: March 8, 1881.

As the editor of the Athenaeum cannot find space for any more letters on the subject, will you allow me, while carefully avoiding all personalities, to make, in your columns, the following short statement regarding the position in which I conceive the controversy with Col. Warren has left the main disputed points in the topography of Jerusalem?

In so far as the Temple is concerned nothing that has been written since the publication of my Temples of the Jews appears to me to have touched the marrow of the question. I do not of course pretend that I have solved all the problems or explained all the difficulties that have perplexed scholars for the last two or three centuries; but I have no hesitation in maintaining that, when the Bible, the Talmud, Josephus, and the Ordnance Survey are fairly examined and correlated, a vast preponderance of evidence is in favour of the Temple being, as nearly as may be, 600 feet square, and situated in the south-western angle of the Haram area. So overwhelming, indeed, does the evidence appear in favour of this view that I do not believe it would ever have been disputed had it not been that it has been found necessary to occupy the Temple in force as an outwork for the defence of the Sepulchre, and hence the animosity with which the common-sense view of its position has hitherto been attacked.

With regard to the Holy Sepulchre the case is not so simple, though, to my mind, not less clear. The narrative of the New Testament is singularly deficient in topographical indications. Eusebius is rhetorical, and his sentences sometimes admit of different interpretations; while the mediaeval historians—as might be expected—are frequently indistinct and contradictory, and consequently, in themselves, insufficient to settle such a question. Fortunately, however, there is one class of evidence that stands out distinct and alone, and that is the architectural, on which, consequently, the decision of the controversy seems mainly to rest.

Had the buildings at Jerusalem been erected in the Gothic or any mediaeval style, there are hundreds of persons in England and elsewhere who are quite competent to decide at once whether the Golden gateway and the Dome of the Rock were erected in the time of Constantine, or to what other age they may belong. When, however, the question hinges on the forms of the Byzantine or any other Eastern style, there are very few who can speak with any confidence regarding it. But till this class of evidence is fully examined by competent persons, and its value ascertained, there hardly exist sufficient materials from which the general public can arrive at any satisfactory conclusion on the subject.

Feeling all this so strongly as I do, I would willingly let the controversy rest, in so far as I personally am concerned, till some fresh discovery should enable others to judge of the matter for themselves. This I hoped had been accomplished in 1868 by Col. Warren's discovery of the rock-cut buttresses of what I believe to be the Basilica of Constantine in an excavation to the north of the platform of the Dome of the Rock. To be decisive, however, either for or against my views, it is thought the excavation must be extended; and that Col. Warren states he was unable to do, and we are bound to accept his statement on such a point. When the Haram was partially desecrated in 1874 for repairs, I had great hopes that M. Ganneau would complete this exploration; but he did nothing. Another chance seemed to open when Sir Henry Layard went to Constantinople; he promised and did all he could, but found the feeling between the Christian and Moslem running so high that, in his position as ambassador, he could not, with propriety, interfere. Still, as in all instances I have not only called attention to the importance of such an investigation, but offered to pay the expenses incident to it, I am not without hope I may eventually succeed.

I am perfectly well aware of the consequences involved in making this public appeal to the spade. It may be that it may only confuse the matter more and more, for no one can tell what may exist beneath the soil before it is dug into. It may be that it will decide against the views I advocate. Of this, however, I have no fears, and, even if it did, I personally would rejoice that the matter was settled at last. I have nothing to reproach myself with in this business, even if proved to be wrong. I never wrote a line in which I did not thoroughly believe, nor ever concealed a fact or shirked a difficulty. If I have been mistaken, it is that I have relied too much on evidence which, after studying architectural history in all parts of the world for half-a-century, has in no single instance failed me. It does not appear to me possible that the buildings in Jerusalem should prove an exception to the universal experience, but, if it is so, it will be a revelation which will cause a revolution in the whole science of architectural criticism, the consequences of which I would like much to investigate and assimilate while I have yet an opportunity of so doing.

JAS. FERGUSSON.

THE HEIDELBERG LIBRARY.

Heidelberg: March 5, 1881.

The Library of the University of Heidelberg has just recovered three Greek MSS. which had been lost for about two hundred and sixty years.

When, after the capture of Heidelberg by Tilly in 1622, the Bibliotheca Palatina was conveyed to Rome as a present to the Pope, the Papal Commissioner, Leo Allatius, missed three Greek MSS. which were duly described in the Catalogue of Sylburg, of which the Bodleian has a MS. copy.

These MSS. have lately been shown by Dr. v. Gebhardt to be identical with three MSS. of Lycophron in the University Library of Halle. Besides the text of Lycophron, they contain Hesiod and several plays of Aeschylus and Euripides, together with parts of Cleomedes and Michael Apostolius, all of more or less value, and hitherto but partially published.

The three MSS. had been lent about 1620 to Erasmus Schmidt, professor in Wittenberg, whose receipt for the loan was found by Leo Allatius, and published in 1844 by the well-known Father Theiner in Rome. During the Thirty Years' War the MSS. were probably forgotten—at any rate, they were not claimed by anybody—and, as it seems, deposited by Prof. Schmidt in the Library of Wittenberg. Thence they were transferred to Halle; and upon the application of Prof. Zangemeister, the Librarian of Heidelberg, they have just been returned by the Prussian Government to their former owners, though after the lapse of two hundred and sixty years no legal claim could, of course, be made.

The University Library of Heidelberg has thus recovered a small fraction of the treasures of which it was robbed in 1622. In 1815 thirty-eight valuable Greek and Latin MSS. of that collection, which had been taken from Rome to Paris, were restored by the French, and 851 MSS., mostly German, by the Papal Government. Yet there remain more than 2,500 MSS. taken from Heidelberg in the Papal Library of the Vatican. The hope that the spoliation committed in 1622 will be one day or other made good by the restoration of all these treasures to the legitimate owner, the University of Heidelberg, has never been given up. W. IHNE.

GROVE'S "DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS."

Feltham Hill, Middlesex, W.: March 7, 1881.

My attention has been drawn to a letter by Mr. F. E. Warron in the ACADEMY of February 26 with regard to a supposed error in Mr. Rockstro's article on Notation in the second volume of Mr. Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians. As I feel that I am in part responsible for the statement to which Mr. Warren objects, I must ask you to excuse my trespassing on your space in order to vindicate Mr. Rockstro from the charge of incorrectness which is brought against him.

At the time when Mr. Rockstro was writing his article for the Dictionary, I had occasion to visit Oxford; and Mr. Rockstro asked me to look at the Bodleian MS. No. 775 in order, if possible, to ascertain whether the staves it contains were of the same date as the body of the Troparium. By the courtesy of Mr. Coxe, I was enabled to examine the MS. carefully; but, as I felt that I had not sufficient experience of palaeography to give a decided opinion on the date of the staves, I asked Mr. Coxe's advice on the subject, and he, like myself, was unable to detect the traces of the careful erasure of the original neumes which Mr. Warren has discovered. It was on the strength of this examination that Mr. Rockstro wrote the statement in the article "Notation" to which Mr. Warren takes exception, carefully, however, guarding it by the words "if a careful examination . . . may be trusted."

Mr. Rockstro nowhere lays claim to having made any "discovery." If Mr. Warren will refer to Messrs. Stainer and Barrett's Dictionary of Musical Terms, p. 312a, article "Notation," he will find the following:—

"The earliest use of four lines and spaces is to be found in England. There are extant hymns with the neumes written upon alternate line and space, and with an index letter at the signature to fix the position of all, and these in a manuscript of the reign of Ethelred II., who is prayed for by name in the Third Litany as 'our King' (regem nostrum), and whose reign was from 978 to 1016. The manuscript was then in use at Winchester Cathedral, and is now in the Bodleian Library at Oxford (MSS. Bodley, No. 775). . . . Only the new hymns are upon four lines and spaces. The prayers and the psalms have the old indefinite neumes."

W. BARCLAY SQUIRE.

THE INSCRIBED PLATE FOUND AT THE ROMAN BATHS IN BATH.

Wrighton Rectory: March 3, 1881.

The interest awakened by the recent discoveries at the back of the Pump Room at Bath induce me to think that a further notice of the inscribed leaden plate, of which an account was given in the ACADEMY, will not be unacceptable.

I therefore send the explanation which I have received from the Rev. J. McCaul, LL.D., late President of University College, Toronto.

I give his reading from a photograph sent him by me to Toronto, and will leave it to scholars to say how far he has succeeded in elucidating the difficulties which attach to the interpretation—

COLAVIT VILBAM MIHI Q
AQVA COM C LIQV AT PRIV (or SAGIN)

AVIT EAM LVE MORTALI IN (?)
EXPERTVS VELVI NOMINARVM
CAIVS VERINVS AERIANVS EXS
ITIANVS AVGVSTALIS SE
CATVS MINIANVS COM
IVNIA GERMANILL (?)

He considers VILBIA in the first line to be a corruption of the Roman name FVLVIA, Q (somewhat indistinct in the second line) to stand for Quotidie, and would construe the sentence by making Aqua the nominative to the verb Colavit, C standing for Cum, and LIQV for liquore.

"Water, with hot liquor daily, has drenched my Fulvia, but has cured (or freed) her from a mortal malady. Inexperienced I have desired (Velui for Volui) five names."

Then follow the names, viz., Caius Verinus, Aerianus, Exsitianus, Augustal Priest, Secatus Minianus with Junia Germanilla.

The plate is most interesting as attesting the efficacy of the Bath waters more than sixteen centuries ago, and gives another proof, in the record of the names, of the importance of the city, one of the attestations being that of a Priest of Augustus, who probably therefore had a temple erected to his honour in Bath.

H. M. SCARTH.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF CANADA.

1 Savile Row, Burlington Gardens, W.: March 8, 1881.

In the note in the ACADEMY of the 5th inst., p. 175, on Mr. Selwyn's last Report of the Geological Survey of Canada, a belief is expressed that the account of the Haida Indians therein contained is the first detailed one ever published. It may, however, be as well to mention Mr. J. G. Swan's paper on the same subject in the Smithsonian Contributions to Knowledge (No. 267, 1874, published in vol. xxi., 1876), eighteen pages quarto, and seven plates, some coloured. This is briefly referred to by Dr. Dawson.

E. C. RYE.

PERFORMANCE OF "HAMLET" FROM THE FIRST QUARTO: A DISCLAIMER.

Athenaeum Club: March 7, 1881.

I have just seen with great amazement a notice in the ACADEMY of February 12 that "a member of the New Shakspeare Society, Dr. W. Pole, has resolved on giving a performance of Shakspeare's first sketch of his Hamlet as represented by the First Quarto of 1603."

I thank the writer for his courteous intentions, but he has been under some strange mistake. I know nothing of the Shakspeare Society; I have never interested myself in Hamletology; and I have nothing whatever to do with any such project as that named.

WILLIAM POLE.

[The "mistake," for which we apologise, arises from a misprint. The paragraph in question ought to have run, "Mr. Walter Pole . . . ;" and that announcement we are able to confirm.—EDITOR.]

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, March 14, 5 p.m. London Institution: "The Gold and Silver Mines of the World," by Mr. G. Phillips Bevan.
7.30 p.m. Aristotelian: "Kant," by Mr. S. Oliver.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture II., "The Scientific Principles Involved in Electric Lighting," by Prof. W. G. Adams.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Lake Nyassa and the Water-route to the Lake Region of Africa," by Mr. J. Stewart.
TUESDAY, March 15, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Blood," by Prof. Schüffler.
7.45 p.m. Statistical: "Progress of the English Stations in the Hill Regions of India," by Mr. Hyde Clarke.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Diamond Fields of South Africa," by Mr. R. W. Murray.
8 p.m. West London Scientific Association: "Movements of Plants," by the Rev. G. Henslow.
8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Additions to the Society's Collection during February 1881," by the Secretary: "Observations on the Characters of the Echinoidea," IV., by Prof. F. Jeffrey Bell; "Contributions to the Anatomy of Passerine Birds," by Mr. W. A. Forbes.

8 p.m. London Institution: "Sanitary Assurance," by Prof. de Chaumont.

8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "The Comparative Endurance of Iron and Mild Steel when exposed to Corrosive Influences," by Mr. D. Phillips.

WEDNESDAY, March 16, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Compound Air-Engine," by Col. F. Beaumont.

8 p.m. British Archaeological: "Recent Discoveries at Reading," by Dr. J. Stevens; "Roman Pottery Kilns at West Stow," by Mr. H. Frigg.

THURSDAY, March 17, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Ornament," by Mr. H. H. Statham.

4.30 p.m. Royal.

7 p.m. London Institution: "The Combination of Voices with Instruments," by Dr. W. H. Stone.

7 p.m. Numismatic.

8 p.m. Trinity College: "Jolly Fish," by Mr. G. J. Romanes.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, March 18, 8 p.m. Philological: "Some New Latin and Greek Derivatives," by Prof. J. P. Postgate;

"English Surnames," by Mr. Walter Browne.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Musical Pitch," by Dr. W. H. Stone.

SATURDAY, March 19, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "American Humourists," by the Rev. H. R. Haweis.

SCIENCE.

Essai sur la Mythologie égyptienne. Par Paul Pierret. (Paris: F. Vieweg.)

M. PIERRET's essay on Egyptian Mythology shares with M. Grébaud's recently completed paper, "Des deux Yeux de Disque solaire" (Recueil des Travaux, livraisons 2 et 3), the honour of being the most important contribution made of late years towards the study of this very difficult and complicated subject. It would, indeed, scarcely be possible to over-estimate the value of these two learned and laborious treatises. Having grouped and classified the gods of the Egyptian Pantheon, not, as heretofore, according to their geographical distribution, but according to their attributes and functions, M. Pierret shows, as it seems to me quite indisputably, that they are reducible to some very few types, and that those types are mere personifications of the sun at various stages of his progress above and below the horizon. And here, perhaps, I may be forgiven for remembering that a little more than four years ago (à propos of a sentence in Mariette-Pasha's Catalogue raisonné of the Boolak collection, in which he pointed out the identity of Ra and Horus) I wrote thus:—"The day is perhaps approaching when Khons will also be recognised as a form of Ra, Hathor as a version of Isis, and so forth" (A Thousand Miles up the Nile, p. 444). M. Pierret now carries us far beyond these anticipated identifications. He shows that Phtah at Memphis, Tum at Heliopolis, Knun at the Cataracts, play the same rôle and are one in all but name. They are primordial gods, and typify the cosmic power of the sun. Isis, Neith, Maut, and Nut are but aspects of the same conception, and represent the birthplace of the luminary. All goddesses, in fact, symbolise either the light of the sun or the æthereal space in which he rises or sinks to rest. All gods are phases of his course. The Sphinx is a solar emblem. The bulls Apis and Mnevis are solar gods. The Mendesian ram is a solar god. The two feathers worn by Amen-Ra, the two feathers on the atef of Osiris, the two asps on the brow of Tum, &c., &c., represent the two eyes of the sun, his right eye lighting the Northern hemisphere and his left the Southern hemisphere as he travels from East to West. The mighty maze of Egyptian mythology, which has long bewildered the learned, is thus shown to be not without a plan. But behind this splendid and elaborate solar myth M. Pierret believes that he detects a loftier and purer faith. Marshalling and co-ordinating a vast selection of texts from monuments of every description—papyri, mummy-cases, vases, temple-inscriptions, stelae, &c., &c.—he seeks to show that the Egyptian religion was based upon a distinct belief in one unseen and impersonal Deity. "He traverses Eternity; he is for ever;" "He is the Maker of all that has form, but he is himself without form;" "His extent is without limits;" "He is not to be apprehended by the arms, he is not to be laid hold of by the hand;" "All that is, is in his hand"—such are a few of the texts which M. Pierret cites in support of his view. Most remarkable, however, is this passage from the seventeenth chapter of the Ritual, "The God of the beginning, who said unto the sun, 'Come unto me!'" Here the line between monotheism and the solar myth is drawn with unmistakable clearness. M. Pierret supports each step of his argument by quotations, not merely translated, but reproduced in hieroglyphs; so placing his numerous authorities at the disposal of his readers, and enabling each to interpret for himself. At the same time there must always be a certain difficulty in judging of text dissociated from context; and cautious students will perhaps hesitate to go with M. Pierret to the full length of all his deductions until he has leisure to treat his subject in extenso.

AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE.

General Physiology of Muscles and Nerves. By Dr. J. Rosenthal. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) This volume is quite worthy of its place in the "International Scientific Series." It gives a clear and connected, though rather dry, account of those elementary neuro-muscular functions which have been subjected, within the last twenty years, to elaborate investigation by Dubois-Reymond, Helmholtz, and others. Methods are described as well as results; and illustrations are provided in sufficient abundance to enable even the uninitiated reader to follow the course of the exposition.

Household Science. Edited by the Rev. J. P. Faunthorpe, M.A. (Stanford.) A series of readings in "necessary" knowledge for girls and young women, covering a very wide and irregular area. After a few introductory lessons on popular chemistry and physiology, the pupil is taught a great deal about food and its preparation, clothing and its materials, the warming and ventilation of dwellings, washing materials and their use, rules for the maintenance of health, the management of the sick-room, and the financial economy of cottage life. The information given is sound and practical, and it is conveyed in simple language. The choice and arrangement of the subject-matter strikes an ordinary reader as unfamiliar and remarkably unsystematic; but the editor's experience as Principal of the Whitelands Training College may be taken as a guarantee that the peculiar method adopted is suited to the requirements of those for whose benefit the book has been compiled.

London Fogs. By the Hon. R. Russell, F.M.S. (Stanford.) In this pamphlet the author discusses the characteristics of London fog, especially in relation to weather; the damage it inflicts on health and property, and the means of prevention. There is no great amount of novelty in his observations and suggestions; but every effort to encourage the movement for the abolition of a gigantic and unnecessary nuisance deserves commendation. There is every reason to hope that the atmosphere of London, thirty years hence, may be as clear as that of Brussels.

Food for the Invalid. By J. Milner Fothergill, M.D. (Macmillan.) A short introductory chapter on the physiology of digestion and alimentation is followed by a collection of three hundred recipes, many of which present a suspicious resemblance to those in ordinary cookery books for healthy people. Invalids and dyspeptics who are able to enjoy "mock pâté de foie gras," stewed mussels, John dory with caper sauce, and the succulent variety of soups described by the author must be far advanced on the road to convalescence.

Six Lectures on Physical Geography. By the Rev. Samuel Haughton, F.R.S. (Dublin: Hodges, Foster and Figgis.) These "lectures" are based upon a course delivered for the benefit of the Governess Institute of Ireland. They deal with nearly every subject usually comprehended under the term of physical geography; and, being illustrated by numerous diagrams, they form an attractive volume. If there is any peculiarity about them it is the lavish use of mathematical formula in illustration of phenomena which, to our thinking, might have been more intelligibly explained in the language of ordinary life. The mass of figures and symbols conveys to ordinary readers a notion of correctness which is not borne out on a somewhat closer examination of the facts. On p. 121 we are informed that the mean tropical Continental rain-fall, as deduced from observations made at 110 stations, amounts to 67.67 inches. The author, in order to obtain this result, has taken the unnecessary trouble of multiplying the average rain-fall at each station by the number of years of observation, adding all the products together, and dividing the sum by the total number of years. A very little consideration shows that the result obtained in this apparently scientific manner must differ widely from the truth. What the author ought to have done would have been to exclude all those stations the observations at which do not yield a trustworthy mean, and to give weight to the others in proportion to the geographical area which, from our general knowledge of the distribution of rain, they may be supposed to represent. It is somewhat curious that so simple a matter should not have struck a writer so well versed in the use of figures. On other subjects, too, we frequently find the author at fault as to his facts and reasonings; and, though his lectures contain much that is interesting and suggestive, their contents must not be unreservedly accepted as presenting a faithful reflex of the actual state of our geographical knowledge.

Nature's Hygiene: a Series of Essays on Popular Scientific Subjects, with Special Reference to the Chemistry and Hygiene of the Eucalyptus and Turpines. By C. T. Kingzett. (Baillière, Tindall and Cox.) The author of this work, who is an accurate scientific chemist, has published several researches on processes of slow oxidation, and he applies some of the results obtained to the explanation of the sanitary properties of the eucalyptus tree. A few years ago we remember to have noticed the large quantity of eucalyptus trees growing within the courts of the monastery of the Tre Fontane between Rome and Ostia; and a monk told us that, whereas the monastery, which stands in the heart of a malaria-stricken district, had previously been quite uninhabitable in summer, it was perfectly habitable since the planting of the eucalyptus trees. The monk stated, moreover, that he prepared a sure specific against malaria fever from the leaves of the tree. The book before us contains nine chapters, the first five of which treat of the occurrence of oxygen, ozone, and peroxide of hydrogen in nature, the processes by which they are produced, their influence on emacausis and putrefaction, the nature of infectants and contagious disorders, and the use of antiseptics and disinfectants. The sixth chapter is in some respects the most interesting in the book; it discusses "Malarial Fever: its Distribution and Cause, together with a Full, Descriptive, and Historical Account of the Alleged Anti-malarial Properties of the Genus Eucalyptus, as observed in Various Countries." The precise cause of malarial fever is still unknown; but it has been proved that when a marshy surface has been dried up by continued heat, or where abundance of infusorial life exists in small pools of stagnant water, intermittent and other fevers frequently prevail. According to Klebs and Tommasi, malaria fever is due to a peculiar vegetable germ which they have obtained from the soil and air of malarious districts, and have called Bacillus Malariae. Whatever the cause may be, there is no doubt at all that the presence of the Eucalyptus globulus in malarious districts has caused the disappearance of the fever. Mr. Kingzett believes that the gummy substances of certain trees during oxidation produce peroxide of hydrogen, the most powerful oxidising agent which exists, and a peculiar camphoraceous compound, both of which tend to remove putrefying organic substances from the air, and hence to prevent the spread of contagious fevers. The eucalyptus leaves contain from 0.7 to 6 per cent. of oil; portions of this evaporate into the atmosphere, and there undergo slow oxidation, accompanied by the formation of peroxide of hydrogen, H_2O_2 (containing 94 per cent. of oxygen), and a peculiar camphoraceous compound of carbon and hydrogen, having the composition $C_{10}H_{16}O_2$. These substances are produced on a much larger scale than we should imagine. Taking an approximate estimate of the eucalyptus forests of Australia, the author reckons that they cause the production in one year of 92,785,023 tons of peroxide of hydrogen, and of 507,587,945 tons of the camphoric substance—amounts capable of converting many million tons of putrefying organic products into the harmless final products of decomposition—water, ammonia, and carbonic acid gas. Pine forests produce the same effect, but to a less extent, on the districts in which they exist.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

WE learn from the March number of the Proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society that Col. Prejevalsky intends to devote himself for some time to the task of preparing for publication the results of his travels in Central Asia. On special subjects he will be assisted by other savants; and the whole work will take ten volumes.

THE New York Herald of the 19th ult. contains the account of an expedition into the interior of Alaska, or what was once Russian America, which reached a point farther north than had hitherto been attained by other than Indians. The line adopted was up the Chilkat River, called after a tribe of Indians the most numerous and most powerful in those parts. It was ascertained, however, that they only number 855 souls. One of their peculiarities is the law of succession, by which the power of a deceased chief passes, not to his son, but to his nephew. We presume that the succession is traced in the female line, through the chief's sister rather than through his brother, for our authority goes on to say that, "as a consequence," women are treated with great respect. At Sitka, the seat of Government in Alaska, the question of free trade in liquor has reached a crisis. At the petition of the Indians themselves, the white traders have passed a resolution to import no more molasses, from which the huchamu, or Indian fire-water, is distilled; and five white men have been arrested and shipped to Portland for trial on the charge of keeping an illicit still. Some excitement has been caused at Sitka by the discovery of auriferous quartz reefs, and several miners from San Francisco have been prospecting in the neighbourhood with fair success.

AN agreement has been entered into between the Florida State authorities and certain Northern and Western capitalists to drain Lake Okeechobee and the great swamp region southward known as the Everglades. The lake is about thirty miles by forty, and the entire area to be reclaimed is nearly twice as large as the State of New Jersey. The drained land, it is said, will make the best sugar country in the world.

WE regret to learn that the climate of Africa has claimed another victim in the person of Capt. T. L. Phipson-Wybrants, who started last summer with the brightest prospects to undertake the exploration of the region lying inland from Sofala as far as the mountainous country subject to Umzila. His was probably one of the best-equipped private expeditions which has ever attempted African exploration. The personnel included Chumal and some fifty of Mr. Thomson's well-tried men, as well as several Europeans. The leader had taken especial pains to qualify himself for the scientific part of his work, and had previously been resident for a considerable time in South Africa and Mauritius, but nothing, it would seem, can season a man against the murderous climate of Africa. Nothing is at present known of the melancholy occurrence, except from brief private telegrams, which state that the traveller had died from fever, and that his expedition was in a disorganised and starving condition near the Sabia River. The news has also arrived of the death of another of the Belgian explorers, Lieut. De Leu, who set out last summer to rejoin, by the Congo, the Belgian expedition now established at Karema. Lieut. De Leu, who was only thirty-nine years of age, died in January, at Taborah, of dysentery, said to have been brought on by the necessity of drinking bad water.

RECENT letters from the Church Missionary Society's agents on the Victoria Nyanza give the intelligence that King Mtesa, of Uganda, was contemplating a war with Mirambo, of Unyamwezi, which would indeed be a most serious matter, considering the number of Europeans now scattered about in East Central Africa. Mtesa has just been engaged in a sanguinary war with the people of Usoga, who live near that part of the lake where the Nile flows out over the Ripon Falls, and is clearly not the amiable creature described by Mr. H. M. Stanley, his present conduct agreeing more closely with the earlier account given of him by Capt. Speke. He is said to be impelled to his present course of action by the Arabs, and his recent profession of Mohammedanism is thought to be part of the same general policy.

MR. E. C. HORN has just returned to England from Ujiji. We hope that before long we may have from him a complete account of his examination of the Lukuga outlet of Lake Tanganyika, as well as his explorations at the southern end of the lake. He will also, we believe, be able to throw light on the remarkable rise in the waters of the lake in recent years, of which no traveller has yet offered any adequate explanation.

THE Queensland Government have received a telegram from Blackall, stating that Mr.

Skuthorpe has found the journal of the explorer, Leichhardt, who disappeared in the interior of Australia more than thirty years ago, and that Classon's journal has also been discovered, by which it appears that he had left Leichhardt and the rest of the party in search of water, and that on his return he found them all dead. Classon then joined the blacks, with whom he lived, as has been before supposed, until three years ago. These relics are said to have been discovered on the Herbert River, but Mr. Skuthorpe refused to disclose full particulars till he reached Sydney, where he was expected shortly after the departure of the last mail.

SCIENCE NOTES.

French Scientific Diagrams.—An excellent series of scientific diagrams, for use in teaching geology and natural history, has been recently brought out in Paris by the publishing house of G. Masson. These Nouvelles Planches murales d'Histoire naturelle have been prepared under the care of Prof. Paul Gervais, and are based upon the diagrams of Achille Comte. Fourteen of the plates are devoted to botany, thirty-four to zoology, and fourteen to geology. We have before us the Texte explicatif relating to the geological series. This small work, by M. Henri Gervais, contains miniature reproductions of the plates, and forms not only a neat companion to the diagrams, but a condensed guide to the elements of geological science.

MESSRS. LONGMANS AND Co. announce, as the last additions to their "Text-Books of Science," A Text-Book of Mineralogy, with numerous wood-cuts, by Mr. H. Bauerman, F.G.S., in two parts, of which the first, upon "Systematic Mineralogy," is now ready.

WITH the beginning of this year a new weekly paper devoted to classical philology has been started at Bremen, under the name of the Philologische Rundschau.

WE learn from Nature that in a recently discovered stalactite cave at Kirchberg, near Kremsmünster, in Austria, a human jaw-bone, with well-preserved teeth, was found among numerous remains of the cave bear.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

Gutiska. Door Dr. J. H. Gallee. (Haarlem: Bohn.) This treatise consists of a list of Gothic words whose gender or declension cannot be determined from the Gothic texts themselves (which consist of the existing portions of Ulfilas's translation of the Bible, with a few other fragments), but only indirectly by comparison with the cognate languages. Dr. Gallee's list is very opportune, and shows in a remarkable manner the uncertainty and conjectural nature of much of our knowledge of the details of Gothic grammar. The declension and gender of a word have often been guessed at from a single ambiguous form, and these guesses have been accepted as ascertained facts by later editors, and have thus established themselves firmly in dictionaries and grammars. Thus, the Gothic word for "shoulder" appears only once in the accusative plural amsans, and from this the nom. sg. amsa was guessed; and, as no one since has taken the trouble to see whether the word occurs in any decisive form, this false nominative has been accepted down to the present day, although it is altogether irreconcilable with the Icelandic äss. Dr. Gallee's work will put this and many other errors right.

Mechanism of Speech. By Norman W. Kingsley. (New York: Appleton.) Dr. Kingsley tells us that his medical practice has obliged him to observe many peculiar phenomena of articulate speech due to defects in the organs, such as congenital and accidental lesions of the hard and soft palate, and that he has consequently, been led into an original investigation of the mechanism of speech generally, both with normal and abnormal organs. He accordingly gives full descriptions of the elementary English sounds, with careful drawings of the positions of the organs. Some of these strike us as more accurate than any others that have been published. That of (u), for instance, does full justice to the high position of the back of the tongue; while its lowering, together with the opening of the lips, is clearly brought out in the diagram of (o). The author seems to be ignorant of Bell's Visible-Speech, which is to be regretted, as we should otherwise, perhaps, have learnt something new about the distinction of "primary" and "wide," and other disputed points in Bell's system. An original feature of the present essay is the diagrams—obtained by mechanical means—to show the contact of the tongue with the palate. We learn from them that more of the surface of the tongue touches the back palate in g than in k, and still more in ng, although perfect gs and ngs can be formed with the minimum contact of k.

On the Language of the Proverbs of Alfred. By E. Gropp. (Halle: Ploetz.) This essay is an inaugural dissertation, written, by a pupil of Prof. Zapitz's, in very good English. The writer thinks that the so-called Proverbs of Alfred may be founded partly on wise sayings of the great King which were handed down by tradition, and worked up with others into one poem by the compiler of the existing text, which he attributes to the twelfth century, the metre, with its singular mixture of rhyme and alliteration, being the same as that of Layamon's Brut. The existing MSS. are somewhat later, and teem with anomalous spellings, which are carefully enumerated in the sketch of the phonology, though sometimes in too mechanical a way. Thus we are told (p. 22) that the Old-English subst. eldo has become ealde, through the following e; as also in Ealured = Alfred. This ea is, however, nothing but a graphic variation of e which is extremely common in Early Middle English. Again, "In Old-English wealdan the sound has always become e." Middle-English welden (Modern-English wield) seems to come from Old-English geweldan, not from wealdan. In the plural hem (eis) the e does not correspond to the i of Old-English him, but to eo, the common Middle-English form being heom, which took its eo from the genitive plural heora. It is hardly correct to say that y is "retained" in kyng and dryhten, as y here certainly means only i; we never find such spellings as kung* or druhten* in Early Middle English, which we certainly should if the Old-English y had been retained in these words. The "strange" form mayþenes = Old-English māsmas is probably Norse, = meiðmar. The writer gives a summary of the inflections, and concludes with some notes on special words and passages, many of which offer considerable difficulty, in several cases improving on the translations of his predecessors, Kemble and Morris.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Tuesday, Feb. 22.) F. W. RUDLER, Esq., F.G.S., V.-P., in the Chair.—A paper on "Arrow-Poisons prepared by Some North-American Indians," by W. J. Hoffman, was read. The information was obtained from prominent Indian chiefs who visited Washington in 1880; and the tribes alluded to in the paper were the Shoshoni and Banak, Pai-Ute, Cemanche, Lipan Apache, and Sisseton Dakota. This last tribe have a method of poisoning bullets by drilling four small holes at equal distances around the horizontal circumference and filling the cavities with the cuticle scraped from a branch of cactus (Opuntia missouriensis). The projecting rim of metal caused by the drilling is then pressed over the scrapings to prevent their being rubbed off or lost. As the Opuntia is a harmless plant, the idea of poison is evidently suggested by the pain experienced when carelessly handling the plant, which is covered with barbed apices.—A paper by David Christison, M.D., on "The Gauchos of San Jorge, Central Uruguay," was also read. The Gaucho could not be a permanent type, and in the Banda Oriental the race was rapidly being modified. The more strict definition and subdivision of property, the increase of sheep-farming, the change in the management of cattle to the tame system, the rapid extension of wire-fencing, and the introduction of agriculture conspired to cramp his movements, and to do away with the necessity for his peculiar accomplishments. It was even to be feared that he himself would pass away, and that the race which ultimately possesses the Campos will show but slight traces of his blood, or of the aboriginal Indian race which he represents.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.—(Wednesday, Feb. 23.)

SIR P. COLQUHOUN, Q.C., in the Chair.—Mr. W. A. Barrett read a paper "On the Fathers of English Church Music," in which he showed that Gregory of Bridlington, Adam of Dore Abbey, in Herefordshire, Walter Odington of Evesham, John of Salisbury, and Thomas de Walsingham were ample evidence of English musicians in very early times. The systems of notation employed in the mediæval periods, with obscure and vague definitions, rendering translation into modern notation unsatisfactory, if not misleading, were touched on; and the peculiarities of "organon, diaphong, and descent" were noticed briefly as an introduction to the more definite matters of musical history. Mr. Barrett held that the history of Church music in England began, in the latter part of the fifteenth century, with John of Dunstable's invention or employment of counterpoint—contributions to this art having been doubtless supplied by Dr. Robert Fairfax, John Sheppard, and John Taverner, contemporary musicians. The claims of John Redford of St. Paul's and of John Marbeck of Windsor were duly acknowledged; as were also the labours of Thomas Tallis and William Byrd, who, by the aid of the "printing patent" granted to them, were able widely to extend the musical developments due to their genius.

SOCIETY OF BIBLICAL ARCHAEOLOGY.—(Tuesday, March 1.)

SAMUEL BIRCH, ESQ., D.C.L., LL.D., President, in the Chair.—A paper was read by the Rev. A. Löwy on "Notices in Ancient Jewish Writings of the Sagacity and Habits of Ants."—A letter was read from Mr. D. Pierides, enclosing a photograph of a fragment of a Phœnician inscription recently found by him at Larnaca in Cyprus. Of this inscription Prof. W. Wright ventured to give the following translation:—

On the day 20 of the month of Zebach in the year 2 erected 'Abd-'Osir, the son of Bodo (?), the son of Yak[ūshalōm,]
Bodo (?), to his Lady, the Mother (?) 'Ashērath, . .

The month Zebach is hitherto unknown in the Phœnician calendar; equally unknown is the goddess 'Ashērath, possibly to be identified with Astarte. The name of Bodo has already been found on another inscribed stone. The date is assigned to the reign of Pumaïyathon, in the fourth century B.C.

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Friday, March 4)

A. J. ELLIS, ESQ., President, in the Chair.—Mr. E. L. Brandreth read a paper on "Gender." He said there was much confusion in the minds of many writers of grammars in regard to the meaning of this term. His object was to try and define its proper meaning and use. He divided languages into three classes—(1) where gender was expressed by concord of the adjective or verb with the substantive, distinction of sex being to some extent in accord with the classification; (2) where gender was expressed in the same way as in the first class, but the classification resulted in a distinction other than that of sex—as between animate and inanimate, &c.; (3) where there was no such concord of the other parts of speech in a sentence with the substantive. He maintained that the term was properly used with reference to the first class of languages, to which most of the Aryan languages, the Semitic, and the Hamitic languages belonged; that it was also properly used with reference to the second class, of which the Danish, the Dravidian, the South African Bantu languages, and the Algonkin languages of America were members. The majority of the languages of the world, including Modern English, belonged to the third class. In this class, names of males were generally said to be of the masculine gender, names of females of the feminine gender; but the mere distinction of sex by different words was not "gender" if the term was to be employed with any analogy to its use in the other classes; its use in this class was unnecessary and misleading; the grammarians had failed to justify its use, and they often contradicted each other in the explanations they gave. A special claim was sometimes set up on behalf of English on the ground that sex was distinguished in the personal pronouns; but it was shown that in the true gender languages the personal pronouns often did not represent the gender. Danish han "he," hun "she," for instance, were both of the same gender; egli and ella in Italian referred only to persons; while the interrogative pronouns in any language seldom corresponded with the gender. Substantive pronouns had their own special meanings like other substantives. These mistaken notions arose solely from applying the rules of the Latin grammar to English and other languages of this class. It was only of late years that of a man, to a man had ceased to be described as the genitive and dative cases of a man; but our grammarians had not hitherto been able to get rid of the notion that because Latin had gender English must have it also.—A discussion ensued, in which the President, Prince Lucien Bonaparte, Dr. Morris, Dr. Murray, and Mr. Sweet took part; Dr. Murray generally agreeing with the author of the paper, Mr. Sweet maintaining that English had gender by reason of its personal pronouns.

FINE ART.

LEONARDO DA VINCI IN THE EAST.

It has always been imagined that, when the Leonardo da Vinci MSS. preserved at Milan, Paris, and in England came to be properly examined, they would yield much that was curious and interesting regarding a man who was evidently a puzzle to his contemporaries, and who is regarded even at the present time with a vague admiration founded upon very little real knowledge. The few desultory pages of these MSS. that have been published from time to time have contained nothing more than notes and drawings of scientific inventions and mathematical problems. Of course the delightful "Trattato di Pittura" has long been known; but it has also been known that this had come down to us in a very garbled condition, while the original text lay hidden among the da Vinci MSS. No one, however, was found bold enough to undertake the arduous task of deciphering these terrible "books," which are written according to Leonardo's curious system from right to left, and require to be read through a looking-glass, until Dr. J.-P. Richter, a frequent contributor to the ACADEMY, summoned up the necessary courage.

The chief result of Dr. Richter's researches at present is that he has regained the whole of the original text of the "Trattato," which contains several chapters not hitherto known, as well as many diagrams, drawings, and sketches by Leonardo's own hand. But besides the "Trattato" Dr. Richter has lighted upon a number of fragmentary notes, exceedingly vague in their mode of expression, which, in the only interpretation that can be framed in the present state of our knowledge, seem to point to a journey at some period of his life to the East.

The first of these passages begins:—

"Such a mighty roaring can neither be compared to the stormy sea, when the North wind dashes it back with foaming waves between Scylla and Charybdis, nor to Etna nor Stromboli, when the powerful sulphur flames burst forth, and the whole mountain opens, throwing stones and earth into the air, intermixed with flames of fire."

Leonardo further describes how, moved by a mighty curiosity, he climbed over the rocks to the entrance of a cava, and viewed for a little time this marvellous scene; but soon, "bending himself and partly creeping," he penetrated farther and farther into the depths of his retreat.

One naturally asks where Leonardo could have witnessed this gigantic convulsion of nature's forces to which the eruptions of Etna and Stromboli, of which he writes as if he had been eye-witness, were as nothing. Dr. Richter replies, putting together various other significant passages, in the East. It is probably to the same event that Leonardo alludes in another note, which seems to be the headings of various chapters of some book either written or to be written by him. Here he writes:—

"DIVISIONS OF THE BOOK.

"The sudden inundation to its end.

"The ruin of the towns.

"The destruction of the people—their despair.

"Description of the cause of the fall of the mountain.

"The fatality caused thereby.

"Damage from snow.

"Inundation of the low-lying regions of West Armenia.

"The subsiding of the same caused by the intersection of the Taurus Mountain.

"How the new prophet showed that this ruin was sure to come.

"Description of Mount Taurus—the River Euphrates."

From this it appears that this terrible landslide took place in Armenia; and Leonardo's presence in this part of Asia Minor is made probable by the fact of some rough drafts of letters that Dr. Richter found on the same folio-sheet as the above in the world-famed Codex Atlanticus preserved in the "Ambrosiana" at Milan. The first of these is addressed to Al Diodario di Sorio locotenente del sacro Sultano di Babilonia.

Dr. Richter was puzzled at first as to what the title Diodario might mean, but he found that Leonardo probably so translated the Arabic term Devatdar, a title of high dignity at that time in Egypt. Babylonia means simply Cairo, the present Cairo having been generally known by that name in the Middle Ages. The superscription, therefore, runs thus:—"To the Devatdar of Syria, Viceroy of his Majesty the Sultan of Egypt."

Leonardo seems to be on friendly terms with this Devatdar, and gives him information of what he is doing. In the second letter he writes:—

"I find myself here in Armenia in order to give myself with devotion and solicitude to the work which thou hast commanded of me; and, in order to make a beginning in those places which seem to me most suitable for our undertaking, I have betaken myself to the town of Chalindra, which lies nearest to our territory. This town lies on the coast at that part of the Taurus-chain which is divided by the Euphrates."

In another letter Leonardo replies to some complaints of the Devatdar about his delay in beginning the work, making one think of the impatience of the poor Prior of Santa Maria delle Grazie, and the celebrated exclamation of Leo X., "Woe worth the man, he is thinking of the end before he has made a beginning."

There is nothing to tell us whether Leonardo ever made a beginning, or what he was required to accomplish in Armenia; but it was most likely some large engineering works undertaken for the Sultan. It will be remembered that in his far-famed letter to Lodovico Sforza he boasts of being able to execute such works, and also machines of war more terrible than were ever seen before. It is possible that he may have learnt something of the construction of these war engines in the East, which was more advanced in the making of instruments of war, at that time, than Europe. Many things point, indeed, to this Eastern visit—drawings of places that have a strange foreign aspect; a map of Armenia, with the courses of the Tigris and Euphrates traced on it; a pen-drawing of a dromedary in the Windsor Castle collection; a pen-drawing of the chain of the Taurus mountains, with the names of the highest points written in Arabic, but in Italian letters; and other drawings, of little significance by themselves, which, taken together, tend to support Dr. Richter's hypothesis.

The only difficulties that remain are, when did Leonardo make this journey? and why have his biographers been so silent about it? It is strange that it was not known to Vasari, who, although not very intimately acquainted with Leonardo, exalts him beyond measure, and would certainly have mentioned his Eastern journey had he been aware of it.

Now most of the years of Leonardo's life are sufficiently accounted for by his recent biographers. He could not, it is certain, have spent any long time in the East after his stay in Milan; but there still remains the period after he left Verrochio's workshop, some time after 1477, and the time of his settlement in Milan about 1481. He is generally supposed to have set up a bottega for himself in Florence at this time; but there is no exact proof of this; and it may well be, as Dr. Richter affirms, that he journeyed at this period in Southern Italy, to Cyprus, and then on to the East, where he accepted employment as an engineer. That in order to do this he adopted the Mohammedan faith seems, however, an unnecessary surmise, although it might account for the ignorance of his biographers, as Leonardo would naturally be silent, on returning to his allegiance to the Pope, concerning his renegade life. But another reason may have existed for his not caring to talk much of his Eastern experiences. Did he accomplish the work that he had undertaken to the Devatdar to do "with devotion and solicitude"? or was it, like so many of his great projects, only planned and never put into execution? If this were the case his visit to the East might have ended in disappointment and disgrace, and he might not have cared to have much known about it. But, whatever he may have achieved or failed to achieve, Leonardo's personal knowledge of Asia Minor seems tolerably well proved by Dr. Richter's researches. Much, of course, remains to be done in the way of searching the Leonardo MSS.; but when the Institute of France publishes, as it promises, the twelve volumes of MSS. in its possession, and Milan also throws open its treasures, it is probable that more light may be thrown on this strange journey to the East, and on the history of the great artist who ever seems to elude our full knowledge.

MARY M. HEATON.

MEZZOTINTS AT THE BURLINGTON FINE ARTS CLUB.

PROBABLY the only fault which a severe criticism could find in the valuable exhibition of mezz tint's now open in Savile Row would be that the display consists somewhat too exclusively of engraved work in portraiture. That it should so consist for the most part was, of course, seen to be inevitable by all who had any general acquaintance with what has been done in mezzotint; but a determined effort might, perhaps, have resulted in the gathering together of a larger number of excellent works from which the interest of portraiture, with all its associations of historical illustration, is banished, and in which other interests are introduced. It is but of comparatively recent years that mezzotint has been at all extensively employed in the translation of landscape. Its principal employment in regard to landscape art—that by which it has won its highest honours in dealing with landscape art—has been in the production of the Liber Studiorum of Turner and of the series known as English Landscape by John Constable. The first of these publications began in 1807; the second some twenty years later. A few impressions from each series are to be seen at the Burlington Club. The differences, between the one and the other are quite as remarkable as their resemblances. In the one, the work of the engraver in mezzotint received the support of the etched line to strengthen his labour, to give it definiteness and force. In the other, the mezzotint work had no such potent assistance.

The Liber Studiorum of Turner has lately been seen so much that there can be no occasion to make many remarks on the few examples now exhibited; but the collector will observe with interest that the most noticeable piece among them is a proof of that rare state of the Aesacus and Hesperie which, by itself, fetched lately more than a hundred guineas under the hammer. This is the Aesacus and Hesperie "with the white face"—a delicate print in which the mezzotint work, as well as the pure etching, is from Turner's own hand. In regard to the Constables we could wish that more had been exhibited. They are really very little known, or, rather, what is known is the later and debased issue of them, in which, we may fairly take it, not much remains of such effects as, with great expenditure of labour and patience, Constable induced David Lucas to obtain. The two impressions exhibited from English Landscape are, however, unexceptionable. There is the wonderful Spring—the view of flat but upland country, over which March sunshine falls very fitfully, and a March wind is still blowing. There is the peaceful Dedham Vale, which, as it is here exhibited, is a most perfect thing—hardly an idealisation so much as a complete realisation of English pastoral landscape. And while we are speaking of Lucas's work after Constable, a passing word should be said for yet rarer work of Henry Dawe after the same painter. His Leathes Water shows a more delicate and restrained manner of treating nature than that which is generally visible in the vividly wrought plates by David Lucas.

But it is hardly in the exposition of these rare and beautiful examples of landscape art that the chief interest of this collection is supposed to consist. On the walls of the gallery mezzotint may be traced from its very origin. The process is scarcely yet two hundred and fifty years old, and its invention has, until recent times, been attributed to Prince Rupert. Even an intelligent writer in that revived periodical, the Art Journal, makes, we perceive, this very month, the mistake of attributing it to him; but it was not of Rupert's invention, though it was of Rupert's practice. It was invented by Ludwig von Siegen, who was born at Utrecht, and from whom Prince Rupert probably learnt it. In the gallery of the Club examples meet us of the work of both these men. They have an antiquarian interest, but are hardly to be cherished by reason of their beauty or their complete accomplishment; and we seem to see, not only in them, but likewise in a good deal of the early work, the very natural tendency to apply the new art to something of the old tasks—to use the new instrument to do the accustomed work, rather than quite the work which it might do the best. It was reserved, we think, for later artists to discover the true uses of the art of mezzotint—to find its especial functions.

The art had matured well enough by the time that the fleshly beauties of Sir Peter Lely were ready to be recorded and multiplied by its help; it had reached full perfection a century later, when Sir Joshua Reynolds, Gainsborough, Romney, and Morland came to receive the advantage of an aid very specially adapted to their respective manners in painting. It has been remarked before that the large loose touch of several of these men was particularly fitted for translation into the black and white of a mezzotint engraving, while singularly unsuited to reproduction in definite line. The truth is, a line engraving after Sir Joshua Reynolds would necessarily betray failings hitherto unsuspected by the general in his facile and popular art. But, before we come to the period of Sir Joshua, we have passed more than one generation of sufficiently masterly engravers in mezzotint, among whom was John Smith, of whom, as the excellent catalogue before us aptly reminds us, Walpole said, "the best mezzotinter who has appeared who united softness with strength and finishing with freedom." There are but two examples here of his admirable art, but it would not have been easy to have surpassed the splendour and brilliance of his Wyherley after Lely. A robust portrait, indeed, of a man of robust but obscure talent.

A notice so brief as the present—skirting a great subject—can hardly take account of the many prints one of whose chief recommendations lies in their extreme rarity; but it may, at all events, be said that the controllers of the exhibition have been fortunate enough to get more than one print which is practically unique, as well as many of high scarcity. It is natural that such prints should belong principally to the earlier period of the art. To the later period belong those engravings after Sir Joshua and his contemporaries which, more than anything else, have contributed to the popularisation of mezzotint. And these are largely, though not too largely, represented. Indeed, in one instance there is some scarcity of representation. The engraver McARDell, of whom, as the catalogue rightly tells us, Reynolds himself thought so highly, is represented by two plates, but neither of them after Sir Joshua. It is interesting, however, to see first states of the portrait of Lady Grammont—La Belle Hamilton, a maturish beauty—after Lely, and of the Rubens, his Wife and Child, after the great Flemish master. Among the prints after Reynolds there are examples by nearly all the best men whose work, as he said himself, was to immortalise him; and while all of these betray that complete command of the instrument which is found less uniformly in the early time, many of them evidence also the special merits of individual engravers. The criticism of Redgrave, and more latterly of Mr. Smith—the laborious compiler of a bulky catalogue—upon the individual merits of these different men is, it must be noted, more to be praised for its intentions than for its frequent success. It is apt to lack definiteness. Such criticism is likely to be more valuable when the object is approached from the artistic and the literary point of view, and this is one which neither of these excellent authorities is conspicuous for taking. The plates of John Dean, however, are very rightly described by Mr. Smith as characterised by "delicacy of execution carried to such an extent that to a superficial observer his prints seem faint." It might perhaps have been added that such delicacy is often wonderfully in accord with the character of the work of Gainsborough, after whom Dean did some lovely work. We may refer the visitor to Nos. 40 and 41, two impressions of Mrs. Elliot—lent respectively by Mr. Fisher and Mr. Addington. The tender grace of the work is not more conspicuous than is that of the sitter, a woman whose refined beauty came to her as a birthright, for she was a daughter of Elizabeth Gunning. To pass from her portrait to that of her mother in youth—engraved by Finlayson after Read (No. 87)—is to pass from a work in which general and equal delicacy has been a characteristic of the engraver, to one in which that which is most conspicuous is the exquisite softness of gradation over the whole of the face. Of the more generally powerful work of James Watson—a work, however, in which power was never won at the cost of delicacy—a quite magnificent example occurs in the portrait of Lady Carlisle. By Charles Phillips, one of whom much less is known—for he worked for but few years, and must have died young—there is the frank and agreeable portrait of Nelly O'Brien at her youngest (No. 101). By Valentine Green, a greater master, there is a portrait of the Duchess of Devonshire (No. 106). John Jones could not possibly be better represented than by the portraits of Miss Kemble and Mrs. Davenport. The research of Mr. Smith appears to have made it evident to him that the latter lady was not Mrs. Davenport the actress, but the wife of one Davies Davenport, who sat in Parliament. Whoever it may have been, we will accept it primarily for its artistic worth. Of men's portraits, one of the most powerful in touch and subtle in expression is that of Joseph Baretti—tutor to the Thrale family—likewise after Sir Joshua. William Ward, who did much excellent work outside the range of portraiture, is represented by the free and excellent mezzotint of The Snake in the Grass. William Say, who was employed upon the Liber Studiorum, but by no means showed his best quality in the work which he did for it, is here adequately represented as a master of glowing colour and forcible tone by the engraving of the leaning Peasant Girl after Rembrandt. It is impossible for mezzotint to be warmer and richer than it is in this plate, and difficult for any other method of engraving to rival such richness and such warmth.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS AT THE DUDLEY GALLERY.

THERE is no material for congratulation in the exhibition of water-colours opened last Saturday at the Dudley. For years past the quality of English work in that particular branch in which we once most excelled has plainly been on the decline. Among the six or seven hundred works here exhibited there are but very few that are other than anecdotal or accidental "bits" from nature at best, from studio properties at worst. There is a sad want of serious study, of thought, observation, and good workmanship, of all the qualities which go to the making of an artist. In the present exhibition the tradition of Frederick Walker pushed to travesty, and caricatured in an iridescent, finnikin key of colour, is the ruling influence among the younger school, curiously varied this year by a tendency to inky skies and dirty shadows, which seems to have sprung from imitation of the latest Dutch school of water-colour drawing as exemplified at the Grosvenor last year. When we add to these disadvantages the circumstance that very few well-known painters, and of the eight Academicians who are on the committee not one contribute anything, it will easily be realised that the show is an extremely depressing one.

Almost the solitary instance of intellectual ambition in the choice of a subject is Mr. Waterhouse's St. Eulalia (103). The dead body of the saint martyred by Diocletian lies in the Forum watched by a Roman soldier; the head is towards the spectator, and the corpse, scantily clothed, is violently foreshortened. A sudden fall of snow has lightly covered the body and mingled with the hair. The composition is not uninteresting, but the painting of the flesh leaves much to be desired. Mr. Walter Crane has attempted to rival Théodore Rousseau in his Dian hunted on a Day (379)—a deep woodland glen, with the bright little figure of Diana and her hound at the right-hand corner. This is a much more pleasing work than the same artist's deplorable drawing called To-morrow to Fresh Woods and Pastures New (48). Mr. Henry Page has a pleasant study of brown flesh-tints in his Nereid (91), and Mr. H. B. Rose a vigorous Eastern figure in his Arab Sheikh (340), which redeems the singular badness of the other drawings under the same name. Pursuit (672), by Mr. Sidney Paget, a knight riding hard after some graceful aerial figures, is also worthy of praise. Mr. Percy Macquoid's Bringing in the Peacock at Christmas (38)—a handsome girl, with red hair, carrying to table a peacock covered with the skin and radiant plumage—has some of the qualities which always distinguish the art of this able artist, but is harsh in colour and antiquated in style. Mr. Macquoid should not remind us of Sir John Gilbert under any circumstances whatever.

Among the landscapes, some of the most agreeable are drawings made in country towns. By far the best, as it seems to us, is a very simple and powerful study of the Old Town Hall, Stonehaven (373), by Mr. R. W. Allan. The weather is so wet and bleak that the spectator shivers to look at it, but the grim Scotch town is drawn with so much simplicity and sincerity that the result is very impressive. Quite different in manner, but very charming, in the Walker school, are Mr. Philip Norman's Mermaid Street, Rye (35), and Mr. T. H. Jackson's Cromer (561). Mr. John Pedder has painted an unattractive subject with great truth and feeling in his gray drawing of The Square, Broughton-in-Furness (181), which only needs a few groups of melancholy figures to be as interesting as a Léon Lhermitte. One of the finest landscapes here is Mr. Joseph Knight's In Conway Bay (74), a simple and powerful study of sand-hills under a heavy, rainy sky. Mr. Alfred Parsons is resting too idly on his laurels, it seems to us. His exquisite feeling for cool sylvan scenery has come now to be expressed with such extreme facility as to lose much of its interest. His Ruins of Halmaker House (123) is very enjoyable, but his June 1879 (234) is careless, and his Chalk Pit on the South Downs (311) quite unworthy of his reputation. We compare the latter with Mr. John McDougal's Hay-field (301), which hangs near it, only to point out how much more intelligent and serious the work of the less-known man is in every respect. This latter is, indeed, a very noticeable drawing. A curious and delicate study of snow on mountain ranges is Mr. H. P. de Teissier's Simla Hills (157), which is hung on the floor, but is one of the best works of its kind in the exhibition.

Mr. Frank Dillon exhibits a very fine Study of Siberian Crab Blossom (63), very rich in colour and reflected light. Miss Helen Thornycroft's Orchids (414) is refined in tone and effective in drawing; a very delicate little study of an Iris (608), by Miss L. M. Wilkinson, also deserves praise. Among works that show originality of effort combined with insufficient technical skill may be mentioned Will he come? (36), by Mr. Tidmarsh, a girl in red upon a stile—her figure is well relieved against a pale landscape; Mr. Harry Goodwin's Atlantic at Rest (104), very lovely in colour, but weak and unemphatic; and Mr. G. McCulloch's Puddler between Two Fires, an athlete naked to the waist, with strange effects of reflected fire-light on the skin—a subject well worthy of treatment, but timidly carried out. But we keep to the last all mention of the study which has most taken our fancy, A Bit of London Town (622), the exterior of a second-hand bookshop daintily and faithfully rendered, with a little quiet humour, by Mr. B. W. Spiers.

The sculpture is beneath criticism, with the exception of a graceful terra-cotta statuette of a child (684), by Mr. E. R. Mullins.

OBITUARY.

LIEUT. WILLIAM ANDREWS NESFIELD, who died on March 2, was not only a Peninsular hero, but well known years ago in the art-world of London. After leaving the Army, his taste for painting led him to become one of the earliest members of the old Water-Colour Society, of which he was for thirty years an active exhibiting member, his contemporaries and friends being Turner, Copley Fielding, Cox, Prout, and Stanfield. Later in life he took up landscape gardening as a profession. He planned the Horticultural Gardens at Kensington, and there are few of the large parks and gardens of this country that do not owe something to his taste and skill.

THE well-known Swiss painter, Paul von Deschwanden, has just died suddenly at Stans, in Unterwalden. His altar-pieces, usually life-size figures of saints, have long been in great favour in Switzerland. Correct, pretty, feeble, and waxen are the terms which best describe them. The waiting-room of the Federal Palace at Bern contains one of his pictures—Abraham taking Leave of Sarah before departing for the Sacrifice of Isaac. He was seventy years old.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MESSRS. LONGMANS AND Co. have in preparation Notes on Foreign Picture Galleries, by Mr. Charles L. Eastlake, Keeper of the National Gallery. The Notes will be fully illustrated, and will appear in successive volumes, of which the three first treat of the Brera Gallery at Milan, the Louvre, and the Pinakothek at Munich.

ON Monday next, March 14, the annual exhibition of the Society of Lady Artists will be opened at 48 Great Marlborough Street, and also the exhibition of paintings by Swiss artists, instituted by the Cercle des Beaux-Arts of Geneva, at 168 New Bond Street.

AN event of considerable interest was the sale at Messrs. Hodgson's auction-rooms on Friday week (March 4), of the Lamb portrait of Milton, a fine large picture painted about the year 1640, when the poet was still distinguished by that physical beauty of which the world has heard so much, but which is missing in all his other portraits. The subject of the painting, its intrinsic merit, and (last, but not least) its former ownership by Charles Lamb aroused a little competition—not, however, by any means so great as would have been the case had this work of art been sold in the midst of congruous surroundings, instead of lying obscure and almost unnoticed in the midst of a mass of common books. Mr. Quaritch bought it for £355.

WE hear that there is very shortly to be an exhibition of the works of English etchers, held under official encouragement, at Berlin. It will be held at the Berlin National Gallery or Berlin Museum.

MESSRS. COLNAGHI have sent us an impression of Blake's Canterbury Pilgrims. This is the original engraving, though of course not quite in its original state. The plate lately appeared in an auction-room, we believe, where Messrs. Colnaghi bought it, and found it in fair condition. A limited number of impressions are now printed from it, with an effect quite sufficiently good to make it in every respect interesting to those who are specially interested in the artist. Moreover, it possesses no less genuine interest for those who are familiar with Stothard's treatment of the same subject. The originality of Blake is undoubted. His treatment wants the softer grace of the more popular designer, but has more of vigour and of vivid characterisation.

AN exhibition of old English embroideries will be opened at the School of Art Needlework, South Kensington, on Monday, the 28th of the present month, and will remain open until April 9. Under the presidency of H.R.H. the Princess Christian, a committee of ladies, including Lady Marian Alford, the Viscountess Downe, and Lady Charlotte Schreiber, is gathering a select and representative series of specimens of fine English needlework. Choice examples of foreign origin, though not absolutely excluded from the exhibition, will be shown only when of special illustrative value. All communications should be addressed to the Viscountess Downe, 39 Berkeley Square, W.

DAVID COX's signboard at the Royal Oak Inn at Bettws-y-Coed has at last got out of bankruptcy. The Court of Appeal, overruling the decision of the Chief Judge, and affirming that of the county court judge, has decided that the picture is the property of the owner of the inn, Lady Willoughby de Eresby, and not of the occupier. The legal question is a curious one; but our readers will be more interested to know that Lady Willoughby de Eresby intends to refix the picture in the inn.

It is announced that an exhibition will probably be held of most of the works of Meissonier.

THE late M. Mariette-Bey having died, it appears, without leaving any provision for his children, the Ministers of Public Instruction and of Foreign Affairs in France have, without waiting for formalities, sent a sum of 6,000 frs. for the immediate use of his family until some pension is determined upon. Mdlle. Mariette, his eldest daughter, in a letter written to the French Academy, states that her father had taken every necessary measure for beginning his researches at Sakharah, which it is hoped that M. Maspero will forthwith take in hand.

PROF. SACHAU read a paper before the Berlin Academy on the 10th ult. upon the inscribed stone which he discovered among the ruins of Zebed in the Syrian desert. The inscription is trilingual—in Greek, Arabic, and Syriac. Its date is fixed as the 823rd year of the era of the Seleucidae, or 512 A.D. It is therefore the earliest inscription in Arabic known to exist, and probably also the earliest in Syriac. The writing runs perpendicularly, from top to bottom.

AN exhibition of antique and modern furniture, silver, &c., has been opened by the Leeds Fine Art Society. There is also on view a large collection of etchings by Gautier, Buhot, Lancon, Chauvel, Waltner, and others. Messrs. Hancock and other firms exhibit cases of artistic silver-work. Among the miscellaneous articles is a clock manufactured in the year 1666.

THE annual exhibition of this society now being held at the Royal Manchester Institution is certainly one of much more than average excellence, notwithstanding the absence of any works of commanding ability or attraction. The place of honour is worthily occupied by No. 87, Anxious for a Nibble, by Mr. Anderson Hague, who, in this almost Aumonier-like landscape, has surpassed all his previous efforts. Mr. William Meredith also shows a striking improvement, notably in his Silver Birches (No. 19) in which he has developed a feeling for drawing and grace of composition in striking contrast to his previous shortcomings in this direction.

Messrs. Robert Crozier, William Percy, and William Herbert Johnston send some admirable portraits, the latter showing versatility of expression and characterisation in Nos. 40 and 48, and a very estimable absence of mannerisms. Mr. Arthur H. Marsh contributes an exquisite head in water-colour, Millie (No. 226). Mr. W. Bright Morris is not largely, but very charmingly, represented by several small works of unusual merit. The same may be said of Mr. Randolph Caldecott. Mr. Ward Heys, among other works, sends an almost excessively topographical picture, Thirlmere from Raven Crag (No. 103), and a brilliant water-colour, A Bright October Day—Thirlmere (No. 179). Mr. J. Hey Davies sends a noticeable and well-painted work, The Three Magpies (No. 64). Mr. Elias Bancroft, leaving for a time his favourite themes, has been busy among the Old-World interiors of Shetland, all admirable. Mr. William Morton is delightful as ever in his work, as is also Mr. Moxon Cook, who sends many important and noteworthy drawings; while Mr. George Crozier is more unearthly and dreamlike even than his usual wont. Mr. R. Redfern is equal to, but not beyond, his ordinary strength. Mr. W. Robinson sends numerous works of average and equal ability. Mr. F. A. Winkfield has a crowded, but admirably painted, canvas in Changing Dock (No. 36). Many works of interest, and worthy of note did space permit, have been sent by Messrs. J. Houghton Hague, F. W. Jackson, W. J. Slater, Walter Trevor, John A. Lomax, Selim Rothwell, Warwick Brookes, R. G. Somerset, W. C. Estall, John Taylor, and J. H. Letherbrow; and, among the ladies, Misses Florence Carter, Emily Gertrude Thompson, Annie E. Hastling, Marion Barker, Eleanor S. Wood, and Emma Magnus send some praiseworthy work.

THE French Society of Water-Colours opened its exhibition at the Rue Lafitte last week. It has had one great loss since last year by the death of Jules Jacquemart; but there are plenty of good names remaining to sustain this promising little society.

M. LUCIEN DOUBLE, the son of the great connoisseur who is just dead, has presented to the Louvre a picture from his father's gallery, by Gonzales Coques, the famous Flemish master. It represents the artist in the midst of his family.

THE STAGE.

It is yet too early to speak of the adaptation of a portion of Martin Chuzzlewit produced at the Vaudeville on Thursday night; and the theatrical event of the week is the revival of Jo (from Bleak House) at the Olympic, and the appearance in it, for a series of farewell performances before a tour in America, of Miss Jennie Lee, one of the most remarkable "character-actresses" of our time. The merits of the particular adaptation of Bleak House in which she performs were discussed in this journal when the piece was first produced, and need not be again spoken of either for praise or blame; but an interval of several years has been enough to effect some changes in a most noteworthy performance, and these changes might be either for the better or for the worse. It is not only satisfactory to find that they are, on the whole, for the better; it is unusual to boot; for though a performance at first obviously immature will, of course, if it be the work of an intelligent actor, tend gradually towards improvement, it is very rarely that a performance early stamped with popularity, and accepted from the first as singularly inventive and original, even holds its own—not to speak of improvement—during a long series of years, and through the trial of prolonged success.

Of performances which have drawn delighted audiences all over the country for lengthened periods we can only recal one which has lost nothing, and that, as many readers will have guessed already, is the Rip van Winkle of Mr. Joseph Jefferson—an exhibition of art from first to last measured and exquisitely controlled, always delicate, always restrained, always perfectly sure of its effect. Miss Lee's Jo, moving quite as often to tears as to laughter, is yet not so complete a performance; or, to be more accurate, it is a performance necessarily conceived on a lower level of imagination, and, therefore, never able to be quite so impressive. But it is at the same time—as increased experience of it convinces us—one of the most memorable now before the public, absolutely full from end to end of study of Nature and of Dickens. Furthermore, it is elaborated to the last degree. There is literally not one sentence in Miss Lee's part of the dialogue which does not receive the fullest effect of which it is capable. Nothing further can be done to build up or to add to this performance. Again, the comic portions—always those in which the temptation is strongest to exaggerate—have not tended to become farcical. The vice of caricature has not crept in. With regard to the pathos, there is in one or two instances—notably in the scene in which the ragged boy takes Lady Dedlock to her lover's grave amid the filth and squalor of Tom-all-Alone's—some undue prolongation of pathetic effect. Once or twice here, though there is no exaggeration in the touches, there is a touch too much. The situation, dwelt upon, becomes to the observant less telling than if it were more lightly left. But, on the whole, the performance remains one of those which it is necessary to see if we would keep abreast of what is good and individual in the contemporary theatre. It is quite amusing and interesting to see it within a very short time of seeing Miss Lydia Cowell's brilliant little sketch of the London flower-girl in Divorce at the Vaudeville. As character-pictures it would be unfair to assert that one is cleverer than the other, though one is much more varied than the other, and employs to the full resources of which the other does not indicate the possession. Between the two a comparison may fairly be made, but only such a one as may be instituted between a dramatic picture of domestic incident by Greuze—of the kind that satisfied his occasional craving for morality and sentiment—and a vivid genre picture by Thomas Webster. Of the parts played in Jo by actors other than Miss Jennie Lee not much must be said; but it is pleasant to record that, while in many respects the cast differs from the original one, it is in hardly any case inferior to it. Indeed, in one notable case—that of the representative of Lady Dedlock—the improvement is most marked, and the success now attained remarkable. We fortunately forget who the lady was who essayed some years ago this difficult and somewhat unthankful part, but we remember that the performance was a stilted one. Lady Dedlock is played now by Miss M. Leighton, who is able to display exactly the qualities and characteristics claimed for Lady Dedlock in the novel of Dickens. Not called upon to be mobile of feature or "natural" in the sense of "ordinary," Miss Leighton possesses exquisite carriage and admirably graceful movement. Such a performance as hers adds substantially—and especially in the scenes with Sir Leicester and Mr. Tulkinghorn—to the completeness of the general effect. We think her a little less truthful in the scenes of quiet feeling with Jo. Mr. Burnett returns to his capable performance of the part of Bucket; Mr. Compton appears for the first time in town as the good-natured little Mr. Snagsby; and the careful actor who represents the coroner has studied sur le vif—in a small way, it is a character-portrait that he gives us.

MUSIC.

BERLIOZ' "CHILDHOOD OF CHRIST."

BERLIOZ' sacred trilogy, L'Enfance du Christ, was given for the first time in London at Mr. Charles Hallé's third concert at St. James's Hall on Saturday evening, February 26. Once again we have to thank the eminent pianist for introducing to the notice of the musical world one of the most characteristic works of the French composer. The libretto was written by Berlioz himself. The birth of Christ and the flight to the wilderness are announced by the Narrator, and then follows a night march of the Roman guards in Jerusalem. This piece is quaint and original, and the scoring very effective. In the next scene we are introduced to Herod's palace; the monarch expresses in a fine recitative and air his gloomy thoughts and fears. The Jewish Magicians are announced, and explain to the King his dream. The incantation scene is thoroughly original; it is written alternately in bars of three-four and common time. Herod orders the massacre of the infants, and then follows a fine dramatic chorus of the Magicians: "Go, go; let the sword be bared for slaughter." The fifth scene represents the Stable at Bethlehem; the duet sung by Mary and Joseph is wonderfully graceful and beautiful. In the last scene the departure to Egypt is commanded by unseen angels. This chorus is sung by a few voices in a room near the orchestra.

The second part of the trilogy, entitled "La Puite en Egypte," was composed before either the first or third part. For the circumstances under which it was written we must refer our readers to the amusing letter by Berlioz addressed to Mr. J. Ella in 1852. It is to be found in the first edition of the score, and in Les Grotesques de la Musique. This second part is short, but contains music of the most delicate and picturesque character. Berlioz was in the habit of writing difficult music for very large orchestras; he has shown us throughout this work, and more particularly in the "Flight into Egypt," that he could express himself in the simplest manner and with the simplest means. He only makes use of strings and wood-wind, without bassoons; and in the rest of the work trumpets and trombones are used in only one movement, and horns and drums in two. The second part commences with a symphony which depicts the assembling of the Shepherds at the Stable of Bethlehem. The absence of a leading note gives to this movement a quaint and marked character. The "Farwell of the Shepherds" is a marvel of beauty and simplicity. It was much appreciated by the audience, and was encored. The next number, "The Repose of the Holy Family," is certainly the gem of the work; it is a charming and appropriate piece of programme-music; the orchestration is most exquisite.

The third part is entitled "The Arrival at Sais." The journey through the desert and the reception of the fugitives by an Ishmaelite are described. The young men and maidens cheer the weary travellers with a serenade. This original movement is scored only for two flutes and a harp. The work concludes with a recitative for the Narrator and an unaccompanied chorus. The cessation of instruments causes the work to end in a calm and, to our thinking, highly effective manner.

The solos were rendered with great effect by Miss Edith Santley, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Santley, and Signor Poli. Mr. Hallé again proved himself a first-rate conductor; the production of Berlioz's works is evidently to him a labour of love. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

Second Issue of 5,000 Shares, of which 1,100 have been Privately Subscribed, the balance of 3,900 Shares being now offered to the Public at par.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY, Limited,

NEW BOND STREET, W.

Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862, 1867, & 1877. Capital £100,000, in 20,000 Shares of £5 each. Payable, £1 on application, £1 10s. on allotment.

The First Issue of 5,000 Shares was made during the year 1880. A Second Issue of 5,000 is now being made, but of this number 1,100 Shares have already been privately subscribed. It is not proposed to call up more than one-half of the nominal value of each Share. Applicants to whom Shares are not allotted will have their deposits returned in full.

Each allottee of 10 shares and upwards shall be thereby entitled, for the period of three years, from the 25th March, 1880, to one annual subscription of the value of £3 3s. per annum, giving the right to six volumes at a time from the circulating library, together with the free use of the reading and writing rooms, the reference library, and all other advantages offered to a subscriber to the Institution, and equivalent to a bonus of 12½ per cent. per annum on the amount proposed to be called up.

DIRECTORS.

SIR COUTTS LINDSAY, Bart. (Chairman of the Board), 4, Cromwell-place, South Kensington, S.W.

Alex. Rivington, Esq., Arts Club, Hanover-square, W.

J. Conyns Carr, Esq., 19, Blandford-square, N.W.

George Augustus Sala, Esq., Reform Club.

Edmund S. Power, Esq., Devonshire Club, S.W.

George Chandler, Esq., 15, Coleman-street, E.C.

Secretary—J. Standish Hay, Esq.

Bankers—The London and County Bank, 21, Hanover-square, and its branches.

Solicitors—Messrs. Law, Hussey, & Hulbert, 10, New-square, Lincoln's-inn, W.C.

Auditor—F. W. Pixley, Esq., Chartered Accountant.

Offices—The Grosvenor Gallery Library, New Bond-st., W.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company was registered on the 24th December, 1879, and since that date 5,000 shares have been applied for and allotted, representing a capital of £25,000, of which one-half, equalling £12,500, has been called up.

In consequence of the necessary additions, decorations, &c., the premises were not opened for the transaction of the library business until the 25th March, 1880, and at the same time the subscribing members were admitted to the rooms which had been reserved for their use.

It was the original intention of the Directors to limit as far as possible, consistent with the proper carrying on of the business, the working capital of the Company, in order that the shareholders should reap the full benefit of their investment; but the very rapid development of the Company's business within the short time that has elapsed since the date of its formation, and the growing demands of the large body of subscribers, necessitate an increase of capital, and justify them in now offering for subscription a further issue of 5,000 shares.

The library department, placed under the care of Mr. Charles Allen, has been so efficiently organised that it is now in a position to compete with the largest institutions of the kind in existence. In comprehensiveness it certainly surpasses any other circulating library in England; for it represents the first serious attempt that has been made to combine under a single subscription the distinct advantages of an English library supplied with every class of contemporary literature, a foreign library to which the newly published French and German works are added as they appear, and a library of instrumental and vocal music.

To these distinguishing features of the circulating library must be added the special advantages offered to the subscribers in the use of the Club premises reserved for the members. Since the opening of these various apartments, comprising a reference library, a ladies' drawing-room, reading and writing room, luncheon and dining rooms, &c., they have been largely used by town and country members; and it is mainly to the favour shown to this branch of the undertaking that the Directors attribute the high average value of the subscriptions received during the year. Notwithstanding the fact that the subscribers of one guinea have been treated with exceptional liberality, and that the subscriptions in this class have therefore rapidly increased, the average value of the subscriptions received has equalled 2½ guineas per head.

That these highly gratifying results, the fruit of only nine months' trading, are of an enduring character is witnessed by the fact that the progression in the rates of daily subscriptions received has been steadily advancing.

With confidence in the continued prosperity of the undertaking, and in order to provide for the growing demands of the business, the Directors have decided to occupy the remaining portion of the large block of buildings adjoining the principal entrance. By this means they will be placed in entire command of the handsome frontage in Bond-street, and, while affording additional accommodation to their subscribers, they will at the same time be enabled to develop the branch of their business devoted to the sale of new and old books, from which a profitable return will be realised.

Prospectuses and forms of application for shares may be obtained at the London and County Bank, 21, Hanover-square, or any of its branches; the Solicitors and Auditor; and also at the offices of the Company in New Bond-street.

TRÜBNER & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE LIFE and PUBLIC SERVICES of JAMES A. GARFIELD,

PRESIDENT of the UNITED STATES: a Biographical Sketch. By CAPTAIN F. H. MASON, 42nd Regiment U.S.A. With a Preface by BRET HARTE. Crown 8vo, pp. vi+130, cloth, with Portrait, 2s. 6d.

"THE MESNEVI"

(Usually known as the Mesnevi of the Holy Mesnevi of Mevlana (our Lord), Jalal'ud-din Muhammed Er-rumi. Book the First. With Some Account of the Life of the Author, of his Ancestors, and of his Descendants. Illustrated by a Selection of Characteristic Anecdotes. Translated, and the Poetry Versified, in English, by J. W. HENRIE, M.A., &c. Post 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE SCIENCE of BEAUTY:

An Analytical Enquiry into the Laws of Aesthetics. By AVARY W. HOLMES-FOLKES, M.A., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE HISTORY of INDIA from the EARLIEST AGES.

By J. TALBOY, WHEELER, late Assistant-Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department. Vol. IV. Part II. MOGHUL EMPIRE—AURANGZEB. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT within HISTORIC TIMES;

With Some Account of British Wild White Cattle. By J. E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. With Illustrations by Wolf, Whymper, and others. Demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

DR. APPLETON: his LIFE and LITERARY RELICS.

By JOHN H. APPLETON, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Staplefield, Sussex, and A. H. SATYR, M.A., Queen's College, Oxford. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

KING'S COLLEGE LECTURES on ELOCUTION;

On the Physiology and Culture of Voice and Speech, and the Expression of the Emotions by Language, Countenance, and Gesture. To which is added a Special Lecture on the Causes and Cure of Impediments of Speech. Being the Substance of the Introductory Course of Lectures annually delivered by CHARLES JOHN HARTING, Lecturer on Public Reading and Speaking at King's College, London, in the Evening Classes Department. Dedicated by permission to H. H. H. the Prince of Wales. New and greatly enlarged illustrated Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

THE GULISTAN;

Or, Rose Garden of Sheikh Nuzuh'ud-din Sadi of Shiraz. Translated for the first time into Prose and Verse, with a Preface and a Life of the Author from the Afshe Kadali. By EDWARD B. EASTWICK, F.L.S., M.A., &c. Second Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES;

Or, Jataka Tales. From the Jatakavastu. Translated from the Original Pali, by T. W. RYDS DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 18s.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the HISTORY of the DEVELOPMENT of the HUMAN RACE.

Lectures and Dissertations. By LAZARUS GEIGER, Author of "Origine und Evolution of Human Speech and Reason." Translated from the German by DAVID ASHER, Ph.D. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE RACES of AFGHANISTAN:

Being a Brief Account of the Principal Nations inhabiting that Country. By purgeon-Major H. W. BELLEW, C.S.I., late on special Political Duty at Kabul. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE CLASSICAL POETRY of the JAPANESE.

By BASIL HALL CHAMBERLAIN, Author of "Yeiogo Heekaku Ichiran." Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE BIRDS of CORNWALL and the SCILLY ISLANDS.

By the late EDWARD HEARLE HODD. Edited, with an Introduction, Appendix, and Brief Memoir of the Author, by JAMES E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Post 8vo, with Portrait and Map, cloth, 11s.

LETTERS from my MILL.

From the French of ALPHONSE DAUDET. By MART COREY. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s.; boards, 2s.

THE LIGHT of ASIA;

Or, the Great Renunciation. Being the Life and Teaching of Oantama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Told in Verse by an Indian BUDDHIST. By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., Author of "The Indian Song of Songs." Crown 8vo, limp parchment wrapper, 2s. 6d.

THE GREAT AFRICAN ISLAND:

Chapters on Madagascar. By the Rev. JAMES SIBREE, Jun., of the London Missionary Society, Author of "Madagascar and its People," &c. Demy 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations, cloth, 12s.

LANGUAGE and its STUDY,

With Special Reference to the Indo-European Family of Languages. Seven Lectures by W. D. WHITNEY, Professor of Sanskrit and Instructor in Modern Languages in Yale College. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Tables of Declension and Conjugation, Grimm's Law with Illustration, and an Index, by the Rev. H. MORRIS, M.A., LL.D. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

LECTURES on TEACHING.

Delivered in the University of Cambridge in the Lent Term, 1880.

By J. G. FITCH, H.M. Inspector of Schools.

Small 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

M. T. CICERONIS PRO CN. PLANCIO ORATIO.

By H. A. HOLDEN, LL.D., Head-Master of Ipswich School.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

AN ANALYSIS of CRIMINAL LIABILITY.

By E. C. CLARK, LL.D.,

Regius Professor of Civil Law in the University of Cambridge; also of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE BACCHAE of EURIPIDES.

WITH CRITICAL and EXPLANATORY NOTES,

And with numerous Illustrations from Works of Ancient Art.

By JOHN EDWIN SANDYS, M.A.,

Fellow and Tutor of St. John's College, and Public Orator in the University of Cambridge.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d., Vol. I.

M. TULLII CICERONIS DE NATURA DEORUM, LIBRI TRES.

WITH INTRODUCTION and COMMENTARY.

By JOSEPH B. MAYOR, M.A.,

Professor of Classical Literature at King's College, London; formerly Fellow and Tutor of St. John's College, Cambridge.

Together with a New Collation of several of the English MSS. by J. H. SWAINSON, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Nearly ready, fcap. 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

A SKETCH of ANCIENT PHILOSOPHY from THALES to CICERO.

By JOSEPH B. MAYOR, M.A.,

Professor of Classical Literature at King's College, London, &c.

In the press.

THE ARCHITECTURAL HISTORY of the UNIVERSITY and COLLEGES of CAMBRIDGE.

By the late Professor WILLIS, M.A.

With numerous Maps, Plans, and Illustrations, continued to the Present Time and Edited by JOHN WILLIS CLARK, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity College.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 18s.

A SELECTION of CASES from the STATE TRIALS.

By J. W. WILLIS-BUND, M.A., LL.B.,

Barrister-at-Law; Professor of Constitutional Law and History, University College, London.

VOL. I.—TRIALS for TREASON (1327—1660).

VOL. II.—In the press.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

SELECTED TITLES from the DIGEST. DE CONDICTIONIBUS.

DIGEST XII. 1. and IV.—VII. and DIGEST XIII. 1.—III.

Translated and Annotated by BRYAN WALKER, M.A., LL.D.,

Law Lecturer of St. John's College, Cambridge; late Fellow and Lecturer of Corpus Christi College; and formerly Law Student of Trinity Hall.

In the press.

MATHEMATICAL and PHYSICAL PAPERS.

By Sir W. THOMSON, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S.;
Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Glasgow.

Collected from different Scientific Periodicals from May, 1841, to the present time.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s., Vol. I.

MATHEMATICAL and PHYSICAL PAPERS.

By GEORGE GABRIEL STOKES, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S.;

Fellow of Pembroke College and Lucasian Professor of Mathematics.

Reprinted from the Original Journals and Transactions, with Additional Notes by the Author.

[Vol. II. In the press.]

Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s., Vol. I., Part I., of

A TREATISE on NATURAL PHILOSOPHY.

By Sir W. THOMSON, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S.,
Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Glasgow, Fellow of St. Peter's College, Cambridge; and P. G. TAIT, M.A., Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh; formerly Fellow of St. Peter's College.

[Part II. In the press.]

Demy 8vo, 12s.

A TREATISE on the THEORY of DETERMINANTS, And their Applications in Analysis and Geometry.

By ROBERT FORSYTH SCOTT, M.A.,

Of Lincoln's Inn; Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

HYDRODYNAMICS:

A Treatise on the Mathematical Theory of Motion of Fluids.

By HORACE LAMB, M.A.,

Formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; Professor of Mathematics in the University of Adelaide.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

THE ANALYTICAL THEORY of HEAT.

By JOSEPH FOURIER.

Translated, with Notes, by A. FREEMAN, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 18s.

The ELECTRICAL RESEARCHES of the Honourable HENRY CAVENDISH, F.R.S.,

Written between 1771 and 1781, Edited from the original Manuscripts in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire, K.G.

By J. CLERK MAXWELL, F.R.S.

Demy 8vo, 10s.

NALOPĀKHYĀNAM;

Or, the Tale of Nala.

Containing the Sanskrit Text in Roman Characters, followed by a Vocabulary in which each word is placed under its root, with references to derived words in Cognate Languages, and a sketch of Sanskrit Grammar.

By the Rev. THOMAS JARRETT, M.A.,
Trinity College; Regius Professor of Hebrew, Cambridge.

Now ready, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

NOTES

ON THE

NALOPĀKHYĀNAM;

Or, Tale of Nala,

For the Use of Classical Students.

By JOHN PETTE, M.A.,
Fellow and Tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge.

LONDON: CAMBRIDGE WAREHOUSE, 17, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 463.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SECOND ISSUE of 5,000 SHARES, of which 1,100 have been Privately Subscribed, the balance of 3,900 Shares being now offered to the Public at par.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW BOND STREET, W.

Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862, 1867, & 1877.

Capital £100,000, in 20,000 Shares of £5 each.

Payable, £1 on application, £1 10s. on allotment.

The First Issue of 5,000 Shares was made during the year 1880. A Second Issue of 5,000 is now being made, but of this number 1,100 Shares have already been privately subscribed. It is not proposed to call up more than one-half of the nominal value of each share. Applicants to whom shares are not allotted will have their deposits returned in full.

Each allottee of 10 shares and upwards shall be thereby entitled, for a period of three years, from the 25th March, 1880, to one annual subscription of the value of £3 3s. per annum, giving the right to six volumes at a time from the circulating library, together with the free use of the reading and writing rooms, the reference library, and all other advantages offered to a subscriber to the institution, and equivalent to a bonus of 12½ per cent. per annum on the amount proposed to be called up.

DIRECTORS.

SIR COUTTS LINDSAY, Bart. (Chairman of the Board), 4, Cromwell-place, South Kensington, S.W.

ALEXANDER RIVINGTON, Esq., Arts Club, Hanover-square, W.

J. COMYNS CARR, Esq., 19, Blandford-square, N.W.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA, Esq., Reform Club.

EDMUND S. POWER, Esq., Devonshire Club, S.W.

GEORGE CHANDLER, Esq., 15, Coleman-street, E.C.

Secretary—J. STANDISH ITALY, Esq.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company was registered on the 24th December, 1879, and since that date 5,000 shares have been applied for and allotted, representing a capital of £25,000, of which one-half, equalling £12,500, has been called up.

In consequence of the necessary additions, decorations, &c., the premises were not opened for the transaction of the library business until the 25th March, 1880, and at the same time the subscribing members were admitted to the rooms which had been reserved for their use.

It was the original intention of the Directors to limit as far as possible, consistent with the proper carrying on of the business, the working capital of the Company, in order that the shareholders should reap the full benefit of their investment; but the very rapid development of the Company's business within the short time that has elapsed since the date of its formation, and the growing demands of the large body of subscribers, necessitate an increase of capital, and justify them in now offering for subscription a further 5,000 shares, which will be issued at par.

The progress of the undertaking during the year 1880 more than satisfies the expectations of the Directors as set forth in their original prospectus, and the distinguished and representative names that will be found in the published list of members prove that the Grosvenor Gallery Library has been already widely appreciated by the classes for whose convenience it was specially designed.

The library department, placed under the care of Mr. Charles Allen, has been so efficiently organised that it is now in a position to compete with the largest institutions of the kind in existence. In comprehensiveness it certainly surpasses any other circulating library in England; for it represents the first serious attempt that has been made to combine under a single subscription the distinct advantages of an English library supplied with every class of contemporary literature, a foreign library to which the newly published French and German works are added as they appear, and a library of instrumental and vocal music; while to these distinguishing features of the circulating library must be added the special advantages offered to the subscribers in the use of the Club premises reserved for the members. It is mainly to the favour shown to this branch of the undertaking that the Directors attribute the high average value of the subscriptions received during the year.

That these highly gratifying results, the fruit of only nine months' trading, are of an enduring character is witnessed by the fact that the progression in the rates of daily subscriptions received has been steadily advancing.

During the last three months of the year 1880 the average amount of new subscriptions taken each day was nearly three times as large as the receipts of the previous three months, and since the commencement of the present year there has been a further advance of 60 per cent. above the point that had been reached in 1880. Taking these results as affording a basis of calculation for the future, and at the same time making due allowance for a diminished rate of income during the summer season, the Directors anticipate an increase in the receipts for new subscriptions of £7,500 per annum; and the estimate is, indeed, fully supported by the experience of the business done since the formation of the Company, and during a time when the advantages of the institution were not so widely known as they are at present. But to the fund estimated to be produced by the accretion of new subscribers must be added the large per-centage of renewed subscriptions, which all experience of library business enables the Directors to count upon with confidence.

The Directors are advised that the contract mentioned in the original prospectus (being an agreement dated the 17th December, 1879, between Sir Coutts Lindsay of the one part and Alexander Rivington for himself and on behalf of the Company therein stated to be about to be formed, under the name of the Grosvenor Gallery Library (Limited), of the other part) is the only contract the date and parties to which are required by Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, to be specified; but, in order to prevent any question, applicants for shares shall be deemed to waive any further compliance with that enactment.

Prospectuses and forms of application for shares may be obtained at the London and County Bank, 21, Hanover-square, or any of its branches; and also at the offices of the Company, in New Bond-street.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

LOED COLCHESTER'S DIARY OF LOED ELLENBOROUGH, by W. P. COURTNEY	199
BENT'S GENOA, by the Rev. M. CREIGHTON	200
HARTING'S BRITISH EXTINCT ANIMALS, by the Rev. M. G. WATKINS	200
MARVIN'S MARY, by D. C. BOULGER	202
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY	203
SOME BOOKS ON EDUCATION	204
NOTES AND NEWS	205
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	206
OBITUARY: JAMES SPEDDING, by Prof. FOWLER; & Co.	206
THE CONSPIRACY AGAINST THE OTTOMAN KHALIFATE, by the Rev. Dr. BADGER	207
SELECTED BOOKS	208
CORRESPONDENCE:— Mr. Strachey on Mr. Fyffe's "History of Modern Europe," by C. A. Fyffe; Buddhist Chronology , by Dr. O. Frankfurter	208
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	210
THE "CHALLENGER" REPORT, by Prof. P. MARTIN DUNCAN	210
OBITUARY	211
NOTES OF TRAVEL	211
SCIENCE NOTES	211
PHILOLOGY NOTES	212
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	212
GILCHRIST'S LIFE OF BLAKE, by JOHN M. GRAY	212
TAPESTRY PAINTINGS	214
ART SALES	214
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	215
STAGE NOTES	216
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	216

THE MASON SCIENCE COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL PROFESSORS.

The Trustees intend from the commencement of the Second Session of the College, on the 1st of October next, to enlarge the course of instruction. The present chairs are Mathematics (Professor M. J. M. HILL, M.A., Cantab.), Chemistry (Professor W. A. TILDEN, D.Sc. Lond., F.R.S.), Physics (Professor J. H. POWELL, M.A., Cantab., B.Sc. Lond.), and Biology (Professor R. W. BRIDGE, M.A., Cantab., F.R.S.). In the ensuing Session Professor Tilden will add Metallurgy to his course.

The Trustees invite applications (to be sent to "Mr. O. H. MORLEY, Secretary, The Mason Science College, Birmingham," on or before the 30th of April next) for the following additional Professorships and Lectureships, viz.:

1. A Professor of Physiology, with special reference to the Laws of Health.
2. A Professor of Geology and Mineralogy.
3. A Professor of Civil and Mechanical Engineering.
4. A Professor of Latin and Greek.
5. A Professor of English Language and Literature.
6. A Lecturer on the German Language.
7. A Lecturer on the German Language.

Particulars of the salaries and conditions will be sent by the Secretary on application.

By a resolution of the Trustees, candidates are especially requested to abstain from canvassing.

JOSIAH MASON, Balfour,
J. GIBBS BLAKE, M.D., Chairman of Trustees.
G. J. JOHNSON, Hon. Sec.

Edmund-street, Birmingham, February 23rd, 1881.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 3RD OF MAY.

F. W. MADDEN, M.R.A.S., Secretary.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WARBERRY

HOUSE, Bishopdown Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 300 Guineas.

MATRICULATION EXAMINATION.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—Instruction in all the subjects of the above Examination is given at GUY'S HOSPITAL.

The Classes for the June Examination will commence on MONDAY, MARCH 21ST. The classes are not confined to Students of the Hospital. For further particulars address the DEAN, Guy's Hospital, S.E.

STUDIOS.—Remaining Set.—With Two

Anterooms, Lavatory, &c. Well placed in Daywater, near two Stations, Rent £50 per annum.—E. & F. SWAIN, 82, High-street, Nottingham, W. (7.35.)

SYMONDS' LIBRARY.—FINE ARTS

AND ANTIQUITIES.—THE CATALOGUE of the COLLECTIONS of the late Dr. SYMONDS, of Clifton, is now ready. Post-free for Two Stamps.—WILLIAM GEORGE, Historical and Antiquarian Bookseller, 26, Park-street, Bristol.

SECRETARYSHIP WANTED, by a

LADY, to Author, Professional, or Business Man, or to Club or Literary Society. Four years' experience. Excellent testimonials.—Address G. A. D., 88, St. Stephen's-avenue, Shepherd's-bush, W.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

The Rev. H. R. HAWES, M.A., will this DAY (SATURDAY, MARCH 19), at 3 o'clock, begin a COURSE of FOUR LECTURES on "SOME AMERICAN HUMORISTS."

Subscription to this Course, Half-a-Guinea; to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

ROYAL SOCIETY of LITERATURE.

The Society will meet on WEDNESDAY, MARCH 23RD, at 8 P.M. precisely, when Mr. C. P. KEARY will read a Paper, "ON THE GENUINE and the SPURIOUS in the EDDIC MYTHOLOGY. I.—MYTHS OF DEATH and of the OTHER WORLD."

W. S. W. VAUX, Secretary.

4, St. Martin's-place, March, 1881.

THE HIBBERT LECTURE, 1881.—

A COURSE of SIX LECTURES on "THE ORIGIN and GROWTH of BELIEF as illustrated by HEBRISM" will be delivered by Mr. RHY DAVIDS, at ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LANGHAM PLACE, at 8 o'clock in the afternoon, on the following days—viz., TUESDAY, 26TH APRIL, and five following TUESDAYS—viz., 3RD, 10TH, 17TH, 24TH, and 31ST MAY. Admission to the Course of Lectures will be by ticket without payment. Persons desirous of attending the Lectures are requested to send their names and addresses to Messrs. WILLIAMS & NORRIS, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, W.C., not later than 10th April, and as soon as possible after that date tickets will be issued to as many persons as the hall will accommodate.

LAST WEEK BUT ONE.

MR. WHISTLER'S VENICE PASTELS.

A Series of FIFTY PASTEL DRAWINGS by Mr. WHISTLER are NOW ON VIEW at the FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 148, NEW BOND STREET.

MILLAIS EXHIBITION.—A LOAN

COLLECTION of the WORKS of Mr. J. E. MILLAIS, R.A., is NOW ON VIEW at the FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 148, NEW BOND STREET. Admission, 1s. Notes on Pictures, 6d.

MILLAIS EXHIBITION.—The Contributions include: Autumn Leaves—Boyhood of Raleigh—Carpenter's Shop—Cherry Hips—Child October—Ferdinand and Ariel—The Gambler's Wife—Lorenzo and Isabella—The Minuet—North-west Passage—Order of Release—Portrait of the Painter—Princes in the Tower—Vale of Rest—Woodman's Daughter—A Yeoman of the Guard—and a new Picture, The Princess Elizabeth in Prison at St. James's.

NEW FRENCH ETCHINGS.—

MESSRS. DOWDSEWELL have much pleasure in announcing that they have in preparation a Series of ETCHINGS by the best FRENCH ETCHERS—executed expressly for them. The first will be by FELIX BRACQUEMOND—36, Chancery-lane, and 133, New Bond-street, W.C.

ON EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS and

DRAWINGS by the American Artist, the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art."—Gallery, 14, Grafton-street, Old Bond-street.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Commission Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, King-street, St. James's, N.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's)—Choice Works ON VIEW by Henry Dawson, son of T. S. Cooper, R.A., F. J. Niemann, L. J. Pott, Ernest Parton, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Stark, Jutsum, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Mudd's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

The Woodbury Process is utilised for photographs of Art Manufactures, Portraits, &c., where mounting is not an objection.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cava Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS of PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMPTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 28½ in. by 21 in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

"COME UNTO THESE YELLOW SANDS," after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

Pictures Cleaned, Restored, Framed.

To adorn the walls of home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Lane, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWTHER.

Now ready, small folio, price 12s. 6d.

A NEW ARTISTIC ALPHABET.

Designed by THEODORE DE BRY, MDCCXCV.

From the Athenaeum.
"A capital reproduction from one of the rarest works of its kind, made in facsimile from a copy in the library of the late Sir W. Stirling Maxwell. These letters have a charm of their own, which is due to careful combination of lines, delicacy and extreme spirit of delineation, picturesque grouping of incidental detail, and precise engraving."

From the Jeweller and Metal Worker.

"Messrs. G. Waterston & Sons have produced this rare work in a first-class style. . . . It should be extensively patronised by all interested in artistic ornamentation."

London: GEORGE WATERSTON & SONS, 9, Rose-street; and Edinburgh: 36, Hanover-street.

TO PROPRIETORS of NEWSPAPERS

AND PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, Brief News, & Opinion, and other high-class publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMICAL, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION of PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or Plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

NEW WORK BY MR. SHADWORTH H. HODGSON.

In crown 8vo, half-bound, with gilt top, price 8s. 6d.

OUTCAST ESSAYS AND VERSE

TRANSLATIONS. By SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Hon. LL.D. Edin., Author of "The Philosophy of Reflection," "Time and Space," and "The Theory of Practice."

London: Loxomans & Co.

BIBLE REVISION.

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. With 1349—Tyndale, 1534—Cranmer, 1539—Geneva, 1537—Rheims, 1582—Authorized, 1611, 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman."

London: S. BAGSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.

And sold by all Booksellers.

At all the Libraries.

NEW WORK ON NEW ZEALAND.

Just published, 372 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

POENAMO.—SKETCHES of the EARLY

DAYS of NEW ZEALAND. Romance and History of Antipodean Life in the Infancy of a New Colony.

WILLIAMS & NORRIS, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, with Portrait, 256 pp., price 2s. 6d.

Cheap Edition, paper, 1s.

THOMAS CARLYLE. By HENRY J.

NICOLL, Author of "Great Orators."

Edinburgh: MACNEVIN & WALLACE.

London: SIMPKIN & Co., and HAMILTON, ADAMS, & Co.

Notice.—Now ready, price 1s.

EMPLOYERS and EMPLOYED: the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and the Alterations in the Law Effected Thereby. By G. ROSE-INNES, Jan., Solicitor to the Supreme Court of Judicature.

London: EFFINGHAM WILSON, Royal Exchange.

Notice.—Now ready, price 1s.

GOLD in INDIA: a Paper read before the Indian Section of the Society of Arts. By HYDE CLARKE, Author of "Sovereign and Quasi-sovereign States: their Debts to Foreign Countries."

London: EFFINGHAM WILSON, Royal Exchange.

THE DUTIES OF AUDITORS.

Notice.—Now ready, 1 vol., demy 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

AUDITORS: their Duties and Responsibilities under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts. By FRANCIS W. TIXLET, Fellow of the Institute of Chartered Accountants.

London: EFFINGHAM WILSON, Royal Exchange.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MARCH

contains:—Mr. C. Villiers Stanford's Opera, "The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan," Mr. Pepys the Musician, by F. Hueffer—The Great Composers: Berlioz—The Father of the Symphony—Toucheville's Opera, "The Prodigal Son"—Monday Popular, Crystal Palace, and Mr. Hallé's Concerts—Music in Manchester—Mr. Kuhn's Brighton Musical Festival—Occasional Notes—Foreign and Country News—Reviews, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MARCH

contains a special and full Report of the recent production of Mr. C. Villiers Stanford's Opera, "The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan," at the Haeover Opera House.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for MARCH contains "O Saving Victim," Anthem by BERTHOLO TOURS. Price, separately, 1d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & Co., 1, Brompton-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq.

This Library contains 90,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a-year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £5; Life Membership, £25.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town, Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application.

ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

Fesp. 8vo, 128 pp., price 1s. 6d.

A MEDLEY of NOTABLES: What they said and What others said of them. By G. F. S.

"This little book contains on one side of each page a quotation from some well-known author, and on the other side a brief notice of this author by other authors. If we turn to Shakespeare, for instance, we find quoted those famous descriptions of Falstaff's death, while there are given notices of Shakespeare by Keats, Ben Jonson, Browning, Harcourt, and by some anonymous writer who likely enough is the editor. From him we learn that 'Shakespeare went before all men, and stands in the array of human intellect like the sun in the system, single and unapproached.'—Saturday Review.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s., post-free.

STUDIES in PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

The Sun: Transit of Venus; Spectrum Analysis; the Moon; the Stars and Planets; Comets and Meteors; Atmospheric Electricity; Whirlwinds; Glaciers; the Telephone. By W. J. MILLAR, C.E., Secretary to the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland; Author of "Principles of Mechanics," &c.

"This work consists of chapters from several sciences—astronomy, electricity, heat, light, &c. They cover a good deal of ground, and include objects as wide apart as whirlwinds and spectrum analysis, glaciers and the telephone."—Literary Album.

"We can confidently recommend Mr. Millar's volume to the attention both of teachers in search of an elementary text-book, and to private students, as well as to the general reader. It unites the utmost lucidity with strict scientific accuracy, and deals with ascertained facts rather than with vague theories."—Greenock Daily Telegraph.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY. GEORGE BELL & SONS' BOOKS.

NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS.

Carlyle's Reminiscences; Sir E. J. Reed's History of Japan; Miss Bird's Japan; The Flight of the "Lapwing"; Personal Life of Dr. Livingstone; Markham's Voyage of the "Isbjörn"; Capper's Shores of the Boden See; Oliphant's Land of Gilead; McCarthy's History of Our Own Times; Trollope's Life of Cicero; Fitzgerald's Life of George IV.; Life of Lord Campbell; Lord Ellenborough's Diary; The Life of Lord Clyde; A Pilgrimage to Nejd, by Lady Anne Blunt; In the Ardennes, by Mrs. Macquoid; Life of Dr. Appleton; Hayward's Eminent Statesmen; Kinglake's Crimea, Vol. VI.; Island Life, by Alfred R. Wallace; Tennyson's New Volume of Ballads; Knœ's Wanderings in Algeria; Trevelyan's Life of Fox; Temple's India in 1880; Gallenga's South America; Bagehot's Biographical Studies; Christian Institutions, by Dean Stanley; Early Church History, by Bishop Wordsworth; The Manifest Witness for Christ, by Canon Barry; Darwin's Power of Movement in Plants; Life of Sir Rowland Hill; Across Patagonia, by Lady Florence Dixie; Pollock's Life of Spinoza; Coral Lands, by H. Stonehewer Cooper; Through the Ranks to a Commission; Burbidge's Journal in Borneo; Mrs. Sumner's Holiday in the East; Miss Sewell's Note-Book of an Elderly Lady; Max Müller's Selected Essays; Buckland's British Fishes; Ruskin's Arrows of the Chase; Geikie's Prehistoric Europe; Present Church Troubles, by Canon Liddon; Lord George Paget's Diary in the Crimea; all the Best New Novels, and many other Recent Works of acknowledged merit and General Interest.

See MUDIE'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR for MARCH, New Edition now ready.

Fresh Copies of all the Best Books of the Season continue to be added as the demand increases, and arrangements are made with the Leading Publishers for an ample supply of the Principal Forthcoming Books as they appear.

FIRST-CLASS SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM, For a Constant Succession of the Newest Books.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY SUBSCRIPTION, TWO GUINEAS PER ANNUM, For the Free Delivery of Books in every part of London.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTION, TWO GUINEAS and upwards, According to the number of Volumes required.

CLASS B. SUBSCRIPTION (for Books Five or Six Months after Publication).— Twenty-five Volumes at one time Five Guineas per Annum And Five Volumes for each additional Guinea.

FRENCH AND GERMAN BOOKS.

The Foreign Department of the Library has always been well supplied with the leading French and German Books. The best Italian Works are also in circulation. Revised Lists of Books lately added to this Department are now ready, and may be obtained on application.

SECOND-HAND BOOKS AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

The SURPLUS COPIES are now on Sale of McCarthy's HISTORY of OUR OWN TIMES; D'Albert's TRAVELS in NEW GUINEA; LIFE of SIR JAMES OUTRAM; Christie's MEMOIR of ETIENNE DOLET; MEMORIALS of DR. CANDLISH; LIFE of DR. DUFF; ENDYMION; WHITE WINGS;

AND MORE THAN ONE THOUSAND OTHER POPULAR BOOKS.

See MUDIE'S CLEARANCE CATALOGUE for MARCH, New Edition now ready, postage free.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), New Oxford Street.

CITY OFFICE: 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

Fourth Edition, Revised, with Additional Notes, a fresh Memoir, and Three Essays on Virgil's Text, Commentators, and Critics, by HENRY NETTLESHIP, M.A., Corpus Professor of Latin in the University of Oxford; demy 8vo, 14s.

P. VERGILI MARONIS OPERA.

By Professor CONTONOT.

Vol. I.—THE ECLOGUES and GEORGICS.

[London: WHITTAKER & Co.]

New Volume of the "Cambridge Texts, with Notes."

HOMER'S ILIAD. Book I. By

F. A. PALEY, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.

[London: WHITTAKER & Co.]

Now ready, Vol. II., in Bohn's Library binding, or blue cloth, price 3s. 6d.

PLUTARCH'S LIVES. Translated from the Greek. With Notes, and a Life of Plutarch. By ALBERT STUART, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; and the late GEORGE LONG, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Royal 8vo, 985 pp., £2 2s.

THE CONDITION OF NATIONS,

Social and Political. With complete Comparative Tables of Universal Statistics. By G. FR. KOLB. Translated and Collated to 1880 by Mrs. BREWER.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

The Standard.

"... This book might be described, from one point of view, as a panorama of the internal condition of all the peoples of the civilised world, and, from another, as a compendious and discreet depository of the most important Blue-Books of all the countries and all the languages which boast a literature of the kind. . . . We have before us some 950 closely printed pages, with all the fullness and fidelity that facts and figures can secure. . . . No more thorough, comprehensive, or serviceable book of the kind has ever issued from the press. . . . It is a work that should be possessed by all who would form, with comparative ease, an accurate idea of the contemporary condition of the human race."

The Athenæum.

"... D deservedly holds a high place amongst works of its class. . . . It is a veritable treasury of statistical knowledge, and its historical retrospects and explanatory notes endow it with a permanent value which is altogether wanting in ephemeral tables, embodying the results of a single year's observation."

The Daily Telegraph.

"... Time would fail us were we to try and make out a list of the different departments of life and action on which these statistics cast a new and bright light. . . . There are mines of information and guidance lying in the imposing volume before us."

The Daily News.

"... For this great work on Universal Statistics, statesmen and public writers, and indeed every student of political affairs, have good reason to be grateful. . . ."

The St. James's Gazette.

"Its pages are full to overflowing of facts excellently arranged; . . . possesses the most essential qualities of a book of reference in an eminent degree; it is abundant and it is clear."

The Economist.

"... By far the most comprehensive volume we are acquainted with, as a general statistical description of the condition, both social and material, of every important nation of the world."

Demy 8vo, 12s.

TRADE, POPULATION, and FOOD:

a Series of Papers on Economic Statistics. By STEPHEN BOURNE, P.S.S., of the Statistical Department of Her Majesty's Customs.

"To anyone who wishes to obtain an insight into the economic questions that have been most prominent during the late depression of trade, Mr. Bourne's book will be invaluable."—Statist.

"A series of very interesting statistical papers."—Economist.

Medium 8vo, price 12s.

HISTORY of POLITICAL

ECONOMY in EUROPE. By JÉRÔME-ADOLPHE BLANQUI. Translated from the Fourth French Edition by E. J. LEONARD. With Preface by D. A. WELLS.

"'Blanqui's History' is an unusually good book."—Statist.

London: 4, York-street, Covent-garden.

BENTLEYS' FAVOURITE NOVELS.

Each Work can be had separately, price 6s., of all Booksellers in Town or Country.

By MISS AUSTEN.

(The only Complete Edition.)

EMMA.
LADY SUSAN, and THE WATSONS.
MANSFIELD PARK.
NORTHANGER ABBEY, and PERSUASION.
PRIDE and PREJUDICE.
SENSE and SENSIBILITY.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

COMETH up as a FLOWER.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART!
JOAN.
NANCY.
NOT WISELY but TOO WELL.
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
SECOND THOUGHTS.

By MRS. HENRY WOOD.

EAST LYNN. (98th Thousand.)
THE CHANNINGS. (35th Thousand.)
ANNE HEREFORD.
BESSY RANE.
DENE HOLLOW.
EDINA.
ELSTER'S FOLLY.
GEORGE CANTERBURY'S WILL.
JOHNNY LUDLOW. First Series.
JOHNNY LUDLOW. Second Series. (In the press.)
LADY ADELAIDE.
LIFE'S SECRET, A.
LORD OAKBURN'S DAUGHTERS.
MASTER OF GREYLANDS.
MILDRED ARKELL.
MRS. HALLIBURTON'S TROUBLES.
ORVILLE COLLEGE.
OSWALD CRAY.
PARKWATER.
POMEROY ABBEY.
RED COURT FARM.
ROLAND YORKE.
SHADOW of ASHLYDYAT.
ST. MARTIN'S EVE.
TREVLYN HOLD.
VERNER'S PRIDE.
WITHIN the MAZE.

By MISS FOTHERGILL.

THE FIRST VIOLIN.
PROBATION.
THE WELLFIELDS. (In the press.)

By ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

THE THREE CLERKS.

By MRS. PARR.

ADAM and EVE. (In the press.)
DOROTHY FOX.

By MRS. ALEXANDER.

THE HERITAGE of LANGDALE.
HER DEAREST FOE.
THE WOOING O'T.
WHICH SHALL IT BE?

By MRS. ANNIE EDWARDES.

LEAH: a Woman of Fashion.
OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?
SUSAN FIELDING.
STEVEN LAWRENCE: YEOMAN.

By HAWLEY SMART.

BREEZIE LANGTON.

By HELEN MATHERS.

COMIN' THRO' THE RYE.
CHERRY RIPE!

By MISS CAREY.

NELLIE'S MEMORIES.

By MRS. NOTLEY.

OLIVE VARCOE.

By MARCUS CLARKE.

FOR the TERM of his NATURAL LIFE.

By BARONESS TAUTPHEUS.

THE INITIALS.
QUITS!
CYRILLA.

By LADY G. FULLERTON.

CONSTANCE SHERWOOD.
TOO STRANGE not to be TRUE.
LADYBIRD.

BENTLEYS' FOREIGN FAVOURITE NOVELS

By E. WERNER.

SUCCESS: and how he Won it.
UNDER a CHARM.

By MRS. AUGUSTUS CRAVEN.

A SISTER'S STORY.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,

NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

C. KEGAN PAUL & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

Royal 4to, cloth, price £9 9s.

AN ENGLISH-ARABIC LEXICON.

In which the Equivalents for English Words and Idiomatic Sentences are rendered into Literary and Colloquial Arabic.

By GEORGE PERCY BADGER, D.C.L.,
Late Chaplain Bombay Presidency.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

SANSKRIT and its KINDRED LITERATURES:

Studies in Comparative Mythology.

By LAURA E. POOR.

THE PULPIT COMMENTARY—NEW VOLUME.

JOSHUA.

By the Rev. J. J. LIAS.

With Homilies by the Rev. E. DE PRESSENSÉ, D.D., Rev. J. WAITE, B.A., Rev. R. GLOVER, Rev. F. W. ADENEY, M.A., Rev. S. R. ALDRIDGE, LL.B.; and an Introduction by the Rev. A. PLUMMER, M.A. Price 12s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE MODERN PHARISEE, and other Sermons,

By the Rev. J. COLE COGHLAN, D.D.,
Late Incumbent of St. Peter's, Vere Street.

Edited by the Very Rev. H. H. DICKINSON, D.D.,
Dean of Chapel Royal, Dublin.

"He was a man of remarkable individuality and of keen and caustic wit, of which his biographer gives some amusing instances. His sermons are unconventional, acute, stringent."—British Quarterly Review.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

SPIRIT and FORM:

Sermons preached in the Parish Church of Leatherhead.

By EDWARDS COMERFORD HAWKINS, M.A.

Printed on hand-made paper, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt tops, price 7s. 6d.

SEVENTY SONNETS of CAMOENS.

Portuguese Text and Translation; with some Original Poems.

By J. J. AUBERTIN,
Translator of "The Lusitads."

Dedicated to Captain Richard F. Burton.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

BEOWULF: an Old-English Poem.

Translated into Modern Rhymes.

By Lieut.-Colonel H. W. LUMSDEN,
Late Bengal Artillery.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

THE GEORGICS of VIRGIL.

Translated into English Verse.

By JAMES RHOADES,
Author of "Timoleon."

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s.

AMARANTH and ASPHODEL:

Songs from the Greek Anthology.

By ALFRED J. BUTLER,
Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford.

- I. SONGS of the LOVE of WOMEN.
- II. SONGS of the LOVE of NATURE.
- III. SONGS of DEATH.
- IV. SONGS of HEREAFTER.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d.

MY OLD PORTFOLIO:

A Volume of Poems.

LONDON: C. KEGAN PAUL & CO.,
1, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.*SUNRISE.—Mr. William Black's New

Novel, "SUNRISE": a Story of These Times, 3 vols., is now ready.

"The second title of Mr. Black's new novel is singularly apposite. The story which he tells is not simply 'of these times,' but of this moment. It deals with those secret societies the workings of which have exploded on the public mind so suddenly and so terribly in the murder of the Emperor of Russia. . . . Mr. Black shows his old power on new ground. There is something wonderful in the constant freshness of Mr. Black's style. . . . He has the gift of being romantic without sentimentality."—Daily News.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY STUDIES:

Essays. By FRANCIS HITCHMAN. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 16s.

CONTENTS: Chaps. 1. John Wilkes—2. The Founder of Methodism—3. Charles Churchill, Parson and Poet—4. David Garrick—5. Richard Cumberland—6. "The Cook's Oracle"—7. Isaac Disraeli and Benbow Corney—8. Dr. Dibdin and the Roxburghe Club—9. Joseph Priestley—10. The Author of "Sandford and Merton"—11. Erasmus Darwin.

MILITARY MAXIMS & APOPTHEGMS of COMMANDERS (Ancient and Modern): the Soldier's Diary. Compiled by Captain BARTLE TEELENG. Pocket-book size, red edges, leather bound, interleaved for Notes, price 5s.

Now ready, royal 8vo, price 5s.

THE ENGLISH CATALOGUE of BOOKS

for 1880. Containing a Complete List of all the Books published in Great Britain and Ireland in the Year 1880, with their Sizes, Prices, and Publishers' Names; also of the Principal Books published in the United States of America, with the addition of an Index to Subjects—a continuation of the London and British Catalogues.

THE TWENTY STYLES of ARCHITECTURE:

Illustrations of the finest Edifices in the World. By the Editor of "The Hundred Greatest Men." Demy 4to, One Guinea. [Ready.]

The object in the method employed has been so to present the subject that a few hours' study will enable one to become acquainted with the leading principles of Architecture, and to distinguish the different styles.

NEW WORK BY PHIL ROBINSON.—Now ready.

UNDER the PUNKAH. By the Author of

"In my Indian Garden." Small post 8vo, 5s.

CONTENTS: Chaps. 1. The Man-Eating Tree—2. My Wife's Birds—3. The Parrot—4. The Bull-finch—5. The Canary—6. The Lizard—7. Hunting the Snake—8. Legend of the Humblebee Priest—9. Sight-Seeing—10. Eastern Snells and Western Noses—11. Gaminis—12. Stone-Throwing—13. Tailors—14. The Hare-Kirt—15. Late Puer—16. Death, the Daughter of Mercy—17. Dogs we have all Met.

NICE and her NEIGHBOURS. By the Rev. Canon HOLZ, Author of "A Book about Roses," "Little Tour in Ireland," &c. Square 8vo, with many charming illustrations of the Scenery in and around Nice, cloth extra, gilt edges, 16s.

WEBER. By Sir Julius Benedict. Dedicated by permission to Her Majesty the Queen. New Volume of the BIOGRAPHIES of the GREAT MUSICIANS. Edited by FRANCIS HUEFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

SCHUBERT. By H. F. Frost. New Volume of the BIOGRAPHIES of the GREAT MUSICIANS. Edited by FRANCIS HUEFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

NEW NOVELS NOW READY

At Every Library.

MR. WILLIAM BLACK'S NEW NOVEL,

SUNRISE: a Story of These Times. 3 vols.

MR. CAROLI: an Autobiography. Edited by L. G. SEGUI, Author of "Walks in Algiers," &c. 3 vols.

A FOURTH EDITION is Ready of MARY

MARSTON. By GEORGE MACDONALD. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

FLOWER o' the BROOM. By the Author of "Rare Pale Margaret." 3 vols.

AN ENGLISH SQUIRE. By C. R. Coleridge, Author of "Lady Hotty," "Hanbury Mills," &c. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

A THIRD EDITION is Ready of A SAILOR'S

SWEETHEART. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. 3 vols.

THE NEW ADDITION TO LOW'S STANDARD
SIX-SHILLING NOVELS IS

BEN-HUR: a Tale of the Christ. By L.

WALLACE. Small post 8vo, 6s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS OF JULES VERNE'S

NOVEL.

MICHAEL STROGOFF, the COURIER of the CZAR. By JULES VERNE. With Illustrations.

Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

MICHAEL STROGOFF. In 2 Parts with Illustrations, boards, each 1s.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 1881.

No. 463, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

A Political Diary (1828-30) by Edward Law, Lord Ellenborough. Edited by Lord Colchester. (Bentley.)

A DIARY in which the opinions and actions of each day are jotted down at the close of the evening by a Cabinet Minister who is behind the scenes of political life becomes of double interest when it relates to a period which witnessed the settlement on a permanent basis of one question which had agitated the minds of men for many generations, and the steady growth of a movement which resulted in the transfer of power from the upper ranks of life to those beneath them in the social scale. These volumes can never acquire a great hold on the affections of the reading world. The discursive character of their contents will prevent their attaining to great popularity. But they none the less form a valuable addition to the historical literature of the century. Many of the prophecies which Lord Ellenborough entrusted to the pages of his diary have been falsified by the course of events, and the confident expectations with which he regarded the future of the Duke of Wellington's Ministry were soon transformed into speculations on the power of its successful opponents to form a durable Government. But the record of his predictions and of his doubts has been allowed to stand unaltered, and without any attempt to adapt them to the actual occurrences of after-years. English people have been accustomed during the last thirty years to the downfall of Cabinets at times when a long continuance of popular approbation might have been expected for their conduct. The Wellington Ministry was driven from office without any of its members having even seven days previously any dread for the future. Exactly a year before the signs of its dissolution became apparent Lord Ellenborough surveyed the political prospect and pronounced it excellent. The Whigs were out of the question; they were hated by the King and neglected by the people. The irreconcilable section of the Tories—a small body of peers and of nominees of the nobility in the House of Commons—trusting in the lead of the Lord Winchelsea, who fought a duel with the Duke of Wellington, had neither the men to form, nor the influence to preserve if by any chance they could succeed in forming, a Government. On the night when the Duke blundered into a declaration of uncompromising hostility to Reform, the diarist reflected upon the tone of the debate, and came to the conclusion that it was very good and would do good. He was soon un-deceived, and supplied with abundant opportunities for moralising in retirement on the vanity of human wishes.

The members of the Wellington Ministry were estranged from one another even before they had been formally installed in office. The Premier had requested Mr. Huskisson and other friends of Canning to continue in their places under his lead; and these disciples of a more liberal creed were not in unison with some of those who represented the straiter principles of conservatism. On the very day when Lord Ellenborough went to Windsor for the purpose of receiving the Privy Seal, and began the practice of keeping a diary, he expressed his regret that the junction between these opposing forces had ever been effected. A few weeks later the Duke himself gave utterance to a very strong opinion on the imprudence of a coalition between politicians divided by wide differences of opinion. When such feelings were entertained by the Prime Minister and his most efficient coadjutor in the Upper House against two of their most influential colleagues in the House of Commons, it cannot be a subject of surprise if such an ill-starred alliance was unable to last for more than a few months. The union was strained by the necessity for repealing the Corporation and Tests Act; it was dissolved on the question—of slight importance except as indicating the lines on which the Ministry might at some future date be disposed to settle the question of reform—whether the seats for a corrupt English borough should be thrown into the Hundreds or transferred to Birmingham. The Ministry was scarcely reconstituted before it was confronted with the necessity of settling the Catholic question. Even after the expulsion of the followers of Canning there was not an absolute unanimity of opinion among the different members of the Ministry on that vexed question. The Duke desired a settlement, but confessed to Lord Ellenborough that "he did not see daylight." When the freeholders of County Clare deserted their landlords in a body, and rejected a colleague of Lord Ellenborough for O'Connell, the noble diarist says that nothing short of revolution could "prevent the early carrying of the Catholic question." Day by day the need of disposing of this matter became more pressing; and day by day the friends of Catholic emancipation within the circle of the Cabinet became more anxious lest the Catholics should take some step which would render it impossible. Some of Lord Ellenborough's companions in the Ministry were anxious that any concession should be accompanied by securities for the protection of the Protestant Church. He himself thought that the best safeguard against any injury to the State would be found in the provision of an endowment for the Roman Catholic clergy. On one occasion, indeed, after an argument with two other peers, he arrived at the conclusion that it was but justice that the Catholic should become the established religion of Ireland in that part of the country where its adherents were in a majority. From this entry it will be evident that the views of Lord Ellenborough were far in advance of public opinion even fifty years later.

While the religious questions were dividing the country into two opposing camps, Lord Ellenborough was ill at ease in his own heart. The Duke of Wellington had made him the head of the Privy Seal office, and the duties of his office did not supply him with sufficient opportunities for occupation or display. The Foreign Secretaryship was the post which he coveted, and no entry occurs more frequently in his diary than an allusion to the unfitness of the nobleman who held it and his own superior capabilities for the place. After a long period of inaction as Privy Seal his leader relented, and transferred him to the Board of Control, to govern that dependency with which the name of Lord Ellenborough became in after-years so intimately connected. On his appointment to his new office he found himself confronted with the same difficulties that disturbed the Secretary of State for India under the Ministry of Lord Beaconsfield. 'At both epochs a Russian army had marched through the Turkish empire in Europe, and threatened to advance on Constantinople. At both epochs the Asiatic territory under the rule of the Sultan was overrun by the forces of the Czar; and Lord Ellenborough's successor might have penned the same sentence that was written in 1829: "I consider it a victory gained over me, as Asia is mine." Anxious as the members of the English Cabinet were to mitigate the onerous terms of peace which were imposed on the prostrate foes of Russia, they could not but recognise that, both in Asia and in Europe, the harassed subjects of the Sultan preferred the rule of a Russian general to that of his own Pashas. The boundaries which should be assigned to the new kingdom of Greece, and the Prince who should be selected from the minor royal families of Europe to rule over this new creation, vexed the minds of the Ministers from the beginning to the end of this diary. Some of the entries which most interest the English reader at the present time relate to the advance of a Russian army through the deserts of Asia to the boundaries of India; and Lord Ellenborough speculated on more than one occasion as to the manner in which it should be met, and the contingencies on which we should occupy Cabul.

The position which Lord Ellenborough held in English politics was attended with peculiar difficulties. There were three sections of conservatism, but his feelings were not thoroughly in unison with any of them. His views, it might have been thought, would have drawn him to fight side by side with Canning, and the observations of Lord Colchester in the Preface do not supply a sufficient explanation of the reasons for their differences of opinion. Even while Lord Ellenborough was sitting in the same Cabinet with Huskisson and Dudley he did not shrink from speaking of their former leader as a "dangerous Minister;" and a little later he condemned as "one of Canning's follies" the proposal to submit the question of the boundary of Maine to the decision of some European Sovereign. The paramount necessity for settling the Catholic question, and his liberal views on Church matters in Ireland, put him out of accord with the ultra-Tory division, which was led by Lord Eldon and Lord Winchelsea. A Reform Bill must, he knew, be carried, and the franchise must be given to the great towns of the North. The Duke of Wellington, on the contrary, looked upon the electoral system of England as absolute perfection, and threw Lord Ellenborough into the greatest consternation by the fervour of his denunciations against any measure of Reform. The alliance of Lord Grey was the desire of Lord Ellenborough's heart, and it seemed for a few months in 1828 as if the future Whig Premier might have been found working in union with the Duke of Wellington. This sanguine expectation, however, was soon dashed by the imprudent speeches of the leader of the Tory party; and when Lord Grey took office it was to succeed the Duke in the Premiership. The change was hastened by the clamours of revolution abroad and discontent at home. When Lord Ellenborough resigned his post he did not suspect that it would be for more than a session, and he looked forward with delight to a few months in Opposition as the means of regaining his "proper station."

There was not one of the members of the Ministry who could work cordially with their royal master, George IV. Against Lord Ellenborough himself the King entertained a deep-seated grudge, and, when he gave an entertainment to his Ministers, the President of the Board of Control was omitted from the invitations. With William IV. all the heads of departments worked on terms of friendship, though the acts of the Sailor King often offended against the rather stiff-laced feelings of propriety entertained by his servants. In one passage of the diary it is incidentally mentioned that the public are indebted to William IV. for the construction of the steps from Waterloo Place into the park. The most amusing passages in these volumes are those which show Lord Ellenborough's opinion of his colleagues and of many other distinguished public servants. They are very frank and unreserved, sparing nobody, from Peel to James Mill; but the persons whom he least respected were the "Fellows of Colleges," and he adds his conviction that "the Oxonians are even less liberal than the people of Cambridge."

W. P. COURTNEY.

Genoa: how the Republic Rose and Fell.
By J. Theodore Bent. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

A LITTLE while ago Mr. Bent published a little book on San Marino; the book was light, but was adequate to its subject. We are afraid, however, that his sense of proportion has failed him, and that he has not sufficiently realised how large is the step between San Marino and Genoa, between the least and one of the mightiest of the Italian Republics. He has transferred to Genoa the style and method which he adopted towards San Marino, and the result is scarcely satisfactory. San Marino is simply an historical curiosity; Genoa has a history which is connected with the full current of European progress.

Mr. Bent writes from a point of view which is too often adopted towards Italian history, and which must be very irritating to the Italians of the present day. Their cities, which are still instinct with political and social life, are regarded as museums of curiosities which serve to awaken picturesque reminiscences in the mind of the passing tourist. History is written in guide-book fashion, and only aims at the intellectual level of the sentimental traveller. No one, of course, would deny that much of the history of Italy is written in stone, or that the greatness of the municipal ideal is most impressively expressed in the piazza of an Italian city. But stone records are precisely those that need the greatest care and the largest knowledge to interpret rightly. They are the expression of a people's entire life, and are not to be accounted for by a selection of sensational incidents or pictorial effects. Italian history is pictorial because it is so full, and because it has been so largely chronicled. While the history of other countries has been treated by English writers in the present day with a broad and philosophic spirit, with a desire to understand their actual problems and bring from their experience all that may be fruitful to us in the present—it would almost seem that the reverse has been done in Italian history. It has been turned into a story-book for the babes and sucklings of modern aestheticism. The same incidents are seized upon by one writer after another; the only progress noticeable is in the pictorial skill of the delineator. History disappears before the polemics of art.

We had hoped that Mr. Bent, in dealing with Genoa, would have escaped this prevalent fashion. Genoa is the least artistic of the great Italian Republics. It is the most prosperous city of modern Italy; its streets are still busy with industry, and its harbour is thronged with ships. It has suffered no great break in its history; it has simply changed with the changing conditions of the world. There is no reason why its history should not be written in precisely the same spirit as the history of England, with the same attention to constitutional and commercial development, and the same recognition of the movement of European civilisation. Mr. Bent, however, seems to have felt that such a sober study would not suit the popular taste. He begins by a description of "Genoa in the Olden Time," in which he draws pictures of marble palaces, festivities, gold plate, and the condition of the Jews down to the year 1798. Having thus whetted his readers' curiosity, he goes on to "Genoa at the Crusades." Not till chap. iii. ("Genoa at Home") does he give any account about the beginnings of the Republic; and the account which he then gives shows no precision about the interesting questions touching the rise of municipal life in Italy. The opening chapter seems to regard modern trade as vulgar, while mediæval commerce was splendid. "It was not till Genoa was in her decadence," says Mr. Bent, "that foreign artists were summoned to beautify and widen some of her streets with the hoarded capital for which she had no other outlet." It certainly gives us an overwhelming sense of the plethora of capital that the streets had to be widened to let it out. Mr. Bent is not always happy in his grand style, as the following sentence may show:—"The whole length of that glorious 'cornice' is here spread out before the view, a rich and gilded 'frame' for the blue waters of the Mediterranean, in which Genoa regards her blushing beauty as in a mirror, and is at once its chief corner-stone and its pride." We are lost in a metaphor which involves a frame, a mirror, and a corner-stone in relations which we are unable to disentangle.

Mr. Bent has chosen to write in a flimsy rather than in a sober manner, and his literary taste is not sufficient to save him from the pitfalls which beset pictorial writing. He has not attempted to show the importance of Genoa in the history of Europe, or its connexion with the political system of Italy. He has only endeavoured to give such information about Genoa as would enable a tourist to ramble through it with some additional feeling of interest. If we regard his book from this point of view, we must admit that he has told his story fairly well. He has given us the outside of Genoese history, but even in that shows a want of any guiding principle to determine his judgments. The Battle of Meloria is only briefly alluded to, and the policy of Andrea Doria is misunderstood. Mr. Bent regards Andrea Doria as a tyrant rather than a patriot, and calls him to account for what he did not do rather than gives him credit for what he did. Yet Doria aimed at what was possible; and, in a time when the greater part of Italy fell before the foreigner, Doria, by a judicious system of trimming, managed to make Genoa more powerful than she had ever been before in the politics of Europe.

It is, however, a useless task to find fault with details when method is wanting in the whole. Mr. Bent has fixed upon a very difficult subject, with insufficient preparation for the task. He quotes without suspicion "Ingulf the secretary of William the Conqueror," and introduces us to a curious English ecclesiastic, "Adam, Bishop of Hertford." He refers in a note to "Waddingo," from which we are led to conclude that he is quoting a reference second-hand, and regards Luke Wadding as an Italian chronicler. On the whole Mr. Bent is too ambitious and covers too much ground to enable us to regard his book as a collection of sketches; he is too deficient in method to justify its claims to be considered as a history.

M. CREIGHTON.

British Animals Extinct within Historic Times. By James Edmund Harting, F.L.S., F.Z.S. (Trübner.)

A COMPETENT zoologist here undertakes a task which has long been urgently required. Writer after writer has taken upon trust, and repeated, a tissue of popular beliefs concerning the quadrupeds which have died out in Britain since the landing of Caesar. This fabric of credulity needed careful examination in order that such facts as were capable of proof should be separated from the fabulous. Thus it has become a commonplace that Edgar exterminated wolves in England. But Mr. Harting establishes the fact that the wolf did not become extinct until the reign of Henry VII.; while it survived in Scotland until 1743. It lingered, too, in Ireland until the first quarter of the eighteenth century.

Encouraged by a couplet of Martial and the mediæval notices of bear-baiting, many have been tempted to prolong the existence of the brown bear in Britain into times which outrun strict historic accuracy. Pennant and the celebrated sportsman, Col. Thornton, have contributed to this mistake, as Mr. Harting shows, and others have blindly accepted their statements; but there is no trustworthy record of the bear's existence in Britain in a savage state so late as the Norman Conquest. Precisely the same mistaken generalisations have been made about the animals which undoubtedly flourished here in historic times as were made even by learned men in the last century in connexion with the extinct geological animals. Thus Coleridge, the poet's father, gravely wrote to the Gentleman's Magazine in 1757 that Polyænus stated that Caesar had brought over an elephant to terrify the Britons into submission; which may or may not have been the case, as Caesar does not mention it. But he gravely concludes from this, with respect to the fossil bones of elephants so frequently found in East Anglia, that "it is reasonable to suppose, as the Romans reaped such advantage from one elephant, they would bring over more of these animals with them; and that, as the Roman conquests were chiefly about Sussex, Essex, and Kent, it is most likely that the bones of those creatures should be found in those counties."

Mr. Harting has very creditably put together for reference most of the scattered notices of extinct British animals which were well known to all interested in this study; and thus the link which had been long missed between Owen's British Fossil Mammals and Birds and Bell's British Quadrupeds has been supplied. A very useful book is the result. Its writer does not lay claim to exhausting the subject. Indeed, now that attention is called to the historic evidence, which is often weak and halting, it is almost certain that this will be strengthened by diligent study of ancient records. Side-lights and occasional reflections may be obtained, for instance, from the recent publications of the Rolls series and the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland. Legends have yet to be gathered up and their grains of truth preserved. In many a Scotch munitment-room and ancient game-list or account-book hints must lie hid which may possibly be now communicated to Mr. Harting, and the next edition thereby be considerably enriched and rendered more valuable.

For the reindeer, included by the author among British animals which have died out in historic times, very little direct evidence can be produced. Its bones and horns have been found sparingly in Scotland, associated in two or three cases with human remains. It undoubtedly flourished in Great Britain in the post-glacial age, and its bones and horns have very frequently been found in bone-caverns and river-gravels of that period. Advocates of its existence with historic man have mainly rested their belief on a passage of the Orkneying Saga to the effect that the jarls of Orkney were wont to cross over every summer to Caithness for the purpose of hunting "rauddyi sdr breina." This was translated by Torfeus "capreas rangiferesque;" but Mr. Eirikr Magnusson thinks that the original terms may equally well be taken as synonymous, as if the writer of the Saga deemed red and reindeer the same animals. In short, quite as conclusive evidence might be adduced for the existence of the elk (alees) in historic times. Mr. Alston says (Fauna of Scotland, p. 36):

"It does not appear improbable that the elk may have survived in the great northern forests to a comparatively late period; and corroborative evidence is afforded by the fresh condition of a shed antler discovered in Strath Halladale, Sutherlandshire, which is stated by Dr. Smith to have 'apparently lost nothing of its mineral or animal constituents.'"

A few remains of the beaver have been found in turbaries and in Kent's Hole, but written evidence for its existence in Britain is sufficiently shadowy. Bellenden, in 1536, mentions "bevers" among the animals of Scotland; but he omits otters, and these two animals are frequently confounded by old naturalists. It is so in a celebrated passage which has often been quoted from Giraldus Cambrensis respecting beavers on the Teivi. But a perusal of his somewhat marvellous stories of these creatures and their sagacity leaves little doubt that he had himself been an eye-witness of their proceedings on that river. His words may well be compared with the excellent account which Mr. Harting quotes from their keeper's observations of the manners and instincts of the beavers which were turned down by the Marquis of Bute in Rothesay in 1875, and which have increased and flourished. We have also been informed that a similar experiment in Sotterly Park, Suffolk, turned out only too favourably in 1872. The beavers there were obliged to be destroyed owing to the damage they did to the underwood. Were the old conditions of solitude and undrained land given back to beavers there is no doubt that the race would once more live and thrive in Britain.

A few classical allusions to the existence of the bear (Ursus arctos) in Britain can be supplemented by some bones belonging to it which have been found in Roman refuse-heaps at Colchester and other places; but, singularly enough, Martial's "Caledonius ursus" can only be identified in Scotland by the skull and rib of a large specimen which was taken from a peat moss in Dumfriesshire. Mr. Harting is only able to add to this evidence vague traditions, and supplements a meagre article on the brown bear by interesting notices of English bear-baiting in later times. We can add to his traditions one told us two years ago by a shepherd in Sutherlandshire, which, at all events, is curiously particular as to the last locality in which the bear was known. Many years ago, he said, the last bear seen in Scotland was killed in Durness. It attacked a party of men and women who were "delving" (i.e., using spades), there being no ploughing in those days. Rearing itself on its hind legs, it seized a woman by the arm; and, when a man ran up with a gun, cunningly placed her before him as he approached. She cried out to him to fire at all hazards, which he did; and, fortunately, dispatched the creature without injuring her. The bear appears in some mythical Gaelic tales, and is said to have given a name to the M'Mhathains, or Mathisons; but it could not have survived in Britain later than the ninth or tenth century.

The other two animals with which Mr. Harting deals, the wild boar and the wolf, as they lingered nearer our own days, naturally supply him with fuller evidence, and his readers with much information not hitherto easily accessible. James I. hunted the former animal at Windsor early in the seventeenth century; and the last wild boar in England seems to have been killed in the reign of Charles II. For an interesting account of an attempt to introduce this animal into Derbyshire by the late Sir F. Darwin the reader must be referred to Mr. Harting's book. He is doubtful whether the old custom of bringing in the boar's head at Queen's College, Oxford, on Christmas Day as described by Aubrey is still observed. The feast was, as usual, duly honoured there in 1880, with the legendary carol. Mr. Harting notices that mention is made more than once in the Paston Letters of boar-spears; and in the Inventory of Sir J. Fastolf's household goods, 1459, we find that he possessed "a coueryng of a bedde of arras, withe hontyng of the bore, a man in blew, with a jagged hoode, white and rede," and "a coueryng with j. geyauot smytyng a wild bore with a spere." The value of these entries may be assessed by another of the knight's tapestries, "j. clothe for the nether hall, of arras, with a geyauot in the myddell, bering a legge of a bere in his honde." Many traditions linger in the North of Scotland respecting wolves. Each district has its last wolf, and the legend of the hero who slew it. Many will remember Scrope's story of the last wolves killed in Sutherlandshire between 1690 and 1700; but to the celebrated McQueen (who did not die till 1797) belongs the honour of having slain what was probably the very last Scotch wolf, in the Findhorn district. We shall not spoil the reader's pleasure by recounting how he "foregathered wi' the beast and syne whuttled his craig," but will refer him for these and many other legendary stories to Mr. Harting's pages. Some particulars will also be found here about the Irish wolf-hound, often supposed to be extinct, but of which it appears the only authentic strain now known is preserved by a gentleman in Gloucestershire.

A preliminary chapter traces the vast extent of forest and will country in which these now extinct creatures sheltered in our land, and enables us to realise how little likely it was that they should be disturbed until population pressed upon them and they were literally driven off the country into the sea; while Mr. Harting concludes with a list of the parks in which the old British white cattle yet survive, or did survive till recent years. Into the vexed question whether these animals are actual survivors of the old urus, or merely descendants of a race which has escaped from domestication and been again enclosed in the parks and chases of the mediæval magnates, Mr. Harting does not enter; and we believe that no sufficient evidence for its determination exists. It is, at all events, noticeable that Mr. Harting points out there are at present two varieties thus kept—white coloured with red and black ears respectively. Sir R. Sibbald describes the boves silvestres of Scotland (Scotia Illustrata, pars iii., cap. ii.) as being "colore candidissimo, juba densa et demissa, truculenti et feri," characters which will equally suit both varieties. A spirited engraving of one of these old British cattle heads Mr. Harting's chapter on them; and we must add a well-deserved commendation on Wolf and Whymper's illustrations, which lend an additional value to a book for which all lovers of natural history will be grateful. If we must be hypercritical, the texture of the bear's hair on p. 11 too much resembles the hide of a rhinoceros, but the other cuts are really illustrations of the text. That portent the "general reader" will find this book entertaining; while everyone may have occasion, sooner or later, to turn to it as a book of reference on lighting upon some bone of an extinct species, just as it happened a few years ago to ourselves to find a wild boar's tusk in a Lincolnshire turbarry, and then to sigh for such a manual as Mr. Harting now supplies.

It is worth while correcting one or two inaccuracies we have come across in these pages. The Notts county historian, at p. 246, should be Thoresby, and not Throsby. The rabid wolf of Caermarthen bit eighteen people, and not twenty-two (the reading should be "duo de viginti" and not "viginto"); while Mr. Harting takes Caxton to task undeservedly for his rendering of Higden's "mures nocentissimos." The former translates this correctly, as "wel shrewed mys," that is, "very injurious mice." But Mr. Harting writes, without any reason for it, "mures nocentissimos are not necessarily shrew-mice, which are insectivorous;" and adds, "by reading 'araneos,' shrews, for 'araneas,' spiders [which follows the citation] some confusion is accounted for." But, in truth, there is no confusion. Mr. Harting is a Shaksperian scholar, and might have remembered that Baptiste's daughter was both "curst and shrewed."

M. G. WATKINS.

Merv, the Queen of the World; and the Scourge of the Man-Stealing Turcomans, &c. By Charles Marvin. (W. H. Allen.)

THE recent operations of a Russian army in the Turcoman country have served to attract considerable attention to the little-known region lying between Persia and the Oxus, of which the oasis of Merv may be said to be the heart. This volume is a collection of all available information from both English and Russian sources bearing on the geography and history of this vast tract of country. Of Russian travellers in this quarter the number is limited; and Mr. Marvin has felt compelled to reprint the descriptions left by Burnes, Vámbéry, Abbott, Shakespear, Wolff, and many others of our explorers, whose works, it may be hoped, are not quite unknown to the general reader, especially as some of them possess great literary excellence. Beyond the interesting evidence contributed by the late Gen. Petroosevitch—killed at Geok Tepe—and some of the opinions of Cols. Kostenko and Grodekoff, there is in this volume no information that will be fresh to those acquainted with the subject; but all the facts obtainable about Merv and the Turcomans appear to have been collected with some skill and more assiduity. The author is a pessimist as to the capacity of the Turcomans for improvement. With the evidence yet before us it would be premature to hazard a final opinion upon the subject; but it may at the least be suggested that the opinions and statements of Major Napier, who has had a longer experience of the Khorasan frontier than any other Englishman, but whose Reports are arcana at the India Office, are entitled to greater weight than Mr. Marvin seems disposed to concede to them. We are not inclined to regard with undue severity any attempt at throwing light on Central-Asian matters, and when Mr. Marvin gives us Russian views he performs a distinctly useful service, and we welcome his co-operation. But it is not clear that he is entitled to the same praise, when a greater portion of his book consists of extracts from the works of standard English authors.

In the dim ages of Asiatic history the splendour of the city of Merv was the marvel of travellers and the theme of poets. Claiming the honour of being founded by Alexander, it was subsequent to the death of that great conqueror the capital of the kingdom formed by his general, Antiochus; and at a later period the great names of Alp Arslan and Sultan Sanjar are mixed up with its history. Under the beneficent rule of the Saffavian kings of Persia Merv continued to prosper, although it had previously been included in the general destruction produced by the devastations of the Mongols. But, with the decline of the last of the few vigorous dynasties which have exercised authority over the unhappy people of Persia, the fortunes of Merv also waned; and, when Shah Mourad of Bokhara conquered and laid waste this region towards the close of the last century, the cup of bitterness for the people of Merv was full. From that time to the present Merv has remained the encampment of the main body of the Turcoman race; and, while much of its old trade importance has vanished, its position on the best route from the Oxus and the countries of Turkestan to not only Persia and Afghanistan, but also to the Caspian, still entitles it to the consideration of all who are interested in the affairs of Western Asia. The view is now accepted in the best-informed circles that the principal object before Russia in this quarter is to connect the Turkestan base with the Caspian by means of a railway passing through Merv. As this is now likely to be completed at no very distant date, there is every prospect of the oasis of Merv, in Russian hands, again becoming the fertile district and smiling paradise described by the old writers. Burnes tells us in his glowing pages of how "the wheat-fields there furnished the astonishing phenomenon of three succeeding crops from the same seed;" and, with proper means of irrigation and with security for life and property, there is apparently no reason why this phenomenon should not be seen again.

It is not quite fifty years since the Teke clan first removed from their homes along the Kopet Dag range to take up their residence at Merv and on the Murghab, and it is less than thirty years since they firmly established themselves in their new positions. There can be no question that the independence which they had hardly won after a protracted struggle with the Khan of Khiva was rendered assured by the brilliant success obtained in 1861 over a large Persian army, which was compelled to beat a hasty and ignominious retreat into its own territory. From that time to the present—a period during which no foreign traveller has visited and returned from Merv—the Teke Turcomans have remained in undisputed possession of the oasis. Not content with this achievement, they have frequently carried their raids far into the provinces of Khorasan and Herat. There is no evidence to show whether the Tekes have done anything to develop the latent resources of their possession, but they have certainly constituted an insuperable barrier to commerce in this quarter. The picture drawn by the late Gen. Petroosevitch, on what authority it is of course impossible to say, of the present condition of Merv is not a promising one; and if it approaches the truth the Turcomans would stand convicted of great shortsightedness and improvidence. Mr. Marvin translates Gen. Petroosevitch's statement as follows:—

"Recently, affairs at Merv have been in a very bad way; not on account of scarcity of land and water, but by reason of the diminution of the Teke flocks and herds. An internal disease among their sheep has carried off whole flocks at the time; and a species of fly, first appearing in 1878, has been the cause of the death of many camels. As is well known, the camel is a very tender animal. It cannot stand severe cold. Of flies it has an intense horror, running violently about the desert to escape them, and falling at last exhausted. Years ago the Merv Tekes possessed vast numbers of sheep, and single individuals owned hundreds of camels. This wealth has almost completely disappeared. At Merv the land is very productive, and the Tekes usually grow sufficient corn to support themselves without extraneous aid. Of late years there has been a succession of bad harvests owing to a scarcity of water produced by an insufficiency of snow in the Paropamisus range, where the Moorgab takes its rise. In 1872 there was quite a famine at Merv."

Col. Kostenko, also quoted by Mr. Marvin, devotes his main attention to the military features of Merv. He throws some light on the subject of what the Turcomans have been doing of late years towards strengthening their home defences.

"At Khan Kitchken, eleven miles from Merv, where the Khivan and Oxus roads cross the Moorgab, the late Teke elder, Kooshoot Khan, constructed a stronghold to hold 40,000 [?] tents. It consists of sandy earthwork, thirty-three paces broad, and eight or ten yards high. In 1877 Kooshoot had the intention of facing this rampart inside and out with a clay brick wall. Inside is a bazaar. The fortress of Merv is about two miles long and one broad. The walls are twelve paces thick. No structures exist inside the place, nor yet any people [sic]. The fortress is built as a refuge for the people on the appearance of the enemy. The locality surrounding the fortress is perfectly level and flat. Along the south and western faces flows the Moorgab, here fifty paces wide. At places it is twenty-five feet deep, but at others camels and even horses can ford it. In Merv are thirty-two guns held by the elders, each having two or three apiece. Thirty of these were taken from the Persians and two from the Khivans. The Tekes make their own powder; their bullets they obtain from the Persians and Afghans. In the event of an enemy appearing, the Teke, Salor, and Sarik Turcomans can put 50,000 horsemen in the field."

With these quotations we may close our notice of this book. The solution of the political problem recommended by the author—viz., to send Col. Gordon with plenary powers and full discretion on a mission to Central Asia—does not enter within the range of what is practical. The maps and plans are, in their way, excellent, and possess the undoubted merit of simplifying and explaining the letterpress. On the other hand, an Index of subjects should certainly have been added.

D. C. BOULGER.

NEW NOVELS.

Sunrise. By William Black. (Sampson Low & Co.)

Flower o' the Broom. By the Author of "Rare Pale Margaret." (Sampson Low & Co.)

A Death Ring. By E. S. Drewry. (W. H. Moor & Co.)

A Long Love, and other Stories. By Tom Palatine. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

Ireland's True Daughter. By Marcellina. (Remington.)

Our Sons and Daughters. By Ernest Legouvé. Translated by Emily Mills. (Remington.)

A Child of Nature. By Robert Buchanan. (Bentley.)

THE first thing that occurs to the unregenerate mind, when it has finished Mr. Black's new novel, is a vehement desire to change the title, and instead of Sunrise to call it Moonshine, which would really be much more appropriate. The subject of the book is a mysterious and terrible secret society, the ends of which are of the noblest, but also of the vaguest; while its means are not at all vague, neither are they noble, being simply, as usual, assassination. Mr. Black hardly speaks at all in propria persona in this book; and it may be doubted how far he sympathises with his rather improbable hero, George Brand, who goes heart and soul into the society, though he does not like the assassination at all, especially when it comes to his turn to be assassin. We gather from the end of the book, when most of the party are left aspiring after America very much like the people at the end of Alton Locke, that assassination has now been dropped from the programme of the Sunrise Association, or, to give it its proper title, the Society of the Seven Stars, which is as well. But if, at an earlier period, the threatened Cardinal Zaccatelli had succeeded in catching and hanging the heroic Hungarian General von Zoesch, and the ingenious Ferdinand Lind, and the secretary Granaglia, and the British Museum employé Gathorne Edwards, and even foolish Lord Evelyn and gullible George Brand, we must honestly confess that we should have been rather glad. However, nobody comes to any harm except an unfortunate Russian, who brings about a happy dénouement by committing suicide in a mixture of delirium tremens and gratitude for favours received. The more dubious members of the Sunrise Association solicit missions to the Montenegrins, who can very well be trusted to protect themselves. Except an excitable and amiable scoundrel named Calabressa, who cannot help looking at assassination from a different point of view from that normal to the cold-hearted and hypocritical Briton, there is hardly any male person in the book who exhibits the author's usual power of making his characters attractive. The heroine, Natalie Lind, is a pleasing young person with a firm belief in moonshine—that is to say, Sunrise; and a faculty of reading Mr. Swinburne's poems charmingly, which latter gift, at any rate, is a good one. Here, and in Calabressa, Mr. Black's unquestioned command of feeling comes in, but hardly elsewhere. The rest of the personages somehow lack life and vividness. The reader is never allowed to have any sufficiently clear idea of the society's aims to enable him to feel the least sympathy with the infatuation of Evelyn (a weakly peer, with a family of rather boisterous sisters) and Brand and Natalie. It seems to be a kind of glorified Eleusis Club, with the difference (which is very much to the advantage of the Eleusis Club) that the dagger is a favourite institution with it. That a man like Brand, educated, wealthy, and apparently represented as of upright principles and shrewd intellect, should have consented to do the dirty work of such a body, not merely out of infatuation for Natalie, which Mr. Black does not seem to imply, is altogether too incredible not to interfere with one's enjoyment of the rest of the book. The bookworm, Gathorne Edwards, and the enthusiastic Evelyn, and the "Irish Home Rule member" (name not given), and the "Oxford don of wildly Radical principles," who are introduced as the other chief English pillars of pantisocracy by means of poniards, might have been fools enough for the purpose; but not Brand. However, perhaps there are people to whom he will seem credible and likely. If so, somebody will have to save society in England one of these fine days. We ought to mention that some passages describing the view of the Embankment from Brand's chambers in the Adelphi are in Mr. Black's best style, and redeem what is otherwise a very disappointing book. The truth seems to be that neither politics nor bowl-and-dagger business are in the author's way.

Under a rather conceited title, and with some few faults of the kind which has, in relation to novel-writing, been specially called "preposterous," the author of Rare Pale Margaret has written a decidedly good book. Her faults (the selection of an impossible Ouidesque heroine being the chief) are chiefly the result of following bad models; while her merits—the merits of telling such story as she has to tell in a really interesting way, and of enlisting the attention and sympathy of her readers—are her own. She is still, we should say, in statu pupillari. One of her models has already been mentioned, but she has others of a safer kind. The incident which brings about her catastrophe, the flight of an unnatural mother from her sick child's bedside, is almost too much of a reminiscence of Esmond. Lady Bonham, and her relations to her grand-daughter, Narcissa Brooke, are in the same way very like (mutandis not entirely mutatis) those of Lady Kew and Ethel Newcome, and perhaps we might trace other similarities. But this is a very tolerable fault when the imitator shows a fair amount of native strength, and this the author of Flower o' the Broom we think does. The title has very little to do with the book, a well-known quotation from Mr. Browning's Fra Lippo, and a superstition (new to us, we confess, though we thought we knew a good many superstitions) respecting the plucking of the broom-flower, being the only ties that bind it to the text. For the part of the book relating to the baleful beauty, Narcissa Brooke, we care little; and it is in this that most of the faults are to be found, though the author has shown some skill in disappointing the reader's expectation of the particular way in which her catastrophe is to be brought about. Elizabeth Milner, the good heroine, is, contrary to wont, the really interesting person, and she is a figure which does the author no small credit. Some of the descriptions, especially of fen scenery, though very sparingly given, are good; and, altogether, Flower o' the Broom deserves a good word.

Miss Drewry has also produced a good book of its kind in A Death Ring. English admirers of murders and detectives and that sort of ware now generally go to the shop of M. Fortuné du Boisgobey. They may be safely recommended to patronise native talent in Miss Drewry. How a murder was perpetrated by means of a "Borgia ring"—a ring with little poison fangs projecting—and how it was found out by the joint efforts of two detectives—one of whom was a young man who had been brought up at Eton and Oxford, and the other a young lady of surpassing beauty and extraordinary accomplishments, sister to the murdered man—may here be read. The story is very well told. Here and there there are a few exuberances of the allusive kind. If Miss Drewry will look into the matter, for instance, she will find that mere virtuous indignation about Mme. du Barry is quite misplaced; and that, so far from its being the fact that "she at least richly deserved the guillotine," there was hardly a more unmerited death in all the Terror. Unless, indeed, Miss Drewry thinks that the moral weaknesses of the lady of Luciennes deserved the guillotine—in which case Heaven preserve us all! But novelists are not expected to know history; they are only expected to conceal their ignorance of it.

Mr. Tom Palatine has written some short stories which are in parts rather vulgar, but which show some observation of the ways and manners of men and a certain power of narrative. The little sketch called "Tabley Grammar School" has a great deal of human nature in it. We are rather inclined to doubt one of Mr. Palatine's panaceas for the woes of mankind, which seems to be rather like that rendering of the words of Horace which the Oxford Spectator once suggested; "Don't be ashamed of marrying the housemaid." But in these days of social equality he has a right to his opinion. Something of the same heresy is visible in the first and longest story. However, Mr. Palatine, though he would bear a little refining, is not unamusing, and it is not every author of whom that can be said.

The principal point of differentiation from other novels which we have discovered in Ireland's True Daughter is that its heroine is thirty years old. Nor is Marion Burke a widow-woman; on the contrary, she is an unplucked rose. The delightful Marianne of Sense and Sensibility, who decided that a woman of five-and-twenty, as she could never hope to excite romantic sentiments again, must content herself with esteem, would have been terribly shocked at "Marcellina;" but, for our part, we rather admire her independence. There is no doubt that many of her sisters are very charming at thirty; and that just as man at that age, despite Dr. Young, is by no means bound to suspect himself a fool, so woman is by no means bound to suspect herself a frump. We can less readily pardon Marcellina for employing the word "licentiate" in the sense of a licentious person, inasmuch as by this obsolete use an unmerited slight is apparently cast upon many worthy persons who have not yet taken the degree of master or doctor.

All who know M. Legouv 's writings are aware how diligently the veteran Academician has of late years given himself up to the amusement and instruction of the lambs of the flock. Our Sons and Daughters is a kind of Parent's Assistant—rather more didactic than that pleasant book, but with a very fair proportion of honey to the worm-wood. Miss Mills has translated it in some places well, in others less well, but almost always tolerably.

The appearance of Mr. Robert Buchanan's Shadow of the Sword some years ago made some critics think that his considerable but unequal literary power had found a field more suitable than poetry to exercise itself in. A Child of Nature does not altogether discountenance that idea, but it does not confirm it quite so strongly as might be wished. Like its predecessor, A Child of Nature is called a romance; but it hardly justifies the title according to the ordinary acceptance of the word, in which romance is taken to imply a story dealing more with adventure and with the tragic passions than with analytic character-drawing and observation of manners. A Child of Nature, except that its scene is laid in an out-of-the-way place (the north of Sutherland), and that at least one scene (the sawing asunder of a bridge by an ancient Highland foster-father in the desire to destroy a person who is, as he thinks, baleful to his foster-child), does not differ much in style from most novels of the day, and indeed is not nearly so much of a romance as Macleod of Dare or Sunrise. However, there is nothing particular in a name. As a novel A Child of Nature is good, but not of the best. The earlier scenes, which, if our memory does not play tricks with us, Mr. Buchanan published some years ago under the title of The Fair Pilot of Loch Urìbol or something of that kind, are perhaps the best part; and two sketches in them, Doctor John and Angus of the Dogs, are either very clever studies from the life or still cleverer imaginations. The heroine, too, Mina Macdonald, is good. Her brother and uncle are more conventional. Her lover, a young landlord who pays his first visit to his property under an assumed name, is a somewhat fragmentary and disappointing sketch in point of character, while his adventures are not particularly striking. The least successful figures in the book, however, are the selfish English aristocrat, Sir Charles Sedley, and his daughter Ethel. Mr. Buchanan may rest assured that no English gentleman of Sir Charles's class, in speaking to his daughter of her cousin, Lord Arranmore, would talk about "his lordship;" and the young lady's behaviour to Mina in her first interview with her is the very reverse of probable or characteristic. There is some good description in A Child of Nature—description in which the author produces a fair effect without lavish use of the word-palette. But Mr. Buchanan has been less careful of the minor touches than he might have been. Macdonalds and Macphersons in the north of Sutherland as ancient owners of the soil are surely out of place.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

SOME BOOKS ON EDUCATION.

The Educational Year-Book for 1881. (Cassells.) This excellent annual improves in fullness and exactness, and is now without a rival as a directory of schools and colleges, and as a summary of educational facts. We have tested here and there its multifarious data; and, except that in the list of denominational boarding schools we find no mention of the important schools of the Society of Friends at Acworth and at York, we have been unable to detect any omission or error. It is, however, difficult to understand why such an enterprise as "Trinity College, London," should be gravely described at length, and placed among "Higher Colleges," in the same category as King's and University Colleges and other institutions of established repute. And it is still more unintelligible that the so-called "local examinations" of Trinity College, London, should figure in another part of the volume, and be detailed side by side with the local examinations of the universities. In this one instance the editor's laudable desire for fullness has led him to waste some valuable space. Otherwise great judgment seems to us to have been shown in the arrangement of different institutions, and in assigning to them their relative prominence. A very careful classification and a good Index make the book particularly easy of reference.

Thoughts on Education. By the Rev. J. Gregory Smith. (Oxford: Parker.) These three essays, the earliest of which was published thirteen years ago, have been reprinted from Reviews. The first of them is a remonstrance with Mr. Lowe and Prof. Huxley for the disparaging tone of their public references to a "classical education;" and a vindication, which seems to us neither original nor very effective, of the public-school system of verse-making, and of the predominance of Latin and Greek as elements in a liberal education. The second is an essay on "Books for Children;" and exhibits a good deal of sympathy with the craving of young children for books which appeal to the fancy and to the love of the marvellous. The third, entitled "Education or Instruction," is a reprint of a letter addressed to Mr. Forster in 1869, just before the passing of the Elementary Education Act, and represents the writer's alarm at the prospect of a secular system of education, and at the application of the compulsory principle to school attendance. By a secular system the writer means one from which creeds and catechisms and the influence of the clergy are excluded, as he cannot believe in the possibility of any religious teaching or moral training which is not of a distinctly denominational character. On the subject of compulsory school attendance there are some gloomy apprehensions and warnings, every one of which has been curiously falsified by the experience of the last ten years. It is difficult to know what purpose is to be served by the reprinting of ephemeral essays like these. Except the second, no one of them can be said to possess the smallest permanent interest, or to throw light on any practical problem which teachers or statesmen are now called on to solve.

The Education Review: an International Magazine, bi-monthly, devoted to Science, Art, Philosophy, Literature, and Education. Conducted by Thomas W. Bicknell, Boston. (Boston: New England Publishing Company.) The theory of this magazine is well conceived, and may eventually be well carried out. A good medium of communication between enquirers and students on both sides of the Atlantic might serve many useful purposes beside the elucidation of the subjects enumerated in the title. At present, however, the promise contained in that title is scarcely fulfilled. None of the essays in the third number now before us relate to science, art, philosophy, or literature, but all to speculative or practical considerations on public education. Of these, the only one of any value from this side of the Atlantic is contributed by Prof. Simon Laurie, of Edinburgh, on "State Supervision in Public High Schools." All the rest, with one exception, are by American writers, and seem to us, though not without interest as far as the facts embodied in them are concerned, to be hardly up to the level usually attained by the best American writers on the principles and philosophy of teaching.

Elementary Education in Saxony. By John L. Bashford. (Sampson Low and Co.) Mr. Bashford has had special opportunities of observing the working of elementary education in Saxony, and has taken considerable interest in it. Considering how constantly reference is made in our own educational controversies to the condition of public instruction in Germany, he does very useful service who translates for us the Regulativen of a typical German State, and describes in detail not only the constitution of the State machinery, but its actual operation and social influence. Mr. Bashford has done this in a methodical and intelligible way; and his little book well deserves the study, not only of writers on education, but of English teachers and school managers generally.

Essays on the Kindergarten: being a Selection of Lectures read before the London Fr bel Society. (Sonnenschein and Allen.) The Fr bel Society, which exists for the very practical and useful purposes of investigating and illustrating the Kindergarten system, and of furnishing a rendezvous for the numerous London teachers who adopt that system, has here put forth eight of the essays which have been read at its periodical meetings. Four of these are by Miss Shirreff, who has already done so much to elucidate the merits of the Kindergarten; two by Miss Buckland, on story-telling, and on the happiness of childhood; one by Miss Heerwart, consisting mainly of a description of Fr bel's Mutter und Kose Lieder; and one by Dr. Frances Hoggan, on the physical education of girls,

With the exception of the last—which is, however, on other grounds fully entitled to attention—all the essays will be helpful to those who desire to understand the Kindergarten methods and the principles which underlie them. The essay on the happiness of childhood, and Miss Shirreff's thoughtful paper on wasted forces, appear to us especially suggestive, and are valuable contributions to the philosophy of infant training.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Delegates of the Oxford Press have determined, in compliance with a desire which has long made itself felt, and which was expressed in a memorial drawn up by Mr. Robinson Ellis last December and signed by thirty scholars interested in MS. research, to print a series of Anecdota. The form of the work will be small quarto, and each Anecdota will, so far as is possible, be procurable separately. The Anecdota will be of four kinds, MS. material hitherto unpublished in (1) Greek and Latin, (2) Semitic languages, (3) Aryan languages, (4) Mediaeval and Modern languages, and each department will probably have a separate editor. It is believed that this work will give a decided and healthy impulse to an increasingly interesting study, MSS.; and, though it is intended to develop primarily the resources of the Bodleian and other Oxford libraries, it is not impossible that contributions may eventually be admitted from other MS. collections in England.

MR. ARTHUR O'SHAUGHNESSY's posthumous volume of poems will appear next month, under the title of Songs of a Worker. It will consist of lyrical poems, of sonnets on ancient sculpture entitled "Thoughts in Marble," and of translations from contemporary French poets.

LANE's Arabic Lexicon, vol. vii., fasciculus i. (containing the letter Qâf), edited by Mr. S. Lane-Poole, issues from the press this day.

MESSRS. HURST AND BLACKETT have in the press a fourth and cheaper edition of Miss Amelia B. Edwards' recent novel Lord Brackenbury, to form the next volume of their "Standard Library." A French translation from the pen of Mdlle. Anna Petit is also in preparation.

WE hear that—whatever may have been the case in this country—ten thousand copies of Lord Beaconsfield's Endymion have been sold in Canada, being the largest sale which any book has yet reached in the Dominion.

To the list of royal, or rather princely, authors must now be added the name of Elizabeth, the Princess of Roumania, who has translated a set of Roumanian poems into German, and has published them through a Leipzig firm under the pseudonym of "Carmen Silva."

A NEW novel by Mrs. Oliphant, entitled Harry Joscelyn, will be shortly issued by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett, in three volumes.

WE understand that the first edition of the Right Hon. G. J. Shaw-Lefevre's English and Irish Land Questions (Cassells) was exhausted within a few days of its publication, and that a second edition will be ready next week.

MR. EDWARD CAPERN, the Devonshire postman poet, is about to issue another volume of poems, which bids fair to be even more successful than his Wayside Warbles. It will be called Sunglams and Shadows.

THE first publication for the present year of the English Dialect Society—Leicestershire Words, Phrases, and Proverbs, by the Rev. A. B. Evans, D.D., and Sebastian Evans, LL.D.—has this week been issued to its members.

MESSRS. S. W. PARTRIDGE AND Co. announce that they have in the press the second volume of Hours with the Bible, by the Rev. Cunningham Geikie, D.D. It embraces the Bible history from Moses to the Judges, and has twenty-five illustrations.

IN a few days will be ready Old Nottinghamshire, edited by Mr. John Potter Briscoe, principal librarian of the Nottingham Free Public Libraries, and author of several works relating to the history and folk-lore of Notts. Among the contributors are Mr. William Andrews, Major A. E. Lawson Lowe, the Bishop Suffragan of Nottingham (Dr. Trollope), Mr. Cornelius Brown, Mr. Councillor Cropper (sheriff), Mr. W. H. Stevenson, Mr. W. Stevenson, Mr. Dutton Walker, Mr. F. Dobson, the editor, &c.

"RITA's" new novel, My Lady Coquette, will be published this month by Messrs. Tinsley and Co. It is dedicated to Mr. Henry Irving, by his permission.

MESSRS. BROCKHAUS have just issued the third and concluding part of the authorised German translation of Endymion, which they characterise as an "epoch-making" work. Dr. Böttger is the translator.

THE lecture on "The Christian Sabbath" recently delivered by Prof. Blackie to the Glasgow Sunday Society is about to be published in cheap pamphlet form by Wheeler, King and Co., of Edinburgh.

AT the annual Commemoration at the University of St. Petersburg on February 20 an important address was delivered by the eminent jurist, Prof. Martens, upon the subject of international copyright. He pointed out the injustice Russia commits, and the loss she herself sustains, by the absence of copyright conventions with other countries. We seem to recollect that Prof. Martens has a considerable reputation in the United States, and possibly this speech of his may have more weight there than the interested remonstrances of English authors.

THE Americans are indefatigable, and, we may add, unrivalled, in the production and correction of dictionaries. Messrs. Lippincott have just brought out a new edition of Worcester's Quarto Dictionary, with a supplement containing over 12,500 new words and a vocabulary of synonyms. At the same time, Messrs. G. and C. Merriam announce a new edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, which will be composed of nearly 2,000 pages, and will contain more than 118,000 words.

WE hear that Björnstjerne Björnson, the Norwegian poet, has had a most successful tour through the Western States. Whenever he has touched Norwegian settlements, the peasants have flocked to the railway station to catch a glimpse of him, and, if possible, grasp his hand. He sails for Norway in April.

THE Rassegna Settemanale states that the Prussian Minister of Public Instruction has obtained authority to publish the documents relating to "the German nation" at the University of Bologna from the thirteenth to the sixteenth century.

THE following is the full list of the local committee of the Congress of Orientalists which, as we have before stated, will hold its fifth meeting in Berlin from September 5 to September 12 of this year under the presidency of Prof. Dillmann:—Prof. Diesterici, Dr. A. Kuhn, Prof. Lepsius, Dr. J. Olshausen, Prof. Sachau, Prof. J. Schmidt, Prof. W. Schott, Prof. Schrader, and Prof. Weber.

AS we briefly announced last week, a poetical competition in celebration of the poet Calderon will be held in London, under the auspices of the Royal Spanish Academy. The compositions must be submitted by April 8. The judges will be Archbishop Trench, Mr. James Russell Lowell, and Lord Houghton. The prize will be a gold medal, with the effigy of Calderon, and one hundred grammes (not grains) in weight, of which the intrinsic value may be roughly estimated at £13.

MR. HENRY FROWDE, of the Oxford University Press, has sent us specimen pages of the six several editions of the revised edition of the New Testament which the two University Presses will jointly publish in May. The editions range from royal octavo in pica to 32mo in nonpareil; the prices from twenty-five shillings to one shilling. At the same time will be published the Greek text, with the Revisers' readings.

THE Magazin für die Literatur In- und Auslandes for March 12 contains a lengthy obituary notice of Carlyle from the pen of Dr. E. Oswald.

PROF. TRATCHEVSKY, of the Odessa University, has just published an interesting and original study upon the Ministry of Vergennes, entitled La France et l'Allemagne sous Louis XVI. It was written at Paris, after research in the archives of the Foreign Office.

IT is stated that Chicago has determined to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the great fire by erecting a fine public library, costing 500,000 dols. (£100,000). The nucleus of a library was formed by seven thousand volumes obtained by Mr. Thomas Hughes from English authors and publishers after the fire.

PROF. MAX MÜLLER, in a letter to the author of the Literary Ladder (S. W. Partridge and Co.)—which is the first book printed in Mr. Pitman's semi-phonotypy—says that he has read it without experiencing any difficulty.

A FRENCH translation of Mr. Woodgate's treatise on aquatic sports has just been put forth by a Paris firm. Mdlle. Venturi's biography of Mazzini has likewise found a French translator and publisher.

PROF. C. DE HARLEZ, of Louvain, has just published a second and revised edition of his translation of the Zend Avesta.

FOLLOWING a French exemplar, Signor Hoepli, of Milan, is publishing Ausonia: Albo d'Arte et Letteratura, containing original contributions from 135 of the best-known living artists and authors of Italy, with one hundred illustrations. The proceeds of the sale will be devoted to the relief of the sufferers by the inundations in Calabria.

LAST week we stated that the Académie Française had refused to award any prize for poetry. We now learn that the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres has also found itself unable to distinguish the single competitor who sent in an essay on the subject, which will be repeated for next year, "Etude grammaticale et lexicographique de la Latinité de Saint-Jérôme."

AT the same meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions a paper was read by M. Delisle upon an uncial MS. preserved in the public library at Brussels, which possesses the peculiar interest of containing internal evidence to prove that it was written towards the close of the seventh century. The MS. contains a large part of the fifth book of "The Lives of the Fathers," ten homilies of St. Cesaire, the first line of a Decretal of Gelasius, and a short commentary upon the Gospels. The classical scholar cannot but feel that the contents might have been much more valuable.

WE learn from the Revue Critique that M. Charles Joret, Professor at Aix, has just published (Paris: Vieweg) a monograph upon the Legend of St. Alexis in Germany. He discusses the eight verse and three prose versions of this legend which are known to exist, and traces elaborately the relations of dependence between them.

THE day of the death of Goethe (March 22, 1832) will be commemorated by the publication of the second issue of the Goethe-Jahrbuch (Frankfurt-a.-M.: Rütten u. Loening), edited by L. Geiger. Among its more important contents will be the following: "Goethe und Daenemark," by Georg Brandes; "Goethe's Stellung zum Christenthum," by J. Schmidt; "Zur Vorgeschichte d. Goethe'schen Faust," by E. Schmidt; "Die erste Aufführung des Goetz von Berlichingen," by R. M. Werner.

A CONTRIBUTION to the bimetallic controversy is promised us from Berlin. It is entitled Für bimetalliche Münzpolitik Deutschlands, and is from the pen of Prof. Adolf Wagner. The publishers are Messrs. Puttkammer and Mühlbrecht, who have issued many pamphlets on financial subjects, including translations of works by Messrs. Cliffe Leslie, Stoney, and Cernuschi.

THE Revue Critique for March 7 contains an elaborate review by M. H. d'Arbois de Jubainville upon Mr. Whitley Stokes' "Calendar of Oengus," published in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy. In opposition to Mr. Whitley Stokes, his critic is disposed to refer the Calendar to as early a date as the end of the eighth, or the beginning of the ninth, century.

THE Report of the Gaelic Union for 1880 (Dublin: Gill and Son) shows a very satisfactory progress in the work for which the Union was founded, of encouraging the use of the Irish language in primary and secondary schools. It appears that, in 1880, as many as 117 students presented themselves in Irish at the intermediate examinations, as compared with only nineteen in the previous year. The Union has not yet succeeded in getting a newspaper printed wholly in Irish, but Irish departments are encouraged in the ordinary journals.

THE Literary Institute of Frankfurt announces that a carefully revised edition of Goethe's letters to Frau von Stein, based on a careful collation of the originals, is in preparation by A. Schöll, and will be published in the course of the present year.

THE second volume of M. Gambetta's Discours et Plaidoyers has been published this week (Paris: Charpentier). It comprehends the speeches delivered between February 1871 and July 1872.

THE publisher of the Rev. J. M. Rodwell's forthcoming New Translation of Isaiah was erroneously stated in the last number of the ACADEMY to be Messrs. Williams and Norgate, instead of Mr. Frederic Norgate, of 7 King Street, Covent Garden.

MISS AMELIA B. EDWARDS requests us to correct a date in her review of Pierret's Essai sur la Mythologie égyptienne which appeared in last week's ACADEMY. For "a little more than four years ago" (line 21, col. 3, p. 191) read "six years ago."

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

Blackwood's Magazine contains the third of Lady Martin's articles "On Some of Shakespeare's Female Characters," a study of the character of Desdemona. "Gentleness," said Mrs. Jameson, "gives the prevailing tone to the character [of Desdemona]—gentleness in its excess—gentleness verging on passiveness—gentleness which not only cannot resent, but cannot resist." "I do not think," said Coleridge, "there is any jealousy properly so called in the character of Othello." Iago, according to Mr. Swinburne, is a great inarticulate poet of the Satanic school. Lady Martin finds Iago "a poor trickster at the best," a demi-devil devoid of grandeur, a villain not very clever, garrulous in his boasting; on the rack, she does not doubt, he will soon find his tongue. Othello basely jealous is not the "noble Moor" "true of heart" as imagined by his bride. The one wholly heroic being in the play is Desdemona, a thoughtful, generous, courageous woman. Whether Lady Martin conceives the play as Shakspeare conceived it or not, she works out her conception delicately and firmly. "My friends used to say, as Mr. Macready did, that in Desdemona I was 'very hard to kill,'" and she fully justifies her resolution, if possible, to live. The following gives an interesting glimpse into actor's sympathy with fellow-actor, unguessed by the spectator of the theatre:—

"Mr. Macready was very fine in this scene [Othello's death-scene]. There was an impressive grandeur, an elevation even, in his ravings:

'Whip me, ye devils,
From the possession of this heavenly sight!
Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulphur!
Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!
O Desdemona! Desdemona! dead! dead! dead!'

As I lay there and listened, he seemed to me to be like a soul in hell, whirling in the Second Circle of the Inferno. And there was a piteousness and a pathos in his reiteration of the loved one's name that went to my very heart."

We trust that these studies of Lady Martin will be continued, and that her admirable Rosalind may not be forgotten. It is evident from her criticism of the characters of Hamlet and Othello that if Shakspeare were rewritten by a woman the chief personages would be not precisely what they are; but we rejoice to be instructed as to how things and persons look when seen through eyes of genius which are also a woman's eyes. We guess at truths thereby which concern a greater theme than even the plays of Shakspeare.

IN the Contemporary, the most attractive article is that by Mr. J. A. Farrer, entitled "What the Three F's did for Tuscany." Unfortunately it fails to carry out its promise. Mr. Farrer tells us what were the designs of the Grand Duke Leopold I.; but we are left quite uncertain as to the results that have followed during the last hundred years. Several of the other articles are exceptionally weak. In "Pyrrhonism in Science," Prof. W. C. Williamson raises a question which he does not solve. Dr. W. Knighton, writing of "Savage Life in India," affords one more example of the danger that Anglo-Indians incur when they attempt to deal with other provinces than their own. Of the Santhals Dr. Knighton knows something, from which we may infer that he has lived in Bengal. The Kandhs he throughout calls the Gonds, a confusion of the first magnitude; and the Maris of Bastar he places in Rajputana, because, forsooth, they dwell near Jaipur in the Western Ghâts, and there is another Jaipur in Rajputana. Mr. Herbert Taylor's paper on "The Future of India" is open to a kindred, if not to the same, objection. Belonging to the old school of Anglo-Indians, he may be pardoned for feeling indignant at some of the magazine articles upon India that have appeared recently. He ought rather to welcome them, for they really show that Englishmen are beginning to take an interest in their great dependency, and that they will follow any guide who only makes himself intelligible and interesting. We may remark that it is not true, so far as regards Oudh and Rohilkhand, that "the Great Mutiny was a mutiny of the army, and not in any sense one of the people."

OBITUARY.

JAMES SPEDDING.

THE death of Mr. James Spedding, the editor and biographer of Bacon, was briefly noticed in the ACADEMY of last week. Mr. Spedding, who was deaf and infirm, was run over by a hansom cab in Mayfair on Tuesday, March 1, and was removed to St. George's Hospital, where he died on Wednesday, March 10. It is highly characteristic of his scrupulous accuracy and his strict sense of justice that, on almost the only occasion after the accident when he was capable of coherent speech, he took the opportunity of saying that he was himself wholly to blame, and that no fault attached to the cabman.

Mr. Spedding, who was a member of a family which has been long settled in Cumberland, was seventy-two years of age. In 1831 he graduated at Cambridge as a member of Trinity College. His place in the mathematical tripos was among "the twelve apostles," being tenth from the bottom of the junior optimes. But, in the classical tripos, he took the respectable position of third in the second class. Mr. Spedding's life, like that of many other literary men, does not appear to have been an eventful one, but he had a very large circle of literary friends. For some time before his death he had been an honorary Fellow of Trinity—an honour most appropriately paid by that college to the biographer of the greatest of its sons.

Mr. Spedding's first work in connexion with Bacon was a privately printed book entitled Evenings with a Reviewer; or a Free and Particular Examination of Mr. Macaulay's Article on Lord Bacon, in a Series of Dialogues. This book, which was only intended for the perusal of a few friends with a view to eliciting opinions and criticism, was printed in two volumes in 1848. In the notice prefixed to it he says: "I wish to keep these volumes private, not as containing anything which I need shrink from publishing, but because I am digesting the substance of them into a larger work, which will present the whole subject in a more complete shape, and, as I think, to better advantage." It is needless to state that the conclusions at which Mr. Spedding had already arrived, with reference to Bacon's conduct and character, were widely different from those of Macaulay, whose brilliant essay, originally published as an article in the Edinburgh Review for July 1837, had been little more than an expansion of Pope's ill-considered epigram,

"The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind."

In 1857 there began to appear the magnificent edition of Bacon's works by Ellis, Spedding, and Heath, which, while leaving room for separate editions of some of the more important works, will probably always remain the standard edition of the Opera Omnia. This edition had been preceded by Mr. Basil Montagu's (Pickering, 1825-34), which, though handsomely got up, was ill arranged and very meagrely annotated. The best work that had been done for Bacon, up to that time, was M. Bouillet's edition of the Philosophical Works, in three large volumes, published at Paris, 1834-35. This book, however, though containing much excellent matter, was so little known in England that till quite recently no copy of it was to be found either in the British Museum or the Bodleian Library. The original arrangement with regard to the edition of Ellis, Spedding, and Heath was that the editing of the Philosophical Works should be undertaken by Mr. Leslie Ellis, that of the Literary and Occasional Works by Mr. Spedding, and that of the Professional Works by Mr. D. D. Heath. But about the end of 1849 Mr. Ellis was seized with a rheumatic fever, which left him incapable of any continued work. Though his part had already been far advanced, it was by no means complete; and hence the prefaces, notes, translations, and distribution of the pieces in the first five volumes, which contain the Philosophical Works, had to be largely revised and supplemented by Mr. Spedding, so that these volumes may be fairly regarded as a joint work. For the editing of the Literary Works, contained in the sixth and a portion of the seventh volumes, Mr. Spedding is alone responsible; the Legal Works, forming the latter portion of the seventh volume, having fallen to the share of Mr. Heath.

No sooner had this edition, the last volume of which appeared in 1861, been published than Mr. Spedding began to issue the volumes containing the Letters and Life of Bacon, with which the Occasional Works were incorporated. These volumes, seven in number, appeared at intervals between 1861 and 1874. To the student of English history in the times of Elizabeth and James the First this work is simply indispensable. It is unnecessary to remind the reader that the view taken of Bacon's conduct and character, both in private life and in politics, differs widely from that which was usually prevalent when the work appeared. But I believe that this view, notwithstanding the mass of prejudice still remaining to be dissipated, is the one which, in the main, will ultimately prevail. At any rate, if his view be wrong, he supplies the materials, in the almost exhaustive list of documents published by him, for his own refutation.

In 1878 there appeared a book in two volumes by Mr. Spedding entitled Life and Times of Francis Bacon (Trübner). This book includes most of the narrative contained in the larger work, but omits many of the documents, and, being shorter, and confining itself to the more important matter, is better adapted to popular use.

Though for the greater part of Mr. Spedding's literary activity was expended on Bacon, with whose name his will henceforth be indissolubly connected, he also wrote books on other subjects. In 1867 he put out a small volume entitled Publishers and Authors, containing two papers which had been rejected by several of the Reviews as likely to give offence to the book trade. A considerable collection of articles and reviews was published by him in 1879, characteristically called Reviews and Discussions, Literary, Political, and Historical, not relating to Bacon. Lastly, to the Collected Sonnets of Charles Tennyson Turner (brother of the Poet Laureate), published in 1880, he contributed an Introductory Essay.

Nothing could exceed the kindness with which Mr. Spedding was always ready to treat those who were employed on the same subjects as himself. Though up to that time personally unknown to him, no sooner did I acquaint him, some years ago, with the fact that I was engaged on an edition of the Novum Organum of Bacon, than he was ready to answer any number of questions, to place his library at my disposal, and to volunteer every kind of assistance that was in his power. Nor did he ever fail to express his thanks for any correction, however slight, that I might offer of his own work. Indeed, he was entirely incapable of literary jealousy. Rightly feeling himself master of his subject, he was only too glad to find others interesting themselves in it or ready to develop further any special branch of it, which, with a view to the unity of his design, he had been obliged to pass over with a comparatively light touch. At the same time, it must be owned that he possessed in rather an exaggerated form the virtues of a hero-worshipper, and that he was apt to wax somewhat warm, as I myself once experienced, if the slightest imputation were cast on Bacon's character or motives which could not be amply justified by positive evidence. This tendency was specially exemplified in the articles in the Contemporary Review for 1876, which had been provoked by the unfavourable view of Bacon's character revived by Dr. Abbott in his Introduction to the Essays.

Notwithstanding the length to which this notice has run, I venture to quote a few lines from a letter which I received from Mr. Spedding at the end of November last. I had written to him in reference to a popular account of Bacon's philosophy, which I am shortly about to publish, and to which I wished to prefix a short sketch of Bacon's life based on the materials contained in his volumes. The extract will, I think, be interesting as containing what were, perhaps, his last utterances on the plan and aims of his own work, and also as showing the kindly and genial manner in which he welcomed others on the ground so familiar to himself.

"I wish my view of Bacon's case to be judged according to the evidence; but, in order that it may be so judged, the evidence must be incorporated with the story. I could not trust even appendices in the same volume. I have tried to manage it so that readers who are interested in the subject will be tempted to read both the works and the commentary; finding that the commentary makes the works more easily intelligible, and is itself merely introductory to them, and only complete when read in connexion with them. To wish that they will do so much is only to wish that they will acquaint themselves thoroughly with the facts before they form their opinion. But beyond this I ask for nothing. I wish everyone to form his own judgment and deliver it in his own way, making as much or as little use of my book as he finds convenient, and accepting, rejecting, or correcting my conclusions as he thinks right. It is by this process that I expect my work to produce, in due time, its proper effect, whatever that may be; and I am very glad to hear that you are going to take a part in it. I would not have you waste more paper in acknowledgments than you find necessary in order to lay the responsibility on the right owner."

Laborious and accurate students like Mr. Spedding seldom obtain the reputation which is their due. An ungrateful world talks much and confidently of the author whom they have enabled it to understand and appreciate, but reck little of the commentator or biographer who has made its task so easy and delightful. And yet a writer who does for a classic of the first rank what Mr. Spedding has done for Bacon, or what Mr. Masson has done for Milton, surely has a higher claim on the recognition of the literary public than the vast majority of authors who are accepted as original.

THOMAS FOWLER.

At Cambridge Mr. Spedding was contemporary with the Poet Laureate, and ever afterwards an intimate friendship existed between the two. It is an open secret that the well-known poem, "To J. S.," was addressed to Mr. Spedding. That poem was published in the editio princeps of 1830. In the edition immediately following, two other poems, not less well known, are placed immediately after it—"Of old sat Freedom on the heights" and "Love thou thy land." Both of these, we believe we are justified in saying, were originally suggested to the poet by passages in an eloquent speech which Mr. Spedding delivered at the Cambridge Union.

We understand also that it was at Mr. Tennyson's instigation that Mr. Spedding prepared a paper, "Who wrote Shakspeare's Henry VIII.?" originally published in the Gentleman's Magazine for August 1850. This paper, we have high authority for saying, may be regarded as the forerunner of the work of the New Shakspeare Society, and was appropriately reprinted in the Transactions of that society for 1874, under the title of "The Several Shares of Shakspeare and Fletcher in the Play of Henry VIII."

THE death is also announced of James Paul Cobbett, third and only surviving son of William Cobbett, and author of A Ride in France and A Tour in Italy, beside some legal works; also of M^{me}. Le Tellier, a sister of Alexandre Dumas père.

THE CONSPIRACY AGAINST THE OTTOMAN KHALIFATE.

WITHIN the last two years certain malcontents within the ranks of Islam have provoked a controversy which is stirring up strife and discord in different parts of the Ottoman empire. The subject in debate is the right of the Ottoman Sultans to the Khalifate and supreme Imāmate, or, in other words, to be the representatives of the prophet Muḥammad in his twofold character of Imperator et Pontifex Maximus. In the early ages of Islam controversy ran high on this subject, and led to the formation of several sects, generally regarded as being outside the pale of orthodoxy, which continue up to the present day—such as the Shīaahs of Persia, the Ibādhiyyah of Omān, and the Zaidiyyah of al-Yāman. The question, however, as far as I am aware, has not been re-opened before since the conquest by the Ottomans of those eastern territories—including the holy cities of Makkah and al-Madinah—which had previously acknowledged allegiance to the Abbaside Khalifahs (Caliphs).

The renewed controversy was set on foot about a year ago by the al-Istikbāl, a Turkish paper printed at Geneva, the avowed object of which was to refute the right of the Ottoman Sultans to the Khalifate. It was reported in Europe at the time that the Sultan 'Abdu'l-Hamid, after reading some of the articles published in the paper referred to, caused a letter to be written to the ex-Khedive of Egypt charging him with instigating and subsidising the editor. To this Ismail Pasha is said to have replied that he, 'Abdu'l-Hamid, had forfeited all claim to the Khalifate on several grounds, among which he enumerated his having co-operated with Christian sovereigns to remove him, a Muslim, from his principality, and obliging him and his Harīm (women) to retire into exile to a Dārul-Harb, that is, into an infidel or non-Muslim territory. Be that as it may, the opinion is nevertheless general throughout the East, whether well founded or not I cannot say, that the ex-Khedive is the mainspring and mainstay of the paper. Every available expedient was adopted to give currency to the al-Istikbāl. Those who desired to have it had only to write direct to the editor, who offered to supply it gratis; and, in order to prevent seizure by the Turkish authorities, it was enclosed in a letter-envelope, and forwarded by post.

Quite recently the propaganda found means to enlist the services of the Rev. J. L. Säbunji, a Syrian ecclesiastic, who is also proprietor and editor of the an-Nāḥlah, an Arabic monthly, printed in London, in which several articles have appeared written in the style of the al-Istikbāl. Not satisfied with these two organs, the propagandists have just issued another paper, a lithographed sheet, without the name of editor, press, or printer. It is called the al-Khilāfah (the Khalifate), and bears the two mottoes "Freedom and Independence," "Success and Prosperity;" and, below these, the passage from the al-Kur-ān, xl. 17: "There will be no injustice in that day. Verily, God will be swift to reckon." The following notice heads the articles:—

"This paper has been established with a capital of £10,000 sterling, and will be printed for ten years at the expense of a friend of the Arab people. It will be forwarded in an envelope, as a letter, to al-Yaman, the al-Hijaz, al-Irak, India, Africa, Egypt, and Syria, and to every country where Arabia is spoken. Moreover, in order to extend its usefulness, it will be translated into Turkish, Persian, and Hindustani.

In one of its leading articles the new paper endeavours to refute a pamphlet written by an inhabitant of Makkah in defence of the Ottoman Khalifate, proving the right of the Ottoman Sultans to the Prophetic Succession, and how it was transferred to them from the Arabs. Its abuse of the pamphleteer and of the Turks is too coarse to be reproduced. The historical summary which follows is noteworthy in this respect, that all the dates are given in the Christian era, which at first sight raises a strong presumption against the writer being a Muslim. Otherwise the review is tolerably accurate, but in the arguments adduced against the Ottoman Sultans it entirely ignores their claim to the Khalifate on the score of the undoubted fact that the Khatbatu'n-Na'at, or Prayer for the Sovereign, has been and is still offered up for them severally as Khalifah by all the pilgrims indiscriminately who visit the holy places of Makkah and al-Madinah, and that they have hitherto had, and still undoubtedly possess, the suffrages of the great bulk of so-called orthodox Muslims, a plea which ash-Shahristani and other Muslim jurists hold to constitute a valid title to the Khalifate. The former, in his Kitabu'l-Milal wa'n-Nihal, says:—

"The difference which arose respecting the Imamate [or Khalifate] was twofold. One party maintained that the right to the Imamate depended on concurrent election; the other that it depended on (divine) nomination and appointment. Those who held the first view recognised the validity of the Imamate in whomsoever obtained the suffrages of the people, or of a respectable section of the same."

(I discussed this subject at some length in an article published in the Nineteenth Century for September 1877.)

The succeeding article, which is professedly copied from the an-Nahlah, is entitled "The Ottoman Khalifate a Fiction," and is written in the most virulent language. Judging at first from internal evidence, I inferred that the writer was a Muslim; but, as the reader will see anon, that inference was incorrect. One might fancy, from its fulsome flattery of the old Arab Khalifate, that all those who succeeded to that office were patterns of social and administrative virtue; but it required some such rhodomontade to set off in bold relief the contrast, drawn in the most ribald language, of the Ottoman Khalifats. The next article, which is headed "O ye heroes! strike for independence," is a direct appeal to the subject races to throw off their allegiance to the Ottomans. The diatribe concludes thus:—

"The time has come for taking the field. Be not laggards, but seize the opportunity which is now afforded, for you will never have a better. The Ottoman Government is in the plight of al-Mu'at'asim-abillah in his day. Its treasury is empty; strife and envy have enervated its statesmen; the European Powers have crippled it by their demands; the Kurds have created disturbances within its borders; the Armenians are scheming to throw off its yoke; the Greeks are intent upon obtaining a slice of its territory, a war is imminent between them and the Turks which may break out in the spring, when all the available forces of the Ottomans will be required on the Greek frontier, and the Ottoman territory will be denuded of troops, and when the field will be clear for you to carry out your enterprise."

As stated above, I could only guess at the authorship of the new lithographed sheet in which the above articles appeared. Now, however, the whole is made clear by the following announcement contained in the an-Nahlah, headed, "One sun may set, but a thousand moons will succeed it," which appeared in that paper a few days after the first issue of the al-Khildafah:—

"Several agents of the an-Nahlah in the Ottoman dominions have informed us that the Government has prohibited its introduction into its territories. The Ottoman Government forgets the services which the an-Nahlah rendered it during the late war, when, for upwards of two years and a-half, it defended its rights. It now rewards those services by interdicting the introduction of the paper into its dominions. . . . We, however, have set on foot another sheet, entitled the al-Khildafah, which we intend forwarding to the subscribers to the an-Nahlah and others in the Ottoman empire in an envelope, like a letter; also in packets of merchandise and in other clandestine ways, so that the tyrants will be powerless to interfere with it."

It is clear from this out-spoken statement that the editor of the an-Nahlah is also editor of the al-Khildafah.

Albeit there is not much fear that the influence of these propagandist papers will bear any appreciable comparison with the wild temerity of the scheme which they advocate, there can be no doubt that inflammatory harangues in the style of that above quoted are calculated to do unmitigated mischief. The idea of forming a new Arab kingdom, which has been put forward by a clique of Ottoman placemen, dismissed for grave misdemeanour, to disguise their interested personal motives—an idea which has been endorsed of late by a few enthusiasts in the West—resolves itself into the wildest chimera when one carefully analyses the materials available for its construction. Granted that the Ottoman empire is the reverse of homogeneous, and that it lacks the coherent power of a united nation. Nevertheless, by the maintenance of a strong central authority controlling the whole it has succeeded for four centuries, with varying fortune, in keeping together the heterogeneous elements of which it is composed. On the other hand, let anyone acquainted with the Eastern peoples comprised in the Ottoman empire—Turks, Arabs, Druses, Kurds, Yezidis, the descendants of Arabs (both Muslim and Christian), to say nothing of the different Christian sects in Turkey—let anyone, I say, reflect on the chance of moulding these mutually repellent elements into anything like a constitutional sovereignty, and I venture to affirm that he would forthwith relinquish the impossible task. As to the tribes of the Arabian peninsula who are being held up to us as paragons of excellence and the most eligible successors to the authority now wielded by the Ottomans, their whole history prior to Muhammad, and their disintegration long before the fall of the Abbasides controvert the extravagant notion. Before Muhammad these tribes were at irreconcilable variance with one another. The stimulus of religious enthusiasm imparted to them by the Arabian Prophet succeeded for a time in welding many of them into a nation powerful enough to cope with the Romans; but when that enthusiasm died out they reverted to their former tribal system, and at the present day there is no semblance of a central authority among them, each tribe jealously guarding its independence against all encroachments. None but a visionary could indulge in the dream of a political union between these antagonistic sects. Those of the al-Hijaz, some of which may fairly lay claim to a superior civilisation, would scout the idea of an alliance with the heretical Wahhabis of Najd; the wolf and the lamb are more likely to dwell together in peace than the Shammar with the al-Anizah, or either with the al-Muntafik; and the same repugnance would prevent the Ibadhiyyah of Oman or the Zaidiyyah of al-Yaman from coalescing in any such scheme. In fact, one might as well attempt to make a rope of sand as to manipulate these discordant elements into a sovereignty with the will and power to distribute justice equally to all. And it is this motley, discordant, and miserably armed multitude who are to overcome the disciplined army of the Turks! It is from these wild and ignorant Badawin tribes that it is proposed to construct a new Arab dynasty which is to rule over the cultivated Turks, Arabs, and other peoples and communities within the Ottoman empire! The utopian notions of Western romancers of this subject may well be treated as harmless vagaries. Not so, however, the motives of those cashiered Ottoman functionaries who are making them the stalking-horse of a mischievous conspiracy. Had this propaganda originated in a widely spread conviction on the part of the subject populations that they would be benefited by the acquisition of their independence of the Ottoman rule, something might fairly be said in its favour, however chimerical the notion may have been; but when, as is generally believed, the movement was started out of pique and personal revenge, and is maintained by the supposed chief promoter out of money extorted in former years from the subjects of an outlying province of the Ottoman empire, which now goes to subsidise papers established to further his ends, the whole affair deserves the reprobation of all honest men.

A word respecting the editor of the an-Nahlah and his apology for lending himself to this propaganda. He frankly admits having for upwards of two years and a-half defended the Ottoman Government, for which he received no recompense. When, however, he began to inveigh against it, and to instigate its subjects to rebel, he naïvely expresses surprise and indignation that it took the only means in its power to arrest his treasonable publications. What is it that all at once led to his change of opinion respecting the Ottoman Government, of which he had been, heretofore, so staunch an upholder, and to have gone over so far to the opposite side that he, a Christian clergyman, can attach such invocations as "Upon them be peace!" "May God bless and save them!" to Muhammad and the Arab Khalifats? There is a false ring in this newborn advocacy, which twangs more of the jingling of the £10,000 given to support the scheme of the malcontents than of genuine conviction of its propriety and justice.

GEORGE PERCY BADGER.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- GOETHE, J. B. Bithely. Ein Singpiel. In der ursprüngl. Gestalt zum ersten Male hrg. Leipzig: Veit. 2 M.
HERMANN, E. Weitere quellenmässige Beiträge zu Shakespeares literarischen Kämpfen. I. Allgemeine Uebersicht. 5 M.
HITCHMAN, F. Eighteenth-Century Studies. Sampson Low & Co. 16s.
LESER, E. Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Nationalökonomie. 1. Hft. Jena: Fischer. 2 M. 40 Pf.
NISAUD, D. Souvenirs de Voyage. Paris: O. Lévy. 7 fr.
PICOT, G. La Réforme judiciaire en France. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
SCHIEBER, J. Die Befestigungskunst u. die Lehre vom Kampfe. 2. Thl. Berlin: Luckhardt. 5 M.
SYBEL, L. V. Katalog der Sculpturen zu Athen. Marburg: Elwert. 7 M.
VOGL, A. Systematische Encyclopädie der Pädagogik. Eisenach: Bachmeister. 4 M.
WILBERFORCE, Samuel, D.D. Life of. Vol. II. Ed. R. O. Wilberforce. Murray. 15s.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ADLER, S. Herzog Welf VI. u. sein Sohn. Hannover: Helwig. 4 M.
BRITRAGE zur Geschichte der österreichischen Kavallerie . . . in Feldzügen d. XVIII. Jahrh. u. in jenen der neuesten Zeit. 1. Lfg. Wien: Seidel. 6 M.
CARTAUT, A. La Trêve athénienne. Paris: Thorin. 12 fr.
MARRAST, A. La Vie byzantine au VI^e Siècle. Paris: Thorin.
TRENAUX, M. Histoire de la Tarreure, 1792-94. T. VIII. et dernier. Paris: O. Lévy. 6 fr.
WHEELER, J. T. History of India from the Earliest Ages. Vol. IV. Part 2. Trübner. 12s.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BERTKAU, Ph. Bericht üb. die wissenschaftlichen Leistungen im Gebiete der Entomologie während d. J. 1879. Berlin: Nicolai. 12 M.
- KLAUSSNER, F. Studien üb. die Muskel-Anordnung am Pylorus der Vertebraten. Stuttgart: Cotta. 5 M.
- KOBELT, W. Synopsis novorum generum, specierum et varietatum molluscorum viventium testaceorum anno 1879 promulgatorum. Cassel: Fischer. 8 M.
- KRUKENBERG, O. F. W. Vergleichend-physiologische Studien an den Küsten der Adria. 4. Abth. Heidelberg: Winter. 5 M.
- LEPSIUS, J. Johann Heinrich Lambert. Eine Darstellg. seiner kosmolog. u. philosoph. Leistgn. München: Ackermann. 4 M.
- MIVART, St. G. The Cat: an Introduction to the Study of Backboned Animals, especially Mammals. Murray.
- RABENHOFER, L. Kryptogamen-Flora v. Deutschland, Oesterreich u. der Schweiz. 1. Bd. Pilze v. G. Winter. 2. Lfg. Ustilagineae u. Uredineae. Leipzig: Kummer. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- VERBEEK, R. D. M. Geologische Notizen üb. die Inseln d. niederländisch-indischen Archipels. Cassel: Fischer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
- WYZRECHT, O. Praktische Anleitung zur Beobachtung der Polarlichter u. der magnetischen Erscheinungen in hohen Breiten. Wien: Perles. 1 M. 30 Pf.
- ZANDER, A. Chemisches üb. die Samen v. Xanthium strumarium. Dorpat: Karow. 1 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- HAUPT, P. Akkadische u. sumerische Keilschrifttexte. 1. Lfg. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 7 M.
- HORSTMANN, C. Altenglische Legenden. Neue Folge. Heilbronn: Henninger. 21 M.
- MONIN, H. Monuments des anciens Idiomes gaulois, textes, linguistique. Paris: Thorin.
- MULLACH, F. Fragments des Philosophes grecs. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 15 fr.
- PRATJE, H. Dativ u. Instrumentalis im Heland. Göttingen: Deuerlich. 1 M. 20 Pf.
- QUIRIL, K. Der Gebrauch d. Konjunctivs in den ältesten französischen Sprachdenkmälern bis zum Rolandsliede einschliesslich. Kiel: v. Maack. 1 M. 20 Pf.
- REINHOLD, J. W. The Mesnevi of Maslama, Jelalu'd-din Muhammed Er-rumi. Tübingen. 21s.
- SALOMON V. ORSINO. Ohel Mosd. Hebräische Sinonima. Hrg. v. J. Willhelmer. Wien: Löwy. 5 M.
- SAVINI, G. La Grammatica ed il Lessico del Dialetto Teramano. Turin: Loescher. 4 fr.
- UHL, M. Beiträge zur Grammatik d. vorklassischen Chinesisch. I. Die Partikel "Wai" im Schu-King u. Schi-King. Leipzig: Weigel. 4 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. STRACHEY ON MR. FYFFE'S "HISTORY OF MODERN EUROPE."

London: March 14, 1881.

In replying to certain statements in Mr. George Strachey's review of my History of Modern Europe, vol. i., in the ACADEMY of March 5, I am aware that I have to do with a learned and a formidable critic. I am obliged to Mr. Strachey for some, but not all, of his corrections, and will quote and answer some of his assertions in detail.

Mr. Strachey.—"Mr. Fyffe does full justice to Pitt's struggle against the current of popular anger; but he forgets the negotiations carried on at the Hague, . . . which prove that, even after the departure of Chauvelin, Pitt still clung to the hope of peace, and was by no means thinking of war."

Answer.—I do not forget the negotiations at the Hague. They are my very ground for saying that Pitt "hoped against hope for peace." But the King's message of January 28 proves that, failing concessions which France was certain not to make, the English Government had determined on war. How, if Mr. Strachey bears in mind the King's message of the 28th, he can say that Pitt was still "by no means thinking of war" I do not understand.

Mr. Strachey (as to Nelson's action at Naples in 1799).—"However, Mr. Fyffe takes his facts from Colletta, who deals with these transactions in a purely mythical spirit. . . . According to Colletta's uncritical and fantastical account, Nelson brought King Ferdinand to Naples in the fleet, whereupon the treaty was repudiated in a royal manifesto, of which the historian gravely gives the exact text. Mr. Fyffe repeats this, manifesto and all, the truth being that the King at the time in question was in Sicily, and that the manifesto is a pure invention."

Answer.—The quotations in my book show that for the events of 1798-99 generally I have used Nelson's despatches as much as I have used Colletta. On the transactions in question

Mr. Strachey is too severe upon Colletta. It is true that King Ferdinand did not arrive with Nelson's fleet, but after an interval, and that Nelson in the first instance repudiated the capitulation on his own authority. But the alleged manifesto is not, as Mr. Strachey says, a pure invention. As Mr. Strachey reproaches me with neglecting Austrian authors, let me refer to the note to p. 38 of Baron Helfert's Königin Karolina von Neapel (1878), where the letter of the King is given, dated from the royal squadron, July 8—identical in substance, though not in words, with Colletta's manifesto. "The letter," Helfert adds, "was printed by the King's printer, Domenico Sangiacomo, and published as a royal proclamation."

Mr. Strachey (as to German affairs between the Peace of Amiens and the Peace of Tilsit).—"Since the appearance of Hardenberg's authentic memoirs, with Ranke's original narrative, . . . accuracy with respect to the main events of this period ought to be easily attainable. . . . The news of the violation of Anspach was by no means 'sufficient,' as Mr. Fyffe thinks, 'to goad Frederick William into decided action,' neither were orders 'sent to the generals to prepare for war,' nor did the Czar thereupon come to Berlin 'to fix the terms upon which the coalition should receive Prussian support.' The King flatly declined to move a step; he had no idea of joining a coalition," &c.

Answer.—I will quote Ranke's own words (Ranke-Hardenberg, i. 526):—

"The violation of Anspach totally changed Prussia's military and political attitude. The army had hitherto had its front turned against Russia; it was now turned against France; not, however, to begin the war, but to strengthen the action of the coalition. The King did not wait for the appearance of Alexander, which soon followed (October 25), but instantly made up his mind to fix in concert with Russia the terms which should be offered to Napoleon, and on the rejection of which Prussia should join the coalition."

Is this nearer to my statements, or to Mr. Strachey's contradictions?

Mr. Strachey.—"Anyone who knows the details . . . of the mission of Haugwitz to Vienna before Austerlitz . . . will be able to correct Mr. Fyffe. . . . Mr. Fyffe is superficial about the Treaty of Schönbrunn, being unaware of the order to Haugwitz to prolong his negotiations in consequence of the change in the situation effected by the Battle of Austerlitz," &c.

Answer.—Anyone who has really unravelled the tangle of Prussian diplomacy at this crisis (November–December 1805) must have an uncommonly clear head. Even Mr. Strachey makes a slip in speaking of the mission of Haugwitz to Vienna, and of the order given him to prolong negotiations in consequence of Austerlitz. Haugwitz's mission was to Napoleon's camp, though he chose to go out to Vienna; nor did he receive any orders whatever after the Battle of Austerlitz. I am, however, dissatisfied with this part of my narrative, and shall modify it. All the accounts of the Treaty of Schönbrunn, &c., before the publication of Hardenberg were certainly inexact; but Hardenberg's own narrative conflicts with his documents, and is, according to his editor, Ranke, erroneous (i. 551). I believe, however, that I have now at length got through the hateful jungle, and am obliged to Mr. Strachey for his hollos, though he is himself not quite out of the wood.

Mr. Strachey.—"Mr. Fyffe has failed to understand the Prussian Ministerial changes and complications and their proper sequence. He says that in 1805 Hardenberg 'gave up the first place in the King's counsels to Haugwitz' on account of the Hanover transaction; the fact being that Haugwitz was then on half-pay, and did not receive office till 1806 in compliance with the desire of Napoleon."

Answer.—I expressly state (p. 272) that Hardenberg "remained in office" in 1805.

But Haugwitz, though on half-pay, had gradually recovered influence over the King, until in the Hanover transaction his opinion was allowed to overrule Hardenberg's. I will quote Hardenberg's own words (ii. 298):—"The genius of weakness which had so long governed Prussia now (October 1805) feared the end of its rule. To preserve its sway, Count Haugwitz was set up against me," &c. Then, on October 23, 1805, Haugwitz became joint-Minister with Hardenberg (ii. 304). Mr. Strachey's last statement is a mere mistake.

Mr. Strachey.—"Mr. Fyffe is also in error with respect to the remarkable circumstances under which Stein retired (read was dismissed) after Eylau."

Answer.—This is some confusion of Mr. Strachey's own invention. Stein was not in office at the time of the Battle of Eylau. Mr. Strachey must have been reading somebody else's book, not mine.

Mr. Strachey.—"Trafalgar is dismissed allusively and unintelligibly in two lines."

Answer.—Trafalgar, with its effects, occupies nearly two pages.

Mr. Strachey.—"In the Peninsular War Rolica is not named; neither is the brilliant passage of the Douro, nor Graham's victory, which the Duke called 'the glorious battle of Barossa.' The campaign of Caldiero is forgotten; so are the battles of Bar-sur-Aube and Fère Champenoise."

Answer.—Forgotten! No, by heaven! I took infinite pains to squeeze them out, and wish I had been equally successful with a dozen other glorious battles and campaigns. (Graham's victory happens, by-the-way, not to be left out: p. 442.)

Mr. Strachey.—"It is loose thinking . . . to describe incidental concomitants of the policy of the Napoleonic age, like Italian unity and quasi-German freedom, as its creations."

Answer.—I have never done so; it is a pure fancy of Mr. Strachey's; and I do not know what the expression "quasi-German freedom" means. When I speak of the "permanent creations" of the Napoleonic age (p. 340) I mean its permanent creations and nothing else; and I have repeatedly shown that these were its laws, its land enfranchisements, and its systems of judicature. C. A. FYFFE.

BUDDHIST CHRONOLOGY.

Oxford: March 14, 1881.

It is generally assumed that the chronology of the Southern Buddhists, according to which the Nirvāna of Gotama Buddha fell in the year 543 B.C., is sixty or sixty-six years at fault, and that Nirvāna is an equivalent for death.

The earliest Buddhist texts, however, show that Nirvāna does not mean "death," but the "cessation of lust, delusion, and ignorance." We learn from the Buddhavamsa and other books that Gotama led a householder's life for twenty-nine years, then set out and attained Nirvāna under the sacred tree. The Buddhavamsa further states that Gotama did not live to a hundred years.

The difference of sixty years in these two chronologies may be therefore explained in this way—that in the rock inscriptions the date given is that of Gotama's death, the date of the Southern chronology being that of his attaining to Nirvāna.

We have thus three dates fixed in the history of Buddhism—viz., Gotama's birth in 572 B.C., his Nirvāna in 543 B.C., and his death, according to the inscriptions, in 483 B.C.

OSCAR FRANKFURTER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- MONDAY, March 21, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Fungi," by Prof. R. Bentley.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture III., "The Scientific Principles involved in Electric Lighting," by Prof. W. G. Adams.
 8 p.m. Victoria Institution.
- TUESDAY, March 22, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Blood," by Prof. Schüfer.
 4 p.m. Royal Asiatic: "Chinese Intercourse with India in the Seventh Century A.D.," by Prof. Beal.
 8 p.m. Anthropological Institute: "Artificially Deformed Skulls from Mallekolo," by Prof. W. H. Flower; "The Ethnological Hearings of the terms Gypsy, Zingaro, and Romo," by Mr. Joseph Lucas.
 8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "The Comparative Endurance of Iron and Mild Steel when exposed to Corrosive Influences," by Mr. David Phillips.
- WEDNESDAY, March 23, 8 p.m. Society of Arts.
 8 p.m. Geological: "The Upper Greensands and Chloritic Marl of the Isle of Wight," by Mr. C. Parkinson; "The Flow of an Ice-sheet, and its Connexion with Glacial Phenomena in Britain," by Mr. Clement Reid; "Soilslap Motion," by Dr. R. W. Coppinger.
 8 p.m. Royal Society of Literature: "The Genuine and the Spurious in Eddaic Mythology. I.—Myths of Death and of the Other World," by Mr. C. F. Keary.
- THURSDAY, March 24, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Ornament," by Mr. H. H. Statham.
 4.30 p.m. Royal.
 7 p.m. London Institution: "The History of the 'Suite,'" by Mr. Ernst Pauer.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Future Development of Electric Appliances," by Prof. John Perry.
 8 p.m. Telegraph Engineers.
 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
- FRIDAY, March 25, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Tenure and Cultivation of Land in India," by Sir George Campbell.
 8 p.m. Quekett: "On Ciona celata—Does the Sponge make the Burrows?" by Mr. J. G. Waller.
 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Weather and Health of London," by Mr. A. Buchan.
- SATURDAY, March 26, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "American Humorists," by the Rev. H. R. Haweis.
 3 p.m. Physical.

SCIENCE.

Report on the Scientific Results of the Voyage of H.M.S. "Challenger" during the Years 1873-76. Zoology. Vol. I. Prepared under the Superintendence of Sir C. Wyville Thomson, F.R.S., &c. (Published by Order of Her Majesty's Government.)

(First Notice.)

THIS fine large volume is the first of the Zoological series, in which the natural-history results of the great expedition are placed before the scientific world. It is a welcome addition to knowledge, although the lapse of no less than four years has not tended to sharpen the interest which has been taken in things relating to the deep sea, especially as a number of contributions of first-class merit and a host of less important papers have appeared relating to the Challenger since she returned. In the Preface, Sir Wyville Thomson states that

"the complete Report will extend to fourteen or fifteen quarto volumes. The first volume will contain a short narrative of the voyage, with all necessary hydrographical details; an account of the appliances and methods of observation, &c. . . . It will probably be in two parts, and is being prepared by Staff-Commander Tizard, R.N., and myself."

The second volume will contain the meteorological and magnetic observations and the tables of the specific gravity of the sea-water. So the remaining twelve volumes will be devoted to the publication of about fifty distinct memoirs, and it is proposed to publish the articles as they come in. Each memoir will be paged separately. Sir Wyville Thomson contributes a general Introduction in the present volume, dealing familiarly with the details of dredging and trawling, and stating the instructions given to the naturalists who draw up the different reports. It concludes with a discussion upon the nature and distribution of the fauna of the deep sea; but this is of a preliminary kind. The absence of a depth-limit to life is conceded, and also that, with the exception of a family of Holothuridea, the number of both species and individuals diminishes with the extreme depth. The abyssal fauna seems to attain its fullest development in a zone of depth between 600 and 1,200 fathoms; from 1,200 or 1,500 fathoms downwards, the fauna, although becoming apparently more scanty, maintains much the same character. It has now been proved that an entirely azeic belt does not exist. Of all circumstances, a uniformity of temperature seems most to favour the extension of animal species. The question of the probability of the phosphorescence of deep-sea animals being of use, and the nature of the great pressure with the increasing depth, are considered. There is a short notice of the nature of the sea-bottoms which will doubtless be much criticised; but, until the reports on this subject are published, it is best to let it alone. The general conclusions of the Preface comprise some terrible geological heresies and some very good inductions. Those which relate to the persistence of the ocean basins since the commencement of the Jurassic period involve such a series of terrestrial catastrophes as would please the old school very much; but those which assert the continuity of the secondary and recent deep-sea faunas, will meet with universal approbation. This summary closes with the statement, "Transition forms linking species so closely as to cause a doubt as to their limit, are rarely met with. There is no difficulty in telling what a thing is." This remark is open to very frequent contradiction, even in the reports in the volume now under consideration; and the variability of the corals dredged by other expeditions is remarkable.

The first zoological memoir is the Report on the Brachiopoda, by Thomas Davidson, F.R.S. This admirable essay occupies sixty-seven pages, and the four exquisite plates are from the pencil of the accomplished author, who is second to none in the lithographic art. After a brief introduction, in which the literature of the group is placed before the reader and the value of deep-sea exploration is asserted, we are told that several hundred specimens, in an excellent state of preservation, were placed in Mr. Davidson's hands in August 1877. The dredge or trawl was put down at about 361 stations, in a voyage of 68,890 miles, and Brachiopoda were brought up thirty-eight or thirty-nine times only. There are only thirty-one species among all the specimens, and it is now proved that this very ancient group ranges from low-water mark to 2,900 fathoms. But the great depth is a very exceptional habitat, for the register of the dredgings shows that the great majority of the species live in shallower water than 500 fathoms, and that they are rarely found at a greater depth.

Probably there are 125 species of Brachiopoda now living, and several varieties; but, as nothing is known respecting the ranges of depth of some twenty-five or twenty-six species, it is only possible to generalise upon 107 forms. Out of these, more than one-half live on the bottom, within one hundred fathoms, and many exist at low-water mark. Some species have a considerable bathymetrical range, and the animal of the same species is capable of existing at different depths without any observable modification in shape and character. "It has also been clearly ascertained that the Brachiopoda, although widely distributed, are very much localised, and usually occur in great numbers in their respective haunts;" and, although they were dredged up from the clay and globigerine areas and from off hard and soft bottoms, they prefer rocky bottoms and coral reefs. "Lingula and Glottidia abound in particular haunts, and live at about half-tide mark and partly buried in mud, at depths varying from three to four inches from the surface, to sixty fathoms." A list of the recent species is given, with their literature, localities, and depths, and reference is made to the fossil condition of some.

The descriptive part of the Report commences with the genus Terebratula, and with a fine form which has a great geographical area, and whose range is from 1,035 to 2,900 fathoms. South Australia, between Australia and New Zealand, West coast of South America, Coast of Patagonia, and the Falkland Islands are the localities. It has an excessively thin shell; and it bears much resemblance to Jurassic and Cretaceous forms, especially to Terebratula boneti, Leuschner, from the Kimmeridge of Switzerland, from which some of the Challenger specimens are scarcely distinguishable. Terebratula vitrea, var. minor, although not a new species, has had its Mediterranean habitat extended; it ranges across to the West Indies and south to the Cape of Good Hope. Like most sporadic forms, it is found fossil,—in the Pliocene of Sicily. A fine Terebratulina which greatly exceeds any other in size, whether fossil or recent, is named after the director of the expedition, with a very pretty but rather grandiose compliment. The well-known Terebratulina caput-serpentis has also a wide geographical distribution, and the southern type of it is acknowledged by Mr. Davidson as a racial variety. The variations of the species are very carefully considered, and are most interesting. It is found fossil in the Tertiaries. Another species, Terebratulina cancellata, Koch, is thus noticed:—"This fine species strikingly recalls some specimens of the Cretaceous T. defrancei, as some Mediterranean examples of the recent T. caput-serpentis do the Cretaceous T. striata." Another widely distributed species is Megerlia truncata of the Mediterranean and Western European seas, and of Japan and Bourbon. It is also found fossil in the Pliocene of the Northern Mediterranean area. The genus Argiope has a species which was dredged by the Challenger off Teneriffe, and it is a well-known fossil form, from the Miocene and Pliocene; the Rhynchonella found has close resemblances to secondary forms. A careful notice of Lingula anatina is given, and the Report closes with a notice of the widely spread Discina atlantica. The plates are really exquisite lithographs, with the fine drawing and clear touch which distinguish Mr. Davidson's many hundreds of former figures. The comparative sizes are given, and the internal skeleton or loop also. Although not so numerous in species as was anticipated. the Brachiopoda have given the expected results—variation in form and the existence of species which lived in the geological ages.

Report on the Pennatulida, by Prof. Albert v. Kölliker. This very distinguished naturalist, whose name is a household word among English biologists, was requested to describe the oceanic forms popularly known as sea-pens. He obtained the collection in April 1879, devoted the whole of the succeeding summer to the investigation, and sent his MSS., with eleven plates drawn by Rabus, of Würzburg, to Sir Wyville Thomson in the beginning of August in the same year.

"Want of time and the nature of the material forwarded to me prevented me from going deeply into anatomical details, and there was, perhaps, the less reason for my doing so, as my monograph of the Pennatulida (1872) gives to those who have a special interest in this department an opportunity of gaining a clear insight into the structure of the group."

What the "nature of the material" may have been can be guessed from the fact that no less than thirty-eight species and nineteen genera, among which seven genera and twenty-seven species are new, were collected by the Challenger! Moreover, so important was the "material" that a new and extended classification had to be proposed for the whole order. It is true that some specimens were unique and others were slightly damaged, but there is no excuse for the curt and perfunctory manner in which some parts of the article are treated. If Prof. v. Kölliker had not time, as he says, why did he undertake the Report?

The article commences with the consideration of the Pteroeididae; and Pteroeides esperi, Herkl., is dismissed in fourteen lines, and another species in six. So much for that genus, the careful and most laborious study of which occupies twenty-three pages in Kölliker's Die Pennatuliden. Where Herklots described the species is not stated, and there are no illustrations of it.

Pennatula is increased by five new species, and it is a matter of regret that their careful description is not accompanied by illustrations of the interesting microscopic calcareous elements. In dealing with Scytilium sarsi, Herkl., which Kölliker has so carefully described in his classical work, we are now informed by him that the habitat of the original Leyden specimens has been decided to be shallow water near the Philippines. It is a remarkable species; and, as two excellent figures were given of parts of the structure in his former work, it was desirable to look at pl. iv., figs. 14, 15, of the Challenger Report for something more. But there are no such figures on the plate. Another species, a new one, is described, and a capital figure is given on pl. iii.; but, on looking for a second illustration, said to be on pl. iv., fig. 13, disappointment results at its absence. Anthoptilum is a new genus; and there are three species of it, all deep-water forms and from the Atlantic. The first is named after the director of the natural-history staff. It is "a large, magnificent sea-pen, with a short, thick stalk, long feather, and long polyps crowded eight to ten in one row;" the tentacles are long and pinnate, and have numerous thread cells. The illustrations are, of course, sought for (pl. v., figs. 16–18), but they are somewhere else, as is the case in the other instances. The same mistake occurs in regard to the illustrations of the next two species. The simplest care would have prevented these errors in such a magnificent work.

By far the most interesting part of this Report relates to the genus Umbellula, Cuv., of which no less than eight new species are described. No diagnosis is given of the genus, which is essentially a very deep dweller, and, indeed, the deepest of all the group, and has the widest geographical distribution north and south, east and west. The illustrations of the external features are doubtless excellent, and if the Professor had given half-a-dozen more plates of details they would have been very welcome. There is much that is new in the geographical distribution of the Pennatulida; they are not universally distributed, and great spaces of the ocean are without them. Kölliker writes:—"It seems, therefore, reasonable to conclude, so far as our present knowledge goes, that the deeper portions of the Pacific and the Atlantic Oceans and the South Polar Sea contain very few or none at all of the Pennatulida at a certain distance from the shore." When he published his monograph, Kölliker considered the statement that the great majority of the group were shallow-water animals, living in the vicinity of the coast at a depth of six to ten fathoms, to be correct; but now the number living at great depths has so increased that it is nearly equal to that of the shallow-water forms. The Report concludes thus:—

"It follows from all these facts, as I have already pointed out in my monograph, that simpler forms of the Pennatulida, especially those with sessile polyps, inhabit great depths. . . . These simple forms are probably also the oldest, and may be regarded as the last remnants of an extinct primary creation. The Protoptilidae and the Umbellulidae are the principal representatives of these old forms, and of these two families especially the Challenger expedition has discovered a large number of species with a wide distribution."

Sir Wyville Thomson complains that nothing very startling was found by him; nevertheless, he has got a very wonderful collection of relics of the first creation—according to Kölliker, not Moses.

P. MARTIN DUNCAN.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to announce the death of Mr. E. R. Alston, the zoologist, and a contributor to the ACADEMY in that department of science. Next week we hope to speak at length of his work.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

At a meeting of the Madrid Geographical Society last week Dr. Oscar Lenz gave an account of the journey across North-western Africa which he has recently brought to so successful a conclusion. He was originally sent out by the German African Society to Morocco for the purpose of making geological explorations in the Atlas Range; but, having crossed the mountains, he abandoned this enterprise and determined to make an attempt to reach Timbuktu and the West Coast, for which an especially favourable opportunity presented itself. He traversed the Sahara in forty-three days, and, after many delays and difficulties, safely reached Timbuktu, which he describes as by no means so important a commercial centre as it used to be. He arrived at St. Louis, Senegal, towards the end of last year. Dr. Lenz states that during his journey he discovered several oases, which will be found most useful in the construction of the projected Trans-Sahara Railway.

It is stated that five expeditions of a mixed geographical and military nature are to start from Buenos Ayres at the end of the present month to carry out various explorations in Patagonia, all eventually meeting at Lago Nahuel Huapi in the Andes. Especial attention is to be paid to the Rio Limay, which, flowing out of this lake, combines with the Rio Neuquen to form the Rio Negro. One of the parties is to explore the sources of the River Chupat, or Chulilad, as it is called by the Moluches in its western part, the true mouth of which was discovered by Mr. Henry L. Jones in 1814. Another expedition has recently left Buenos Ayres to explore the little-known basin of the Rio Neuquen in the Cordillera of the Andes. This valley is said to be one of the most fertile regions in South America, and it is probable that an attempt will be made to form colonies there with a view to the development of the country.

DR. RAMON LISTA, the well-known traveller, has published at Buenos Ayres a volume entitled Mis Exploraciones y Descubrimientos en la Patagonia 1877-1880. The work contains a number of illustrations and a map of Southern Patagonia, to which Dr. Lista has chiefly directed his attention.

THE Rev. T. Duke, a missionary on the River Purus, has lately ascended the Sapatingo, one of the many unknown affluents of that great tributary of the Amazon, but the falling of the water in the river compelled him to return without completing his journey.

THE Quebec Geographical Society, which was founded some two years ago, has just issued the first number of its Transactions, in which there are papers by Mr. Sulte on the progress of exploration from Newfoundland to the Rocky Mountains, and by Dr. R. Bell on recent explorations round Hudson's Bay, the latter of which is accompanied by a map.

M. BRAU DE SAINT POL-LIAS, whose projects for forming settlements of "Colons-explorateurs" in Sumatra have been more than once alluded to in the ACADEMY, is expected shortly to return to Paris, having completed his investigations in the northern part of the island.

THE well-known publisher, Herr Perthes, of Gotha, has just issued the eighth volume of the Geographisches Jahrbuch, edited by Prof. H. Wagner; and the first instalment of an Historisch-geographisches Wörterbuch des deutschen Mittelalters, by Dr. Oesterley, librarian in the University of Breslau.

SCIENCE NOTES.

The Weather of London.—Mr. E. Mawley has issued his Summary of the weather of London, or rather of Croydon, for the year 1880 (Bemrose). This is the second year that we have had this careful discussion of our local climate; and, as Mr. Mawley's own station is fitted up in a very complete manner, the values he gives from his own observations merit great confidence. As to the concluding remarks on the effect of the weather on plants and insects during the year, Mr. Mawley expresses his thanks to the Croydon Microscopic and Natural History Club for the assistance they have freely rendered to him.

The Glycerine Barometer.—Two years ago Mr,

J. B. Jordan, who had constructed the present water barometers at the Crystal Palace and at the Jermyn Street Museum, and had also exhibited a glycerine barometer at the Loan Exhibition at South Kensington, obtained from the Government Grant a sum of money for the construction of a glycerine barometer. The instrument was placed at Kew, where it has been in action for more than a year with fairly satisfactory results. Another instrument on a similar plan has been made for the Times office, and the readings from it are given daily in that paper. Mr. Jordan has just published, with Messrs. Stanford and Co., an account of these instruments, with tables for the reduction of the readings for temperature. He points out how valuable they would be at collieries or at fishing stations, inasmuch as, the column being more than ten times as high as that of a mercurial barometer, the small oscillations are more distinctly perceptible.

The African Pygmies in Italy.—The last number of Prof. Mantegazza's Archivio per l'Antropologia is mainly devoted to two papers, but these, with the Proceedings of the Italian Anthropological Society, occupy nearly 200 pages. The number opens with an elaborate memoir by Dr. Regalia, of Florence, in which he describes several cases of abnormal vertebrae in the human subject, and offers some ingenious suggestions as to the interpretation of the phenomena. While this technical monograph will commend itself to the student of anatomy, the general anthropologist will rather turn to the next paper, contributed by Prof. Giglioli, and entitled Gli Akka viventi in Italia. It may be remembered that three Akkas, or so-called African pygmies, are at present living in Italy—the two boys who were brought to Europe by Miani being under the protection of Count Miniscalchi at Verona, while the girl is less fortunately placed at Trieste. Thibaut, one of Miani's boys, now measures 1.42 mètre (55.9 inches) in height, and it is believed that he has reached his maximum stature; he is probably about nineteen years of age. Chairallah, on the other hand, is still growing, and at present measures 1.41 mètre (55.5 inches); it is supposed that he is about fifteen years of age. The form of the skull, judging from external inspection, appears to have increased in dolichocephalism since the boys were last examined. They have preserved the characteristic three-lobed form of nose. Their prognathism is very pronounced; the mouth is large; the lips thick; the teeth stout, well separated, and exceedingly white. Tufts of black woolly hair have appeared upon the cheeks, the chin, and the upper lip of Thibaut. Chairallah, on the contrary, shows no trace of hair upon the face; his visage, however, has become much lengthened with age. They can speak, read, and write Italian, but have forgotten both their native Akka and the Arabic which they learnt when young. The girl at Trieste, who is a domestic servant with Signora Gessi, has not had the advantages of education, and can neither read nor write, but she can speak Italian and a little German—languages which she hears daily in the house. It is presumed that she is about fifteen years of age; her present height is 1.34 mètre (52.7 inches). All the three Akkas have good health, and are described as being generally well behaved, but exceedingly childish in their tastes. As they are the only representatives of their race in Europe, Prof. Giglioli's paper is very welcome to anthropologists.

THE two secretaries of the Yorkshire Naturalists' Union, Mr. W. E. Clarke and Mr. W. D. Roebuck, have undertaken to prepare a Handbook of Yorkshire Vertebrata, which is intended to be a complete catalogue of all the mammals, birds, reptiles, amphibians, and fishes which are now found, or have been known to exist in historic times, in the county of York. They invite communications, addressed to 9 Commercial Buildings, Park Row, Leeds.

DR. BEDDOE read a paper recently before the Bristol Naturalists' Society, in which he argued, from trustworthy statistics collected from various parts of England, that there has been a gradual diminution of the dimensions of the human head in this country, amounting in the average to one-seventh of an inch during the last quarter of a century.

WE learn from Nature that the fifth volume of the Catalogue of Birds in the British Museum will shortly be published. According to the classification followed in this work, the families to be described will be the Thrushes and Warblers. The volume will be written by Mr. Henry Seebohm, who has devoted a close study of several years to these families of birds, and may now be considered the best living authority on the subject.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

The Sinhalese Handbook, in Roman letters by the Rev. Cornelis De Alwis (Trübner), is perhaps the best elementary book on the study of a language peculiarly interesting from a philological point of view. It consists of some fifty pages of grammar, about the same of conversations, and a complete vocabulary. As the whole of the Sinhalese words are printed in English characters, this little work will be very useful to any European philologists who wish to know something of what is perhaps, from the historical point of view, the most important of the Aryan dialects still in use in India; and the exercises in transliterating the Sinhalese character which precede the grammar will be acceptable to those who wish to read Pali MSS. in that writing. In the grammatical portion Mr. De Alwis falls occasionally into the fault of quoting forms which are not, and never were, in actual use; but the phrases are exclusively drawn from the living language.

Sākya Buddha, by E. D. Root, an American Buddhist (New York: Sowerby; London: Trübner), is a rhapsody, in what are meant for verses, on the legend of Gotama. The writer is a spiritualist, and evidently believes in the Buddhist miracles as spiritualistic phenomena. He states in the Preface his belief that his poem "will live in the hearts of many of Gotama's followers in India, and peradventure be stamped with the sigil of immortality." But he has surely forgotten that the age of miracles has passed.

Niti-Nighanduwa; or, the Vocabulary of Law, translated by J. B. Panabokka, with an Introduction by C. T. B. Le Mesurier, of the Ceylon Civil Service, is an account of the ancient laws of the Sinhalese concerning land, marriage, and inheritance. It was drawn up in Sinhalese, in the year 1818, by a Buddhist monk of the Malwatte Wihāro, in Kandy, in consequence of a request from the home Government for information on the native laws. It has now been translated by a native magistrate; and is the most complete account we possess of those ancient customs of the Sinhalese in matters of land tenure in common, and of Bina and Diga marriages, which are of so much value for the history of early institutions. The Introduction consists of an elaborate description of the native administration of criminal and civil law.

Selected Essays, by Prof. Max Müller, is the title of a new edition of the more popular papers in his well-known "Chips from a German Workshop," together with one or two essays published since the appearance of the last volume of the Chips. Of these latter, the most important is the paper contributed to the last volume of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society on "Sanskrit Texts discovered in Japan," already noticed in our columns. The article on "Spelling Reform" is here printed mostly in phonetic type. To the older essays are added further notes and additions, and to the whole work there is a very complete Index. It is sufficient to call attention to the handy and cheap edition of a series of essays which are not in need of any recommendation.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Tuesday, March 8.)

F. W. RUDLER, Esq., F.G.S., V.-P., in the Chair. —A collection of rubbings taken from door-posts and window-frames in New Zealand was exhibited. They were chiefly interesting from the proof which they afforded of the clear influence of matted and woven materials on the ornamentation of stone architecture, a parallel to the influence of wood architecture on stone architecture pointed out by Fellows in Lycia and by Lepsius in Egypt; also from the remarkable coincidence between some of these ornamentations and the outlines on the tomb-stones of Mykenae—a near approach to the triglyph in New Zealand.—A short note by Mr. S. E. Peal, on Assam pile-dwellings, was read, and was illustrated by a series of sketches by the author.—Lieut.-Col. R. G. Woodthorpe, R.E., read a paper on "The Wild Tribes inhabiting the so-called Naga Hills on our North-eastern Frontier of India." The paper dealt only with the Angami Nagas, who, it was stated, differ from all the other hill tribes of Assam in many important particulars, such as physical appearance, architecture, mode of cultivating, language, and dress. In appearance they are finer, cleaner, and better-looking race than their neighbours; they build their houses resting on the ground and not raised on piles, as do all the other hill tribes of Assam (except the Khasias), and after a pattern not seen elsewhere. In dress, the Angamis differ most strikingly from all the other tribes in the kilt or short petticoat of dark cloth ornamented with rows of white cowrie shells, the waist-cloth of all other Nagas consisting only of a flap of cloth in front and behind, and often only in front. The Angamis erect tall monoliths in commemoration of the dead or of some social event. These monoliths, often of great size, are dragged up hill on sledges running on rollers.

FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.—(Friday, March 11)

DR. ROBERT BROWN in the Chair.—The Hon. Secretary read a paper on "Madagascar Folk-Lore" by the Rev. J. Sibree, jun.—A paper by the Rev. H. Friend on "Euphemism and Tabu in China" was also received.—After the disposal of the papers Mr. Gomme asked the opinion of the meeting on a probable explanation of some incidents in the story of "The Three Noodles" by means of reference to facts in modern savage life and manners. Mr. Alfred Nutt, Mr. A. Lang, and others took part in the discussion.

FINE ART.

The Life of William Blake; with Selections from his Poems and other Writings. By Alexander Gilchrist. A New and Enlarged Edition. (Macmillan.)

GILCHRIST'S Life of Blake is a work which requires no word of introduction or of praise at this time or in this place. It is already sufficiently well known and justly appreciated, wherever there is knowledge and appreciation of art other than that of reproduction and of every-day. The book may be said to have disclosed a new world of art and of artist-life to the readers of its time. It recorded a life well-nigh unparalleled in its sweet and single-minded individuality; it gave satisfactory transcripts of the artist's Inventions to the Book of Job and his other splendid designs; powerful fragments of prose like the Vision of the Last Judgment; examples of stately and finished verse by a poet who seems scarcely to have given a thought to style as a thing apart from substance; and songs—the best of them—which sound like an echo of Shakspeare's own stray lyric snatches, so full are they of unpremeditated freedom and instant fusion of sense with sound. It was little to be wondered at that a book of this sort should become scarce and valuable. It has been out of print for years; and we have now to welcome a new issue, and to notice some of the changes and additions which render the present volumes even more valuable than the former.

The biography, left in an almost completed state on the death of Mr. Gilchrist, was edited and put into final shape by Mr. D. G. Rossetti, from whom, painter and poet both like Blake himself, come the interesting supplementary chapter, the explanatory notes on the poems, and those words of splendid praise and discriminating comment which deal with the Inventions to the Book of Job. From Mr. W. M. Rossetti we have the annotated catalogue of drawings and engravings. In the present edition all that was previously written has been carefully revised, and much new matter has been added, the result of more recent research. Especially interesting is the long series of letters to Hayley, now published for the first time. It would be difficult to find any more charming picture of a quiet and happy artist's life than that given at p. 163.

"I sometimes try to be miserable, that I may do more work, but find it a foolish experiment. Happinesses have wings and wheels [note the instinctive personification of the artist here: he does not say "happiness;" he means and thinks of the thousandfold and various spirits and laughter of joy]; miseries are laden-legged, and their whole employment is to clip the wings and to take off the wheels of our chariots. We determine, therefore, to be happy and do all that we can, though not all that we would. Our cottage is surrounded by the same guardians you left us with; they keep off every wind. We hear the west howl at a distance; the southounds on high over our thatch, and, smiling in our cottage, says, "You lay (lie?) too low or my anger to injure."

Other of those Felpham letters, indeed, show a different side of the picture. They afford evidence of not a little disease of body, and of much noble, if wild, stress and distress of soul. There is a touch at p. 211 which is characteristic. Blake has been writing about Buonaparte and Washington and other such great personages, and continues—"In the meantime I have the happiness of seeing the divine countenance in such men as Cowper and Milton more distinctly than in any prince or hero." In a third letter we have a burst of impatience over the "Eternal Work"—as Blake styles it with emphatic capitals—of engraving, which he says he alternately curses and blesses, "because it takes so much time, and is so intractable, though capable of such beauty and perfection." He seems, at the time, to have been copying the designs of other artists. The final note is truly pathetic, showing vividly how slender were the material resources of this great man. It is quite jubilant with thankfulness to Providence for the recovery of a missing copper-plate, "a loss that I could not now sustain, as it would cut off ten guineas from my next demand on Phillips;" a letter this which might surely make some of us ashamed of our prosperity and worldly well-being. The amount makes one think of Milton's ten pounds, and what he gave for it. Not less interesting is the other letter unearthed by Mr. Swinburne from the Monthly Review of 1806. It is a piece of Blake's vigorous and impassioned vindication of his friend Fuseli and his picture of Count Ugolino: "he needs not my defence; but I should be ashamed not to set my hand and shoulder and whole strength against those wretches who, under pretence of criticism, use the dagger and the poison."

Among the other additions in the literary portion of the book is a careful descriptive catalogue, from the pen of Mr. F. J. Shields, of the more important subjects designed by Blake in illustration of Young's Night Thoughts, that splendid series of over five hundred coloured drawings, of which so few were engraved, and which remained till quite recent years in some Yorkshire hiding-place, their very existence unsuspected. Further, we are grateful that the excellent essay on Blake by Mr. Smetham—scarce in its former periodic issue—has been included in the book. Cognisance is taken of the Blake literature which has appeared since the first edition was published; but in this list, which does justice to the labours of Swinburne and Smetham, of W. B. Scott and W. M. Rossetti, there are two unfortunate omissions. The essay by Mr. Comyns Carr surely deserves its word of praise. In particular, the theory by which he seeks to account for the anomalous fact that, while Blake's later designs were among his very grandest, his poems increased in obscurity as he became old, is a valuable contribution to our knowledge of a too often perplexing personality. Another important, but unmentioned, critic of Blake is Mr. James Thomson. His four papers dealing with Blake as poet and mystic, which appeared in the National Reformer for 1866 under the signature of "B. V.," are full of eloquence and sympathetic insight, and have especial interest for their notes on the relations which subsist between Blake and succeeding English poets. We understand that Mr. Thomson, encouraged by the recent success of his City of Dreadful Night and other Poems, contemplates the republication of some of his prose essays. The book would be a valuable one if it included nothing more than the above-mentioned Blake papers, and the suggestive articles on Dr. Garth Wilkinson's very scarce volume of poems, The Improvisations from the Spirit, which appeared, in 1879, in a short-lived journal, the Liberal.

The just and discriminating criticism of Mr. Smetham's essay is expressed in language of more than common elegance and force—language whose beauty seems all the more exceptional when we remember that the main work of its author's life has been in colours, not in words. But, indeed, it is very remarkable how eloquent, almost without exception, have been the critics and exponents of the visionary painter. Nay, they have been judged by the public, by the average British householder, to be eloquent to a degree past all toleration by sane and sober men. We might almost fancy that some strange witchery abode in the seer—an obsolete word now—and his work; that the fire in him had only to play upon ordinary mortals to make them too kindle and flash forth, till even their common speech glows with unwonted fervour and brilliancy. Or is it not rather that the men who are attracted to Blake are themselves at least potential poets; and that though, when they tell us of their master, their manner may appear to us strange, and what they say may seem mere "wild and whirling words," they still do but speak the tongue of their native country, and utter the very accents that are instinctive to their poet race? How graceful is Mr. Smetham's style may be gathered from the following passage, describing The Songs of Innocence:—

"These he printed with his own hand, in various tones of brown, blue, and gray, tinting them afterwards by hand into a sort of rainbow-coloured, innocent page, in which the thrilling music of the muse and the gentle bewilderment of the lines and colours so intermingle that the mind hangs in a pleasant uncertainty as to whether it is a picture that is singing or a song which has nowly budded and blossomed into colour and form."

In spite of Mr. Swinburne's elaborate and able efforts towards the exposition of the Prophetical Books, we suppose there are few readers who will dissent from Mr. Smetham's judgment that they are to be received "as strange pictures intended for the informing of the imagination through the eye" rather than "as philosophies or preachings" to be apprehended by the intellect. There are one or two points in the essay to which a minute criticism might take exception. Its author lays too much stress on the unattractiveness of the style and general technique of Blake's engravings; and the assertion that the Job Inventions are in their burin work "dry and hard, as though centuries had eaten into their substance, and left them as the torrent streams are left among the barren heights," is particularly unfortunate. The fact is that this great series of plates—the work of Blake's old age—shows, with a clearness unequalled by any other of his prints, that he lived long enough to free himself completely from the formal, Basaire-taught manner of his youth, and to gain the power of expressing himself with an intelligent directness akin to the method of the Italian and German painter-engravers. But even in such early subjects as the Plague, to which Mr. Smetham specially refers, and the plates to Mary Wollstonecraft's Tales for Children, there is surely a fine harmony between the severe and restricted use of lines and the character of the forms and subjects which these lines express. The simple, exact shading, which makes technique so subordinate, is not dissimilar in spirit to the execution of Mantegna's engravings—to those straight strokes carried from angle to angle of the plate with which we are familiar in his Entombments and Virgins and Child.

Passing to the graphic adornments of the book we find that all the illustrations of the first volume have been retained or else replaced by more perfect renderings of the same subjects. In particular the Inventions to the Book of Job—in which we see the sum and substance of Blake's artistic and spiritual power, with the least possible admixture of the chaotic and the imperfect which are its too frequent concomitants—have been greatly improved, being now rendered by the new photo-intaglio process, which preserves, with remarkable fidelity, the sharpness of the clear graver lines of the originals, which were much blackened and confused in the photolithographs of the first edition. The present plates fail of perfect realisation mainly by reason of their scale—one-half that of Blake's engravings—which gives, even to figures of grandest design and action, some suggestiveness of the pigmy and the Lilliputian. But even in their excellent detail the most delicate grace, the last and best refinement, is inevitably lost; we are made aware of the "Little more and how much it is,

The little less and what worlds away."

There is wanting in them that strange subtlety which distinguishes the work by any master, not only from that of the men of mere talent, but from even the most skilful and most sympathetic transcript, and which, in this case, is present only in the original prints themselves. An added portrait of Blake, that by Thomas Phillips, forms the frontispiece to the second volume. It is worth having, though by no means comparable to the other likeness—that impassioned profile which we owe to the friendly hand and loving insight of Mr. Linnell. Among the other new illustrations is the charming design of Infant Joy, a perfect analogue to some of Blake's brightest lyric verse; and Mr. Herbert H. Gilchrist gives an interior of Blake's work-room and death-room in Fountain Court, and a charming view of the Felpham house, the "golden-wattled" cottage which has such pleasant memories of "the sweet air and the voices of winds, trees, and birds, and the odours of the happy ground," which, in the thought of the simple-minded painter, made it "a dwelling for immortals."

The splendid decorations on the cover of the volumes have been adapted by Mr. F. J. Shields from Blake's designs. One shows a young-eyed angel, with "pared half-moon wings" and lifted adoring hands and countenance; in the other, the petals of some great magic flower have burst into a strange birth of spirit-forms, who dance or recline beneath the waving of earth's herbage and the shine of the greater and the lesser stars of heaven. A further and most desirable addition to these volumes—which "aim to gather into a focus all the light that can be shed on Blake and on the creations of his genius"—would have been the complete series of seventeen wood-cuts which illustrated the Thornton's Pastorals of Virgil of 1821, now a very scarce book. The blocks, as well as the original drawings for them, are in the possession of Mr. Linnell. They were not only drawn and designed, but also cut by Blake, and cut in so bold, ready, and instinctively right a manner as fully to justify the howl of derision with which they were greeted by the laborious but utterly tame engravers of the day. Three subjects of the set were included in the first edition—as they appear in the present—and called forth the enthusiastic praise of Mr. Swinburne and others less noted; but the rest of the series is fully as remarkable. One in particular, a scene of silvern moonshine shed on gently running water and watched by a reclining shepherd—setting aside altogether, for the moment, its perfect poetry—would, if studied, do more good than the hearing of many lectures on the aims and limits of wood-engraving, so thoroughly right, though rude, is its technique, which frankly leaves the darkness to be interpreted by the untouched wood and hews out the lights with clear strokes of the graver.

The book concludes with a simple and sympathetic biography of its late author from the pen of Mrs. Gilchrist.

It would be interesting to know the facts upon which Mr. Ruskin based an assertion regarding the works of Blake made some nine years ago in one of his Oxford lectures. While praising his poems as "sometimes giving forth in fiery aphorism some of the most precious words of existing literature," the Professor stated that "the impression which his drawings once made is fast, and justly, fading away, though they are not without noble merit." The many transcripts from his graphic works which, in the intervening years, have been placed before us would seem to indicate that public interest is by no means waning in all that concerns Blake, whose sure, unfaltering hand so grandly recorded the things of vision, whose step moved, as on familiar earth, in a strange shadow-land, a "world not realised" in most men's everyday mind.

JOHN M. GRAY.

TAPESTRY PAINTINGS.

THE exhibition of so-called Tapestry Paintings, at Messrs. Howell and James's, the first of its kind in England, may be fairly considered a success. The new method of painting with dye colours on various fabrics has already become very fashionable, and deservedly so. Experimental mainly as the examples here are, they include several pieces of much beauty, and show that the art, really an old one, has new life in it, and can be applied to many useful and ornamental needs of the present day. Permanent, easily cleaned, and simple in its process, it will at once compete with most of the other means for decorating large surfaces. For portières, panels, and screens it seems admirably adapted, both on a large and small scale; and it can be used for friezes of rooms and other large fixed decorations with the advantage—no slight one in days when houses are frequently changed—that the decorations need not be left behind.

Messrs. Howell and James have, as in the case of their exhibitions of paintings on china, secured for the awarding of their many prizes the services of men of well-known taste and ability. Sir Coutts Lindsay and Mr. S. F. Watts have not only exercised the judgment which might be expected of them, but have described the principle on which they have acted in a letter which, considered together with the works selected for prizes, will be a useful guide to all who turn their talents in this direction.

It will be as well that visitors should read this letter, or they may be surprised that Mrs. Sparkes' very beautiful original design of Earl Mar's Daughter should go without reward, while Mr. Fourniss' highly decorative but ill-drawn Love among the Roses receives a silver medal.

That the supremacy of decorative effect can be combined with great skill in drawing, and even modelling, of the human figure is shown in the masterly work of M. Grenié, whose very accomplished Classical Groups carried off the silver medal for the best foreign work by a professional; while, on the other hand, what dainty effects can be produced with no more ambitious aim than the imitation of a tasteful piece of old needlework is shown in the Countess of Warwick's Fire Screen, which, in spite of its modest intention, the judges have rightly marked as the best work by a lady amateur.

Of copies of large pieces of old tapestry there are several good specimens, the chief fault of which seems to be the aim to imitate faded colours, as in Capt. Danyell's very clear Hunting Subject. In this class perhaps the best English work is Miss Emily Berridge's Crowning of Queen Esther, copied from the original at Kensington Palace. Miss Jane Mayo's borders and panels of fruit after Italian designs are beautifully executed, and would be very useful for permanent or occasional decoration. How useful tapestry painting may be for church decoration is shown by Mr. Ryland's Crucifixion, to which a special prize has been awarded. The adaptation of the "art" to more ordinary domestic purposes is shown in Mr. Page Turner's admirable Frieze, in Mdme. Guerin's Piano-back (70), and Miss Shoemith's screens and portière. Very pretty piano backs and fronts, panels, and screens are also sent by Miss Lewis, Miss Armstrong, Miss Goodday, Miss Tiddeman, Miss Budgett, and others too numerous to mention.

ART SALES.

WITHIN the last few days two art sales have occurred, one of which excited some interest in London, and the other great excitement in Paris. The first was the sale, by Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods, of the varied collection of Mr. Tom Taylor, which, however, was not such as to justify the high opinion that had been formed of it. It was not a collector's collection, but the chance assemblage that had been formed in the course of years by a man of attainments. The pictures, of which there were a fair number, fell generally for small prices, one of the highest obtained being £39 18s. for H. W. Phillips's portrait of Mrs. Stirling as Peg Woffington. A water-colour drawing of Girtin's fetched £21 10s. 6d.; and three drawings of David Cox's realised more considerable sums, A Welsh River Scene falling for £85; A Common with Gipsies, for £93 9s., and A Harvest in Wales, for £69. Very small prices were attained by the somewhat indifferent impressions of the older mezzotints after Sir Joshua Reynolds, while for presentation copies of the lately issued prints by Samuel Cousins after the same master good prices were given. A few modern etchings by living artists of repute—such as Mr. J. A. M. Whistler and Mr. F. Seymour Hadon—also appeared in the sale.

The second and more important sale to which we refer was that of a collection in some respects unsurpassed—M. Mulbacher's assemblage of French engravings. The auction took place at the Hôtel Drouot. This collection—to the existence of which we have before now referred—included the finest possible examples of the works of all the Little Masters of France. It did not abound in representations of the greater men of the century. Watteau, Boucher, Lancret, and Pater were at all events conspicuous by absence; but Fragonard and Greuze were largely represented, and there was an unexampled display of Moreau, St.-Aubin, Baudouin, and Lavreince. The prices fetched seem enormous in English eyes; but, apart from the question of subject, we are perhaps too little accustomed to acknowledge the excellence of the French line engraving of the whole of the eighteenth century. How Hogarth himself was not altogether uninfluenced by the admirable work of certain French line engravers who were his contemporaries has indeed been pointed out; but generally there is among the English public, and among dilettanti and writers for the weekly press, a profound ignorance of all that has been accomplished by the eighteenth-century engravers and artists of France. It is fair, however, to add that certain English amateurs of taste are now beginning to collect the prints which witness to the invention, the observation, and the skill of these men. Among the engravings which were specially sought for at M. Mulbacher's sale we note, after Fragonard, La Chemise enlevée—Guersaint's translation into black and white of the pink and creamy picture in the Salle Lacaze at the Louvre—£17 5s. (Daulos and Delisle); Les Hasards Heureux de l'Escarpolette, the pure etching of the celebrated picture which is in the possession of Sir Richard Wallace, £40 (Béraldi); the same print, with the burin work and a portion of the title, £28; Jocunde, one of the illustrations for the Contes of La Fontaine, £20. After Greuze there is to be noted a magnificently engraved portrait of the artist by Flipart, £6; a superb engraving of the favourite but overrated composition the Crèche cassée, engraved by Massard, £56 (Clément)—it was a proof before all letters, and not completely finished; La Laitière, a magnificent impression, £18 (Vignères); another beautiful impression, with the title, £16 (Thibaudeau). Of the delicate prints after the genre subjects of Lavreince we note an impression of the stately and finely balanced composition, L'Assemblée au Concert, £11 (Tessier), and its companion, L'Assemblée au Salon, £12; the same prints, together, before the dedication, £33 (Lacroix); Le Billet doux, the pure etching, £18 10s.; La Consolation de l'Absence, an early impression, £28; Le Directeur des Toilettes, a magnificent impression of a genre subject greatly resembling that of Qu'en dit l'Abbé? £46 (Daulos and Delisle); L'Heureux Moment, the pure etching, £28 (Thibaudeau); the finished print of the same composition, £16 10s.; Qu'en dit l'Abbé? the pure etching, £37; the finished impression of the same before all letters, £39; Les Sabots, £20. Of the younger Moreau's admirable series depicting the life of a gentleman of fashion and his wife in the days of Louis Quinze there are to be noted C'est un fils, Monsieur, £16; Les Délices de la Maternité, £20; Le Rendez-vous pour Marly, £27; La Petite Toilette, the observant composition of the Marquis dressing, £48; and La Souper fin, a partie carrée at the end of the day's pursuits, £40. For the wonderfully executed society-groups of St.-Aubin yet higher prices were reached, the companion pieces of Le Concert and Le Bal Paré, by this master, attaining no less a sum than £480, and thereby proving that the French recognition of the talent of this artist and his fellows has been due to no merely passing fashion, but is likely to be sustained.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MESSRS. HENRY SOTHERAN AND Co. announce the most important work which Mr. Walter Crane has hitherto undertaken. It is entitled The First of May: a Fairy Masque, and will consist of a poem, illustrated with no less than fifty-seven designs. The designs will be reproduced by the photo-gravure process of Messrs. Goupil and Co., which has never yet been tried on so large a scale for book illustration. One of the results hoped for from this process is entire harmony between the printed text and the tones of the drawing, so that the two will form one picture. The range of the designs includes all varieties of life permissible in fairyland, presented partly amid sylvan landscapes, and partly on frescoes and quaint arabesques. The edition for sale is strictly limited to five hundred copies on India paper; and it is hoped that copies will be ready for subscribers on May 1.

THE Stratford-on-Avon Town Council have applied to the authorities of South Kensington Museum for a loan of their well-known collection of oil-paintings, &c., representative of Shaksperian and dramatic subjects. It is proposed that the pictures should be exhibited in the gallery of the Memorial Theatre, which will be open to the public on Shakspeare's birthday (April 23) and for several weeks afterwards.

WE are glad to hear that the Khedive of Egypt has granted a pension of £200 a year to each of the two daughters of the late Mariette-Pasha.

THE following exhibitions will open to the public on Monday, March 21:—The twenty-eighth annual exhibition of pictures by artists of the Continental schools, at the French Gallery, 120 Pall Mall; the spring exhibition of high-class pictures, including Muller's Encampment outside Cairo, at 5 Haymarket; and some paintings and drawings by Mr. F. Emeric de St. Dalmas, at the Aberdeen Gallery, 7 Argyll Street.

HERR SPEMANN, of Stuttgart, is about to publish a little monograph by Dr. Kekulé on the head of the Hermes of Praxiteles.

THE Trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, are issuing a series of handbooks to the Cesnola collection of Cypriote antiquities, under the heads of "Sculptures," "Potteries," &c. These handbooks are remarkable for their scientific precision, fullness of information, and conciseness of form. Though issued anonymously, we understand that they are written by Mr. A. Duncan Savage, the Assistant Director of the Ancient Department in the Metropolitan Museum.

THE Corporation of Liverpool has reason to be satisfied with the Report of its Autumn Exhibition of Pictures for 1880. The number of visitors reached the large total of nearly eighty thousand, while the total receipts amounted to £3,728. During the past ten years the corporation has purchased thirty-three pictures for its permanent gallery, at an aggregate cost of nearly £12,000. We notice that the Exhibition Committee complain (as what exhibition committee do not?) at the increasing size of the pictures sent in.

HENRY BRUGSCH-BEY, the well-known German Egyptologist, has received from the Khedive of Egypt the honorary title of Pasha.

IN 1879, Sir P. Cunliffe Owen presented to the Musée des Arts décoratifs, of which he is Vice-President, a beautiful wood carving of an Indian temple. We now learn, from a French source, that "the English Government" has sent to the same Musée a cast of the well-known Buddhist gateway of Sanchi, of which the original was transferred to the British Museum when the Indian Museum was broken up.

M. LÉON FLAHAUT, the French painter, has been appointed a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour.

THE Neue Freie Presse announces that Rubens' famous picture, Neptune and Amphitrite, which has hitherto belonged to the collection of Count Schönborn, in Vienna, has been sold for 200,000 marks (£10,000) to the German Crown Prince.

THE March number of the Etcher is again a good one, though not quite so good as the last. Mr. R. W. Macbeth contributes, under the romantic title of First at Tryst, an etching which is, nevertheless, perfectly unromantic in conception and treatment. The women to whom Mr. Macbeth devotes himself are generally women of the highly prosperous classes, only a little less opulent, and less conscious of their opulence, than the women of M. Tissot. The mature and well-developed person who sits waiting for her lover in the new etching is fairly representative of this class. The artist's work is wonderfully clever in its truth, both to the character of his sitter and the nature of her accessories. Charles Keene gives a matter-of-fact etching of Southwold. The third print is of an airy and graceful woodland landscape.

THE Portfolio has for frontispiece this month an interesting, but somewhat too sketchy, etching by Mr. Jacob Hood. It depicts a number of women of all ages and moods waiting to be paid in a cotton mill in Lancashire, and is given in illustration of Mr. Leo Grindon's "History of Lancashire." This has now left Liverpool and entered upon the manufacturing districts. In one of the other articles of the number Miss Julia Cartwright finishes her pleasantly written account of the noble-minded Grand Senoschal of Naples, Niccolò Acciajuoli, who built the Certosa at Florence. It would have been better, perhaps, if Niccolò's name had stood as title for this sketch of him, for very little is said about the Certosa. Prof. A. H. Church also finishes his study of some Italian embroideries, and extracts are given in another paper from his Cantor lectures "On the Scientific and Artistic Aspects of Pottery and Porcelain." We cannot lay down the Portfolio without mentioning the beauty and truth of M. Amand Durand's reproduction of the exquisitely finished engraving of St. Jerome in his Chamber, one of Albrecht Dürer's most delightful works.

THE executive commission of artists chosen for regulating the affairs of the forthcoming Salon were somewhat disturbed the other day by a claim put forth on the part of the Treasury to the right of receiving ten per cent. of the profits of the entries, and also of laying a similar tax on the refreshment buffets. The artists were naturally highly aggrieved, after the high-sounding speech of M. Turquet, in which the Government renounced all interest in the Salon, to have this petty tribute claimed by the Minister of Finance. M. Turquet soon made things right again; though it had to be agreed that the Finance department should receive one franc from the receipts of the Salon in admission of its right.

THE Salon Commission must have been busily enough occupied of late. They have had to form a new règlement, and although this does not seem to differ very materially from those framed by the Government, still every point has had to be tried and discussed. Some changes that have been made we think excellent. The Salon was growing to such huge dimensions that it became necessary to restrain it. The new authority has therefore limited the number of works to be sent in to 2,500. No artist is allowed to send more than two works. Medals are maintained, and are to be awarded by the jury, except the médaille d'honneur, which is awarded by the vote of all the exhibitors of the year.

THE Times correspondent at Rome writes that—"In the excavations now being carried on in the neighbourhood of the theatre at Ostia, an altar of remarkable beauty has just been discovered. Upon it are subjects illustrating the birth of Romulus and Remus, sculptured in such high relief that some of the figures are almost detached from the ground. On one side is the Palatine, washed by the waters of the Velabrum, and the shepherd Faustulus looking down from the cliff upon the twin boys; on another are Rhea Silvia and the god Mars, with a genius above them drawing them together; while on the third are cupids playing with the helmet and arms of the divinity."

HERR BLÜMNER has published, with Messrs. Weidmann, of Berlin, a second and enlarged edition of his almost exhaustive work on Lessing's Laokoon.

M. PAUL BAUDRY will exhibit at the Salon this year the magnificent ceiling that he has just finished for the Cours de Cassation. This work symbolises Law, which is represented as a Judge seated on a throne, and surrounded by attributes such as Equity, Prudence, Vigilance, Authority, all depicted as beautiful and noble young women receiving an oath. The colouring and composition are said to be very fine and original.

THE Royal Kupferstich Cabinet in Berlin acquired a short time ago from a foreign art collector a series of drawings by old masters, about seventy in number, including Dürer, Rembrandt, Michelangelo, and Paolo Veronese. The whole collection has been exhibiting for some weeks in the middle room of the Cabinet.

THE French artist Cormon, whose picture inspired by Victor Hugo's Légende des Siècles created a marked impression at the Paris Salon last year, has been asked by the French Government to paint the ceiling of the Hôtel de Ville at Compiègne.

THE STAGE.

MISS LITTON'S occupancy of the Court Theatre, which will commence next autumn, during Mme. Modjeska's tour in the country, will last, we hear, only for a few months.

AT the Vaudeville Theatre a version of Martin Chuzzlewit, or rather of the portion of it which is concerned chiefly with Tom Pinch and Mr. Pecksniff, has just been produced. We shall next week be able to speak of it more fully. In it Mr. William Farren, one of the most genial of our character-actors, has made his re-appearance at the Vaudeville.

MRS. KENDAL has, we are glad to say, sufficiently recovered not only to return to the stage, but to resume her part in The Money-Spinner with remarkable success. The impression she makes upon her audience in this rôle is made by a tour de force such as the English theatre does not often see, for the piece, though clever, is wholly unsympathetic, and the heroine owes little to the writer of the play and everything to the power of the actress.

It seems that M. Perrin is likely to give up his functions as Director of the Théâtre Français during the present year. The event, should it occur, cannot be without importance, as the Director of the first subsidised theatre in the world is, on the whole, left wonderfully free in respect to the performances he gives. Certain conditions oblige him now and then to produce certain things, but the "run" of a piece is very much in his own hands. And M. Perrin has done more than has ever been done before to modernise the Théâtre Français. M. Henri Fouquier, a writer on the staff of the Deuxième Siècle, is talked of as his successor.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

IT redounds greatly to the honour of the Philharmonic Society to have given the first performance in this country of one of Berlioz's greatest and most ambitious works. The dramatic symphony, Roméo et Juliette (op. 17), was written in 1839, and first performed at the Paris Conservatoire under the composer's direction on November 24 of the same year. Parts 1 to 4 were produced by Berlioz at the first New Philharmonic concert in 1852, and repeated at the third. The "Queen Mab" scherzo has been given at the Crystal Palace; but until the second Philharmonic concert of this season (Thursday, March 10) the work had not been heard here in its entirety. It cannot now be asserted that "the Leitmotif, as a distinct principle of art, is entirely due to Wagner's creative genius," nor that "the metamorphoses of themes and their re-introduction in the various divisions of a symphony are peculiar to Liszt." In the dramatic symphony we have a Romeo motive, a Juliet motive, a Funeral motive, &c.; and the scene of Romeo at the tomb of the Capulets, not to speak of other portions of the work, affords a striking illustration of the metamorphosis of themes. Berlioz had already worked on this plan in his Symphonie fantastique, written as early as 1828; and we shall soon have an opportunity of noticing this remarkable and historically interesting work, which is announced for performance next month at Mr. Ganz' first orchestral concert. Roméo et Juliette contains choral recitatives, choruses, solos, and instrumental movements; and Berlioz was evidently in quest of a new art-form, for this work is no symphony in the ordinary acceptation of the word. The work lies, as it were, midway between Beethoven's Choral symphony and Wagner's Lohengrin. The opening movement well depicts the street fights of the Montagues and Capulets, and the interference of the Prince. A short choral recitative tells of these feuds, of the fête at the Capulets', and of the two lovers. Then comes a beautiful contralto solo (Mme. Patey), with harp and violoncello accompaniment. Another short choral recitative leads to the Queen Mab speech for tenor solo (Mr. F. Boyle) and chorus. This graceful movement, entitled scherezetto, is scored only for flutes and strings without double basses. The second part commences with an instrumental picture of Romeo and his sadness, followed by the ball music of the Capulets' fête. We have next the celebrated scène d'amour. Berlioz tells us in his Mémoires that of all his pieces he preferred this movement; and Wagner makes mention of it as "one of the happiest inspirations of that gifted composer." It is useless to speak specially here of the orchestration, for throughout the work the composer shows his wonderful knowledge and genius. Many hard things have been said about Berlioz and his music, but his severest critics have readily acknowledged that he was a master of the art of instrumentation. After the Queen Mab scherzo we have the Funeral procession of Juliet, and Romeo at the tomb of the Capulets. Here Berlioz has followed the Garrick version; in which Romeo is still alive when Juliet recovers from her trance; the lovers exchange a few words before they die, and this last farewell is expressed in the music by the Juliet or love motive. In the seventh and last part Friar Lawrence (Mr. F. King) relates the scene in the tomb according to Shakspeare. The Friar's speech is naturally omitted in the Garrick version, and Berlioz, by introducing it, has added, we think unnecessarily, to the length of the work, and rendered his libretto confusing and contradictory. The solo, however, as music, is extremely fine, as well as the broad and massive chorus with which the symphony concludes. "Je ne tiens pas à être exécuté à demi," said Berlioz in one of his letters, and that phrase would fairly describe the performance of the work at the Philharmonic. Great pains had evidently been bestowed on the work at rehearsal, and the performance was in some respects good and commendable. Mr. Cusins seemed, however, to be occupied more with the letter than the spirit; the reading was careful, but often cold, and the conductor lacked the vis viva necessary for a work of this calibre. The Queen Mab scherzo and the Funeral procession were far from successful; the former was tame and the latter thick and colourless. The solo singers and the chorus sang their respective parts admirably. The work is to be repeated at the fourth concert, April 7. In the second part of the concert Mr. Eugène d'Albert gave an excellent rendering of Schumann's pianoforte concert.

At the two last Crystal Palace concerts the fifth and sixth symphonies of Schubert have been performed. No. 5, in B flat, was composed in 1816. It is quite in the Haydn-Mozart style, but contains much that is pleasing and spontaneous. No. 6, in C, has the title "Grand." It was written in 1818, and we are still reminded of Haydn and also Beethoven; but the true Schubert here begins to show himself. The whole symphony contains much charming music, but we would particularly mention the graceful andante and the finale with its important coda foreshadowing the ninth. Herr Joachim played Beethoven's violin concerto at the first concert, and Herr Barth Beethoven's concerto in G at the second.

The first concert of the Bach Choir took place on Thursday, March 3. We have only space to note that the concert was in every way a great success. The programme was particularly interesting, including Bach's fine Church cantata, Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss, the splendid Gloria from Cherubini's Messe Solennelle in D, and Robert Schumann's lovely Requiem for Mignon. This last work, one of Schumann's finest, was performed for the first time in England.

At the Monday Popular Concert on March 7 Herr Barth was the pianist, and his performance of Beethoven's sonata in G was excellent, though somewhat cold. Last Monday Mme. Schumann played Beethoven's sonata in A (op. 101). She gave a really magnificent rendering of this work, and acknowledged the enthusiastic applause by playing Schumann's Traumeswirren.

M. Charles Lamoureux, late conductor of the Grand Opera and of the Society of Concerts of the Conservatoire, Paris, gave the first of two orchestral concerts at St. James's Hall last Tuesday. The room was very full, and the French conductor was well received. The programme included several important novelties. First a symphony in F by Théodore Gouvy, one of the most distinguished of living French composers. It is well written, very much in the Mendelssohn vein, and is altogether, considering the period at which it was first brought out (1848), a work of great promise. After an air from Gluck's Alceste, well sung by Mme. Brunet-Lafleur, who possesses a charming voice, with excellent high and low notes, came a Symphonie espagnolle for violin and orchestra by E. Lalo, a distinguished French musician. It is an extremely clever and original work, of which the first two movements appear to us the most successful. It was exceedingly well played by M. Sainton. Mme. Patey sang in her best manner a not very original piece by B. Godard, and, with Mme. Lafleur, the delicious "Duo Nocturne" from Berlioz's Béatrice et Bénédict. The band was excellent, and M. Lamoureux proved himself a conductor of the first rank. The programme of the second concert, next week, contains many interesting novelties. It is to be given in aid of the funds of the French hospital in Leicester Square.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8.15, Mr. J. MORTIMER'S successful adaptation, in five acts, of Alexandre Dumas' Play, "La Dame aux Camellias," entitled HEARTSEA S.E.
Preceded, at 7.15, by J. MORTIMER'S successful Comedy,
TWO OLD BOYS.
Box-office open from 11 to 5. Doors open at 7. Carriages at 11. No fees.
Acting Manager, Mr. H. HEEMAN.

DRURY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

To-night, THE WORLD.
A Grand Sensational Drama, by MERITT, PETTITT, and HARRIS, pronounced by the Times newspaper, in its review of the theatrical year, to be most undoubtedly the greatest success of the year.
Preceded by THE STORIES.
Messrs. Augustus Harris, William Hignold, Macklin, Gibson, Balcyn, Lilly, Gresham, Kilday, and Harry Jackson; Mesdames Fanny Josephs, Fanny Brough, Maude de Vere, M'Namara, and Louisa Payne.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.
At 8.15, a new and original Comedy, by HENRY J. BYRON, called
THE UPPER CRUST.
Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Gordon, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Misses Lillian Cavalier, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.
At 10.15, THE STEEPLECHASE; or, TOOLE IN THE PIGSKIN.
Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to 43s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. CHARLES WINDHAM.

To-night, at 8.15, the Opera Comique
NAVAL CADETS.
By RICHARD GENRE, which was unavailably withdrawn at the height of its success, will be performed with a most efficient company. The cast of the piece is very materially strengthened in every respect, and the chorus and band augmented.
Messrs. Celli, Bracy, Loredan, Ashford, and Harry Paulton; Mesdames Annie Douglas, Maxwell, &c.
The NAVAL CADETS can only be performed for a limited number of nights, as an entirely new Opera will be produced at Easter on a most elaborate scale.
Box-office open daily from 11 till 5.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

To-night, Miss BATEMAN (Mrs. Crowe) as MARY WARMER.
In TOM TAYLOR'S popular Drama, for THREE WEEKS ONLY.
Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. No fees.
This Theatre will CLOSE during Passion Week.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. D'O'LYCARTE.

LAST NIGHTS.—At 8.45,
THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE.
A new and original Melodramatic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. OILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN.
Preceded, at 8, by IN THE SULK.
By Messrs. FRANK DESPERZ and ALFRED CELLIER.
Messrs. G. Grossmith, Richard Temple, Rutland Barrington, Durward Lely, F. Thornton, and Geo. Temple; Mesdames Emilie Petrelli, Ellen Shirley, Jessie Bond, R. Brandram, Gwynne, Barlow, and Alice Barnett.
Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called
THE COLONEL.
By F. C. BURNANO.
Preceded, at 7.50, by a one-act Comedy, by SYDNEY GRUNDY,
IN HOOD.
Messrs. Cogblan, Flockton, W. Herbert, Eric Dayley, Rowland Buckstone, and Edgar Bruce; Mesdames Amy Rosalie, Myra Holme, C. Grahame, Leigh Murray, &c.
New scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith.
Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOOCH.

LAST NIGHT OF KING LEAR.
Mr. EDWIN BOOTH.
To-night, at 7.45, Shakespeare's Tragedy,
KING LEAR.
Preceded, at 7.15, by the Farce,
THAT BLESSED BABY.
Scenery by Mr. Charles Brooke. Stage Manager, Mr. HARRY JACKSON.
Doors open at 6.45. Box-office open daily.
MERCHANT OF VENICE and KATHIERINE AND PETRUCHIO.
Mr. EDWIN BOOTH (by particular desire) will enact
SHYLOCK and PETRUCHIO.
For SIX NIGHTS ONLY, commencing MONDAY NEXT, MARCH 21st, and concluding SATURDAY, MARCH 27th.
Seats may now be booked.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 7.30, a new and original Drama, by JOE MACKAY, entitled P'EGGY.
To conclude with
BON JUAN JUNIOR.
Now in the full tide of its success.
Mesdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Coveney, Amy Crawford, Ruth Francis, Florence Lavender, Sylvia Grey, and E. E. G. Messrs. Edward Righton, Frank Cooper, H. Kelcey, H. Martell, and Seymour Dallas.
New and realistic scenery specially designed and executed by Bruce Smith.
Acting and general Business Manager for Kate Lawler, CECIL RALPH.
Stage Manager, E. RIGHTON.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S COCOA

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."
Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.
"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."
W. W. STEDDART, F.L.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.
"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."
CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. DROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.
The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Bonds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
1st March, 1880. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal.

Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21

Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £5 6s. to 50 guineas.

Drawing-room Suites, from 49 9s. to 45 guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21,

Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

BRAND & CO'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

YATES & ALEXANDER,

PRINTERS OF

Books, Pamphlets, Magazines, Newspapers, and Periodicals.

Catalogues, Posters, Price Currents, Circulars, Notices, and all General Commercial Work.

Parliamentary, Law, and General Printing.

Contracts entered into with Public Companies, Bankers, Insurance Offices, Auctioneers, Manufacturers, Merchants and Traders, &c.

PRINTING WORKS:

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE

(OPPOSITE THE CHANCERY LANE POST-OFFICE).

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.
Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.
Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.
Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

RECEIVED.—"MARCH 1ST, 1881. I have recommended

DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS

for many years, and have found them a most valuable medicine in cases of ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, &c.

(Signed) "J. J. PHILLIPS, M.P.S., Ryecroft, Ashton-under-Lyne."

They give instant relief, and taste pleasantly.

Price 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per box, of all Druggists.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.

BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY

MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS
Are free from SMELL
Are manufactured
Without Phosphorus
Are perfectly harmless
To the Operatives employed
Are very DAMP PROOF

LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS!

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds

The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £250,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS.

Bonus allowed to Insurers after Five Years.

£1,630,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, and West End Office, 8, Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing-cross, or

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

EQUITY AND LAW LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

18, LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS, LONDON, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

CAPITAL, ONE MILLION, FULLY SUBSCRIBED.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—JOHN M. CLABON, Esq.
Deputy-Chairman—HENRY FOX BRISTOWE, Esq., Q.C.
HENRY P. BOWLING, Esq.
R. J. P. BROUGHTON, Esq.
The Hon. Mr. Justice DENMAN.
CHARLES J. DIMOND, Esq.
SIMON DUNNING, Esq.
WILLIAM HILLIARD DUNSTER, Esq.
ALEX. STAVELEY HILL, Esq., Q.C., D.C.L., M.P.
WILLIAM E. HILLIARD, Esq.
JAMES INGRAM, Esq.
EDWARD E. KAY, Esq., Q.C.

THOMAS GLOVER KENSIT, Esq.
EDWARD MOBERLY, Esq.
FREDERICK PEAKE, Esq.
The Right Hon. Sir ROBERT J. PHILLIMORE.
GEORGE THOMPSON POWELL, Esq.
W. B. S. RACKHAM, Esq.
The Right Hon. HENRY CECIL RAIKES.
GEORGE U. ROBINS, Esq.
CECIL HENRY RUSSELL, Esq.
ALFRED H. SHADWELL, Esq.
HORACE WM. SMITH, Esq., M.A.
RICHARD SMITH, Esq.

AUDITORS.

ELECTED BY THE PROPRIETORS.
JOHN BOODLE, Esq. D. PITCAIRN, Esq.

ELECTED BY THE ASSURED.
A. H. BAILEY, Esq. LEONARD ROWE VALPY, Esq.

SOLICITOR—GEORGE ROOPER, Esq., 17, Lincoln's-inn-fields.

MEDICAL OFFICER—E. SYMES THOMPSON, M.D., 33, Cavendish-square.

ACTUARY AND SECRETARY—G. W. BERRIDGE, Esq.

SUMS ASSURED, £5,055,249.
ASSETS, £1,670,683.

TOTAL INCOME, £202,650.
EXPENSES OF MANAGEMENT, £8,143.

The Reserve retained by the Society in respect of its liabilities under Policies has been calculated according to the HIGHEST STANDARD, viz., the Tables of the Institute of Actuaries, interest being taken at 3 per cent., and all the loading on premiums reserved.

NINE-TENTHS of the Total Profits are divided among the Assured. Considerably more than One-tenth of the Profits is derived from Policies which do not participate in Profits, so that the assured have larger Bonuses than if they formed a mutual Insurance Company, and received the whole of the Profits derived from their own Policies.

At an Extraordinary General Meeting, held on June 18, 1880, the sum of £1,239,651 was set as the value of the Society's liabilities under its Assurance and Annuity Contracts, and £244,409 was ordered to be divided as Bonus; leaving a balance of undivided profit of £52,407.

Nine-tenths of the sum divided was allotted among holders of Policies for £2,865,571.

TABLE OF THE TOTAL ADDITIONS MADE UP TO DECEMBER 31, 1879, TO POLICIES OF £1,000 EACH.

Age at Entry.	NUMBER OF PREMIUMS PAID.
	Thirty-five.	Thirty.	Twenty-five.	Twenty.	Fifteen.	Ten.	Five.
20	£ s. d. *804 0 0	£ s. d. *676 10 0	£ s. d. 554 0 0	£ s. d. 404 10 0	£ s. d. 283 0 0	£ s. d. 165 10 0	£ s. d. 76 0 0
30	*017 10 0	*753 10 0	*615 0 0	413 0 0	303 10 0	182 0 0	84 10 0
40	*1,051 0 0	*862 0 0	*703 0 0	502 10 0	342 0 0	203 10 0	91 0 0
45	*1,134 10 0	*937 0 0	*758 10 0	*513 10 0	368 10 0	218 10 0	98 0 0
50	*1,228 10 0	*1,034 0 0	*837 10 0	*539 0 0	406 0 0	241 0 0	108 0 0
55	—	*1,176 0 0	*955 0 0	*681 10 0	462 10 0	276 0 0	123 10 0
60	—	—	*1,117 10 0	*793 10 0	*540 0 0	323 0 0	145 10 0

In the cases marked * the Bonuses, if surrendered, would be more than sufficient to extinguish all future premiums, and the Policyholders would still be entitled to share in future profits.

G. W. BERRIDGE, ACTUARY AND SECRETARY.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 464.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 26, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

NEW BOOKS PUBLISHED BY
SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON.

NIHILISM AND SOCIALISM.

TWO THOUSAND FIVE HUNDRED COPIES ARE IN CIRCULATION OF

MR. WILLIAM BLACK'S NEW NOVEL,

SUNRISE: a Story of These Times.

3 VOLS.

The DAILY NEWS says:—"It deals with those secret societies the workings of which have exploded on the public mind so suddenly and so terribly in the murder of the Emperor of Russia. . . . Mr. Black shows his old power on new ground. There is something wonderful in the constant freshness of Mr. Black's style. . . . Natalie Lind is placed in circumstances entirely different from those of any of Mr. Black's former heroines, and has to play a bolder and more difficult part. . . . Even with the recollection of Coquette and Sheila before us, we are inclined to think 'Sunrise' Mr. Black's best novel. There are those who will always believe 'The Daughter of Heth' to be the sweetest of stories, yet even such must recognise the growth of power, the larger grasp, the stronger stroke in this last book. The magic art of description which is particularly his own has been used in it with more restraint, but equal effect."

"The best of the novelist's writings."—John Bull.

"The finest work of fiction since George Eliot gave us the result of her first labours."—Court Journal.

WILL BE READY IN APRIL.

TWO GREAT BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

MAJOR SERPA PINTO'S HOW I CROSSED AFRICA; from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean, through Unknown Countries; Discovery of the Great Zambesi Affluents, &c. With Twenty-four Full-page and 118 Half-page and smaller Illustrations, Thirteen small Maps and One large one. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 42s.

. As an indication of the perilous nature of the journey, it is sufficient to mention that of the entire force comprising the expedition, and numbering over 100, only a very few survived, the rest having been destroyed by savages, wild beasts, fevers, &c.

THE BOER WAR.—Major Pinto has added to his work a most interesting chapter describing his experiences amongst the Transvaal Boers.

READY IN APRIL.

DR. EMIL HOLUB'S SEVEN YEARS in SOUTH AFRICA; Travels,
Researches, and Hunting Adventures (1872 to 1879). Translated by ELLEN E. FREWER (Translator of Schweinfurth's "Heart of Africa," &c.). With Two Hundred Illustrations and a Map. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, price 42s.

. The publication of Dr. Holub's work has been eagerly looked forward to by the geographical world. It will be found to contain an immense amount of information of the greatest interest to all who appreciate accounts of travel in new lands and amongst, for the most part, unknown tribes. The Doctor's experiences and adventures are most varied and most vividly described. His life was frequently in danger from savages.

NEW WORK BY PHIL ROBINSON.—Now ready.

UNDER the PUNKAH. By the Author of "In My Indian Garden." Small post 8vo, 6s.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY STUDIES: Essays. By FRANCIS HITCHMAN. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 16s.

Now ready, in Pocket-book Style, interleaved for notes, leather binding, price 5s.

MILITARY MAXIMS and APOPHTHEGMS of COMMANDERS (Ancient and Modern): the Soldier's Diary. Compiled by Captain BARTLE TEELENG.

WEBER. By Sir Julius Benedict. Dedicated, by permission, to Her Majesty the Queen. New Volume of the BIOGRAPHIES of the GREAT MUSICIANS. Edited by FRANCIS HUEFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

SCHUBERT. By H. F. Frost. New Volume of the BIOGRAPHIES of the GREAT MUSICIANS. Edited by FRANCIS HUEFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

NEW NOVELS.

MR. CAROLI: an Autobiography. Edited by L. G. SEGUIN, Author of "Walks in Algiers," &c. 3 vols.

A FOURTH EDITION is Ready of MARY MARSTON.
By GEORGE MACDONALD. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

FLOWER o' the BROOM. By the Author of "Rare Pale Margaret." 3 vols.

AN ENGLISH SQUIRE. By C. R. Coleridge, Author of "Lady Hetty," "Hanbury Mills," &c. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

THE NEW ADDITION TO LOW'S STANDARD SIX-SHILLING NOVELS IS
BEN-HUR: a Tale of the Christ. By L. Wallace. Small post 8vo, 6s.

Now and Cheaper Editions of Jules Verne's Novel.

MICHAEL STROGOFF, the Courier of the Czar. By JULES VERNE. With Illustrations. Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

MICHAEL STROGOFF. In Two Parts, with Illustrations, boards, each 1s.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

SHADWORTH HODGSON'S OUTCAST ESSAYS, by G. SAINTSBURY	217
ROCHER'S YUNNAN, by Prof. R. K. DOUGLAS	217
HOPPE'S EDITION OF GOOGE'S "POPISH KINGDOM," by E. W. GOSSE	218
THE HISTORY OF LEGAL PROCEDURE IN ENGLAND, by Prof. A. J. G. MACKAY	219
RODEN NOEL'S A LITTLE CHILD'S MONUMENT, by Mrs. J. OWEN	220
NEW NOVELS, by the Rev. E. PURCELL	221
CURRENT THEOLOGY	222
NOTES AND NEWS	223
OBITUARY	225
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	225
THE CYRILLIC AND GLAGOLITIC ALPHABETS	226
BIBLIOGRAPHY OF EARLY WELSH PRINTED BOOKS	226
THE CONTROVERSY ABOUT THE OTTOMAN KHALIFATE, by the Rev. Dr. BADGER	226
SELECTED BOOKS	227
CORRESPONDENCE:— Roman Remains in the Isle of Wight, by M. DAINANT; A Correction, by Catharine A. JARVIER; Another Correction, by the Rev. R. H. QUICK	227
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	227
GRANT ALLEN'S EVOLUTIONIST AT LARGE, by J. SULLY	227
SOME BOOKS ON PHILOSOPHY	228
OBITUARY: EDWARD R. ALSTON, by Prof. P. MARTIN DUNCAN	228
NOTES OF TRAVEL	229
SCIENCE NOTES	229
PHILOLOGY NOTES	230
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	230
ART BOOKS	230
EXHIBITIONS: THE FRENCH GALLERY, AND TROTTER'S GALLERY, by COSMO MONKHOUSE; THE SOCIETY OF LADY ARTISTS, AND THE EXHIBITION OF SWISS ART	231
ART SALES	232
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	232
"MARTIN CRUZZLEWIT" AT THE THEATRE, by FREDK. WEDMORE	233
STAGE NOTES	233
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	234

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, NOTTINGHAM.

The TOWN COUNCIL of NOTTINGHAM have resolved to appoint FOUR PROFESSORS as follows:—

ONE PROFESSOR who shall undertake one or more of the following subjects: Classics, Literature, History, Political Philosophy, Moral Sciences; and
THREE PROFESSORS who shall each undertake one or more of the following subjects: Mathematics (including Theoretical and Applied Mechanics), Physics, Chemistry, Physiology, Botany, Zoology.

The work of the College will be divided into FOUR DEPARTMENTS, whose arrangement will depend to some extent on the subjects undertaken by the Professors elected, but it is intended that the Three Scientific Departments shall severally comprehend—

1. Mathematics and Mechanics,
2. Chemistry,
3. Natural Science,

and that the subject of Physics shall be placed as a subject of principal importance in one or other of these departments.

Applicants are invited to specify the subjects which they would be prepared to undertake.

Applications for the above appointments to be addressed to the TOWN CLERK, Municipal Office, Nottingham, endorsed "University College," on or before the 7TH DAY OF MAY NEXT. Particulars of salaries, duties, and conditions will be sent upon application to the Town Clerk.

Candidates are especially requested to obtain from canvassing.
SAM. GEO. JOHNSON, Town Clerk.
Municipal Office, Nottingham, 22nd March, 1881.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE,
LONDON.

The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines.

LOCAL THEOLOGICAL EXAMINATIONS, 1881.

All applications for these Examinations must be made in writing to the Secretary not later than APRIL 4TH. Such applications must state—

- (a) The full names and addresses of Candidates who intend to present themselves for examination.
- (b) The subjects to which they desire to be examined.
- (c) The full names and addresses of at least two persons who will undertake personally to conduct the Examination in accordance with the regulations. Of these one must also undertake to act as Local Correspondent through whom all subsequent correspondence with the College authorities must pass.

A fee of 2s. 6d. for each Candidate must be forwarded with the application.
P.O.O. to be made payable at Fallowfield to the Secretary, Rev. CHARLES T. POYNTER, Fallowfield, Manchester.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON,
SCHOOL.—THE NEXT TERM will commence on MAY 3RD.—
Prospectuses may be obtained from the Office, Gower-street, W.C.
TALFOURD ELY, M.A., Secretary.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 3RD OF MAY.
F. W. MADDEN, M.B.A.S., Secretary.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely-

place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1852, for preparation of Candidates for Competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The Special Classes for R.I. CONSTABULARY Cadetships have carried off 80 per cent. of the Cadetships offered for competition last year. First Place, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Sandhurst; over 320 have passed Army Exams, including 2nd, 3rd, 5th, 6th, 7th, at recent Competitions.—Apply to W. J. CHEWIDE CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.G.S., F.R.G.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WARBERRY

HOUSE, Bishopdown Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. H. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

WANTED, by a YOUNG LADY, aged twenty-six, a Disengagement as COMPANION to elderly Lady, or GOVERNESS in a Family. Is a good accountant and needlewoman; also quick writer, and musical. Four and a-half years' reference.—Address, Miss BECHER, Hemingford Abbots, St. Ives, Hunts.

ALEXANDRA PALACE PRIZE
MEDALS FOR PICTURES.

The Lessees offer Two Gold Medals, Eight Silver Medals, and Six Bronze Medals for the Best OIL PAINTINGS in the Collection of the forthcoming Season, without regard to school, style, or subject. The Judges will be men of eminence in art. Competitive Works received on or before MAY 7. The Galleries CLOSED for re-arrangement MAY 9 to 12.—For particulars apply to JONES & BARBER, Lessees.
NOTE.—Pictures now at the Palace may be removed before the new Exhibition opens by giving early notice.

MILLAIS EXHIBITION.—A LOAN

COLLECTION OF THE WORKS OF Mr. J. E. MILLAIS, R.A., is NOW ON VIEW at the FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 148, NEW BOND STREET. Admission, 1s. Notes on Pictures, 6d.

MILLAIS EXHIBITION.—The Contributions include: Autumn Leaves—Boyhood of Raleigh—Carpenter's Shop—Clarry Ridge—Child October—Ferdinand and Ariel—The Gambler's Wife—Lorenzo and Isabelle—The Minute—North-west Passage—Order of Release—Portrait of the Painter—Princes in the Tower—Vale of Rest—Woodman's Daughter—A Yeoman of the Guard—and a new Picture, The Princess Elizabeth in Prison at St. James's.

LAST WEEK.

MR. WHISTLER'S VENICE PASTELS.

—A Series of FIFTY PASTEL DRAWINGS by MR. WHISTLER are NOW ON VIEW at the FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 148, NEW BOND STREET.

ON EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS and

DRAWINGS by the American Artist, the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art."—Gallery, 14, Grafton-street, Old Bond-street.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Com-

mission Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's).—Choice Works ON VIEW by Henry Dawson, sen., T. S. Cooper, R.A., E. J. Neumann, L. J. Pott, Ernest Perton, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Stark, Jutsum, &c.

STUDIOS.—Remaining Set.—With Two

Anterooms, Lavatory, &c. Well placed in Bayswater, near two Stations. Rent £50 per annum.—E. & F. SWAIN, 82, High-street, Nottingham, W. (7,375.)

TO BE SOLD, the "SATURDAY

REVIEW," from 1865-80, nearly perfect, and in good condition.—Address Rev. J. B. LEE, Barret.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

BOOK SOCIETIES AND PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

The attention of Secretaries and Members of Book Societies, Literary Institutions, and Public Libraries is respectfully requested to the List, revised for the New Season, of the Principal Recent Books in Circulation at Mudie's Select Library. This List will be found to contain a very large and varied Selection of Recent Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction.

Fresh Copies of all the Books in this List, and of all New Editions of the popular Standard Works in the Library Catalogue, continue to be added as the demand increases, and arrangements are made with the leading Publishers for an ample supply of all forthcoming Works of general interest as they appear.

The Terms of Subscription are the lowest on which it is possible to guarantee a constant and satisfactory supply of the best New Books.

In addition to the List of Recent Works in Circulation, a New Edition of Mudie's Catalogue of well-selected Second-hand Books is also ready for delivery. This Catalogue comprises a large selection of the best Books of the Past and Present Seasons in good condition, with many older Works, several of which are out of Print and not otherwise procurable, at the lowest current prices.

NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

March 26th, 1881.

THOMAS A KEMPIS.—The IMITATION of CHRIST. The Oxford Edition. By the late THOMAS KEMBLE, of Hilley, Gloucestershire. Fcap. 8vo, cloth antique, price 4s.; also in 18mo, cloth limp, 1s.; and a Pocket Edition, in 32mo, cloth, price 1s.

The St. James's Gazette, reviewing a recent edition, says:—"The demand for English translations is at this day very great. . . . To him we owe, as it seems, at least one proverb that has become current coin—Man proposes, but God disposes. . . . One can hardly leave the subject without saying something of the charm and power which have made the 'Imitation of Christ' one of the great books of Christendom. The fact is palpable, and there must be something to be learned from it. . . . Life in the world is, in his eyes, altogether vain. Secular learning is a mere, and theological learning is not much better. . . . This writer, with a stunted and cramped ideal of life, rejecting almost everything that makes the worth and interest of life for us, and made it for the greater part of his contemporaries, has yet become a power in the world. How is this possible? It is easy to say that the world overrates him and is superstitious; the whole world is not so easily deceived."

PARKER & Co., Oxford; and 5, Southampton-street, Strand, London.

Works by the Rev. E. B. PUSEY, D.D.

ON THE

QUESTION of MARRIAGE with a DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER.

A LETTER on the PROPOSED CHANGE in the LAW PROHIBITING MARRIAGE with those NEAR of KIN. 8vo, sewed, 6d., 1842.

MARRIAGE with a DECEASED WIFE'S

SISTER PROHIBITED by HOLY SCRIPTURE, as understood by the Church for 1,500 years. Evidence given before the Commission appointed to enquire into the State and Operation of the Law of Marriage as relating to the Prohibited Degrees of Affinity. With a Preface by E. B. PUSEY, D.D. To which is appended a speech delivered in the Court of Queen's Bench in the Case of The Queen v. The Parish of St. Giles-in-the-Fields by EDWARD BAILEY, Esq., M.A. 8vo, pp. xciv+176, cloth, 1849.

GOD'S PROHIBITION of the MARRIAGE with a DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER (Lev. xviii. 6) not to be set aside by an inference from His limitation of Polygamy among the Jews (Lev. xviii. 18). 8vo, 1s., 1860.

AGAINST PROFANE DEALING with

HOLY MATRIMONY. A Tract for all English Churchmen and Churchwomen, occasioned by a recent Report on the Marriage Laws. By the Rev. JOHN KIBBLE. Fcap. 8vo, sewed, 2d., 1849.

Oxford and London: PARKER & Co.

BIBLE REVISION.

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Cranmer, 1539.—Geneva, 1537.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorized, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or Morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman."

Observer

London: S. BAISTER & FOXS, 15, Paternoster-row.

And sold by all Booksellers.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

For APRIL, 1881. No. DCCLXXXVI. Price 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.—PART VI.
SHADWELL'S LIFE OF LORD CLYDE.
FREAKS OF THE TELEGRAPH.
LIGHTER SPANISH POETRY, IN ENGLISH METRE. By H. K. VALLOMBROSA.
ROUND DELLA'S BASKET.
OLD SCOTTISH SOCIETY.
GREECE AND HER CLAIMS.

Edinburgh and London: WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

THOMAS CARLYLE. By MRS. OLIPHANT. See
MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 258. For APRIL. Price 1s.

CONTENTS OF THE NUMBER.

1. THE PORTRAIT OF A LADY. By HENRY JAMES, Jun. Chapters XXV.—XXVIII.
2. THE "PEOPLE'S CONCERT SOCIETY." By Mrs. JULIAN MARSHALL.
3. FREE LIBRARIES AND THEIR WORKING. By W. ODELL, Jun.
4. LUCRETIA MOTT OF PHILADELPHIA. By AGNES MACDONELL.
5. THE OTHER SIDE OF THE QUESTION. By FRANCES MARTIN.
6. ARCHAEOLOGY, LITERATURE, AND HISTORY. By PERCY GARDNER, Disney Professor of Archaeology, Cambridge.
7. POULTRY KEEPING IN NORMANDY. By J. CHESNEY.
8. IN MEMPHIS, MAJOR-GENERAL SIR GEORGE POMEROY-COLLEY. By the ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN.
9. THOMAS CARLYLE. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

London: MACMILLAN & CO.

Price 7d.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL

For APRIL 1.

The Fenland of the Past.
Monkeys at Freedom.
Duet to Duet.
A Few Words from a Settler in South Australia.
Mrs. Brown Smith.
Popular Medicine in Russia.
What Girls can Do.
Thomas Tad Stadler.
His Brother's Keeper.
More Ghost Stories Unveiled.
Kilnapping in the South Sea Islands.
Sausage and Leisure. By W. Chambers.

Tee and Silk Farming in New Zealand.
William Lloyd Garrison.
The American Pork Market.
Ralph the Peacemaker.
The Rueslyptus in the Roman Campagna.
Incidents of a Convict Prison.
Amusing Trifles.
The Month: Science and Arts.
Anecdotes of elgu-Painting Artists.
Three Poetical Pieces.

THE FORTUNES OF BERTRAM OAKLEY.
By J. B. HARWOOD. Chapters XIII.—XVI.

London and Edinburgh: W. & R. CHAMBERS.

Quarterly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE MODERN REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR APRIL, 1881.

- THE PROPHECIES OF ISAIAH. II.—The Captivity. By Prof. J. E. CARPENTER.
- THE OBLIGATIONS OF DOCTRINAL SUBSCRIPTION: a Discussion. II. By J. E. SYMES, M. K. WILSON, Bart., HENRY SIDGWICK, &c.
- REJOINDER. By H. W. CROSSKEY, F.R.S.
- THE MEDICAL PROFESSION and its MORALITY.
- THE RELIGIOUS FORCES OF THE REFORMATION ERA. By GEORGE MATHESON, D.D.
- MONASTIC REMINISCENCES. By R. R. SUFFIELD.
- THE REASONABLENESS OF EVOLUTION. By ANDREW WILSON, Ph.D., F.R.S.
- GEORGE ELIOT and THOMAS CARLYLE. By GEORGE SARSON.
- NOTES and NOTICES. By T. W. RHYS DAVIDS, WILLIAM DOBLINO, SAMUEL SHARPE, &c.

London: JAMES CLARKE & CO., Fleet-street.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR APRIL.

- THE ORIGIN OF RELIGION. By the DUKE OF AROLYL. (The Unity of Nature.—No. VIII.)
- THE SOUTH AFRICAN QUESTION.—
1. THE BOERS AT HOME. By J. J. MUSKETT.
 2. ON THE MANAGEMENT OF THE NATIVE TRIBES. By the Rev. BRANLEY KET.
- EDGAR QUINET. By RICHARD HEATH.
- SOME NEW PHILOSOPHICAL VIEWS. By the EDITOR.
- THREE POEMS.—
1. MUSIC or WORDS? By the LORD BISHOP OF DERRY.
 2. FROM THE "ILLAD OF INDIA." By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I.
 3. MONTE ROSA. By the Hon. ROBERT NOEL.
- THE ARROGANCE OF MODERN SCEPTICISM: a Layman's Protest. By FRANCIS PEEK.
- A STUDY OF CARLYLE. By the Author of "The Moral Influence of George Eliot."
- PERCIVAL HINCHERLEY'S SCHEME OF COMPULSORY INSURANCE. By the Rev. W. L. BLACKLEY.
- HEBREW ETHICS IN EVIDENCE OF THE DATE OF HEBREW DOCUMENTS. By REGINALD STUART POOLE, Corp. Inst., France.
- TURKEY AND GREECE. By EDWIN LERNEMAND.
- THE COURT OF HANOYER: an Introduction to some Chapters of Secret History. By OSCAR MEDINO (Gregor Samarow).

London: STRAHAN & CO. (LIMITED), 34, PATERNOSTER-ROW.

TRÜBNER & CO.'S

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of MARK RUTHERFORD.

Dissenting Minister. Edited by his Friend, REUBEN SHAPCOTT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

JAMES A. GARFIELD.

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: a Biographical Sketch. By Captain F. H. MASON, late of the United States Army. With a Preface by BRET HARTE. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Portrait, 2s. 6d.

"THE MESNEVI"

(Usually known as the Mevnevi; Sherif, or Holy Mevnevi) of Mevlana (our Lord), Jalalu'd-din Muhammed Rumi. Book the First. With an Account of the Life of the Author, and Anecdotes by Elifaki. Translated, and the Poetry Versified, in English, by J. W. REDHOUSE, M.R.A.S., &c. Post 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE SCIENCE OF BEAUTY.

An Analytical Enquiry into the Laws of Aesthetics. By A. W. HOLMES-FORBES, M.A., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE HISTORY of INDIA.

By J. TALBOYS WHEELEE, late Assistant-Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department. Vol. IV. Part II. MOGHUL EMPIRE—AURUNGEZEB. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT within HISTORIC TIMES;

With Some Account of British Wild White Cattle. By J. E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. With Illustrations by Wolf, Whymper, and others. Demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

DR. APPLETON: his LIFE and LITERARY RELICS.

By J. H. APPLETON, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Staplefield, Sussex; and A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Queen's College, Oxford. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

KING'S COLLEGE LECTURES on ELOCUTION;

Or, the Physiology and Culture of Voice and Speech, and the Expression of the Emotions by Language, Countenance, and Gesture. To which is added a Special Lecture on the Causes and Cure of Impediments of speech. Being the Substance of the Introductory Course of Lectures annually delivered by G. J. FLEMING, Lecturer on Public Reading and Speaking at King's College, London, in the Evening Classes Department. Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. New and greatly enlarged Illustrated Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

THE GULISTAN;

Or, Rose Garden of Sheikh Muslihu'l-din Sadi of Shiraz. Translated for the first time into Prose and Verse, with a Preface and Life of the Author from the Alish Kudaib. By E. B. EASTWICK, M.R.A.S., &c. Second Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES;

Or, Jataka Tales. From the Jatakavamsanana. Translated from the Original Pali, by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 15s.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE HISTORY of the DEVELOPMENT of the HUMAN RACE.

Lectures and Dissertations. By LAZARUS GEIGER. Translated from the German by DAVID ASHER, Ph.D. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE RACES OF AFGHANISTAN:

Being a Brief Account of the Principal Nations inhabiting that Country. By Surgeon-Major H. W. BELLER, C.S.I., late on Special Political Duty at Kabul. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE CLASSICAL POETRY of the JAPANESE.

By B. H. CHAMBERLAIN, Author of "Yeigo Henkoku Ichiran." Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

NATURAL SCIENCE and RELIGION:

Two Lectures delivered to the Theological School of Yale College on "Scientific Beliefs" and "The Relations of Scientific to Religious Belief." By Prof. ASA GRAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE LIGHT of ASIA;

Or, the Great Renunciation. Being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Told in Verse by an Indian BUDDHIST. By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., Author of "The Indian Song of Songs." Crown 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.

THE GREAT AFRICAN ISLAND:

Chapters on Madagascar. By the Rev. J. SERRA, Jun., of the London Missionary Society, Author of "Madagascar and its People," &c. Demy 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations, cloth, 12s.

LANGUAGE and its STUDY,

With Especial Reference to the Indo-European Family of Languages. Seven Lectures by W. D. WHITNEY, Professor at Yale College. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c., by the Rev. R. MORRIS, LL.D. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

NEW WORKS.

PLAYS, PLAYERS, and PLAY-

HOUSES, at HOME and ABROAD; with Anecdotes of the Drama and the Stage. By LORD WILLIAM PITT LENOX. 2 vols, 21s.
"These volumes are full of good stories and anecdotes, told with remarkable spirit, and will be a treasure to old playgoers."—Graphic.
"A vast amount of curious information and anecdote has been gathered together in these pleasant, gossiping volumes, which will be read with great interest."—Sunday Times.

OUR HOLIDAY in the EAST.

By Mrs. GEORGE SUMNER. Edited by the Rev. G. H. SUMNER, Hon. Canon of Winchester. 8vo, with Illustrations, 15s.
"An attractive volume; very agreeable reading."—John Bull.
"A most charming narrative of a tour in the East amongst scenes of the deepest interest to the Christian."—Record.

MY JOURNEY ROUND the

WORLD. By Capt. S. H. JONES PARRY, Royal Madras Fusiliers. 2 vols, 21s.
"A very pleasant book, well worth reading."—Spectator.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and

BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Especial Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the Nobility. Fifth Edition. 1 vol., with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.

THE NEW NOVELS.

LOVE-KNOTS. By the Author of

"URSULA'S LOVE STORY," &c. 3 vols.

BESIDE the RIVER. By Mrs.

MACQUOID, Author of "Patty," &c. 3 vols.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER. By the AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN," 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

MISSING! By Mary Cecil Hay,

Author of "Old Myddelton's Money," &c. 3 vols.

HER DESERTS. By Mrs. Alex-

ANDER FRASER, Author of "Guardian and Lover," 3 vols.

"A striking novel, which cannot fail to engross all readers, and will probably be one of the most attractive of its author's works."—Post.
"Her Deserts" is a powerful book. Beautiful, passionate Gine takes a distinct place amid the heroines of fiction."—Sunday Times.

IDONEA. By Anne Beale, Author

of "Fay Arlington," &c. 3 vols.
"A story of no common order, well worth reading."—Sunday Times.
"Miss Beale's novel cannot fail to be attractive."—Court Journal.

BERYL FORTESCUE. By Lady

DUFFUS HARDY, Author of "Madge," &c. 3 vols.
"This story is fresh, unconventional, and of unusual interest. It ought to be a great success."—Sunday Times.

FIXED as FATE. By Mrs. Hous-

TOUN, Author of "Recommended to Mercy," &c. 3 vols.

STRICTLY TIED UP. By the light Hon. A. J. B. BERNARD HOPE, M.P. SECOND EDITION, 3 vols.

"A clever story. In 'Strictly Tied Up' we have vigorous sketches of life in very different circumstances and conditions. We have the incisive portraiture of character that shows varied knowledge of mankind. We have a novel besides which may be read with profit as well as pleasure."—Times, March 17.

HARRY JOSCELYN. By Mrs.

OLIPHANT, Author of "Chronicles of Carlingford," &c. 3 vols. [Just ready.]

CHEAP EDITIONS.

Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 5s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Sir J. GILBERT MILLAR, HUNT, LEECH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

- OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.
- Sem Slick's Nature and Human Nature. By Sem Slick. 1 vol., 5s.
- John Halifax, Gentleman. By Elton Warburton. 1 vol., 5s.
- The Crescent and the Cross. By Nathaniel. By Miss Kavanagh. 1 vol., 5s.
- A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol., 5s.
- Adam Osbourne. By Mrs. Oliphant. 1 vol., 5s.
- Saw Slick's Wise Saws. Cardinal Wiseman's Pious. A Life for a Life. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol., 5s.
- Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb. Margaret and her Irish Maidens. Sam Slick's Old Judge. Darius. By Elliot Warburton. 1 vol., 5s.
- Sir B. Burke's Family Romance. The Laird of Norlaw. By Mrs. Oliphant. 1 vol., 5s.
- The Englishwoman in Italy. Nothing New. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol., 5s.
- Freer's Life of Jeanne d'Albret. The Valley of a Hundred Fires. Burke's Romance of the Forum. Adèle. By Miss Kavanagh. 1 vol., 5s.
- Studies from Life. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol., 5s.
- Grandmother's Money. Jefferies's Book about Doctors. Mistress and Maid. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol., 5s.
- Les Misérables. By Victor Hugo. 1 vol., 5s.
- St. Olave's. Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton. 1 vol., 5s.
- Sam Slick's American Humour. Barbara's History. By Amelia B. Edwards. 1 vol., 5s.
- Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant. 1 vol., 5s.
- No Church. Christian's Mistake. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol., 5s.
- Alce Forbes. By George MacDonald, LL.D. 1 vol., 5s.
- Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant. 1 vol., 5s.
- A Noble Life. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol., 5s.
- Dixon's New America. Robert Falconer. By George MacDonald, LL.D. 1 vol., 5s.
- The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol., 5s.
- Annals of an Eventful Life. By G. W. Bassett, D.C.L. 1 vol., 5s.
- David Elginbrod. By George MacDonald, LL.D. 1 vol., 5s.
- A Brave Lady. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol., 5s.
- Hannah. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol., 5s.
- Sam Slick's Americans at Home. The Unkind Word. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol., 5s.
- A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant. 1 vol., 5s.
- My Little Lady. By E. Frances Poynter. 1 vol., 5s.
- Phebe, Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant. 1 vol., 5s.
- Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor G. D. Young. 1 vol., 5s.
- Sir Gibbie. By George MacDonald, LL.D. 1 vol., 5s.
- Young Mrs. Jardine. By the Author of "John Halifax." 1 vol., 5s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S NEW WORKS.

On March 20th, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR APRIL, 1881.

- I. KITH and KIN. By JESSIE FOTHERGILL, (Continued.)
- II. HAROUN ALRASHID.
- III. THACKERAY as a POET.
- IV. DOGS of LITERATURE.
- V. THE BEAUTIFUL MISS ROCHE. Part II.
- VI. A PEEP at the MOGHREBINS. III.
- VII. A SUNDAY at LEKSAND.
- VIII. THE FRERES. By Mrs. ALEXANDER. (Continued.)

*. Cases for binding the volumes of "Temple Bar" can be obtained at all Booksellers', price One Shilling each.

THE MEMOIRS of PRINCE

METTERNICH, 1815—1829. Edited by his Son, PRINCE RICHARD METTERNICH. Translated by ROSENA NAPIER. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

THE POLITICAL DIARY of

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, 1828—1830. Edited by LORD COLCHESTER. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

NOTICE.—THE NEW NOVEL,

POLICY AND PASSION,

BY

MRS. CAMPBELL PRAED,

Is now ready at every Library,

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

SECOND EDITION OF

A CHILD of NATURE.

BY

ROBERT BUCHANAN,

Author of "The Shadow of the Sword," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "NELLIE'S MEMORIES."

QUEENIE'S WHIM. By Rosa

NOUQUETTE CAREY, Author of "Wood and Married," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

FOUR POPULAR STORIES BY FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

MISUNDERSTOOD. Nineteenth

Thousand. Crown 8vo, 5s.
Also, the ILLUSTRATED EDITION. In crown 4to, with Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIE, price 6s.

SEAFORTH. Popular Edition.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

THROWN TOGETHER. Eighth
Thousand. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THWARTED. Sixth Thousand.
Crown 8vo, 5s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen,

SMITH, ELDER, & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

MR. BRANDRAM'S SHAKESPEARE FOR THE YOUNG.

Immediately, large crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE.

Certain Selected Plays abridged for the Use of the Young.

By SAMUEL BRANDRAM, M.A. Oxon.

NEW VOLUME BY MISS THACKERAY (MRS.
RICHMOND RITCHIE).

On April 5th, with Four Illustrations, crown 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

MISS WILLIAMSON'S DIVAGATIONS.

By MISS THACKERAY (MRS. RICHMOND RITCHIE).

Reprinted from the Cornhill Magazine, &c.

RENAISSANCE in ITALY: Italian Literature. By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A. Author of "Studies of the Greek Poets," "Sketches in Italy and Greece," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, being Vols. IV. and V. of "Renaissance in Italy," and concluding the Work, price 32s.

OUTLINES of NAVAL HYGIENE. By

JOHN D. MACDONALD, M.D., F.R.S., Inspector-General R.N., Professor of Naval Hygiene, Army Medical School, Netley. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

THE POWER of SOUND. By Edmund

GURNEY, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Royal 8vo, 2s.

"There need be no reservation in the welcome which we give to the book as a whole. Psychologically and aesthetically—and, we would add, physiologically also—it is a book which makes a distinct forward step." Spectator.

THE POETRY of ASTRONOMY. By

RICHARD A. PROCTOR, Author of "The Borderland of Science," "Science Byways," &c. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"Will do much to supply valuable information in a popular form concerning some of the chief results and speculations of modern astronomical science. The book contains most valuable reading, and is in such a clear and pleasant style that it deserves to be very popular."—Queen.

FARMING in a SMALL WAY. By James

LONG, Author of "Poultry for Prizes and Profit," "The Goat," &c. Crown 8vo, 7s. 8d.

"We heartily recommend all who are interested in farming in a small way to secure it while there is yet time."—Gardener's Magazine.

SECOND EDITION, Revised, and with an additional Map.

LIFE of LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SIR

JAMES OUTRAM. By Major-General Sir FREDERICK J. GOLDSMID, C.B., K.C.S.I. With Illustrations and Maps. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 32s.

SECOND EDITION, 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

A HISTORY of ENGLISH THOUGHT in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By LESLIE STEPHEN.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "CHILDREN'S CHILDREN."

HAROLD SAXON: a Story of the Church and the World. By ALAN MOIR, Author of "Children's Children: a Story of Two Generations." 3 vols., post 8vo.

"A powerful, truthful work."—Pail Mall Gazette.
"A strange and original novel."—Court Journal.
"A vigorous and readable novel."—Scotsman.
"Full of cleverness, and of power also."—Truth.

On March 29 (One Shilling), No. 256.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For APRIL.

With Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIE and W. SMALL.

CONTENTS:

- LOVE the DEBT. (With an Illustration.) Chap. X.—"In the Net," XI.—"Reparation." XII.—"Drifting."
RAMBLES among BOOKS. No. II.—Autobiography.
NIGHTINGALE and CUCKOO. By ALFRED AUSTIN.
THE YOUTH of HENRY the FIFTH. By ALEX. CHARLES EWALD.
TIMASTHEOS. By EDMUND W. GOSSE.
WINTER NIGHTS at DAVOS. (Leaves from the Diary of an Invalid.)
A POACHING ADVENTURE.
THE CENSUS of 1881.
A GRAVE from a THORN. By JAMES PAYN. (With an Illustration.) (Chap. XIV.—A Confession. XV.—The Call. XVI.—Ella is given her "Chance." XVII.—Mr. Joceline becomes Confidential. XVIII.—A Double Game.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

REMINGTON'S NEW BOOKS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

MADAME de MAINTENON: a

Memoir. By WALTER BENNETT. 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"A memoir of considerable value, conceived in a spirit of fairness, and written with power and picturesque effect." Court Journal.

DUMDUMINGTON RECTORY and the ADVENTURES of TWO CURATES: THOMAS LORENZO DAWK, B.A., of St. Drone's, and CHARLES DIAMOND, of Mandlin. By the Author of "Marriage à la Mode." 1 vol., 7s. 6d.

"There is a great show of humour throughout these stories, levelled with tolerable impartiality against some of the most familiar follies and foibles of the ecclesiastical world."—Athenaeum.

NOT MANY YEARS AGO:

Memories of my Life. By AN ELDERLY BACHELOR. 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"This is a volume that will delight many readers. In a manner so natural as to be beyond praise, the author tells us all the incidents of his early days, and with so much simplicity that anyone who had not been brought up under tender parents in a loving family himself might feel as if the writer had endowed him with a happy childhood." St. James's Gazette.

SYBARITE and SPARTAN: a

Novel. By Mrs. LORENZO NUNN, Author of "The Militia Major," &c. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

"The story is rarely dull, and the good spirits of the author infect the reader and carry him pleasantly along from the beginning to the end."—Sunday Times.

A STORY of AUTUMN. By Mrs.

COMYNS CARE, Author of "North Italian Folk." 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"A story really interesting and charming." Saturday Review.

DIVID D: a Novel. By the Author of "Shakespeare's Stories Simply Told." 2 vols., 21s.

"Sufficiently fresh and unhackneyed, and at the same time natural, to make it pleasant reading."—Athenaeum.

IRELAND'S TRUE DAUGHTER:

a Novel. By MARCELLINA. Dedicated, by permission, to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

MY SISTER'S PRUSSIAN LOVER:

a Novel. By BOUTON D'OE. vols., 21s.

THE ADVENTURES of WILLIAM

JERMYN: a Novel. By the Author of "A Love's Gamut." 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

OUR SONS and DAUGHTERS: a Novel. From the French of ERNEST LEGOUVE. By E. MILLS. 2 vols., 21s.

DOROTHY BROWN: a Novel. By

Mrs. LAWRENCE JONES. 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

WITH the IRREGULARS in the TRANSVAAL and ZULULAND. By W. H. THOMAS-SON, late Adjutant of the Irregular Cavalry. 1 vol., 7s. 6d.

SONG-BLOOM: a Volume of Poems.

By GEORGE BARLOW, Author of "Time's Whisperings," "Love Songs," &c. 7s. 6d.

GRAND TOURS in MANY LANDS.

By Dr. JOHN MCCOSH, Author of "Nuova Italia." 1 vol., 7s. 6d.

LONDON:

REMINGTON & CO., 134, NEW BOND STREET, W.

SATURDAY, MARCH 26, 1881.

No. 464, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Outcast Essays and Verse Translations. By Shadworth H. Hodgson. (Longmans.)

MR. SHADWORTH HODGSON gives, in a very short Preface, an explanation of the quaint title of his book. The first essay was, he says, rejected by one editor, the second by three, the rest he never ventured to expose to the ordeal which had been so fatal to their brethren. He does not speculate on the causes of their damnation, and, indeed, they are not too evident. Probably the editors who rejected Mr. Hodgson's work put in something in its place which was not better in form and was worse in matter. But probably, also, the reason of rejection was that the subjects dealt with lie out of Mr. Hodgson's recognised beat. The average editor is (perhaps not on the whole unwisely) rather shy of the contributor who, being an approved authority on sport, suddenly suggests an essay on the Christian religion, or who, having long borne an honoured name in connexion with the City department of the periodical, develops views on the relative value of Raphael and Lionardo. Every now and then this scepticism no doubt results in the rejection of promising ideas or good work. But no doubt it also results in the rejection of many ideas which are not at all promising, and much work which is very far indeed from being good. Mr. Shadworth Hodgson has suffered for the sins of others; that is all.

The first essay—the semel damnatus tractate—deals with De Quincey; the second, which seems, regardless of the wise principle of Lamb's club, to have ventured more than once into the infernal regions, handles the same subject, but in especial reference to the "Logic of Political Economy." The third treats of "The Supernatural in English Poetry;" the last, and longest, of "English Verse." There is a note on a point of theology with which we need not further concern ourselves; and then come the verse translations, which the author, with characteristic modesty, puts forward as likely to be interesting to those only who have amused themselves with similar efforts. They deserve to be better spoken of than this, though we think that, for an avowed player of the game, Mr. Hodgson perhaps allows himself too many licences. Thus his version of Memphim carentem Sithonia nive omits "Sithonia" and puts in the otiose "Sunbathed."

These translations, however, fill a very small part of the book, and the interest centres on the De Quincey essays and the treatise (for it is of some length) on English verse. That on the supernatural in English poetry, though containing some good incidental remarks, strikes us as a little loose—that is to say, as lacking in definiteness of contention. It is rather a series of detached criticisms of the treatment of the supernatural by English poets than anything else; and these detached criticisms each seem to clamour for relegation into essays on the poets themselves, instead of being artificially bound together in one. We think that if we had been Mr. Hodgson's Rhadamanthus we should have damned this, and this only. As it is, it seems never to have ventured into the judge's presence, but to be still flens in limine primo. The essay on De Quincey is interesting because it challenges for that writer a much higher place than is usually accorded to him. Mr. Hodgson has a very high opinion indeed of the author of the Suspiria; and we shall go so far with him as to say that De Quincey at his best yields to hardly any English critic in acuteness, and to few English writers in mastery of style. The defect of the essay seems to be that Mr. Hodgson does not sufficiently recognise the singular inequality of his friend and favourite. He acknowledges this inequality in matter of style, in matter of political and historical thought, but not in matter of literary criticism. Now this is where it seems to us that De Quincey is most treacherous. No one ought to consider himself competent to criticise English without a thorough familiarity with De Quincey's sixteen volumes; yet we can hardly imagine anyone who possesses the claim of being thus competent omitting to notice De Quincey's frequent and singular incompetence. The essence, as it seems to us, of criticism is to be able to appreciate what you do not like. This De Quincey never could do. His verdicts on Plato, Swift, Goethe, Middleton, Mr. Carlyle's early translations, &c., &c., are thus quite ludicrously worthless, for he is a great deal worse than the epigrammatist. He hates Sabidius, and yet unreasonably strives dicere quare. His subtlety, too, which Mr. Hodgson especially praises, was constantly at fault, as may be seen in his attempted reply to Hazlitt's profound criticism on Wordsworth's "austere pronouncement of a divorce a mensa et thoro between soul and body." Far be it from us to cry down De Quincey, to whom every lover and every student of English owes an immense debt. But to say that "no one touches or lays bare the heart of a subject like De Quincey" seems to us a rather dangerous misapprehension. No one says better things about a subject; no one touches its exterior, and sometimes its interior too, with happier lights of erudition or fancy. But what he can never do is to make sure of hitting the heart. Nor let it be said that this is a mere difference of individual opinion. De Quincey has delivered such a vast number of judgments on all manner of literary points that unqualified praise of the matter of them, as distinguished from the manner, involves a very large number of undoubted and demonstrable heresies from the catholic literary faith.

We are also somewhat at issue with Mr. Hodgson in respect to his view of English verse. He is champion of the "stress" theory as opposed to the "quantity" theory, or, to what seems to us the true, the "quantity plus stress" theory. His examination of the subject is both learned and acute; and, though those who, like Mr. Lowell, "d—n metres" may not like it, we have ourselves found it full of interest. Whatever is in our view faulty in it springs from an initial error in the definition of poetry which Mr. Hodgson, like a disputant trained in good schools as he is, starts with. From this he avowedly excludes metre, that so "prose may become in certain cases admissible into poetry." Mr. Hodgson will not take it ill if we say that at the outset we object to any definition of A which is framed to allow the admission of Not—A. Both prose and poetry, if he likes, have rhythm, but the differentia of poetical rhythm is that it is metrical, of prose rhythm that it is not. Metrical prose is bastard prose; unmetrical poetry is not poetry at all. If we have seemed to lay this down too dogmatically we shall excuse ourselves by saying that it is impossible to be too dogmatic on the point, because from loose language on it all heresies, including the stress or accent heresy, flow. Naturally, Mr. Hodgson gives a qualified approval to the new prosody of the author of The Growth of Love. It is odd that he does not, so far as we have noticed, say anything about Whitman, who ought to be a great favourite of his. We shall not, we hope, be suspected of speaking disrespectfully of either of these authors; indeed, their experiments are confirmations of the older faith, because, as each becomes most poetical, he comes nearer to the old prosody.

It is rather to be regretted that Mr. Hodgson's essay on this point did not get itself published separately, because it might very likely in that case have provoked a regular reply from someone who believes, as we believe most firmly, that without metre (that is to say, without quantity, natural or artificial) there is no poetry, nor ever will be in secula seculorum. Here we can only briefly notice it, and give thanks to Mr. Hodgson for supporting his thesis very ably. It is to be hoped that this will not be the last of his literary criticism, despite the obstinacy with which the usual doors have been shut to him. The field—heaven knows!—is in no little need of cultivators trained in a more exact school than most of those who now ply spade in it; and the sight of someone who condescends to start with an intelligible definition, and argue out his point in connected fashion, is a refreshing one.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

La Province chinoise du Yunnan. Par Emile Rocher. In 2 vols. (Paris: Ernest Leroux; London: Trübner.)

M. ROCHER's work carries us back ten years to the time when the ill-starred Mahomedan rebels in Yunnan were still holding their ground against the imperial authorities. With the strange, though methodical, inertness which characterises the Chinese government in such matters, the rebels under Tu Wün-seaou, alias Suleiman, had for some years been left in almost undisputed possession of the province. And with the same energy which is always observable when foreign intervention is threatened, no sooner had Prince Hassam, the adopted son of Suleiman, made a personal appeal for recognition to the English Government than the hitherto unconcerned imperialists began to pour troops into Yunnan and to take active steps for the recovery of their lost territory. Like their adversaries, the rebels, they too looked to Europe for help in their difficulty, and proposed to import weapons of war for the consummation of their enterprise. But it was one thing to land guns at Hong-kong or Shanghai, and quite another thing to transport them to the south-west corner of the empire where they were needed. At the moment that the mandarins were debating this new difficulty a certain M. Dupuis brought them the information that the river Hung Kiang, down which he had lately journeyed on his return from a visit to Yunnan, was sufficiently navigable for the transport of the required material. Unfortunately, however, the rebels had lately made themselves masters of this line of communication; and as time pressed it was arranged that M. Rocher should at once take "quelques pièces d'artillerie légère" by the remaining route by way of the Yang-tsze Kiang, and should arrange in Yunnan for the establishment of an arsenal, while M. Dupuis, on the arrival of the guns from Europe, should, in spite of the rebels, attempt to force his way with them up the Hung Kiang.

In pursuance of this plan M. Rocher ascended the Yang-tsze Kiang as far as Na-chi Heen, where the Yung-ning river empties itself into the larger stream. Up this river he went as far as Yung-ning Heen, in the province of Kwei-chow, where he disembarked after a tedious voyage, in inland waters, of more than two months, and from which point he continued his journey by road. This part of his undertaking presented no incident that is not common to all travellers in China, though M. Rocher fills nearly forty pages with its record. At Chan-i Chow, where he joined the route afterwards followed by Mr. Margary, he met with the first obvious traces of the rebellion which had so long desolated the province.

"Quelques travailleurs isolés," he says, "s'égarèrent dans l'immense plaine de Chan-i Chow. La plus vaste et la plus fertile de celles que nous ayons encore vues, elle a subi la même loi que tous les endroits où la rébellion était maîtresse: tout y est en ruines et la population est dispersée."

At Yunnan Fu there were equally plain evidences, but of another kind, of the disturbed condition of the province.

"Dans les rues circulaient des soldats de tous les corps: sur un uniforme bizarre ils portent presque tous une cuirasse; une paire de sabres est attachée à leur ceinture; des bandes de coton de couleur leur font des espèces de jambières; ils sont chaussés de sandales en paille; leurs traits bronzés et plus ou moins accentués, qui contrastent avec les couleurs voyantes de leur accoutrement, contribuent à leur donner une apparence martiale. Tous ces défenseurs du gouvernement, armés en grande partie de lances ou de tridents, encomrent les maisons de thé et les fumoirs d'opium, en attendant que leurs chefs soient disposés à mettre leur bravoure à l'épreuve. De mandarins militaires, porteurs de dépêches expédiées de différents camps, se rendent en hâte aux ya-méns; des metis de Chinois et d'I-jên [or aborigènes] aux vêtements bariolés se frayent avec peine un chemin dans la foule, que les convois de marchandises ou de munitions de guerre rompent à chaque instant."

But another enemy beside the Civil War was making villages and towns desolate in the unfortunate province. An epidemic, peculiar to Yunnan, was raging in certain districts. The disease has been described by Roman Catholic missionaries in Yunnan, but has not received any explanation at their hands. It is said first to attack animals living in the earth, such as rats, which appear in troops above ground, and, after turning round and round, as though giddy, fall dead. Next, buffaloes, cattle and sheep fall victims; and, finally, it attacks human beings. At the first outbreak of the pest in a district, a general exodus of the wealthier people takes place, and those who are too poor to move take every available precaution against its ravages. The symptoms of the disease are very similar to those of the plague. Violent fever is succeeded by the outbreak of tumours either under the arm or on the neck, and, in a vast majority of cases, death is the result.

On his arrival at Yunnan Foo, M. Rocher made several expeditions in the neighbourhood for the purpose of testing the mining resources of the province. These he found, as others have found before him, to be exceptionally rich. Iron, copper, tin, gold, silver, lead, crystal, and coal exist in large quantities; and in times of peace the mining and manufacturing industries provide ample employment for the people. As is always the case, when a superior and an inferior race exist side by side, the hard work is done by the latter; and so in Yunnan mining and steel-making are mainly left to the I-jên, or aborigines, who toil unceasingly that their superiors may enjoy the fruits of their labours. The condition of these I-jên is, generally speaking, deplorable. They dress in tatters, their food is of the coarsest description, and they are literally the "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to the Chinese, who have usurped their territory.

In his first volume M. Rocher devotes a chapter to the history of Yunnan from the reign of Kaou-ti of the Han dynasty (226 B.C.) to the last combined effort made by the aboriginal Miaou-tsze, Man-tsze, Li-su, Hei Lolo, Pai Lolo, Shui Pa-i, and Han Pa-i, in 1775 against the Tartar dynasty. The native works from which he has drawn his information on this subject are trustworthy, and his résumé of them gives a clear though brief record of the fortunes of this strange province. The second volume contains an account of the Mahommedan rebellion which received its coup-de-grâce in the capture of Tali Fu in 1873, when 30,000 inhabitants were put to the sword; and a report on the metallurgy of the province. Both chapters are very interesting, and show that M. Rocher made good use of the two or three years he spent in Yunnan. It is to be regretted, however, that M. Rocher has adopted the Pekingese orthography in transcribing Chinese words and names. The Pekingese is a dialect confined to a very small area, which represents no fixed pronunciation, and is comparatively poor in the number of its syllables. According to Sir Thomas Wade it contains only 420 syllables, while in the Shanghai dialect, which approaches far nearer to Nankingese, the medium dialect of China, there are as many as 660. The result is that syllables which are sounded at Nanking, Kin, Tsin, and Chin, are reduced at Peking to the one syllable Chin; and in the same way Tsi, Chi, and Ki become Chi, and so with many others. The confusion to which this contraction in the number of syllables gives rise in the absence of the native characters may easily be imagined.

ROBERT K. DOUGLAS.

The Popish Kingdome or Reigne of Antichrist
Written in Latin Verse by Thomas Naogeorgus and Englyshed by Barnabe Googe. 1570. Edited by Robert Charles Hope. (Charles Whittingham & Co.)

THIS poem forms a very curious and important link in the development of English verse literature, although it is only a paraphrase. The original was written by a Lutheran whose name was Thomas Kirchmeyer or, as he liked to Hellenise himself, Naogeorgus. So rare, however, is the Latin, and so spirited Googe's English, that we may very well forget that the latter reaches us at second-hand. The poem is extremely rare. The only perfect copy known is in the Cambridge University Library, the Bodleian and one private collector possessing fragments. Googe seems to have been particularly partial to Naogeorgus, for he also took the trouble to translate a long poem by him on "Spiritual Husbandrie."

Barnabe Googe was first introduced to modern readers by Mr. Arber, who reprinted his only known original poems, his Eglogs, Epytaphes, and Sonnettes, in 1871. Until that time he had been entirely overlooked by students of our early Elizabethan literature; nor, indeed, is he, as an original versifier, worthy of much attention. His powers of writing are much better displayed in the translation before us than in his own denunciations of "cruel clownish Coridon." He appears to have been about seventeen years of age when Tottels' Miscellany was published, and to have been among the first of those youths who were stimulated to carry on the tradition of Wyatt and Surrey. The quaint, violent species of humanism that was just then being introduced into English seems to have also affected him, and he was the friend of Alexander Nevill, who translated Seneca. Googe was already writing when the first part of the Mirror for Magistrates made its appearance, and he may be taken as co-eval with the very first glimmer of poetic revival under Elizabeth. Like almost all his contemporaries he affected in verse the rhymed Alexandrine, a couplet of seven ambling feet, which might, at need, be broken into a sort of ballad-measure; this uncouth and lumbering form of verse presenting a real danger to our literature in that time of transition. It was fortunately over-powered by Sackville's sturdy use of more national and sonorous forms. Googe is smooth, voluble, and sometimes forcible in his long, Frenchified line, no worse than Gascoigne, and decidedly better than Edwardes and Churchyard. He did good service in polishing and defining the language, and in tuning the ears of his contemporaries to a brisk and smooth versification. To see how modern he is at his best we must compare his verses with those of Nicholas Udall, who preceded him by less than a generation. Distinctly unimportant as a solitary figure, Gooze becomes interesting as soon as we compare him with his fellows, and assert his place in the progress of English letters.

Mr. Hope gives a memoir of his author which is not so full as the very minute and accurate memoir written by Mr. Arber. The only facts discovered by the later editor seem to be that Gooze was Provost-Marshal of the Presidency Court of Connaught in 1582, that he came to England in September 1583, but returned to Ireland in the following year, and that he surrendered his patent of Provost-Marshal to Barkley on April 24, 1585. These facts, however, unless we are mistaken, are taken from the letters printed by Mr. Pinkerton in Notes and Queries. Mr. Hope cannot be very well acquainted with the history of early English poetry when he says that, "of the minor poets of Queen Elizabeth's reign, there is scarcely one of whom so little is known" as of Barnabe Gooze. It would be more accurate to say that there is scarcely one of whom so much is known. His very love affairs are preserved in a series of stately letters, and his public life has been chronicled almost minutely. It is a curious fact that we know much more about the biographies of the poets before Shakspeare than about those who immediately succeeded him. We should like to know what authority Mr. Hope has for stating that the death of Naogeorgus occurred in 1577. According to Mr. Arber, who is very precise in these matters, he was born in 1511 and died December 29, 1563. There is nothing in Gooze's Preface to show whether the author was at that time alive or dead. The Latin original of the poem was issued at Basle in 1553.

EDMUND W. GOSSE.

THE HISTORY OF LEGAL PROCEDURE IN ENGLAND.

Henrici de Bracton de Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliæ Libri quinque ad diversorum et vetustissimorum codicum collationem typis vulgati. Edited by Sir Travers Twiss. Vols. II. and III. (Rolls Series.)

History of Procedure in England from the Norman Conquest. The Norman Period—1066-1204. By Melville Madison Bigelow, Ph.D. (Sampson Low & Co.)

SINCE the first volume of the Rolls edition of Bracton was noticed in these columns, Sir Travers Twiss has published two more volumes, one of which contains the Second Book De Acquirendo Rerum Dominio, the first treatise of the Third Book De Actionibus, and the second treatise of the Third Book De Corona; and the other, the Assisa Nova Disseysinae, which forms the first part of Bracton's Fourth Book. There remains to be published the concluding portion of the Fourth Book, and the Fifth Book containing the other parts of procedure, of which Bracton has given a detailed account. We trust this will be included in a single volume, for the publication of such a work piecemeal, probably owing to the conditions imposed by the Treasury on the grant for the Rolls series of historical works, cannot be deemed satisfactory. It is specially inconvenient that the editor's contributions to the elucidation of the text should be scattered over a number of prefaces, the matter in which is arranged on no distinct principle, and in part has no direct reference to the contents of the several volumes. It would have been better to have given a general introduction devoted to the life of the author and the history of the text, and to have confined the other prefaces to the subject-matter of the particular volumes.

In the Preface to the second volume, the editor has stated the evidence which establishes a new fact in Bracton's biography, that he held the office of Chancellor in Exeter Cathedral from May 18, 1264, until 1268, and, his successor having been appointed in that year, the date of his death is thereby ascertained. In the Introduction to the third volume, Sir T. Twiss returns again to the subject of Bracton's life in connexion with his position in the Church, and disapproves the conjecture founded on a passage in the work of Bracton himself that he had attained the dignity of Dean. Sir T. Twiss has also well summed up in this Introduction the source and extent of Bracton's knowledge of the Roman law, and pointed out several particulars in which he rejected it as not in accordance with the existing law in England. The most important of these is in the case of the exceptio non numeratæ pecuniæ, which was not there admitted when the receipt of money had been acknowledged in writing. It deserves remark that from the rejection of this exceptio may be traced the origin of the principle which lies at the root of the law of bills of exchange; for, so long as it was allowed, this powerful instrument of modern commerce, of which Roman law was ignorant, could not have come into existence.

The Introduction to the third volume is chiefly devoted to an account of the origin of the Assise of Novel Disseisin, that cardinal institute of the feudal law which, in the expressive words of Bracton, was "contrived and invented after many vigils, with the object of recovering the possession which the party disseysed has lost, unjustly and without judgment." But it is not our intention to attempt a review of Bracton, or to do more than direct attention to the diligence of Sir T. Twiss in carrying on the publication of the new edition. We prefer to devote the remaining space at our disposal to the work of Mr. Bigelow.

This writer, already favourably known to practising lawyers in this country by his Leading Cases on Torts, one of the best specimens of this form of legal literature since Mr. Smith's well-known work, has in his History of Norman Procedure in England and the companion volume of Placita Anglo-Normanica fulfilled the promise indicated in his earlier book, that an important contribution to our knowledge of the history of English law might be expected from his pen. It deserves the fullest recognition, however mortifying to our national vanity, that America has challenged the title of German legal scholars to be the only thorough expositors in the present day of our more ancient law before anything of importance has been done in this direction in England itself.

The essays on Anglo-Saxon law published in 1876 by Messrs. Adams, Lodge, Young, and Laughlin, which we owe an apology for not having sooner noticed, and the present work of Mr. Bigelow, afford a gratifying testimony to the zeal and learning of the school of legal history at Harvard. The credit of the university of Story, Greenleaf, Parsons, and Langdell is being worthily maintained by a new generation of its students. The aim of Mr. Bigelow is one of no ordinary difficulty. Procedure is confessedly the driest part of law. It has too often been also the most unsatisfactory, even in its best form disfigured by complexity and unnecessary subtlety, as in the old English Special Pleading, and in its worst form degenerating into sharp practice. Modern procedure is studied only by practising lawyers, and what class can be expected to study the procedure of a system no longer practised? Yet the hard task which Mr. Bigelow has undertaken with indefatigable industry is to represent in an intelligible manner the procedure of the Norman feudal courts. There are, undoubtedly, persons who will think his labours have been directed to an object disproportionate to the expenditure of time and talent which even the cursory reader of his work must acknowledge. We entertain a different opinion, and believe we can assure him that, though he cannot expect many readers, he will receive the attention of genuine students of the history of law. Procedure is, in fact, when properly understood, the law in action. No knowledge, however minute, of legal propositions can supersede, either as regards the past or the present, the necessity of an acquaintance with the mode by which the law was or is administered if we wish really to understand the action and reaction of law upon society, and the relations of the law to the political constitution. In the case of the Normans legal procedure had even more than its ordinary importance, for they were pre-eminently a litigious race. While a large part of the Anglo-Saxon customs passed into the substance of the common law of England, it is to the Norman influence we must assign most of what ultimately prevailed relating to courts, judges, professional lawyers, and the whole machinery of justice. The Anglo-Saxon system was, in the main, a popular administration of justice by the people, while the Norman was a recondite science which required a highly trained professional class.

After a preliminary chapter on the rules of Criticism, in which Mr. Bigelow takes a sound historical view of the large extent in which Anglo-Saxon law continued during the first century after the Conquest, a chapter is devoted to the interesting but obscure subject of the Danelag, or Danish law, which undoubtedly at one time prevailed north of Watling Street, but afterwards entirely disappeared. We do not think he adds here much to the information to be derived from the references collected in Schmidt's valuable Glossary to the Anglo-Saxon laws.

The explanation of the disappearance of Danish or Danish-Norse law is, probably, that the Northern districts of England were gradually conquered by the successors of Alfred on the throne of Wessex; and that, when the Norman law came to be superinduced on the existing customary law, there was not sufficient divergence between the various customs to enable them to maintain a marked individuality.

The following chapter contains a distinct account of the various courts of the Norman period—the Great Council (Magnum Concilium), which succeeded the Witanagemot, and was sometimes called the Curia Regis, where all the vassals in chief of the Crown were bound to attend; the Ecclesiastical Courts; the lesser King's Court, composed of the King's justiciar and chief officers of the royal household and Barons of the Exchequer, with such of his clerks as the King might summon; the Exchequer, the County Court, the Burgh Court, the Court of the Hundred in Southern and of the Wapentake in Northern England, the Manorial Court, and the Forest Court. In this part of his work we do not think Mr. Bigelow has given sufficient prominence to the widely different extent of jurisdiction conceded to the different classes of vassals, including the Earl or Bishop Palatine, the Baron or Lord, and the Holder of the simple Manor, who might have, or who might not have, a criminal jurisdiction. We should have expected in this connexion that some notice should have been taken of the fact that the criminal jurisdiction of the landowner in Saxon times was in so many cases preserved in the Norman period, as expressed in the Saxon words embedded in so many Norman Charters—"Soc and Sac," "infaengtheof and outfaengtheof," "toll and theme." Probably he may have considered himself absolved from entering into details on these points, as his subject, though not so limited in the title of his work, is civil as distinguished from criminal procedure; but it may be doubted whether this limitation was expedient, for at the period of which he treats the criminal was still the more important branch. The remainder and chief part of Mr. Bigelow's treatise traces a civil suit from its commencement, by writ, through the proceedings prior to the allowance of proof, to the determination of the issue of fact by trial and the final judgment.

The conclusions which Mr. Bigelow adopts are supported by references to the original records—in some instances now published for the first time in the Appendix to the present work; and, even when formerly published, now very conveniently collected in the Placita Anglo-Normannica.

We doubt the advantage of introducing in a subject of itself sufficiently technical a new technical term such as "medial judgment," but certainly Mr. Bigelow is correct in his view that there was a sharp distinction in every suit between the stage prior to the allowance of proof and that subsequent, but prior to final judgment. "At the first term," he says,

"the pleadings were conducted to an issue, followed by a medial or proof judgment addressed to the final test or verdict, and by the giving of security to furnish the required proof. At the second term the test was undergone or the verdict given, supposing the party or parties to have fulfilled the terms of the pledge of security."

What is here called the "medial judgment" is the same thing as the Act of Litiscontestatio in the procedure under the Canon Law. Its important effect both in that procedure and in the Civil Law, from which it had been taken with some modifications, was to constitute a judicial contract to abide by the result of the issue then fixed. It also settled once for all the question whether proof should be allowed—if so, in what form and upon whom lay the onus of proof.

The chief defect we notice in Mr. Bigelow's work is that he has not made sufficient reference to the Canon Law procedure. As the persons who conducted the administration of Norman-English law during the period of which he treats were almost without exception ecclesiastics, it is certain that the influence of the ecclesiastical law must have been very considerable. An examination of the rules which prevailed during the eleventh and twelfth centuries in the administration of ecclesiastical causes would have thrown more light on Mr. Bigelow's own subject than the references to the Norse customs imbedded in the Sagas and Grágás, for the Normans, while retaining the spirit of litigation of their heathen forefathers, had greatly altered its form before the Conquest under Christian influence. The duel was probably the single instance of a survival from pre-Christian times; and the duel soon gave place in England to the Inquisitio or Recognitio, which is the true origin of jury trial. When dealing with the subject of the jurisdiction of the courts Mr. Bigelow has shown himself conscious of the importance of this source of information, but he has not availed himself of it to the same extent when treating of procedure. In one instance where he has done so with good effect, in treating of the introduction of the distinction between petitory and possessory actions (p. 173), which he attributes to the teaching of Vacarius at Oxford in the close of Stephen's reign, it is surely not necessary to refer it to the teaching of any single professor or canonist. There arose undoubtedly an antagonism between the King's courts and lawyers and the Ecclesiastical courts and lawyers in later Norman times, but we do not think this existed in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, and should hesitate to affirm, with Mr. Bigelow, that "the elaborate system of procedure in the Ecclesiastical court made known by the text-books was unknown to the lawyers of the Norman period." This is only true in so far as the elaborate system of the Canonists was not adopted by the law courts. In its leading characteristics it must have been known, and in several of them it was followed by their judges, as we think Mr. Bigelow himself would on reflection admit.

Æ. J. G. MACKAY.

A Little Child's Monument. By the Hon. Roden Noel. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

FEW poets have had the power of uttering the grief which has come closest to them. But, whenever they have done so, their work has made the deep impression which is only possible to Reality; and it is rare to meet with poetry so spontaneous and genuine as that which Mr. Roden Noel has just published under the title of A Little Child's Monument.

It is the utterance of a passionate grief; but it is more than this—it is the brave outcome of a great sorrow, the utterance of the love and sympathy for others which Death, in touching the real depths of human nature, seldom fails to leave behind it, and the utterance, profound and philosophic, of a faith slowly evolved through pain and doubt. James Melville wrote a touching lament for his little son; John Evelyn's prose lament is a poem in its pathos; Shelley tried to utter his grief for his little William, and left a few exquisite lines, which faltered, and broke off abruptly; Mr. Noel states his wider purpose in some of the opening words in the pathetic poem called "At his Grave":—

"I would embalm thee in my verse,
To loving souls it shall rehearse
Thy loveliness when I am cold;
And fragrant with it may enfold
For other hearts in misery
Faint solace."

As this has been his object he would probably seek his real reward from those who will love and remember his little child by the comfort, sympathy, and insight he has been the means of bringing to them; but he will win fame and gratitude from others, for in form and melody these poems are perhaps the most perfect Mr. Noel has yet produced. There is originality in many of the metres, and their musical effect is quite remarkable. So heart-rending is the "Lament" with which the book begins, and so sacred is the grief uttered in it, that even to praise its perfection of form and melody seems sacrilege, and yet it will haunt most readers; and so will the short poems called "Death," "That they all may be One," and "Lead me where the Lily blows."

Mr. Noel's feeling for Nature is rare and fine. He has expressed it before in many published forms, but never with more strength and beauty than in these poems, though there is no morbid colouring thrown upon it by his grief. Its dignity, its unchanging obedience to law, its supreme silence in the face of mortal suffering, are recognised, but they draw forth no weak complaint—they rather lead the sufferer out of self-absorption to the great Unity. This is specially to be seen in the very powerful poem called "In the Corsican Highlands," and also in "Nature and the Dead," "In the Alps," and "Among the Mountains."

The joyous music of the "Southern Spring Carol" seems really born of the beauty it describes; and, with its unique and remarkably melodious metre, it relieves the sadness of some of the preceding subjects. The same may be said of two exquisite little poems—"Flower to Flower" and "Vale"—which come almost immediately after the longest and in some ways the most important poem in the volume—"De Profundis." In "De Profundis," which is divided into two parts, called severally Nay and Yea, Mr. Noel has rapidly reviewed with condensed strength the pessimist position,

"Warring, we swarm to scale a phantom height
We whose feet fail in some drear infinite;"

and makes his way through suffering, sorrow, and complex thought to a victorious optimism.

The belief of those who desire that "the race prove conqueror though we fall;" the hypotheses of the "inevitable blind, dull monster, Force" and of "a God of divided will;" the dissatisfaction of man, whose "infinite opening eyes" reveal to him a wider range than has dawned upon the animals from whom he has ascended; the increasing anguish of his spirit as the Love which he hoped ruled all seems to falter, make up a powerful "Nay." And the "Yea" which follows is no soporific of accepted commonplace; it is a closely argued answer embracing and welding together much philosophic thought, both old and new. It opens with the question,

"And what if all the death and all the dolor
Do but imbue with life of lustrous colour
Alien natures?"

The definition of sacrifice given in the lines which follow is very fine, and will be new to many readers; it awards a value to suffering, and gives hope. The poet goes on to argue that we know only one phase of all that we call "failure;" only the form that reaches our senses of all that we call "lost" among living things; and that we judge by partial knowledge when passing sentence "against that Mother-heart of all the world" which guards and works the good of all.

"All are in all they were, and yet shall be Dawning to conscious self-identity;
For all is spirit, and the world is wrought
In one live loom of myriad-minded thought."

"One sovran Being" is expressing itself in all, and nothing survives but that which helps to its completion; even the alien realms of being

"Where every pilgrim haply halts in fleeing
From God to God, accomplishing the round Allotted,"

have their value in the accomplishment of the whole. The great fact of Death must have its place in Progress, and with increasing force and music the poem repeats the keynote of the whole book:

"Love may not compass her full harmony Wanting the deep dread note of those who die."

The writer has evidently been influenced by Kant, Hegel, Fichte, &c., as well as by English writers of a later date. But he has worked out his own high thought for himself; and, whether his readers agree with his conclusions or not, they cannot but feel that in many parts of "De Profundis" Mr. Noel has set his philosophy to beautiful music, and that his poem is both original and powerful.

Many sad hearts will have cause to bless the little child who lives still in the verses called "Old Scenes Revisited," in "Azrael," "Music and the Child," and "The Toy Cross," which are too touching to be quoted; and such a poem as "The Sea shall give up her Dead," which some will feel to be the most perfect in the volume, ought to be quoted entire to do it justice. It is better, therefore, to give some of the concluding lines of the Southern Spring Carol as characteristic of the feeling as well as of the melody of the book.

"All the valley sings!
And rings and rings!
Ah! Nature never would have power
To breathe such ecstasy of flower,

Vernal songs of happy birds,
The young rill's delicious words,
No iris hues might bring to birth,
No heart were hers for any mirth,
If he were turned to common earth!
If a child so fair, so good,
Were a waif on Lethe's flood,
If a soul-source of feeling, seeing,
Were blotted from the realms of being!
She from all delight would start
With such a horror at her heart
She would reel dissolved, and faint,
With deep dishonour of the taint!
The very girders of her hall
Crushed, her stately floor would fall.
Ourselves are the foundation-stone;
If thought fail, the world is gone;
All were ruined, wanting one.
But all the valley sings!
Nature rises on immortal wings!
And soaring, lo! she sings! she sings!
There is no death!

She saith.
O Spring! O Spring! O Southern Spring,
What a triumphal song you sing!"

F. M. OWEN.

NEW NOVELS.

The Wards of Plotinus. By Mrs. John Hunt. In 3 vols. (Strahan.)

An English Squire. By C. R. Coleridge. In 3 vols. (Sampson Low.)

Under Sun and Moon. By A. M. Ellis. In 3 vols. (Newman.)

The C Minor and The Vicar of Ristock. By E. D. N. (Newman.)

NOVELS about the early Christians are among the books which we could not read if we would, and would not if we could. In their flickering phantasmagoria of classical manners they degrade poor Bekker to vile uses; they bubble over with pious chatter wherein the last-baked religious views yet hot from the press are stuck over with such musty plums as "O," and "Thou," and "Ye;" they are usually long and invariably amorous. We do not, therefore, scruple to own that we have not perused Mrs. Hunt's work. But to pass judgment upon certain cheeses a few tastes suffice; it is surely not necessary to gorge oneself to the last crumb. We have examined The Wards of Plotinus quite carefully enough to feel justified in giving them a Pass Testament, which, however, only signifies that the book is no worse than might fairly be expected. Two differentiæ distinguish it as belonging to the ultra-illimitably broad species; it is even unusually interjectional and vocative, while it leaves a hazy impression that the Christians were not exactly martyrs, and that the real martyrs were not precisely Christian. This imitation of Hypatia and monument of "mingled feelings of gratitude and admiration to the Dean of Westminster" probably does more than justice to "the divine Plotinus," who was no doubt, like most Neo-platonists, a very respectable person, but hardly a model for the Churchman of the future. The morbid craving for outward fellowship between ecclesiastical opponents—that modern Truga Dei of sleek compliment and rampant condescension—naturally represents Plotinus and Pope Fabian as close cronies hob-nobbing together over the religious questions of the day, and, of course, very genially agreeing to differ. Nothing could be more audacious. There is every reason to believe that Plotinus never knew anything or cared to know anything about the Nazarenes; his acquaintance, much more his intimacy, with the Pope is well-nigh impossible. In fact, the story is practically a polemic in spite of its rhapsodical style. Quintilia, "like a Juno with a tunic full of flowers and a countenance full of thought," is but a tragedy-queen beside Chaucer's gentle virgin; and as for the Neoplatonic oracle, he wants but a shovel-hat and a thin coat of clerical varnish to turn him out a widely popular Church dignitary. The covers of the book present a scene of Roman idolatry so gorgeous and seductive that we wish it may not counteract the sincere but rather diffusive piety inside.

An English Squire is a good book with not a few faults. The main idea, which, however, the author candidly ascribes to a friend's invention, is an excellent one. Mr. Lester, a Westmoreland squire, has three big sons and one big daughter, as boisterous, as habitually al fresco, as fond of dogs and horses, and as deeply prejudiced against foreigners as the most terribly English squire need pray for. But none of these rosy savages shall be heir of Oakby; but, instead, an odious "Frenchman"—dark, proud, and horribly foreign—his son by a previous marriage with a Spanish lady. Educated at Seville by his maternal relations, and, as we think, incredibly neglected by his father, the heir is at last summoned home, to be treated with insufferable impertinence by his brethren. Much skill is shown in the analysis of Alvar's character, and in the contrast of his indifference and laxity of principle with the dogmatic rectitude of the young insulars. Well might they be shocked as, the first morning after family prayers, Alvar enquires, "My father is then a member of the Clerical party?" and when asked in return, "But you are a Protestant, aren't you?" replies, "Oh, yes! I have been so instructed; but I don't interest myself in the subject;" politely adding, amid the general consternation, "I shall, of course, conform. I am not an infidel; but I leave those things to your—clergy, do you not call them?" But we fear that the too lively faith of the writer in the saving merits of model squirearchy will cause the reader to lean to the weaker side. It is too bad to expect Alvar all at once to endure the playful teeth of darling Buffer, to visit the homes of the peasantry, and to excite himself about his neighbours' intangible landmarks and tangible daughters. The contrast is, however, pushed much too far. If Alvar were really so unprincipled and indocile as he is painted he would have behaved much worse; and in any case his sudden and causeless reformation into a very fine squire indeed, just as the curtain falls, is perfectly absurd. On the other hand, if the brothers had really had but the common feelings of the British prig, they would hardly have outraged the honour and courteous affection of a gentleman—a stranger and a brother—even if he did wear a long cloak and jabber foreign tongues. The hero is the second brother, a young man who is all that an undergraduate should be but is not, and whom everybody, including the reader, is to condole with on being thus supplanted by the exile, who, by-the-way, worships him with romantic devotion. This sympathy is mere nonsense. The favourite had by his father's folly usurped a position to which he and all the world knew he had no right, and his magnanimous efforts throughout to suppress his outraged feelings do not touch us in the least. His calf-love is betrayed by a fickle girl. From this blow he never rallies. His health gives way, and much of the book is needlessly taken up by his relapses and recoveries. He ends as a valetudinarian curate. Too much attention is drawn to family noses, chins, and other branches of physiognomics; but there are far more good points than bad in the book, though, as a whole, it fails to do justice to the promise of its plot.

Under Sun and Moon is the work, or rather the play, of one who has evidently never written before, and we should imagine will never venture to write again. Its jargon approximates nearest to English, betraying, however, in such expressions as "abscension," "acuity," "domicilian collapse," a Low-Latin influence, not without some tendency to such Gallicisms as "mirabeau feathers." The story is sensational and improbable to frenzy; we dare not touch its details—they are too distracting. But, strangely enough, amid these cyclones of emotion and waterspouts of verbiage, may be detected some shrewd touches of character and several sallies of humour. But the final, the only, impression left is that of the style—an impudent juggling with words devoid of meaning.

The two stories by E. D. N. are very prettily told. In plot the second is not quite satisfactory. It turns upon the introduction of a young vicar, well born, well educated, well meaning, but as yet unconverted, to one of those Northern manufacturing towns where Dissent is practically established, and where, if the parson holds the cure of souls, the rich Nonconformist churchwardens hold the cure of the parson. This curious phase of ecclesiastical polity is truthfully and graphically described. But though the vicar might fairly be staggered at the tone of genial tolerance in the private, and of schismatic virulence in the public, utterances of those Radical circles which for intelligence, refinement, and hospitality formed a local L'au bourg St. Germain, where the clergy were received with the scrupulous respect due to a fallen cause, he might with a stronger head have satisfied himself that there was nothing in this state of things to disturb or undermine his convictions. As it is, the wit and beauty of Miss Lenard convince him that the Church is so wrong and Dissent so right, and both so terribly alike, that he sinks into a state of self-reprobatation, seeking and not finding the light, till, worn down in health and spirits, he resigns his living, marries the fair Congregationalist, and is at peace. The authors has here touched, but hardly tried to grapple with, some weighty matters; but after all, if the insight of these people is not quite of the keenest and steadiest, it is at least clear and honest, and they are pleasant people to read about. The C Minor, sadly as it closes, is a beautiful little love-story—the chronicle of an affection which ran its course gently and modestly, without rocks or whirlpools, from first to last. Margaret is a reduced gentlewoman, who settles at Orchester to support her parents by teaching singing. There she meets the great violinist, Beringer, a man of rich and warm affections, but hitherto of careless and even self-indulgent life. Her easy force of character and unaffected worth charm and invigorate him at a time when he was yielding to the artist's fate, and beginning to make his life, apart from his art, a mere thing of pleasant luxury. On both sides it was a timid, delicate love, too nearly connected with her habitual and his newly awakened religious feeling to venture at first beyond the bounds of a musical camaraderie. It is the freshness of home influence, and of well-ordered and right-meaning conduct, which lends to this simple courtship its fragrance and delicacy. Love in most of our novels, even in the pious ones, is but a conventional travesty of coarse amours. For even from its own artistic point of view, the fleshly school must be, at least in this country, a failure, since in fidelity to principles, in veracity, in luxuriant freedom, its most refined productions must pale before the obscenities of the illicit press. It is the love, not of bears and lions, but of reasoning beings, which this unpretending writer has described—a love which is but the gathering together and summing-up of all previous natural and generous impulses, trained, corrected—nay, even intensified—by lives of sober thought and worthy action. E. PURCELL.

CURRENT THEOLOGY.

The Human Race, and other Sermons, preached at Cheltenham, Oxford, and Brighton. By the late Rev. Frederick W. Robertson. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) This volume contains some thirty sermons preached mostly at Brighton, and ranging in date from April 1846 to Christmas 1852. Many of these are printed from autograph notes; but in two early sermons we have specimens of what was very rare with Robertson, sermons written out by himself in extenso. We have to confess to a feeling of disappointment in laying down the book. It need not be said that there is here much that is beautiful and happily expressed; but we cannot but say to ourselves, "We have heard all this before." The reader obtains no new impression either of the genius of Robertson or of the characteristic attitude of his thought. We are given no hint as to why the publication of these sermons has been so long delayed, but one cannot help guessing that the contents of this volume are in good part what was laid aside when the earlier volumes appeared.

Dr. Christian Karl Josias Freiherrn v. Bunsen's Allgemeines evangelisches Gesang- und Gebetbuch zum Kirchen- und Hausgebrauch. In völlig neuer Bearbeitung von Albert Fischer. (Gotha: F. A. Perthes.) The publication of Albert Fischer's Kirchenlieder-Lexikon made it clear to whom should be entrusted such an improved edition of Baron Bunsen's hymn-book as was demanded by more recent researches in German hymnology. The editor has taken great pains to supply, as far as possible, in the foot-notes the original words of the author of each hymn when it was not, for good reasons, thought suitable to restore them to the text. In very many instances stanzas omitted by Bunsen have been duly inserted; and many hymns from old sources not noticed by Bunsen are now given places. This new edition is not in every particular a complete substitute for the original of 1833; but, taken as a whole, it is much to be preferred, and will be indispensable to all students of the literature of sacred song in which Germany is so rich.

Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the New Testament.—The Epistle to the Ephesians and the Epistle to Philemon. By Heinrich August Wilhelm Meyer, Th.D. From the German, with the sanction of the Author. Revised and edited by Prof. William P. Dickson, D.D. (Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark.) Messrs. Clark are issuing Lünemann's and Huther's volumes which appeared in Germany in this series under the editorship of Meyer; but as the present volume completes the translation of Meyer's own great and original contributions, and as with it Prof. Dickson ceases to be responsible, it would seem a suitable opportunity for acknowledging the valuable service that has been done to the cause of New Testament exegesis in England by the publication of this admirable work. The student of the New Testament now possesses in English what, without question, surpasses in general excellence any commentary (covering the same extent) which has appeared in this country. The task undertaken by Meyer was herculean; but with extraordinary energy and perseverance, and with unfailing ability, he succeeded in himself writing the commentaries on the whole of the New Testament with the exception of the Pastoral and Catholic Epistles, Thessalonians, Hebrews, and the Apocalypse. On special portions of the New Testament—notably on three or four of the Pauline Epistles—we have had given us by writers of our own country commentaries that, to say the least, quite take rank with the best work Germany has produced. But in estimating the character of such labours as those of Meyer, quantity as well as quality must necessarily be taken into account. And nowhere do we know of similar work which maintains on the whole so high a standard of merit over a space so wide. Prof. Dickson has performed his task with scrupulous care. He has superintended the translation throughout, has in many instances corrected errors of reference in the original, and has, in fact, given students a thoroughly trustworthy and serviceable book.

Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the New Testament. Edited by H. A. W. Meyer, Th.D. The Epistles to the Thessalonians. By Dr. Gottlieb Lünemann, Professor of Theology in the University of Göttingen. Translated from the third edition of the German by Rev. Paton J. Gloag, D.D. (Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark.) Meyer did not fail to secure a collaborator of kindred spirit in Lünemann; and if the work, as might be expected, is not of equal merit with Meyer's own, it is through no fault of method.

Some Helps for School Life: Sermons preached at Clifton College, 1862-1879. By the Rev. J. Percival, President of Trinity College, Oxford, and late Head-Master of Clifton College. (Rivingtons.) This volume is a parting gift from Dr. Percival, and will no doubt be greatly appreciated by those with whom he was associated at Clifton. We have here some meritorious specimens of the rare art of sermon-writing suitable to the chapel of a great school—not equal, indeed, to Vaughan's Memorials of Harrow Sundays or Temple's Rugby Sermons, but still, in the extraordinary dearth of such good things, to be thankfully acknowledged.

The Preacher's Pocket: a Packet of Sermons. By the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, M.A. (Skeffington and Son.) Mr. Baring-Gould tells us that these sermons "appeal to educated minds." "The preacher is bound to think of those who sit under him on Sunday, and who in mental powers are above the ordinary level of his humble parishioners, and occasionally give them something that will set them thinking." And we are bound to say that this lively and entertaining little volume, with its singular freedom from pulpit platitudes and pulpit conventionalities, "sets us thinking" of this at least—that an occasional visit from Mr. Baring-Gould would make a very agreeable variety to what most British church-goers are accustomed. We have noted more especially the courageous discourse on the Song of Solomon, and the clever application of the story of Shakspeare's Midsummer Night's Dream in sermon xii.

The Cambridge Bible for Schools.—The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Romans, with Introduction and Notes, by Rev. H. C. Moule, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; The Gospel according to St. John, with Maps, Notes, and Introduction, by Rev. A. Plummer, Master of University College, Durham; The Book of the Prophet Jeremiah, together with the Lamentations, with Map, Notes, and Introduction, by the Rev. A. W. Streane, Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. (Cambridge University Press.) The modesty of the general title of this series has, we believe, led many to misunderstand its character and underrate its value. The books are well suited for study in the upper forms of our best schools, but not the less are they adapted to the wants of all Bible students who are not specialists. We doubt, indeed, whether any of the numerous popular commentaries recently issued in this country will be found more serviceable for general use. Whatever differences there may be among scholars as to the treatment of "authenticity," "integrity," and other questions of "the higher criticism," we are confident that the exegetical part of the work will be generally regarded as performed in a very satisfactory manner. These three recent additions to the series are all good, and amply sustain the credit of the work. The large human interests connected with the Prophecies and Lamentations of Jeremiah are admirably brought out by Mr. Streane.

Natural Elements of Revealed Theology: being the Baird Lectures for 1881. By the Rev. George Matheson, D.D., Minister of Inellan. (Nisbet and Co.) The design of these lectures "is to ascertain to what extent the doctrines of revealed religion have a basis in the natural instincts of the human mind." Dr. Matheson contends that modern Theism is itself historically dependent for its results upon Christianity; that in its present form it is "simply Christianity with the figure of Christ left out." Willingly or unwillingly, the modern Theist lives and moves in a Christian atmosphere. Dr. Matheson argues with force that even that article in which Lord Herbert puts personal penitence in the place of the expiation of wrong is a result of characteristically Christian thought, and denies that we can judge of the results of unassisted reason in the discovery of religious truth by any systems subsequent to the promulgation of Christianity. As a whole, the lectures leave the impression of being thoughtful musings rather than cogent and closely wrought arguments. We have noted several instances of looseness both in thought and expression. Of these we may particularise the fact that Dr. Matheson in a criticism of Butler's Analogy falls into the common error (from which even the title-page of Butler's great work might have guarded him) that the subject treated is the analogy between natural and revealed religion. Again, we have an odd specimen of mixed metaphor (at p. 217): "Reason is the goal of faith, and faith only the schoolmaster to prepare for the goal." Ugly errata of the press have also been allowed to escape without correction.

A Guide to the Study of Theology: adapted more especially to the Oxford Honour School. By the Rev. F. H. Woods, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford. (Oxford: J. Thornton.) With the limitation indicated in the title this little book may be said to be a useful guide. Here may be had counsel how to utilise to the best advantage the short time at the disposal of a candidate for honours. What studies will "pay" best; how you can score in Liturgia in the period which, if devoted to Hebrew, would leave you nowhere; and such-like problems are all discussed.

The Symmetry of Time: being an Outline of Biblical Chronology adapted to a Continuous Succession of Weeks of Years. From the Creation of Adam to the Exodus. By R. Godfrey Faussett. (Parker.) A beautifully printed work, which attests the author's pious enthusiasm for the chronological theories of his father. Starting from those, he has, however, developed still further in the direction of pseudo-scientific chronology. He is "able to suggest the date of the fall and of the creation of Eve," and finds chronologically supported parallels between the institution of circumcision and the Crucifixion, between the death of Sarah and the annulling of the Law, between the death of Abraham and the destruction of Jerusalem, and between the marriage of Esau and the falling away of the Jew. The author, however, makes a useful remark here and there—e.g., where he points out the agreement of the Septuagint version of the Flood story with the Babylonian myth in the "Izdubar" series with regard to the raven. Otherwise, we fear his labours are wasted.

Commentary on the Psalms. By the late Dr. G. H. A. v. Ewald. Translated by the Rev. E. Johnson, M.A. Vol. II. (Williams and Norgate.) We have said enough already on the high merit of Ewald in bringing out the tone and connexion of thought of the Psalms. The translation is fair, but not equal in accuracy to that of the companion-work on the Prophets.

Das Buch Hiob für geistliche und gebildete Laien. Uebersetzt und kritisch erläutert von Dr. G. L. Studer. (Bremen: Heinsius.) The author, a veteran Old Testament scholar, has already made valuable contributions to the difficult question of the origin of Job, and now bases upon these a general survey of the book. No German or English work with which we are acquainted will be of greater service to the lay-reader.

WE have also received the second volume of the new and improved edition of Hagenbach's History of Christian Doctrines (Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark); The Gospels distributed into Meditations for Every Day of the Year, and arranged according to the Harmony of the Four Evangelists, by l'Abbé Duquesne, translated from the French and adapted to the use of the Church of England, Vols. I. and II. (Oxford: J. Parker and Co.); Our Religion as it Was and as it Is, by Rev. R. J. Laidlaw (Toronto: Hunter, Rose, and Co.); The Church at Home: a Series of Short Sermons, by Rowley Hill, Bishop of Sodor and Man (Cassell and Co.); The Life of David (Bible Class Primers), by the late Rev. J. Thomson, A.M., St. Fergus (Edinburgh: Macniven and Wallace); Rest Awhile: Addresses to Toilers in the Ministry, by C. J. Vaughan, Dean of Llandaff and Master of the Temple (Macmillan); The Grounds and Principles of Religion, by John Wright (Williams and Norgate); Quærenda; or, Two Historical Secrets: The Romance of Solomon; The Lamp of Allah (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.); Notes and Extracts on Misunderstood Texts, by Mrs. MacLachlan, Sen., of MacLachlan (James Nisbet and Co.); Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph, by Marcus Dods, D.D. (Edinburgh: Macniven and Wallace); The Imitation of Christ, in four books, by Thomas a Kempis (John Hodges); The Migration from Shinar; or, the Earliest Links between the Old and New Continents, by Capt. George Palmer, B.N. (Hodder and Stoughton); In Prospect of Sunday: a Collection of Analyses, Arguments, &c., for the Use of Preachers and Teachers, by Rev. G. S. Bowes (Nisbet and Co.); &c.

NOTES AND NEWS.

A REMARKABLE old Bible is likely soon to arrive in this country from Germany. It was printed in 1533 under the direction of Daniel Bomberg. It then passed into the possession of Andreas Wessling, who obtained from his celebrated contemporaries, Luther and Melancthon, autograph commentaries on certain theological subjects, and these are found bound up in the volume, the binding being of wood. Martin Luther wrote three octavo pages in Latin, and Melancthon two pages and a-half. This Bible was once in the collection of the celebrated Count Zinzendorf, the founder of the sect of Moravian Brethren, who received considerable attention from John Wesley when he visited England.

MESSRS. GILBERT AND RIVINGTON, the well-known successors of Watts as Oriental printers, have just published a beautifully printed specimen book of some 150 examples of their foreign (especially Oriental) types and Roman transliterations. Some of these were prepared from MSS. in the British Museum, or from designs supplied by Canon Cureton, Prof. Wright, Dr. E. W. Lane, Mr. Redhouse, and other Orientalists; and the whole collection may be safely said to stand unrivalled for elegance, clearness, and variety. Among especially fine types the double pica Coptic, estrangela Syriac, greatprimer Persian, longprimer Arabic No. 1, Syro-Chaldaic, small pica Irish, Schwabacher German, and pica Greek may be signalled. It is interesting to compare this volume with another book of specimens which lies before us. The latter is the Proeve der Drukkerye van Mr. Abraham Elzevier (Leyden, 1713), which contain a good many Oriental types. There can be no doubt, from this comparison, how immense the progress has been in the art of type-cutting, as exemplified in Oriental founts, though we will not blaspheme, bibliographically speaking, so far as to say that we can turn out more artistic little editions than the Elzeviers.

MR. TENNYSON has come to town for a few months.

PROF. NICHOL's long-expected volume, The Death of Themistocles, and other Poems, will, we understand, be published immediately by Mr. MacLehose, the Glasgow University publisher, who will also have ready at the same time an important volume on Kant and his English Critics: a Comparison of Critical and Empirical Philosophy, by Prof. Watson, Queen's University, Kingston, Canada.

WE hear that Prof. Nichol has also in preparation a volume of essays entitled Critical Estimates, which will include papers on Carlyle, Tennyson, Macaulay, Dickens, and Thackeray. Mr. MacLehose will be the publisher.

AN historical work of equal magnitude and value is being taken in hand in America. It is proposed to publish a series of volumes, eight in all, under the general title of A Narrative and Critical History of America, with bibliographical and descriptive essays on the historical sources and authorities. The editor will be Mr. Justin Winsor, librarian of Harvard University, who was also the editor of the Memorial History of Boston, after which the present work will, to some extent, be modelled. He will be assisted by a committee of the Massachusetts Historical Society, and arrangements for co-operation are being made with other historical and antiquarian societies. The first volume to be issued will be vol. iii., entitled English Discoveries and Settlements in America, and their Relations to those of Other Europeans on the Continent. It is hoped that this will be ready before the end of 1882, and that henceforth two volumes will be published in the year. Each volume will be a complete monograph, while the succession will constitute one homogeneous work. Portraits, views, maps, autographs, and other illustrative matter will be given.

It has been determined to reprint, with Mr. Walt Whitman's consent, the essays prefixed to the first edition of Leaves of Grass (1855), as the best statement of the poet's aims and views from his own pen. This essay was republished in Mr. W. M. Rossetti's Selections (now out of print); but it is not contained in the "Author's Edition" of Complete Works now in circulation. It will be published as a pamphlet by Messrs. Trübner and Co.

WE learn that Mrs. Oliphant will contribute to the forthcoming number of Macmillan's Magazine an article on Carlyle's Reminiscences, largely enriched by personal recollections of the illustrious writer.

THE Head-master of the High School, Harcourt Street, Dublin, Mr. William Wilkins, of Trinity College, is about to issue a volume of his old college poems.

THE Rev. F. Nutcombe Oxenham has in the press a volume in reply to Dr. Pusey's late treatise in support of the doctrine on everlasting punishment, to be published by Messrs. Rivington.

THE same publishers have also in the press a new work by Canon Luckock, entitled Four Epochs of Worship in the Church of England—I. The Anglican Reform; II. The Puritan Innovations; III. The Elizabethan Reaction; IV. The Carolinian Settlement.

MESSRS. TRÜBNER will at an early date publish American Politics, by Ch. G. Rumelin, of Cincinnati.

A NEW novelette by Mrs. Mortimer Collins, The Woodleighs of Amscote, is passing through the press, and will shortly be issued in one of Messrs. Sonnenschein and Allen's series of juvenile books.

MESSRS. SONNENSCHN AND ALLEN's further announcements include an illustrated Manual of Insects injurious to Agriculture, by E. A. Ormerod; a Student's Manual of German Literature, by E. Nicholson; a second edition of Prantl's Elementary Text-book of Botany, revised by Dr. J. H. Vines; and several other minor educational works, all of which are to appear very shortly.

WE understand that a third edition, revised and considerably enlarged, of The Catholic Doctrine of the Atonement, by the Rev. H. N. Oxenham, is in the press, and will be issued in the course of a week or two by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., 13 Waterloo Place.

WE take the following from the Revue Critique:—The edition of Euclid's complete works, including his treatise on music, which Teubner has long undertaken to publish, has been entrusted to the joint editorship of J. L. Heiberg, of Copenhagen, and Menge, of Glogau. The first volume has just been published (Leipzig: Brockhaus) of the Memoiren zur Zeitgeschichte of Oscar Meding, known in literature by the pseudonym of Gregor Samaroff, but in politics as the confidential adviser of the late King George V. of Hanover. This volume is entitled Vor dem Sturm, and covers the period from 1860 to 1866. A second will deal with the events of 1866, and a third will carry contemporary history down to 1870.

FOLLOWING a successful English exemplar, Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin and Co., of Boston, announce a series of "American Men and Women of Letters," to be edited by Mr. James T. Fields. Among those already promised are Washington Irving, by Mr. Charles Dudley Warner; Noah Webster, by Mr. Horace E. Scudder; and N. P. Willis, by Mr. T. B. Aldrich. A series of "American Statesmen," edited by Mr. J. T. Morse, is also in preparation. The same publishers have made arrangements to bring out an American edition of the stories and novels of Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson, translated by Prof. R. B. Anderson, of the University of Wisconsin.

IN Russia, hitherto, as, indeed, at all universities except those of the old English type, the students have lived in private houses as each pleased. A scheme is now taking shape to provide for them common lodging-houses. The first of these, the gift of a merchant named Lepeschchine, was formally opened at Moscow on March 3, the anniversary of the accession of the late Czar. At Odessa the municipality has offered a large area of vacant ground for the same purpose.

DR. WALDSTEIN, a learned young American of German extraction, is now lecturing for a third term at Cambridge to good audiences on Greek art. He lectures twice a day, three days a week. We hear that when Mr. Lowell, the American Minister, on a late visit to Cambridge was informed of his young countryman's success, he humorously expressed his satisfaction that, among all the dead-meat importations into England from America, there was a living lecturer on Greek art for Cambridge use.

PROF. SEELEY has been lecturing at Cambridge for nearly a year on the early history of Napoleon, his life in Corsica, and the way in which he worked to the front during the first period of the Revolution. We believe that the lectures will, after due revision by means of unpublished State papers, form a book by way of companion to the Professor's great work on Stein. So full has Mr. Seeley's lecture-room been that late-comers have found in it no space for them.

NEWMHAM has now taken its rightful name of "College," and its girl undergraduates fill both its North and South Halls, for it has had to be doubled since it began. An amusing anecdote is told of the way in which the Premier's daughter has made herself almost a necessity in every part of the college life. How she fills her place in the highest section of it is known to all; but a few months ago the gas in a lecture-room went out, and at once rose the familiar cry, "Where's Miss Gladstone?" She was the one to set everything right.

THE April number of London Society will contain the narrative of "A Night among the Nihilists of St. Petersburg."

WE hear that M^{me}. Antoinette Sterling has written an article on "How to Sing in Public," and Sir Julius Benedict has contributed a new song to the April number of the Girl's Own Paper.

THE Rev. J. C. Bellett has made a translation of Pelliccia's work on Christian Antiquities and Ritualism. Pelliccia, who died in 1822, was an Italian ecclesiastic of great antiquarian learning, and his book was edited by an equally learned German Lutheran, so that it may be said to be Catholic, more than Roman Catholic, in tone, evincing sympathy with the Eastern and ancient Anglican branches of the Church, as well as with the Roman. Mr. Bellett would be glad to receive the names of subscribers towards his proposed publication at 12 Napier Road, Kensington.

At the meeting of the Académie des Inscripttions et Belles-Lettres on March 4, M. Delisle read a paper upon two MSS. which once belonged to the library of Charles V. (1364-80). One of these, now in the Royal Library at Brussels, is a French translation, or, rather, paraphrase, of the Meteorologica, a treatise attributed to Aristotle. The MS. was written for Charles V. himself; but the translation was executed by one Mathieu de Vilain, and is dedicated to a son of John of Brienne, King of Jerusalem, who died in 1270. Two Latin translations of the Meteorologica are known to have existed in the Middle Ages—one from the original Greek and the other from the Arabic. The French version was made from the former of these. The second of the two MSS. referred to is now in private hands. It is the second part of a Franciscan breviary, written and illuminated in the highest style of French art in the fourteenth century. From internal evidence, M. Delisle infers that it was executed for Jeanne d'Evreux, wife of Charles the Fair. The Inventory of the library of Charles V. proves that it contained at least 1,240 volumes, of which only seventy can now be traced, and of these forty-one are in the Bibliothèque Nationale.

At the last meeting of the Spanish Academy, on March 6, a new member was admitted in the person of Señor Marcelino Menéndez Pelágo, who has attained this honour, as well as that of a professorial chair in the University of Madrid, at the early age of twenty-three. He chose as the subject of his inaugural address "The Mystic Poetry of Spain," thus giving himself the opportunity of displaying the orthodox sympathies by which, no less than by his precocious erudition, he has earned the name of "a second Donoso Cortes."

WE share the pleasure of the Revue Critique in announcing that a new periodical has made its appearance in France devoted to the study of inscriptions, of which so many still remain either unpublished or imperfectly understood. It is called the Bulletin épigraphique de la Gaule; the editor is M. Florian Vallentin, who has collected round him a distinguished staff of collaborateurs; and it is published by Champion, 15 Quai Malagais, Paris.

M. E. PERSON has just published (Baudry) from the original text, with Introduction and notes, Joachim du Bellay's La Deffence et Illustration de la Langue francoyse.

WE learn from Polybiblion that the MS. of an unpublished éloge of Montesquieu by Marat has just been discovered in the municipal library of Bordeaux. It was sent in for the prize offered by the Academy of Bordeaux in 1785.

WE are requested to remind our readers that the subscription list of the Art Union of London will close on the 31st inst.

AMONG the recent additions to the Patent Museum at South Kensington, says the Printing Times, is an Anglo-American "Arab" printing machine, which has been placed by the side of the old wooden press traditionally said to be the one used by Benjamin Franklin.

FROM the same source we learn that the total value of the export during the year 1880 of paper, stationery, and printed books reached the large sum of £2,800,000.

M^{me}. LEBRUN, the widow of the poet and Academician, has recently died at the great age of eighty-nine. The little town of Provins, Seine-et-Marne, hitherto known chiefly for its rose-gardens, benefits largely under her will. She has bequeathed to it the library of her husband, containing about six thousand volumes, together with a modest endowment for the library and the librarian, and a few works of art.

HENRI CONSCIENCE, the popular Flemish novelist, is on the point of publishing his hundredth volume. It is proposed by a Belgian paper, the Zweep, to celebrate the occasion by "une manifestation d'hommage."

THE annual meetings of the delegates of the French learned societies and of the fine-art societies of the departments will take place at the Sorbonne, April 20-23.

SOME interesting sales of books and autographs have taken place recently at the Hôtel Drouot. The collection of M. E. Quentin Bauchard, the catalogue of which comprised only sixty numbers, but which realised a total of 105,300 frs., possessed a peculiar interest for amateurs of the art of bookbinding; it was specially rich in examples of the art of Trautz Bauzonnet. Daphnis et Cloe, Amyot's translation (1718), bound by Padeloup, and bearing the arms of the Regent Orleans, which fetched 6,000 frs. at the Brunet sale in 1868, was new knocked down for 17,500 frs. At a sale of autographs from the Charavay collection, a letter from the Comte de Chambord to M. Villemain fetched 995 frs.; twenty-two letters of Prince Metternich, 227 frs. each; a letter of Peter the Great, 85 frs.; of Rachel, 410 frs.; of Richelieu, 40 frs.; of M^{de} de Maintenon, 390 frs.; of Louis XIV., 300 frs.; of the Prince de Condé, 410 frs.; and of Bossuet, 70 frs.

WE learn from the Publishers' Weekly (New York) that Mr. Parton's Life of Voltaire will be brought out in April, in two volumes, by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin and Co. Messrs. Lippincott have issued a new "household edition" of Chambers' Encyclopaedia. It is in ten large octavo volumes, containing about 8,300 pages and 4,000 illustrations. The price in cloth is only 15 dols. (£3).

THE Nation states that Messrs. Ginn and Heath have in preparation a series of editions of Greek authors, under the general editorship of Prof. White, of Harvard, and Prof. Packard, of Yale. The editions will appear in two forms—one with the notes under the text, the other with the text alone. Messrs. Putnam's Sons will publish later in the year the third volume of Prof. Tyler's History of American Literature, covering the Revolutionary period.

M. JULES OPPERT, the celebrated Assyriologist, has been elected a member of the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, in the room of the late Mariette-Pasha. The other candidates were MM. François Lenormant and Henri Weil. It may be as well to state that it is not the Académie Française to which M. Oppert has been elected.

ON March 13 the Swiss celebrated the centenary of the birth of the author of their national hymn "Rufst du, mein Vaterland." Johann Rudolf Wyss was born at Bern, March 13, 1781. His father was a clergyman in that city, who educated his son with great strictness and care, and afterwards sent him in turns to the Universities of Tübingen and Göttingen, where he studied philosophy. He went later to Halle, and became a diligent hearer of Schleiermacher's sermons. On his return to his native city he was appointed to a professorship of philosophy at the university, though only twenty-five years old, and retained the post until his death in 1830. Wyss is far from being unknown in England as an author, although few know him by name. He is the author of the very best of all those "Robinsoniads" which have been constructed after the model of Defoe's great book. The so-called Swiss Family Robinson was his work. The title of the original book is Der schweizerische Robinson, oder der Schifferwittiche Schweizer-prediger und seine Familie. The substance of this work was related to him by his father, and nearly all its details were taken from the annals of the life of the Wyss family in different generations.

"Ernest" is the author himself. His "Robinson" has been translated into every European language, and a few years before his death Wyss heard that a fifth edition of the English translation had just appeared. From 1811 to 1830 Wyss edited the once famous Swiss annual, Alpenrosen. He was an assiduous gatherer of the popular songs and legends of his fatherland. He left others to reap the fruits of his rich collection of old war-songs and satirical rhymes; but in his published Idyllen, Volkssagen, Legenden und Erzählungen aus der Schweiz he brought together numberless tales of dwarfs, earth-men, ghosts, and other figures of the traditional stories related to him by the Alpine herdsmen. He also published a collection of Swiss Kuhreihen und Volkslieder. At the age of seventeen he took arms as a volunteer against the French invaders. It was fitting that a citizen who had served his fatherland with pen and sword should write the poem which has long been universally accepted as the Swiss national hymn. Wyss also possessed a wide acquaintance with the original sources of Swiss history so far as they were open in his time, and assisted Stierlin as co-editor of Justinger, Valerius Anshelm, and other chroniclers.

BESIDES the paper on Henry VIII., referred to in last week's ACADEMY, Mr. James Spedding also contributed to the New Shakspeare Society's Transactions for 1874-75 an important paper on "The Corrected Edition of Richard III.," showing that the corrections in the Folio were Shakspeare's; and for the volume for 1877-79 he revised his paper on "The Division of the Acts in Lear, Much Ado about Nothing, and Twelfth Night." His last paper will appear in the forthcoming part of the Transactions.

WITH reference to some circulars that have recently appeared, it may be as well to warn publishers against entrusting books, &c., to agents of provincial newspapers authorised only to receive advertisements.

OBITUARY.

MR. EDWARD BREESE, F.S.A., of Port Madoc, North Wales, author of Kalendars of Gwynedd (1873), and a frequent contributor to the Archæologia Cambrensis, died in London, March 10, in his forty-sixth year. Mr. Breeze's collection of Welsh books and books relating to Wales is one of the most valuable in the Principality.

THE friends of the late Henry Nicol will hear with some satisfaction that their comrade did not die uncared for and deserted in his hotel at Algiers. Mr. H. R. Major, of the British Museum, to whom he was here unknown, came to his help, and in a letter just sent to Mr. Furnivall, every line of which breathes the most thoughtful and delicate feeling for Mr. Nicol, Mr. Major describes the patient's last days in fuller detail than Dr. Thomson's former letter had done. It was not till a week before his death that Mr. Nicol, who was in the last stage of consumption, would consent to a doctor seeing him, so sure was he that his lungs were sound. Dr. Bennett, of Buxton, then in the hotel, gave him temporary relief; but Dr. Thomson's examination showed the right lung gone, and the left diseased; there was evidently no hope. On Sunday, January 23, Mr. Major got Mr. Nicol—who had always dined at the table d'hôte till the 18th—"a most excellent English nurse. Everybody was most kind, and I received from several the most gratifying tenders of assistance for supplying desirable things. It was all, however, unneeded. The poor fellow soon touched nothing, and, after being in a comatose condition for about four days, died at about seven in the morning of January 30. Col. Playfair (the consul), Mr. Gardiner, and Mr. Gervas Taylor and myself attended the funeral on Monday, the 31st. He was buried in the exceedingly pretty and well-kept English cemetery; and at the head of the grave was placed a black cross, bearing his name and the date of his death."

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE March number of Le Livre contains some interesting matter. The last review of English literature by the late Mr. O'Shaughnessy makes its appearance in an obviously unrevised condition, so that the author is made to dilate on the production of The Cup by "M. Twing," a mysterious manager, who is highly commended. M. Uzanne begins some papers on "Baudelaire Inconnu," the first of which is rather disappointing, as it contains little not yet known, except some draft prefaces of the Fleurs du Mal. A reproduction of Bracquemond's well-known portrait is given. A pleasant etching of a book-lover of the old school, perched on a tall flight of library steps, is, however, the chief illustration of the number. Some verses of no great merit accompany it. The papers on Jamet le Jeune are continued, and an article on a very different person, Charles Nodier, redeems bibliophilism. There is the usual review matter; and à propos of this, we may perhaps suggest that, if a compte-rendu of foreign publications is worth doing, it is worth doing well. What are we to make of this entry? "Dans Macmillan's Magazine Leslie Stephen traite la question de la moralité dans la littérature. Il trouve qu'au point de vue de la moralité un livre peut-être l'œuvre d'une bête fauve sans perdre sa valeur littéraire." It is sufficient to say, without pointing out merely literal inaccuracies, that Mr. Leslie Stephen's hair will stand on end at this representation of his views.

IN the Revue Historique for March M. de Boislesle publishes some interesting fragments from the papers of Saint-Simon. They are taken from a vast collection of historical genealogies which Saint-Simon compiled in the form of notes on the duchies and great offices of the Crown. The selections of M. de Boislesle treat of the Maréchal de Souvré, the Marquise de Sablé, and the Duc de Richelieu, his three wives and his daughter. M. Tessier gives a series of extracts from the papers of Gen. Decaen, who was sent by Napoleon in 1803 to Pondichery to raise up difficulties to England in her Indian possessions.

THE Revista Contemporanea of February 28 contains a narrative by Jiménez de la Espada of an abortive plot against Godoy in 1795. Two of the agents, Admiral Malaspino and the Marquese de Matallana, were allowed to retire into exile after arrest and imprisonment; but the third, Padre Manuel Gil, though apparently the least guilty, was confined for life in the convent of Los Torribios in Seville. The Marquis de Mendigorría continues his valuable account of the Spanish expedition to Italy in 1849. Among the papers catalogued in the "Guia de Simancae," Sala XLII., we notice "Papers concerning the Officers who took Service under Prince Charles Edward in Scotland, 1745 to 1752. Almost all were Irishmen, and the posts they occupied in Spanish regiments were still reserved for them."

IN the Revista Euskara for February Prince L.-J. Bonaparte has one of his valuable monographs on Basque dialects, treating in the present instance of the speech of the Valley of the Burunda. In the same number is a Spanish prose version of Tennyson's Guinevere, by Don Vicente de Arana, whose excellent translations of the May Queen and other English poems we have before noticed.

THE CYRILLIC AND GLAGOLITIC ALPHABETS.

WE have received from the Rev. Dr. Isaac Taylor an article on the origin of the Glagolitic alphabet published by him in the Archiv für slavische Philologie. It is well known that the ancient Slaves, when they became converts to Christianity, or it may be even a little earlier, framed two alphabets, the Cyrillic and the Glagolitic, the former used chiefly by the Orthodox, the latter by the Catholic Greek Church. The origin of the Cyrillic alphabet is clear. Khrabra, who, whatever his date may be, is the earliest authority on the subject, tells us that he knew persons who had known Cyrilus and Methodius; and that these two brothers, who lived in the middle of the ninth century, formed their new alphabet from classical sources. It consisted of thirty-eight letters, twenty-four being taken from the Greek alphabet, which, however, was not sufficient to express all the sounds of the Slave language, so that fourteen new letters had to be added. The problem of the origin of the Cyrillic alphabet is therefore restricted to these fourteen letters; and, as many of them are clearly compounds, the really doubtful letters are seven or eight only—viz., the živete, zelo, zemlja, ša, šta, tsi, tserv and djerv. Various attempts have been made to find out whence these new letters were taken; but as they were clearly the inventions of one or two individuals, who must have felt as much at liberty to do as they liked as the devisers of modern phonetic alphabets, we need not be surprised if the solutions of the problem have not always been convincing. The same difficulty occurs in other modern alphabets, such as the Coptic and Gothic. Here, too, after the principal sounds had been represented by the letters of the Greek alphabet, there remained some sounds, peculiar to Coptic and Gothic, which had to be represented by new letters. In Coptic these additional letters have been traced by Lepsius to hieroglyphic sources. With regard to Gothic, much has been written of late on the question whether the additional letters of the alphabet go back to ancient Runic signs or not. The same uncertainty prevails with regard to the ancient Slave alphabets. Khrabra seems to hint that the new signs were taken from ancient Slavonic runes, but he by no means states this as a fact, as he does with regard to the Greek letters. At all events, to derive these letters from Slavonic runes would only be to explain ignotum per ignotius. Chodzko, pointing to the fact that Cyrilus journeyed much among the Khazars, and lived at the Court of the Abbasside Chalifs of Bagdad, traced the tsi to the Hebrew Tzade, the ša to Hebrew or Arabic Shin, the šta to a composition of ša with t, the two letters being written separately in old documents, and the tserv to the Arabic ع or the Persian ع. His explanations are ingenious, but hardly convincing, though it would be difficult to disprove that Cyrilus may not have had a vague remembrance of these Semitic letters in his mind when framing his new letters. Dr. Isaac Taylor thinks that these new letters are of Greek origin, like the rest of the alphabet. He remarks justly that one has only to look at the two alphabets, the Cyrillic and Glagolitic, to see from their shape, number, order, and names that the two are closely connected and come from the same source. Some of the letters, the φ, ζ, ε, for instance, are almost identical; and, as each alphabet forms a continuous series, this fact alone leaves little doubt as to their mutual relation. Whether the Glagolitic alphabet, such as we now have it, is really the older of the two is more difficult to determine. Kopitar has advanced very strong reasons for the greater antiquity of the Glagolita, and Chodzko holds the same opinion. He also points out that St.

Jerome, himself of Slave origin, to whom, according to Dalmatian traditions, the invention of the Glagolita is ascribed, may have been a personal friend of Ulfilas, and that both may have elaborated their alphabets together, borrowing the letters which were not found in Greek from their national runes. This, however, is mere conjecture. Dr. Isaac Taylor's theory seems more plausible. He thinks that the additional letters in the Cyrillic alphabet can be traced back to Greek uncial letters and ligatures of the ninth century, while the Glagolitic alphabet can best be derived from Greek cursive letters of a somewhat earlier date. It is right, however, in questions of this kind, where we must chiefly depend on similarities of form which strike different eyes very differently, not to be too positive. Contractions like those in Greek were possible in the Slavonic alphabets also, particularly with writers accustomed to Greek ligatures. It is known that in one case, the sta, the two letters were originally written separately. And there is certainly about the Glagolitic alphabet, such as we now possess it, and more particularly in its Illyrian form, a cumbersomeness and artificiality which, if they do not justify, at all events explain the charge brought by the Cyrillicists against the Glagoliticists—viz., that they tampered with the old alphabet simply in order to have something different from the alphabet used by the orthodox Church. The question will probably have to wait for its final solution till there is a larger amount of monumental evidence for the history of the Slave alphabets. In the meantime, Dr. Isaac Taylor has pointed out the right direction which investigations of this kind ought to follow, and his theory is likely to recommend itself to many students of Slavonic or Slovenic antiquities.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF EARLY WELSH PRINTED BOOKS.

THE want of a complete and thoroughly accurate bibliography of early Welsh printed books has long been felt by Celtic scholars and bibliographers generally. The standard work on the subject, Rowlands', though a monument of industry and research, was yet compiled at a time when the requirements of scientific bibliography were less understood than is now the case, and, in spite of the valuable additions and corrections made by Prof. Silvan Evans, fails to reach the standard of the present day. Much second-hand information appears to have been admitted, and errors in important matters not infrequently occur. To produce a satisfactory bibliography it will be necessary to commence the work de novo, and the Society of Cymmrodorion have decided to undertake the collection of materials for this purpose, feeling that their extensive connexions place them in a better position for so doing than any private individual. A committee has been formed to carry out the undersking, and the Rev. John Davies, M.A., of Hampstead, has consented to act as custodian of the materials. It has been decided—(1) That the bibliography include all printed books by Welsh authors, up to a certain date, irrespective of the language in which they are composed; (2) That it include all printed books relating to Wales, irrespective of the author's nationality, up to the same date; (3) That the period be the end of the year 1750; (4) That important works issued subsequently to the specified period, and later editions of books originally published within it, be also included; (5) That the scheme of cataloguing drawn up by Mr. Bernard Quaritch be adopted throughout the work.

THE CONTROVERSY ABOUT THE OTTOMAN KHALIFATE.

LONDON seems destined to become the chief battle-field of the assailants and defenders of the Ottoman Khalifate. Two papers supporting the former were described in the last issue of the ACADEMY. To these must now be added a third, which takes the opposite side. It is a fortnightly publication printed in Arabic and Persian, is called the al-Ghairat (Zeal or Jealousy), and is edited by "Abdool Rasool," who signs himself a "Hindy," or native of India. The avowed object of this paper is "to discuss political subjects and all other topics of local and foreign interest" in subservience to one grand idea—namely, that of promoting unity among all Muslims and their loyalty to his Imperial Majesty the Ottoman Sultan, 'Abdu-'l-Hamid, who is conspicuously held up to them as "the rightful Khalifah of Islām." Several religious considerations are urged in behalf of this brotherly concord, to which is added the example of Christian nations, who combine heartily to carry out any common object which they have in view. The editor laments the insouciance of his brethren in this respect, and cites, by way of stimulating them in the same direction, the passionate appeals—strange as the sight was to him—which he has heard from the lips of European women, mounted on a platform, calling upon audiences, carried away by their fervid eloquence, to strive after unity and concord. He enlarges further on the wonderful progress made by Christian nations owing to their cultivation of the arts and sciences, and calls upon the Muslims collectively to emulate their example, whereby alone they can hope to attain that position in the world to which their numbers and ancient antecedents give them a fair claim. Turning next to the attempts which are now being made "to sow the tares of discord among the followers of Islām," he attributes their existence to the apathy of the Muslims, which gives scope to the mischievous designs of self-interested and unscrupulous men, who would otherwise "stick fast, like a camel in the mud, and be utterly powerless to move." The following paragraph clearly indicates the individuals against whom these remarks are levelled, and at the same time unmistakably reveals the views of the al-Ghairat on the subject of the Ottoman Khalifate:—

"Some Christians, in conjunction with a party of sceptics, are being supplied with means, provided by a cabal of recreant Muslims, to sow dissension among the faithful, and to that end have established several journals, printed in Turkish and Arabic, which are crammed with the most unfounded statements. One of these is printed in London, the other at some distance from Paris [a Geneva], both intent alike on mischief. The former was called the an-Nāhlah, a paper not regarded everywhere with disgust and abhorrence. It has lately changed its name into the al-Khilafah and is driven to find cover in a letter-envelope, like a fox with a broken leg, through dread of [our paper] the al-Ghairat. The editor of the an-Nāhlah belongs to the order of ecclesiastics, and has played the part of a firebrand for a long time. The other publication, which is printed beyond French territory, and which ought to be named 'The Mischief-maker,' is called the al-Istikbāl. It hardly becomes us to mention the names of these misguided persons, but we have deemed it right to inform our brethren in the faith of what is going on in these parts."

Judging from the congratulations acknowledged by the editor in the third issue of his paper as having been sent to him by the editor of the Panjāb and the Nāsratu-'l-Akhbār, and also by several notables in Hindustān, the al-Ghairat appears to have obtained already some circulation in British India.

Apart from the quotations from literary sources contained in the paper the Arabic of the al-Ghairat is very mediocre.

GEORGE PERCY BADGER.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BERNLER, Ch. Die Kachelöfen in Graubünden aus dem XVI.-XVII. Jahrh. Zürich: Schmid. 8 M.
CARRÉLLEZ, V. Noirs et Rouges. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
FLAUBERT, G. Bouvard et Pécuchet. (Ouvrage posthume.) Paris: Lemerre. 3 fr. 50 c.
GARNIER, C. Le Nouvel Opéra de Paris. T. 2. Paris: Puchet. 10 fr.
GONCOURT, E. de. La Maison d'un Artiste. Paris: Charpentier. 7 fr.
GRIMM, W. Kleinere Schriften. Hrsg. v. G. Hirth. 1. Bd. Berlin: Dümmler. 11 M. 50 Pf.
KÄSNER, H. Matthäus Donner u. die Geschichte der Wiener Gravur-Akademie in der ersten Periode ihres Bestandes. Wien: Feeg. 24 M.
LUMDEN, H. W. Boonwulf, translated into Modern Rhymes. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 5s.
PAGET, Lord George. The Light Cavalry Brigade in the Crimea. Murray. 10s. 6d.
SACHS, A. Asmus Jakob Carstens' Jugend- u. Lehrjahre nach urkundl. Quellen. Halle: Waisenhaus. 4 M.
SHAWWELL, Lieut.-Gen. Life of Colin Campbell, Lord Clyde. Blackwood. 38s.
TWENTY Styles of Architecture, The. Sampson Low & Co. 21s.
WAGNER, A. Für bimetalliche Münzpolitik Deutschlands. Berlin: Puttkammer. 1 M. 20 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BERNARDI, C. Bartolo da Sassoferrato e la Scienza delle Leggi. Torino: Loescher. 3 fr.
DAMMANN, A. Kulturkämpfe in Alt-England. 1. Thl. Gütersloh: Bertelsmann. 1 M.
DE LIVA, G. Storia documentata di Carlo V. in Correlazione all'Italia. Vol. I.-IV. Verona: Drukker & Tedeschi. 35 fr.
JOURNAL d'un Bourgeois de Paris (1405-49), p. p. A. Tuetey. Paris: Champion.
MORCKE, A. Kaiser Otto II. u. Otto III. Halle: Waisenhaus. 1 M. 20 Pf.
PFITZNER, W. Geschichte der römischen Kaiserlegionen von Augustus bis Hadrianus. Leipzig: Teubner. 6 M. 40 Pf.
RECHSTA diplomatische Historiae Danicae. Series II. T. I. A. B. anno 789 ad annum 1349. Copenhagen: Høst. 5s. 9d.
SOYEZ, E. Nicolas Cornet, Grand Maître du Collège de Navarre. Amiens: Delatour-Lenoel.
VELLOT, A. Vie d'Arthur Premier de Saint-André (1548-1616). Paris: Picard. 9 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- HARTWIG, E. Beitrag zur Bestimmungen der physischen Libration d. Monde aus Beobachtungen am Strassburger Helionometer. Karlsruhe: Braun. 3 M. 50 Pf.
HOFF, J. H. van 't. Ansichten über die organische Chemie. Braunschweig: Vieweg. 16 M. 80 Pf.
MORSCHLER, H. B. Beiträge zur Schmetterlingsfauna v. Surinam. III. Wien. 2 M. 50 Pf.
MOURLON, M. Géologie de la Belgique. Berlin: Friedländer. 12 M.
REUSCH, E. Die stereographische Projection. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M. 40 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ARISTOPHANIS Ranae, rec. A. v. Velsen. Leipzig: Teubner. 3 M.
AZAIS, O. Dictionnaire des Idioms romans du Midi de la France. T. 3. 3^e Livr. Paris: Maisonneuve. 5 fr. 50 c.
BADCKE, L. De proverbiis aliisque locutionibus ex usu vitae communis petitis apud Aristophanem comicum. Königsberg: Beyer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
BIBLIOTHECA RABINICA. Uebertragen v. A. Wünsche. 9. Lfg. Leipzig: Schulze. 2 M.
CICERO de Oratore. Book II. Ed. A. S. Wilkins. Clarendon Press. 5s.
FRAGMENTA philosophorum graecorum collecta etc. F. G. A. Mullachius. Vol. III. Paris: Didot. 15 fr.
HEMPEL, O. Quaestiones Theoreticae. Kiel: Lipsius. 2 M.
HOPKINS, E. W. The Mutual Relations of the Four Castes according to the Manavadharmaśāstra. Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel. 2 M. 50 Pf.
KAUTSCH, E. Ueb. die Derivate d. Stammes עֲרֵךְ im alttestamentlichen Sprachgebrauch. Tübingen: Fues. 3 M.
LUEKE, G. De P. Papinio Statii in Silvis priorum poetarum Romanorum imitatore. Königsberg: Beyer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
NEUMANN, H. De Plinii dubii sermonis libris Calpurnii et Prisciani fontibus. Kiel: Lipsius. 2 M.
ORSOWSKI, J. J. Ueb. den Lautwerth einiger Palatale im Sanskrit. Königsberg: Beyer. 1 M.
PIRO, J. Untersuchungen über die sogenannte jüngere Judith, mittelhochdeutsches Gedicht der Uebergangsperiode. Bonn: Nolte. 1 M. 50 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ROMAN REMAINS IN THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

Cowes: March 21, 1881.

Your contributor to the ACADEMY for March 5th has, in his list of Roman remains in the Isle of Wight, omitted to mention a few—especially the site of a villa discovered at Gurnard a few years since. It was considered of importance, less from its size than from its position on the bay where the Romans have always been supposed to have landed the tin brought across from the mainland, by way of the shallow ford from Lepe to Gurnard Bay, which at ebb-tide is supposed to have formed an isthmus. From this landing-place a road—part of which is still known as Rew Street—ran across the island to Niton, where the tin was re-embarked. An artificial mound, called the "Old Castle," where a gold coin of Maximus was found sticking in the cliff, seems to confirm the legend that, before the constant inroads of the sea washed them away, Roman remains were also to be found at Niton.

The Gurnard villa was small, and its pavement had been greatly injured by the coast road, over which heavy carts had passed above the site of the villa. It was discovered by reason of the gradual wearing away of the cliff, at whose base were found coins, a small Mercury, fragments of Roman pottery, and tiles, which led to the investigation of the upper part of the headland. The lintels of the doors, stones from the roof, large quantities of nails and of pottery and coins, rewarded the excavators; and a pamphlet on the subject was extracted from the minutes of an archaeological society by whom it was investigated.

In a marsh formed by the old bed of the Medina coins of Nero, Augustus, Constantine, Constans, and Valens were found five feet below the surface in 1851; and in Newport several have at different times been dug up under the existing streets.

At Bonchurch a Roman encampment has been gradually washed away within the memory of persons now living; and at Shanklin four fields adjoining each other are still known as "Cliff Romans," "Great Romans," "Middle Romans," and "Little Romans." These names, and the fact of six hundred coins being found together at Shanklin, make it probable that a station or its remains may yet be discovered there. Roman urns have been discovered at Bonchurch—on Rew Down—and at Stenbury, as well as on Bowcombe Down, where was also found an enamelled (?) bronze fibula. At Ventnor a skeleton was unearthed in digging for foundations, with an armilla of brass on the arm; and the names of many of the island roads, as Chall Street, Haven Street, Whippingham Street, &c., testify to the long occupation of the island by the Romans. M. DAMANT.

A CORRECTION.

Philadelphia, U.S.A.: March 5, 1881.

In a review of my book, Practical Ceramics for Students, published in the ACADEMY (No. 457, February 5), the author is referred to as Charles A. Janvier. In the original edition published in New York by Messrs. Henry Holt and Co., the author's name is given upon the title-page as C. A. Janvier. The error is particularly hurtful to me, as there happens to be a Charles Janvier. I shall be greatly obliged if you will correct it. CATHARINE A. JANVIER.

ANOTHER CORRECTION.

Guildford: March 23, 1881.

I shall be glad if you will allow me space for a short statement in lieu of a notice which ought to have appeared on the other side of the Atlantic. As it relates to a personal matter I will leave it without note or comment.

Last year I had a visit from an American editor, then in London, who brought a letter of introduction from a friend of mine in the United States, and asked me to get him help for an international magazine of education. This I endeavoured to do; and, happening to have in MS. a lecture on "The British Race," by Prof.

J. R. Seeley, the subject of which was chiefly the connexion between this country and the United States, I asked Mr. Seeley to let me send it to the new magazine. He at first refused, as the lecture was an old one (seven or eight years old, I believe), and he had long since decided on not publishing it. However, I talked him over, and he finally gave me permission, stipulating only that the lecture should not be published till he had had an opportunity of correcting it in proof, and that it should be accompanied by a note from me stating that it was revived by my desire, not the desire of the lecturer. With these two conditions I sent this lecture to the American editor, who has thought fit to publish it in the March number of his magazine without complying with either of them. R. H. QUICK.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- MONDAY, March 28, 7.30 p.m. Aristotelian: "Kant," continued, by Mr. S. Oliver.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture IV., "The Scientific Principles involved in Electric Lighting," by Prof. W. G. Adams.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Eastern Bolivia and the Gran Chaco," by Mr. J. B. Minchin.
TUESDAY, March 29, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Blood," by Prof. Schäfer.
8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "The Comparative Endurances of Iron and Mild Steel when exposed to Corrosive Influences," by Mr. David Phillips.
WEDNESDAY, March 30, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Recent Advances in Electric Lighting," by Mr. W. H. Preece.
THURSDAY, March 31, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Ornament," by Mr. H. H. Statham.
4.30 p.m. Royal.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
FRIDAY, April 1, 8 p.m. Philological: "The French Hunting Cry halla!," by Major van Someren; "Parts of Speech," by Mr. H. Sweet.
9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The King in his Relation to Early Civil Justice," by Sir H. S. Maine.
SATURDAY, April 2, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "American Humourists," by the Rev. H. R. Haweis.

SCIENCE.

The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen. (Chatto & Windus.)

MR. GRANT ALLEN is to be congratulated on having written this unpretending little volume. Not much of the essay writing that appears in our evening papers would repay reprinting; but these essays certainly do repay it. It is not often that a daily paper finds room for scientific studies amid its crowd of political and social topics; but the papers here thrown together were fortunate enough to obtain a place in the columns of the St. James's Gazette. Mr. Allen's double success is really one large success; in having succeeded in penning a series of scientific sketches acceptable to a leading political paper he did something worthy of permanent record. Their appearance in the first form is the justification of their re-appearance in the present form.

It is always difficult to analyse the complex charm of good writing when the subject and the mode of presentment are alike attractive and in perfect harmony. An adequate impression of the eminent degree of readability which characterises these short papers cannot be conveyed by a description of their subject-matter or manner of treatment. They have a flavour of their own which can only be enjoyed by direct contact. Yet it may be possible to give the reader a rough idea of their character.

Mr. Allen is known to be a careful student of modern biology and psychology. One may say that his mind has been saturated with the new ideas of evolution as unfolded by Mr. Darwin and Mr. Herbert Spencer,

More than this, he has had considerable experience as an observer of Nature. He knows much at first hand of our coast formations, of our flora and our fauna. And he looks at what are to most of us commonplace and insignificant objects of Nature with a scientific imagination which discovers in them the germs of far-reaching truths. With this scientific preparation Mr. Allen combines a wide and, at the same time, delicate feeling for the picturesqueness of Nature. He has gazed long on the poetic side of the evolutionist's conception of the organic world. To his mind there is endless fascination in the rhythmic interplay of vital actions involved in the mutual adaptations of flower and insect, fruit and bird. He sees that the doctrine of evolution, while on the one hand it reduces the phenomena of the organic world to mechanical processes, on the other hand allows us to look at them as though they were brought about by a conscious intention to conserve and beautify. When it is added that Mr. Allen is an elegant writer, commanding a wide range of forcible and picturesque English, the reader may perhaps be in a position to understand something of the quality of his work.

The twenty-two short papers which make up the present volume treat of a great variety of subjects. Now it is a troop of ants, now a skeleton of a bird, now a wild strawberry, now a plate of walnuts, now a masterless dog, and now the "blue mud" of the Dorsetshire coast which furnishes the writer with his text. Yet, though the subjects vary, the mode of treatment is much the same throughout, and it is this which constitutes the distinctive excellence of these studies. A bit of clear description, whether of an individual structure or of a particular habit of life, leads on insensibly, by what seems a perfectly spontaneous kind of talk, to a glimpse of the many interdependences of nature and of some wide-swaying biological law. The present is linked on to the remote past, the individual merged in the race, and the whole history of the particular form made visibly clear. So simple and intelligible, indeed, is Mr. Allen's presentment that a good part of the contents of the volume might, I think, be read by an intelligent child, and serve such child as an excellent introduction to the study of natural history. What marks off these essays from ordinary bits of "science made easy" is their large philosophic spirit. The writer's mind is always forcing its way through concrete fact to principles. He carries the reader on to see the inmost structure of nature; he gives him thoughts as well as descriptions. Thus, after explaining how it is that strawberries have come to have their seeds embedded in their pulpy cushion, he remarks on the fact that potentillas and other plants closely related to the strawberry are without this luscious bait, and adds:

"One extra petal may be invaluable to a five-rayed flower as effecting some immense saving of pollen in its fertilisation; and yet the 'sport' which shall give it this sixth ray may never occur, or may be trodden down in the mire and destroyed by a passing cow."

It is this infusion of a large philosophic reflection into a picturesque rendering of concrete nature which at once shows that these papers were written, not for children, but for men. While, up to a certain point, gratifying his readers' sense of the poetic in Nature, and indulging their ineradicable impulse to personify her agencies, Mr. Allen more than once recalls them to look at her processes as they are in themselves, and not simply for our "Protagorean" minds. An excellent example of this is to be found in the last paper, "On Cornish Cliffs," where it is shown that the symmetrical beauty of the ferns that line their cracks is as much due to mechanical means, and as little to any aesthetic intention on the part of nature, as their own irregular beauty. And the same "objectivity" of view shows itself in the two or three psychological studies interspersed among the others. The first paper, "Microscopic Brains," is really a very skilful attempt to show how ants probably look, or rather sniff, out into the external world.

Slight studies such as these are, as the author reminds us, hardly to be criticised as serious scientific works. A certain looseness of language is inevitable; and it is only a captious critic who would care to dwell on an occasional appearance of inaccuracy of statement through want of a due qualification. These essays are quite as much bits of literary art as bits of scientific exposition. They aim at awakening an interest in "the principles and methods of evolutionists" among unscientific readers, and they do so by means of a literary treatment that has something of the charm of Lessing's Laocoon—I mean the skilful leading on of the mind from concrete instance to general principle. These short papers may thus be said to be quite worthy of the hand that has done greater things than these, judged from a scientific point of view. Mr. Allen's readers will certainly hope that in hours of relaxation from heavier work he may throw off more of these delightful scientific vignettes. JAMES SULLY.

SOME BOOKS ON PHILOSOPHY.

MR. STANLEY JEVONS' Studies in Deductive Logic (Macmillan) might perhaps be more appropriately termed Problems in Deductive Logic; but, title apart, the work is likely to prove of real aid in teaching logic. Most teachers of logic must have felt the lack of a drilling book somewhat fuller than the list of exercises appended to the ordinary manuals, and Mr. Jevons' work just fills the gap. The discussion, with the help of the hints which Mr. Jevons gives, of questions such as "What is the logical force of the following sentence:—'A materialist will naturally be a determinist: a determinist need not be a materialist?'" or "State the preposition 'Men are mortals' in the intensive form," will do more to elucidate the results of logical analysis than any amount of abstract exposition. But why, when Mr. Jevons was preparing a new book, did he not re-arrange his syllogistic rules? It is very confusing to a beginner to have them all classed together without any hint that, in constituting valid moods, two of these rules are to be applied to syllogisms only when expressed in some definite figure. Would it not be worth the writer's while to bring this out in new editions of his Elementary Lessons, and state that in the mechanical work of constituting moods we must first examine the possible sixty-four by rules 5 to 8 (in his enumeration), and then, secondly, try the moods so ascertained in each of the four figures by rules 3 and 4?

MR. ASTON LEIGH'S Story of Philosophy (Tribner) approaches so closely to a work of fiction that it requires some courage to notice it among books of scientific tendencies. The "story"-teller accepts all the gossip of Diogenes Laertius and such-like writers without any but the slightest doubt as to its consistency or authenticity, and tries to give a romantic colouring to his narrative by word-pictures of the Greek philosophers for which it might be perplexing to ask the authority. We hear about a "noble figure in white robes," a "black-eyed infant sleeping so peacefully on the bosom of Periclea," "the shadow of a slight, nervous figure in delicate draperies." The work is almost altogether biographical; and after twelve pages on the life of Aristotle we have five on his "philosophy and works." The volume is the result of "several years' reading and research," so successful, it would appear, as to have enabled Mr. Leigh to discover a hitherto unknown fragment of Aristotle, in which the Stagyrte defines syllogism almost in precisely the same terms as a modern treatise on formal logic. "In Aristotle's own words, 'a syllogism is an argument consisting of three propositions, the last of which, called the Conclusion, is inferred from the two preceding, which are called the Premises.'" The work already contains a list of Corrigenda, but it might be as well to correct, in addition, Pausanias on p. 126, and Critias on p. 131, not to mention some more serious errors already pointed out by Mind. The work might have been useful as a set of lectures to a mechanics' institute in the country, but it is presuming too much on the ordinary reading public to offer it to them as it stands.

MR. G. L. TURNER'S Wish and Will (Longmans) is, as its title-page informs us, an introduction to the psychology of desire and volition. The work displays a good deal of independent thought, but it reminds one too much, at times, of the lecture-room, for which it was, as the Preface indeed informs us, originally prepared. The writer points out the position of desire as the "child of feeling and the parent of volition," but, on the other hand, maintains that we can control our desires indirectly by the exercise of volition. He criticises sensibly enough the fallacy of speaking of the will as a distinct entity; but he does not seem to contribute much towards the solution of the free-will controversy in stating that "the necessitarian confines himself strictly to the region of the phenomenal, while the Freedomist feels that justice cannot be done to all the facts of the case without keeping in view the noumenal elements as well." Is it not a simpler way of saying this to hold that, while the law of causal connexion holds good as fully in the moral as in the physical world, the difference lies in the fact that in the moral world the mind or ego determines which among possible causes or motives is to be the actual cause on which some effect or other will necessarily follow?

OBITUARY.

EDWARD R. ALSTON.

EDWARD R. ALSTON was born in 1847, in Lanarkshire, and, although weak in health during his childhood, he was bright in mind and disposition. So delicate was he in constitution that his early education had to be neglected. But, as the boy grew, his mind developed, thanks to his own energy and his mother's devotion. People wondered how he knew anything. He was his own schoolmaster; and this self-instruction was better for him than that which he might have had at school. It made him quiet, thoughtful, amiable, and it fostered the love of Nature which early in life became a prominent and persistent characteristic of his mind. The weakly boy loved living things, watched them, noticed their habits and distinctions; and, when the years of adolescence were attained, he was found to be so well grounded in knowledge that he entered the University of Glasgow as a medical student.

There are some short notes by Mr. Alston in the Zoologist for 1860 on the attachment of the creeper (Certhia familiaris) to its nest and eggs, and on the feeding of the marsh titmouse, written in good pure English; and thus, at the age of thirteen years, the naturalist had developed. Four years afterwards he wrote in the same publication about the food of the young cuckoo, and held his own against the then editor, Edward Newman; and contributed some very interesting notices about the food of the shrew, squirrel, and roe-deer.

He was an admirable observer in the field at his eighteenth year, and his notes on the habits of the birds and small mammals of Lanarkshire, published in the Zoologist for 1865, are most instructive. There is a capital paper of his, written during 1865, on the "Wild Cattle of Cadzow Forest." He notices the habits of these interesting oxen, quotes Scott, states that "a more thoroughly game-looking animal than an old Cadzow bull can hardly be imagined," gives the list of parks where these cattle were kept, and pronounces them to be specifically identical with Bos taurus. This was written at Glasgow. Two years afterwards Mr. Alston wrote some interesting papers on the folk-lore of zoology, and on the popular superstitions and beliefs about many birds. Travelling in France and Germany during 1868 he used his natural-history eyes admirably. Mr. Alston came up to London about ten years since, and wrote on a Pteropus from Samoa, on the fossil Arvicolidæ, and on Anomalurus. These publications in the Proceedings of the Zoological Society were followed by one on the classification of the order Glires, which proved how great a master he was of the rodent group. The rodents and marsupials of the islands to the north of Australia, the mammals of Asia Minor, the den-tition of Cuscus, the squirrels of the neotropical regions, and the skull of Tapirus doui are titles of some of the excellent papers contributed by him to the Zoological Society. Mr. Alston travelled in Russia and Scandinavia with Mr. Harvie Brown, and his notes published in The Ibis were the result. In 1876 he contributed the article "Mammalia" to the book called Notes on the Fauna and Flora of the West of Scotland, and was concluding his work on "The Mammalia of Central America" in Godman and Salvin's Biologia Centrali Americana at the time of his decease; this is his great work. One of the secretaries of the Linnean Society, an active Fellow of the Zoological Society, and a member of the Ornithologists' Union, Mr. Alston was also a trustworthy and candid reviewer; and the ACADEMY has been under no small obligations to him. His early death, at the age of thirty-five years, will leave a great gap in the rising scientific world, and his love of justice and peace, and his true devotion to science, will cause him to be remembered for many a long year. P. MARTIN DUNCAN.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

CAPT. PHILIP TROTTER's account of the late mission to the Court of Morocco at Fez, with illustrations from photographs by the Hon. D. Lawless, will very shortly be published by Mr. Douglas, of Edinburgh. The party naturally enjoyed unusually good opportunities for observation. Besides the ordinary traveller's description of the route and the incidents of the journey, including some conversation with the Sultan and his Ministers, the author touches on various questions, such as consular jurisdiction and the treatment of the Jews, discussed at the late Madrid Conference. The map contains a new route followed by the mission between Volubilis and Rabat, along the great forest of Mamoura, hitherto unsurveyed. A list of the flora collected, verified at Kew by the kindness of Sir J. Hooker, is given in an Appendix.

It is stated that the letters which Col. C. G. Gordon, R.E., C.B., wrote, when Governor-General of Egyptian Equatorial Africa, on the condition of that region and the prospects of his civilising mission, have been collected, and will shortly be published by Messrs. T. De La Rue and Co.

REFERENCE has more than once been made in the ACADEMY to the road from Dar-es-Salaam, on the East Coast of Africa, in the direction of Lake Nyassa, which was commenced some time back by English philanthropists in the hope that, by opening up a trade-route through this unknown region, they might assist in the gradual civilisation of the native tribes. Although the construction of the road was temporarily discontinued after the completion of seventy or eighty miles, and the superintendent is now employed by the Sultan of Zanzibar on a journey of exploration in the neighbouring region, it is satisfactory to learn, on the high authority of her Majesty's agent and consul-general, that the work has had an excellent, and even marvellous, effect upon the natives. Dr. Kirk, we learn, has lately travelled along the road for some forty miles, in company with a naval officer; and he reports that it is now quite safe for unarmed travellers, although but two or three years ago no one would have ventured in that neighbourhood without a large escort.

ONE of the objects of Mr. James Stewart's late visit to the head of Lake Nyassa was to ascertain how far the Kambwe lagoon could be made available as a harbour for the missionary steamer from Livingstonia. During his investigations he made a curious discovery with regard to the River Rukuru, which, until about two years ago, flowed through the lagoon. He found that this river has changed its course, and that its former bed has silted up, and is now even higher than the surrounding ground. This unusual occurrence he accounts for in the following way:—During the rainy season the country is under water for miles, so the Rukuru flowed in a course marked by reeds, and had for its banks the standing water of its own overflow. The heavy sand was rolled down the channel from the higher ground and deposited over its whole length until it was raised to such a height that the current was forced into another channel. In further explanation it should be mentioned that the Rukuru in the last fifteen miles of its course winds through precipitous valleys and falls upwards of two thousand feet, washing far into the lake large quantities of bluish-gray silt.

THE survey of the boundary line between Queensland and New South Wales is stated to have been brought to a conclusion. In the course of their operations the surveying expedition suffered much from want of water.

DR. BAYOL, who has just returned from Bamaku, has received a new appointment from the French Minister of Marine, to conduct an expedition to explore the upper course of the Niger and to establish friendly relations with the chiefs of Fouta-Jallon and Bouré. His party will include a photographer, and twenty soldiers from Senegal.

SCIENCE NOTES.

The Formation of Native Sulphur.—During some recent excavations in Paris, the workmen, on cutting through a mass of old rubbish, discovered a quantity of sulphur forming the cementing material of the brecciated mass. Under a lens the sulphur exhibited the crystalline forms characteristic of the native mineral. It was evident that the sulphur had been produced from some old plaster, by association with pieces of leather, fragments of bone, and other organic matter. The sulphate of lime had, in fact, been reduced by the presence of the organic matter. Similar instances of its production are known elsewhere, but such examples are always interesting as throwing light upon the origin of sulphur in nature. A deposit of gypsum in the presence of lignite or bitumen may in this way readily become a source of sulphur. The recent example has been described before the French Academy by M. Daubrée, whose account will be found in the Comptes-rendus.

WE hear that good progress is being made with the reprint of the late Prof. A. H. Garrod's scientific papers, the publication of which may be expected early in the summer. They will form a volume of about five hundred octavo pages, illustrated by more than thirty plates and about two hundred wood-cuts. Mr. Hubert Herkomer, A.R.A., has kindly undertaken to execute an etching of the late Professor as a frontispiece to the volume. The edition will be limited to a very small number of copies, most of which are already subscribed for. Those who wish to add their names to the list of subscribers before it is closed are requested to communicate at once with the Secretary of the Garrod Memorial Fund, 11 Hanover Square, W.

THE French Association for the Advancement of Science, unlike the British, holds its meetings in spring. The next will open on April 14, at Algiers. The railway and steamboat companies offer to members very considerable reductions of fare; and no less than twenty-two excursions into the interior of Western and Central Algeria have already been planned, some of them lasting over more than two days. An excursion to Tunis is also in contemplation.

THE study of marine zoology in the Mediterranean has found a new head-quarters at Marseilles. The French Ministers of Public Instruction and Marine have agreed to renew in the Mediterranean the deep-sea explorations carried out last year in the Bay of Biscay by the despatch-boat Le Travailleur, under the command of Capt. Richard. Besides exploring the coast line of Provence, it is proposed to sound and examine with the deep-sea trawl that part of the Mediterranean which lies between Nice and Corsica, and is known to have a very great depth. At the same time the municipality of Marseilles have voted the sum of 85,000 frs. (£3,400) towards the establishment of a station for marine zoology at Endoume. This station will be conducted in connexion with the Ecole des Hautes-études, which has formed part of the Marseilles Faculty of Science during the past twelve years, and which is the only one of the kind existing in France outside Paris.

AMONG the numerous prizes awarded by the French Académie des Sciences at its meeting on March 4 we observe the following to Englishmen:—The "Lalande medal (of the value of 450 frs.) to Mr. E. J. Stone, the Radcliffe Observer, for his catalogue of stars of the Southern heavens and his observations at the Cape confirmatory of those made by the French astronomer, Lacaille, in the middle of the last century; and the Prix Boudet to Prof. Joseph Lister, of King's College, London. This latter prize consists of a sum of 6,000 frs. specially placed at the disposal of the Académie by the family of the late M. Boudet, to be given to whosoever shall have made the greatest progress in the healing art, having drawn his inspirations from the discoveries of M. Pasteur concerning fermentation and germs.

THE translation of Nägeli and Schwendener's treatise on the microscope is at length approaching completion. Messrs. W. Swan Sonnenschein and Allen hope to issue it to the public during the present spring. The English editors, whose names will appear upon the title-page, are Mr. Frank Crisp, Secretary R.M.C.S., and Mr. J. Mayall, Jun., F.R.M.S., though several others have collaborated in the work.

WE are informed that Messrs. Trübner and Co. have in active preparation and partly in press The Social History of the Races of Mankind, by A. Featherman. This work, probably the largest ever attempted in the department of anthropology, will be completed in about ten volumes octavo. The first division, complete in itself, and entitled "The History of the Aramaean Stock of the Races of Mankind," will appear in June in a volume of about seven hundred pages.

IN philosophy Messrs. Trübner will shortly publish the following works:—A second edition of Feuerbach's Essence of Christianity, translated by Marian Evans (George Eliot); a translation of Hartmann's Philosophy of the Unconscious; Philosophy and Religion in Germany, by Henry Heine, translated by John Snodgrass, Jun.; The Life and Works of Giordano Bruno; and Buddha and Early Buddhism, by Arthur Lillie.

HERR DÜMLER announces for publication in the course of the present month, "Die Vorgeschichte der Ethnologie, Deutschland's Dankfreunden gewidmet für eine Mussestunde," by Prof. A. Bastian, of Berlin.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE concluding number of the first volume of the American Journal of Philology opens with a paper by R. Ellis vindicating the claims of the Naples MS. of Propertius as uninterpolated. The parados of the Vespa is discussed by F. G. Allinson, who, while speaking favourably of Arnold's work on the subject, propounds a new hypothesis on the arrangement of the chorus. E. A. Fay writes on the use of the imperfect and pluperfect subjunctive in ancient popular Latin, and concludes, from the evidence afforded by the Romance languages, (1) that the classical form of the imperfect subjunctive probably did not exist among the common people, and that its place was supplied by the pluperfect form; (2) that the pluperfect idea was probably expressed sometimes by the simple pluperfect tense, and sometimes by a combination of the past participle with the pluperfect subjunctive of habere or some other auxiliary. Some valuable notes on the Agamemnon are contributed by L. Campbell. C. H. Toy's essay on "Problems of General Semitic Grammar," and J. M. Hart's on "Keltic and Germanic Verse," will interest the student of comparative philology.

IN the last number of Bursian's Jahresbericht Lorenz continues his report on recent Plautine literature. Haug concludes his upon Roman epigraphy, and Curtze deals with recent works on the exact sciences in antiquity.

WE are glad to notice that a second edition has been called for of Sievers' Grundzüge der Phonetik.

FOR Oriental students Messrs. Trübner have the following list of valuable works ready for publication at an early date:—Tsai-Ilgob, the Supreme Being of the Khoi Khoi, by Theophilus Hahn, Ph.D., Grey Librarian at Cape Town; Hindustani, Persian, and Arabic Grammar simplified, by Prof. E. H. Palmer; an English-Persian Dictionary, by Prof. E. H.

Palmer; The Quatrains of Umor Chayyam, translated from the Persian by E. H. Whinfield; The Complete Poetical Works of Hafiz, translated from the Persian by Prof. Palmer, in two volumes: Eastern Proverbs and Emblems, illustrative of Moral and Religious Truth, by the Rev. J. Long; The Mind of Mencius: a Digest of the Doctrines of the Chinese Philosopher Mencius, translated from the German of E. Faber by the Rev. A. B. Hutchinson; The Dāya Bhāga; or, Law of Inheritance, the Original Sanskrit, with Introduction and notes, by the Rev. Thos. Foulkes; The Sankhya-Karika, translated from the Sanskrit, with Introduction and notes, by John Davies, M.A. Cantab.; The Bhagavad-Gītā, translated from the Sanskrit, with Introduction and notes, by John Davies, M.A.; The Sarvādarsana Sangraha, translated from the Sanskrit, with notes, by E. B. Cowell and A. E. Gough; Vedāntasāra: a Manual of Hindu Pantheism, translated from the Sanskrit, with copious annotations, by Major G. A. Jacob; and Indian Poetry, consisting of Translations of the "Gita Govinda," and Portions of the "Mahabharata" and "Hitopadesa," by Edwin Arnold, M.A.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—(Thursday, March 17.)

HENRY REEVE, ESQ., C.B., V.-P., in the Chair.—Rev. W. C. Lukis read a paper upon the prehistoric monuments on Dartmoor—where they are very numerous—and exhibited a number of plans and drawings of the monuments which he had examined. Of the twenty-four avenues and lines of stones which are found on the moor, Mr. Lukis is of opinion that the majority are sepulchral, and the rings at the end enclosing cairns. In some cases, especially one which crosses the River Erme and consists of 2,500 stones, the object of the line was to join two tombs. On Kingston Hill, also, two cairns, one of which is ringed and the other a kist, are connected by a line, nearly straight, of 1,400 feet in length. The eastern end of the line generally shows the largest stones; but in Brittany the reverse is the case. There are six large circles on the moor, the largest being 120 feet in diameter. These were probably sepulchral, but there is no direct evidence. Mr. Lukis also enumerated and described various hut-circles and holed stones in the same locality.—Mr. Franks exhibited a Saxon ivory double seal found at Wallingford. The two sides bear the names and effigies of Godwin (a thane) and Godgytha (a nun), while the handle is ornamented with a group which probably represents the two first Persons of the Trinity treading Death under foot. Close to the seal were found a comb and a bone. Probably all three articles had once been attached together.—Mr. Ferguson exhibited two Elizabethan chalices from churches in Cumberland, and a tankard with a lid decorated with foliage, birds, and serpents. This bore the year letter for 1678-79.

FINE ART.

ART BOOKS.

The South Kensington Drawing-Book. By E. J. Poynter, R.A. (Blackie and Son.) The School of Art Series of Drawing Copy-Books. By the Rev. C. G. Brown. (John Walker and Co.) The South Kensington Series are divided into three sections—Elementary, First Grade and Second Grade, Freehand; and Mr. Poynter has, we think, wisely taken a great many of his earlier examples from Japanese designs and emblems, getting away quickly from straight lines into work which is not only of great advantage in training the hand to draw curves, but is interesting in itself. Drawing is much more pleasant when the object to be drawn is pretty, and some of the most simple of these Japanese designs are not only pretty, but fascinating by their strange ingenuity. After finishing the second elementary book, some pupils will find the severity of First Grade, Book I., rather trying; it may be promotion, but not without drawbacks. The main thing is, however, that the examples should be progressive, and their forms various and good. Mr. Poynter's is, probably, the best series of the kind yet published; but Mr. Brown's is very good, and cheaper.

The Great Artists. (Sampson Low and Co.) Fra Angelico, &c. By Catherine Mary Phillimore. Fra Bartolomeo, &c. By Leader Scott. These additions to this useful series do not call for much remark. They deal with a good many artists whose Lives have been frequently written before, and they compress a great deal into a small space. This is especially the case with that which treats of the earlier group of artists, in which so closely packed are the little biographies that there is scarcely room for the expression of individual opinion, and none for novelty of treatment. The authoress has had the assistance of Mrs. E. M. Ward; but it is difficult to see in what way that clever artist's counsel could have been employed, except in excision. The book is, however, an intelligent compilation of the latest authorities, which is more than can be said for all of the volumes in the series. Miss Scott has had freer scope, and has availed herself of it. She has written a very readable and pleasant account of Fra Bartolomeo, Albertinelli, Andrea del Sarto, and their followers, and has evidently personal acquaintance with the works of which she writes. Her reading (for we assume the author to be a lady) has also been adequate, and she does not always agree with her authorities, which is refreshing—giving, when she differs, reasons advanced with modesty and sense. Though her name is new to us, she inspires confidence, both by her evident care and industry and the knowledge she shows; and we are sure that she will be always an agreeable, and are not sure that she will not become an authoritative, writer on art.

Decoration and Furniture of Town Houses. By R. W. Edis, F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) This painful treatise consists of a "series of Cantor lectures, delivered before the Society of Arts, amplified and enlarged"—and, to help the author to a third synonym, let us add, inflated—to surprising proportions. It contains a good many things which are true, if by no means new, among the hints on household taste, which it borrows, often in the welcome form of quotation, from Mr. Eastlake's unaffected, practical little manual. The whole book, indeed, is little more than a shopping guide to parties about to furnish. A few short and sensible papers have appeared from time to time upon town houses, which have paved the way for a most useful and desirable work which should advise us briefly, clearly, and in detail as to the best treatment of London houses, such as they unfortunately are, dividing them into distinct classes, as those under £100 a-year, those from £100 to £200, and so on. Nothing of this does Mr. Edis attempt, but wanders on, or rather round and round, always harking back to his stained floors, and friezes of birds and flower-pots, "treated in flat tones of colour in outline," or, "if the narrowness of worldly circumstances prevents us, . . . treated simply and inexpensively." Mr. Edis practically admits that the householding soul is saved by flower-pot friezes, but not by flower-pot friezes alone, for he further insists upon the necessity of good work in the shape of plain tiled halls, rush-seated chairs, and handy bonnet-boxes, and recommends some acts of supererogation savouring of poverty and obedience, in the direction of étagères with sprawling wings supported on nothing (see pl. 16), or flanked by ugly glass cases full of guns (see pl. 10), or of door-panels stencilled with imitations of Japanese ornament (p. 166). Of the twenty-eight large plates, only six are designed by the author, and these all show a diffuseness and lack of proportion in accordance with his literary style. The dining-room chimney-piece is certainly bold and dignified, if not original. The best thing in the book is the author's constant warfare against carved furniture, and his praises of painted deal, though he forgets to warn us how soon it becomes bruised. Mr. Edis is so enthusiastic, and anxious to please everybody, that we have tried to be as indulgent as we possibly could to one who, possessing such a show of Nankin, crowds it together over the fireplace on such shelves (pl. 11). Screwed to the wall without supports, and so loaded, they are an agitating spectacle to the chinaman; while the old-fashioned critic will ask in despair why they are gradually reduced in length as they get higher, thus feebly aping, without achieving, a pyramidal grouping. It seems a burning shame, and so it will prove some day if Mr. Edis is not careful with those curtains which are hung from the mantel-shelf to draw across the fire.

Keramic Art of Japan. By Messrs. Audsley and Bowes. (Henry Sotheran.) It was a very happy thought of the publishers to issue a smaller and cheaper edition of this valuable work, which, in its former shape, was far beyond the reach of ordinary pockets, and somewhat cumbersome as a book of reference. Unlike many such costly and elaborate illustrated works, the letterpress was even more valuable than the plates; and it was difficult for the student of Japanese art to dispense with it. Our knowledge of the subject, especially of the pottery section, has increased somewhat since its first issue, and the authors have revised and corrected its text to the level of existing information. The present handsome volume, which is as exquisitely illustrated as the larger edition, is therefore something more than a "cheaper edition;" it is more correct and more handy, and should find a place on the shelves of all who care for either "keramic art" or Japan.

We have received several numbers of the Young Artist, which contain a large number of excellent original designs by Mr. Proctor and others.

EXHIBITIONS.

THE FRENCH GALLERY.

"ONCE the French Gallery always the French Gallery" seems to be the motto of the proprietors of the little room in Pall Mall. In the days when it was more French it was not so entirely foreign; but, to-day, though we have French, Italian, German, Spanish, Hungarian, and I know not how many more nationalities represented, we may seek in vain for an English picture. This is at least a distinction where others fail. We only wish that the catalogue would make for us a few more, for, what with the influence of the French school upon the German and the Spanish upon the French, there is a fine confused cosmopolitanism in the "exhibits" which makes it difficult to assign nationality to many of them. For the sake of the general public, if not for the critics, might it not be desirable in the next catalogue to give the school or country to which each painter belongs? The confusion is not diminished by comparison of subject with name. Chelminski does not sound German, but he paints us Vater Fritz. Couleur de Rose is certainly French, not only in title, but in every touch of its exquisite colour; but it is by Herr Kiesel. Duverger we know, and his charming little picture of school-boys playing pranks with the clock was, if we mistake not, in the Salon last year; but is the painter of When the Cat's away the Mice will play, and whose name is printed Dargelas, a compatriot of his? The two pictures seem at least to be not only fellow-countrymen, but blood-relations. Another distinction which it would not be difficult to make is between living and deceased artists; there are here pictures by Corot, Daubigny, Diaz, and Dupré, all of them dead, but there is nothing to show it in the catalogue.

The Rushgown Pool, by the late Jules Dupré, is a charming little example of the master. There are also two pretty little Corots; but the larger picture by this celebrated artist, called Lady at her Toilette, though beautiful in tone and atmosphere, has little else to recommend it. It is, however, just these qualities that are wanting in many of the pictures here, full of the tricks without all the skill of Fortuny; and it is a relief to turn to it, despite the ugliness of its figures, to breathe a breath of real air and feel surrounded by space.

There is no fear of being stifled beneath the clear transparent skies of Heffner, whose landscapes are as original in style as they are true and beautiful in colour; nor on the breezy poppy-field of Salmson, with its industrious peasants beating out the black seed; nor yet on the cold shore where Sadée's fishers experience the Vicissitudes of Life.

It is to the Salon of last year that we owe Les Batteurs des Ellettes en Picardie, and also the wonderful piece of historical genre by L. Jimenez, called The Ante-chamber of a Minister. This is a masterpiece of its class. The magnificent chamber is full of light and colour, the painting of the marble floor and long path of carpet dexterous exceedingly, while the groups are not less varied in costume than in character, and alive with thought and wit and sentiment. It is, however, to the German school that the most noble work of the exhibition belongs. The grand portraits of Prince Bismarck and Count Moltke, by Franz Lonbach, seem to look out in scorn on their surroundings of frivolities, French, Spanish, and Italian; and one turns with delight from artificial pose and forced colour to the human dignity and solid sunlight of Prof. L. C. Muller's Courtyard of the Doge's Palace. By the same artist is a small study of A Cairene Girl, perfect in modelling and colour.

Of old favourites, none is better represented than Jules Breton, who has two or three of his thoughtful peasant girls. In the same style is a good figure by P. Billet; and of the rest of the pictures it may be said that there is scarcely one that is not clever. There are small examples of Jimenez y Aranda, Madrazo, Muncacsy, and others whose names are guarantees for colour and dexterity, some little scenes from Venice by Rasch, and some from Spain by Benlliure which are bright and striking. There are also a few beautiful little works by German artists, of which one, Striking the Key-note, by H. Kauffmann, is a little masterpiece.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

TOOTH'S GALLERY.

THIS is a very choice little collection of pictures, the finest of which is by Prof. Muller. Not so ambitious in subject as the Doge's Courtyard at the French Gallery, its success is more complete. There is a very beautiful Edouard Frère; a rough, but clever, example of Bastien-Lepage, with a green field rising up like a wall behind some mowers; a clever, but not beautiful, scene in the Bois de Boulogne by de Nittis; and a fine piece of drawing and colour by Madrazo. Among other clever foreign pictures should especially be noticed Edouard Schulz-Briesen's Committed, a very strong and careful piece of painting. By English artists there is one of Mr. Leader's delightful landscapes, A Welsh Stream in Summer-time, admirable in design and charming in feeling, though a little colder than usual in colour. The British school of landscape is also well represented by works of McWhirter, Vicat Cole, G. Cole, Waterlow, E. Parton, Peter Graham, and others. Mrs. Anderson sends a sweet little girl's head, and Mr. Hicks another Zillah, Mr. Pettie two fine single figures, Mr. Burgess two beautiful Spanish Ladies, and Mr. Ernest Crofts a very clever sketch called Dismounted. Miss J. Hayllar's Another Gem deserves special notice on account of the accomplishment of the work and the youth of the artist. C. M.

THE SOCIETY OF LADY ARTISTS.

If it were not ungallant to say so, we should be disposed to describe the Exhibition of the Society of Lady Artists as depressing. Vigour, originality, and truth to nature are unhappily scarce. The conviction, which appears to be firmly rooted in the minds of so many of the exhibitors, that lines, more or less waved, represent water cannot be considered as well founded; nor can we congratulate many of the ladies on their mastery of colour. There are, however, some meritorious works. Thus we have in The Old Vicarage, Old Eastbourne (29), by Miss Annie Wilson, a careful and truthful study of an old house-wall; and In a Kentish Churchyard (128), by Miss Grace M. Hastie, shows many admirable qualities. The old yew-tree is excellent, both as to colour and drawing. Among the Mulberries (17), by Miss Helen Thornycroft, deserves attention for the truthful rendering of the tints of the leaves and the hat. Miss Louise Rayner sends an elaborate and clever drawing of Foregate Street, Chester (96), with the lights picked out in white body-colour, after the manner of this artist. But is there ever so much blue distance to be seen in the streets of Chester? There is also a pleasant Fan Design—Flowers from Nature (704), by Miss Charlotte Isa James; and Miss Rosalie Gay sends a well-painted study of Flowers (550). As might be expected, indeed, the strong point of the ladies is flower-painting, and the visitor will find on the walls many more or less excellent efforts in this class of art. The oil paintings we must decline to characterise.

EXHIBITION OF SWISS ART.

THE Exhibition of Swiss Art at 168 New Bond Street contains a few works of interest. There is a Portrait of M. S. C. (16), by M. C. Vuillermet, in which the lines of old age in the countenance are given with truth and vigour. If the colour were more harmonious, this would be a striking work. There is also here the picture of William Tell saving Baumgartner (31), by M. Leonard Lugardon, from the Council Hall at Bern, a composition in which there are many features of interest. The action is spirited, if a little over-strained, and the colour in many respects is extremely pleasing. M. A. Veillon has some effective landscapes, of which the Morning View of Monte Rosa from the Riffelberg (26) seems to us the best. We should also draw attention to the clever rendering by this artist of early morning light on snow in The Eiger from the Wengernalp, near Lauterbrunnen (49). In some of the figures in The Village Engine going to a Fire (52), by M. Eugène Burnand, there is much vigour and character; but the legs of the foremost horse are truly startling. M. Albert Gos sends a poetic study of Le Gramont, seen from Vevey—April Morning Effect (90). Among the water-colours we may notice a careful and satisfactory drawing by M. H. Terry of At Zinal, Dent Blanche (186), and an elaborate study of Veytaux, Chillon, on Lake of Geneva, by M. C. J. Way (118).

ART SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON AND WOODS had a picture sale of some importance on Saturday, most noticeable, perhaps, for the appearance of remarkable works by artists not known familiarly to visitors at the Royal Academy. Thus, Henry Dawson, the eminent Nottingham landscape painter, was represented by a picture of Lancaster, with Morecombe Bay in the distance, which was knocked down to Mr. McLean for 450 guineas. The rise in this artist's works which has taken place within the last few years is particularly noticeable. Mr. E. J. Niemann's picture of Richmond, Yorks, sold for 240 guineas. By James Ward, R.A., often known as "Ward the animal painter," but really no inconsiderable artist in landscape, and a very forcible as well as subtle portrait painter, there appeared Harlech Castle, which was purchased for 110 guineas (Tooth). In the sale of "a different property" was included a picture by Sir Frederick Leighton, Jonathan's Token to David, which was painted about fourteen years ago, and which now realised 330 guineas. The sum of 240 guineas was paid for a pretty example of Edouard Frère, The Child's Prayer; while Mr. Martin Colnaghi bought for 310 guineas an interesting and humorous example of Jan Steen, La mauvaïse Menagère. Upwards of £8,000 was realised by the day's sale.

FAR more important, however, was the sale of Mr. John W. Wilson's pictures held last week in Paris. This collection had been exhibited in 1873 for the benefit of the poor of Brussels, and was likewise well known through the publication of a great catalogue with illustrative etchings. The speciality of the collection, in so far as it had a speciality, was that it was formed very much on the lines of modern taste, the recently added examples especially having been acquired somewhat in deference to modern criticism. Thus, among modern French painters Millet was the favourite, and among the Dutch perhaps Frans Hals. Millet's chef-d'œuvre, or at all events his most popular painting, L'Angelus, was in the collection, and it sold for more than six thousand pounds. It is related that shortly after it was painted, only twenty-one years ago, it fetched but £100. At the recent sale The Gleaner by the same artist fetched nearly a thousand pounds. Rousseau's Village in Normandy fell for £800; Decamps' Interior of a Court in Italy, about £1,450. One of the finest landscapes of Troyon, La Mare, realised £1,225, and a Venice by Ziem—one of the innumerable renderings of Venice by this skilled if somewhat mannered artist—reached £700. No less than £5,000 was realised for The Halt of Meissonier, a very well-known canvas, and, of course, one of the capital examples of this now veteran master.

At the recent sale of the Coale collection at New York, 123 pictures realised the aggregate sum of 71,477 dols. (£14,000). Among them were two Meissoniers—On the Balcony and The Musqueteer, the latter of which obtained the highest price at the sale (£1,350). Other large prices were:—Alfred Stevens' In the Garden (£530); Jules Dupré's Autumn Morning (£400); Auguste Schenck's Sheep in the Pyrenees (£370); P. J. Clays' November Evening—Dutch Coast (£352); and Benjamin Constant's The Sultan's Favourite (£340).

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WE are informed that an important loan exhibition of pictures, ceramic art, and fine embroideries is being organised at the East End, and will open at Easter, in the three large school-rooms attached to St. Jude's, White-chapel. It is understood that a loan will be made from South Kensington for the occasion, and that Sir Frederick Leighton and Mr. G. F.

Watts, R.A., and other artists of eminence, as well as several collectors, have promised to lend pictures and other works of art.

WE regret to hear that recent illness has prevented Mr. W. J. Hennessy from completing his Academy and Grosvenor pictures by the expected time. He has, however, finished for the Royal Academy An Impressionist at Work; and, owing to the late hour at which pictures can be received at the Grosvenor Gallery, still trusts to finish Jocund Spring and Straw Harvest, Calvados, in time for exhibition there. But the usual "private view" held by him in London when he comes over from Normandy will not take place this year.

SIR NOEL PATON, the eminent Scotch painter, will shortly be presented with the freedom of the burgh of Dunfermline.

THE engraving just issued by Mr. J. H. Lefevre, entitled Past Mother's Grave, deserves a word of cordial commendation. It is etched by Mr. L. Lowenstam from the picture by Josef Israels, who has for many years had so large a popularity in this country owing to the touching sentiment and pathos exhibited in his subjects taken from the perilous life of the fisherman and mariner. The present design shows us the fisherman returning to his now lonely home. He has been met by his son, who has brought the infant he could not leave behind him, and now they pass by the little wooden cross which marks the grave of the mother, we may suppose but lately dead. The boy drawing the father's attention to the cross, and the expression of the man, who looks fixedly before him, avoiding the sight of the too well-remembered object, the unconscious infant in the father's arms, are all delicately touched and emphasised by the painter. Mr. Lowenstam has done his part well. The execution attains to high finish, and is powerful in effect, while the sentiment is admirably preserved.

AT the last meeting of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland a paper was read by Sir Robert Christison upon the ancient wooden image found last November in a peat bog at Ballachulish, Glencoe. The figure is that of a nude female, four feet nine inches high, hewn out of a solid block of oak. The modelling is as rude as it is possible to conceive. The arms and hands are represented by rude carving in relief on the sides; the legs terminate without feet in the base of the block; the face is somewhat flattened, and the eyes are formed by the insertion of quartz pebbles. After a comparison with somewhat similar objects found at Holderness in Yorkshire in 1836, near Viborg in Jutland, and in Brandenburg, Sir R. Christison concluded that the image was probably of Scandinavian origin and connected with Pagan worship.

WE have recently received a tirage à part of the interesting notice on "Un Plan inédit de Rome au XV^e Siècle" read by M. Müntz in the course of last year before the Société nationale des Antiquaires de France. The plan in question occurs in one of the frescoes executed by Benozzo Gozzoli in the church of St. Augustin at San Gimignano; but, although these frescoes have long been known to the public by photographs, this view of Rome has escaped the notice even of M. de Rossi, the learned author of Piante iconografiche e prospettiche di Roma anteriori al Secolo XVI. In the background, on the left hand of the composition, representing St. Augustin leaving Rome, Benozzo Gozzoli has introduced a precise and detailed representation of that part of the city which lies between Trajan's Forum and the Vatican. All the principal monuments then existing are figured with scrupulous exactitude; and special interest attaches to the fact that among these is found the Pyramid, known as Meta Romuli, or Sepulchrum Scipionum, which was demolished by Alexander VI. in 1499. The fresco of Gozzoli bears date 1465; but, as he visited Rome at various intervals, it is not possible to determine the precise epoch at which he made the sketch employed in the composition, which enables us—better than the Mantuan plan published by M. de Rossi—to see the resemblance which the destroyed Meta Romuli bore to the still existing Pyramid of Cestius.

It is proposed by the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education to hold a special loan exhibition of Spanish and Portuguese ornamental art in the South Kensington Museum during the coming summer months.

THE question of utilising the ruins of the Tuileries is again under discussion in Paris. It is now proposed that M. Charles Garnier, the architect of the New Opera-house, shall take the matter in hand and restore the façade looking on to the gardens, and make it into a building suitable for the pictures which are so much in the way in the Luxembourg, while no other place is open to receive them.

THE Baron Adolphe de Rothschild opened last week, in Paris, an exhibition of some of the numerous treasures of art and curiosity of which he has so long been a celebrated collector. We hear that the public are admitted to this exhibition without restriction, in the splendid hall that the Baron has built for it in the Rue de Monceaux, though objects of the highest intrinsic as well as artistic value are to be seen there. Among the treasures may be mentioned a magnificent collection of carvings in rock crystal that the Baron has had brought from his château of Prégny.

A NEW catalogue has just appeared of the Musée de Cluny, edited by M. du Sommerard. It is a work of much labour and knowledge, for details are given of each object mentioned, and in some instances a perfect little monograph is written on the work under notice. Altogether this catalogue forms a most instructive volume of 700 pages. The Cluny Museum has made rapid strides of late. During the last two years, in particular, under the active direction of M. du Sommerard, it has nearly doubled its collections. Still one cannot help being amused at a piece of French conceit shown by a writer in the Evénement, who, alluding to Sir Ounliffe Owen's recent journey to Russia, remarks:—"These are the journeys that will enable the South Kensington Museum to take rank at last with the Musée de Cluny." France is, in truth, somewhat envious of South Kensington, with which she owns in general she has nothing that can at all compete. Our museum is so excellent, and has been such a grand success, that it seems to Frenchmen as if the idea of it ought to have been French.

IT is interesting to note how much more the French Government concerns itself in the execution of artistic works, and how much more employment it offers to artists, than our own. Scarcely a month passes in France that one does not hear of some monumental work, either of restoration or execution, entrusted to some good artist or group of artists. The latest work found for artists by the Under-Secretary of State for Fine Art is the complete redecoration of the Salle du Jeu de Paume at Versailles. For this the Minister asks a credit of 112,000 frs. (£4,450), and probably he will require much more before the elaborate decoration he has planned is finished. This decoration is to be chiefly in sculpture. A statue of Bailly will occupy the position of honour, while round the room will be placed twenty busts of celebrated men of the Tiers Etat who joined in the oath that has made the chamber memorable. A painting in grisaille is likewise to be on one of the walls, a reproduction of the grand composition of which the cartoon is in the Louvre.

PROMINENT among the portraits at the coming Salon will be those of the Princess Potocka and of Léon Cogniet, by Bonnat.

M. FLAHAUT, the landscape painter, will be represented at the Salon by an admirable picture entitled Le Retour à la Ferme.

THE success of the water-colour exhibit in the Rue Lafitte has exceeded all anticipations; the receipts are nearly double those of last year. One of Louis Leloir's sketches that was included in the collection has just been sold for £1,200.

A NEW periodical is announced from Brussels under the title of L'Art moderne. It will be published in quarto, on tinted paper, at the house of Felix Callewaert père.

M. LUDOVIC BASCHET has just published the first number of an important fortnightly magazine intended especially for family reading and for the young. The editors are M. Adrien Marie for art and M. Daniel Bernard for the literary department, and on the staff we observe many well-known names. The annual subscription is forty francs. The same publisher announces Les Artistes modernes, a weekly publication, which will give biographies of the French artists whose contributions have attracted special attention at the Salon and other exhibitions.

MR. HODDER M. WESTROPP has just terminated a series of lectures on Greek and Roman sculptures, painted vases, and antique gems, at the rooms of the British Archaeological Society, Palazzo Altompe, Rome.

M. HUGHES MERLE, a French artist of some distinction, died at Paris on March 16. Born in 1823, he was a pupil of Léon Cogniet, and exhibited his first picture at the Salon of 1843. His favourite subjects were portraits and rural groups. His Mendiant is now in the Luxembourg. In 1866 he was decorated with the Legion of Honour.

BETWEEN the communes of Brettlach and Grenchen, in the canton of Solothurn, at the foot of the Jura, there is a large open space, which has long been known in the folks-speech as the "Chuzekammer." Roman antiquities have been often found there, and during the present winter the excavations have been carried out under the supervision of the cantonal Geschichtsforschende Verein. The foundations of Roman walls have been laid bare, and a considerable number of Celtic as well as Roman remains have been unearthed.

THE Cracow Academy of Sciences has latterly been occupied with the exploration of a number of ancient stone cists in East Galicia and in the neighbouring territories through which the Dniester flows. An account of some of the results is given in the Vienna Allgemeine Zeitung. Among the objects obtained is a female terracotta figure greatly resembling those found by Schliemann at Mycenae. The great antiquity of the grave from which this was taken is indicated by the fact that no object of bronze or iron was discovered. Vessels have also been found the ornamental designs on which are identical with some of the peculiar ornamentations on vessels found by Schliemann. Stone implements have been obtained from most of the graves, and occasionally, but much less frequently, bronze articles. More than a hundred skulls have been examined, and these are all dolichocephalic; while the skulls of the Poles, Russians, Roumanians, and others now inhabiting the region are brachycephalic. This fact proves that the ancient people could not have been allied to the Slavonic races. Dolichocephalic skulls are found in the ancient graves of South Germany, and it is suggested that the Galician graves contain the remains of an ancient German people.

SIGNOR A. LANZI proposes to publish in ten volumes (Milan: Faverio) a biographical dictionary of living Italian artists. He has already secured the co-operation of Signori de Gubernatis, Cesare Cantù, Labus, &c.

THE Russian artists in Paris have just opened an exhibition of their own. There are sufficient number of artists of Russian nationality in Paris not only to hold exhibitions, as, indeed, they have done for the last three years, but to form a benevolent society for mutual aid. It is thought that the present exhibition will very likely lead to the formation of a Cercle russe at the atelier in the Rue de Tilsit, where it is now held.

THE architect Leo Chatelain and the painter Alfred Berthoud have been commissioned by the Government of the canton of Neuchâtel to visit and report upon the picture galleries of England and Belgium, in preparation for the erection of the new museum of the city of Neuchâtel.

HERR WEIGEL, of Leipzig, announces a second and enlarged edition, revised to the present time, of E. Presuhn's finely illustrated work on recent excavations at Pompeii.

A MEETING of the Verein für Geschichte des Bodensees was held at Rorschach on March 9, and was attended by representatives of the five States which surround the Lake of Constance—Baden, Wurtemberg, Bavaria, Austria, and Switzerland. Papers were read upon the late Roman excavations in Upper Swabia, on the minsters of Constance and Ueberlingen, the new discoveries of lacustrine buildings in the latter place, and on the wall-paintings of the eleventh and twelfth centuries in Reichenau. Six documents relating to the Holbein family were introduced and commented upon.

THE STAGE.

"MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT" AT THE THEATRE.

Tom Pinch at the Vaudeville Theatre is a very good instance of the adroit treatment on the stage of not quite suitable material, Messrs. Clifton and Dilley—the adapters of the piece from Martin Chuzzlewit—having little to reproach themselves with beyond the initial mistake of imagining that what is hardly more than an episode in Dickens's novel could properly constitute the main theme of a lasting play. But perhaps, indeed, even this mistake was not committed by them; they may have been concerned simply to furnish an agreeable theatre with dramatic matter somewhat especially suited to two or three of the players there. This feat they have certainly accomplished, and have done so without sacrifice of any of the essentials of Dickens's characters. Tom Pinch suits Mr. Thorne's style excellently; the modest hesitation of speech, the timid gesture, and the rarity of movement associated with this actor are in perfect keeping with the part; the suppressed emotion which Mr. Thorne can express so well, and of which the expression is often as pathetic as it is seemingly awkward, fits Tom Pinch exactly. As Pecksniff, Mr. Farren appropriately returns to boards on which he has had some of his best successes. With a little more of slowness and of unctuousness his Pecksniff would be irreproachable. As it is, it is of course entertaining, the actor abounding in facial expression and in knowledge of stage resource. Irrespective of the novel, and thinking only of the play, we should probably like Mr. Maclean's old Chuzzlewit better if some more obvious and direct justification were afforded for what is undoubtedly his double-dealing with Mr. Pecksniff. As it is, Mr. Maclean, intending to be feeble and forcible by turns—according as he is representing what Chuzzlewit wished Pecksniff to think him or what Chuzzlewit really was—does not quite enlist our sympathy with either of his impersonations. Nor is Mr. Grahame, with all his manliness, quite sympathetic enough for Chuzzlewit the younger. The ladies are generally more fortunate. The purposed affectations of Miss Larkin as a woman of the age at which under-bred spinsters become over-modest provoke continuous laughter. Along with some of the conventionalities of the theatre, Miss Larkin displays much humorous appreciation of the weaker side of a half-civilised and wholly artificial humanity. Dickens himself would have been content with Miss Cicely Richards, so exceedingly piquant and quaint—so delightfully full of the lackadaisical graces of the year 1830—does she become in the part of Mr. Pecksniff's younger daughter. Miss Richards has within the last two or three years been making herself a highly valuable actress of character and comedy. As Ruth Pinch—the maker of a pudding only less famous in the annals of fiction than was Peg Woffington's pie—Miss Lydia Cowell is admirably natural and cheery.

Indeed, the piece is well played—so well played that, in the skilled presentation of funny or kindly character, one often forgets the slightness of interest belonging to the plot. In one sense Dickens is not good for the theatre; hardly ever can his novels furnish to the boards a sufficient sequence of stirring scenes. In another sense, however, he is good for the theatre, for, whatever is denied, there is almost always a fresh pleasure in meeting his personages on the stage, in hearing his dialogue proceed from living mouths, and in seeing on the boards the quaint figures, groups, and accessories suggested by the sketches of Hablot Browne. Tom Pinch will not live as long as two or three others of the adaptations, because its interest is weaker. The gentle Tom himself, as ungainly, if less repulsive, than Jo, passes through no adventures that can stir us as deeply as those of Lady Dedlock's guide and the law-writer's protégé. There is nothing in Tom's personality to fascinate us as we are fascinated with the rough bonhomie of Capt. Cuttle, so vividly presented by Mr. Emery; and nothing in Tom's career at once so romantic and so pathetic as the departure of Little Em'ly and the wanderings of her uncle. But as long as the piece is acted as it is acted at the Vaudeville, the adaptation from Chuzzlewit will please many.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

Michael Strogoff—the new piece at the Adelphi—will run for many months, we suppose; but, though there is some fine acting in it, it is not a piece which we should care to see twice. It is so exceedingly spectacular that much of the interest which the actors have roused is dissipated before they have an opportunity of renewing or confirming it. Yet the play of emotion and adventure in it is too considerable to allow of its being taken, as a spectacle should be, very lightly. The interminable journey of Michael Strogoff bears evidence of the hand of Jules Verne; the melodramatic portions betray the hand of M. d'Ennery. Mr. Byron is the English adapter. He would probably have worked with greater art at the dialogue if his amour propre had been more nearly concerned; but it must be difficult for an author of successful comedy—for a man who knows he can raise laughter at will—to set himself very steadily to the task of giving such a play as Michael Strogoff, not English form, but the best English form. Greater strength and a more studied terseness of language seem to be wanted in the best situations—in the scenes that are most emotional. Mr. Charles Warner plays the hero with the fire and impulse which are so much his own, giving to each sentence of his part its fullest significance, with an earnestness not characteristic of the modern fashions at the theatre, but which he does well to sedulously preserve. He marks his performance by appropriate vigour and chivalry, and it is at all moments engaged, imaginatively, in the proper business of the scene. Mrs. Bernard Beere represents, picturesquely and with some dramatic force, the character of an engaging gipsy who makes frequent appearances. Mr. Byron himself plays naturally a part of light comedy—the foreign correspondent of one of the great dailies. His part is full of good things, and the laugh is always in his favour. In the original piece much fun was made by our neighbours of the English correspondent; nor was it the first time that the Parisians had laughed at the irrepressibility of the "special." We remember many years ago seeing a melodrama quite as famous as the present one; it was La Prise de Pékin, in which the humour lurking in the bearing of the representative of a great daily—unhappy, no doubt, even then for "prior information"—was first suggested.

MR. EDWIN BOOTH during the last few nights of his performance at the Princess's has been playing Shylock and Petruchio. The Shylock was in that frequently used stage version of The Merchant of Venice which ends with the fourth act, and the performance appears to count neither among Mr. Booth's least satisfactory nor among his most successful. It is, we cannot doubt, by his Lear and his Iago that he will be most remembered when he shall have left us.

MISS BATEMAN (Mrs. Crowe) is appearing at Sadler's Wells in Mary Warner with a success long ago ensured. Next to Leah, the performance counts as her most popular. All in it is judiciously studied and vigorously or pathetically executed. Miss Bateman receives fair support from the regular company.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THE programme of the last Saturday Popular Concert included Schubert's unfinished symphony in B minor (No. 8). We have already stated why No. 7 cannot be performed. Some sheets of the MS. were placed for inspection in the centre transept. Of the eighth, only two movements and nine bars of a third were ever written. It was a happy thought of Mr. Grove to have the entracte from Schubert's Rosamunde played by way of finale. It is, as he truly says, "animated by something of the same spirit, and forms a not inappropriate completion to the unfinished work." The performance was excellent. Columbus: a Dramatic Cantata, by Mr. Henry Gadsby, was the novelty. The libretto, by Mr. W. Grist, is well written and very interesting: the story deals with the concluding episodes of Columbus's eventful voyage. The music shows the hand of a practised musician; but it is singularly tame, and at times monotonous. Some of the choruses (the work is written for tenor solo and male voice choir) are pretty and pleasing, but throughout there is very little vigour or dramatic power. The finale appears to us the weakest part of the cantata. The solos were well sung by Mr. E. Lloyd. The work was conducted by Mr. Gadsby, who was much applauded at the close.

A quartet in G minor (op. 14), by R. Volkmann, was performed for the first time at the last Monday Popular Concert by Herren Joachim, Ries, Straus, and Haumann. The composer, born in 1815, has written symphonies, concertos, and chamber-music of every kind. The ideas and workmanship in the quartet are good and sound, but by no means striking or original. The scherzo and finale contain strong proofs that Volkmann was not unacquainted with Mendelssohn's E flat quartet and Mozart's finale to the G minor symphony. Mme. Schumann was again the pianist, playing solos by Bach. In the second part of the programme she took part in Schumann's pianoforte quintet (op. 44). The performance of this work was all that could be desired. Herr von zur Mühlen was the vocalist of the evening. He has a good voice, and sang in excellent style some Lieder by Schubert and Schumann.

M. Lamoureux gave his second orchestral concert last Tuesday. He provided an interesting programme, and again proved himself an excellent conductor. The first piece was a new suite for orchestra by Massenet. It is scored for a very full orchestra, but contains more sound than sense. An overture entitled Sigurd, by M. Beyer, was the next novelty. The composer succeeded Hector Berlioz as musical director of the Journal des Débats. The opera Sigurd was written eighteen years ago. The music is clever, though somewhat dry. Mme. Montigny-Rémanry gave a pianoforte concerto in F minor (op. 39), by M. C. M. Widor, a French musician born at Lyons in 1845. The first movement is very interesting; the themes are characteristic and well worked, but there is, perhaps, too much restlessness and striving after originality. The andante and finale contain much showy and graceful writing. Mme. Rémanry gave a first-rate performance of this difficult work. M. Saint-Saëns' clever Danse Macabre, and M. Léo Delibes' graceful ballet-music, Sylvia, formed part of the programme, and were greatly applauded. The latter work was announced as a first performance in England, but it was given at the Crystal Palace in 1879. Mme. Brunet-Lafleur contributed songs by Spontini and Gluck. M. Lamoureux deserves the thanks of the musical public for having given them the opportunity of hearing so much modern French music.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

WE hear that Mr. W. A. Barrett, Mus.Bac., &c., has undertaken the editorship of the Orchestra.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186 Strand, and Messrs. CURTICE & Co., Catherine Street, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can also be obtained every Saturday Morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. W. H. SMITH and SONS; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

PARIS.

Copies can be obtained in Paris every Saturday morning of M. FOTHERINGHAM, 8 Rue Neuve des Capucines.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL

SCHOOL, ALBERT EMBANKMENT, LONDON, S.E.—The Winter Session commences on October 1, and the Summer on May 1. Students can enter at either Session. Two open entrance Scholarships of £100 and £50 for 1st Year's Students are awarded in October. In addition to ordinary prizes amounting to £200, the following Scholarships, Medals, &c., are given, viz.:—The "William Titie" Scholarship, £30; College Scholarship, £10; Gold Medal for two years; "Mugrovo" Scholarship, of some value; "Solely" Medal and Prize; "Chesedon" Medal; "Head" Medal; Treasurer's Gold Medal; "Grainger" Prize, &c. Special Classes for Matriculation, Preliminary Scientific, and 1st M.B. of University of London, and Private Classes for other Examinations. There are numerous Hospital appointments open to Students without charge. For Prospectus and particulars apply to Dr. GILLESPIE, Secretary.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s., post-free.

STUDIES IN PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

THE Sun; Transit of Venus; Spectrum Analysis; the Moon; the Stars and Planets; Comets and Meteors; Atmospheric Electricity; Whirlwinds; Glaciers; the Telephone. By W. J. MILLAR, C.E., Secretary to the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland; Author of "Principles of Mechanics," &c. "This work consists of chapters from several sciences—astronomy, electricity, heat, light, &c. They cover a good deal of ground, and include objects as wide apart as whirlwinds and spectrum analysis, glaciers and the telephone."—Liverpool Advertiser.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Haltham.

Fcap. 8vo, 128 pp., price 1s. 6d.

A MEDLEY OF NOTABLES: What

they said and What others said of them. By G. F. S. "This little book contains on one side of each page a quotation from some well-known author, and on the other side a brief notice of this author by other authors. If we turn to Shakespeare, for instance, we find quoted Hamlet's description of "Ophelia's death, while there are given notices of Shakespeare by Keats, Ben Jonson, Browning, Barnfield, and by some anonymous writer who likely enough is the editor. From him we learn that 'Shakespeare went before all men, and stands in the array of human intellect like the sun in the system, single and unapproached.'"—Saturday Review.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Haltham.

NEW WORK BY MR. SHADWORTH H. HODGSON.

In crown 8vo, half-bound, with gilt top, price 8s. 6d.

OUTCAST ESSAYS AND VERSE

TRANSLATIONS. By SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, LL.D., Editor; Author of "The Philosophy of Reflection," "Time and Space," and "The Theory of Practices."

London: LONGMANS & Co.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW for

APRIL, will be published on TUESDAY, APRIL 12TH. ADVERTISEMENTS intended for insertion cannot be received by the Publishers later than TUESDAY, APRIL 5TH.

London: LONGMANS & Co., 39, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Just published, 4to, price 6s.

LANE'S ARABIC-ENGLISH LEXICON.

Edited by STANLEY LANE-POOLE.

Vol. VII., Fasciculus I.

WILLIAMS & NORRIS, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

At all Libraries.

A NEW WORK ON NEW ZEALAND.

Just published, 372 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

POENAMO.—SKETCHES of the EARLY

DAYS of NEW ZEALAND. Romance and Reality of Antipodean Life in the Infancy of a New Colony.

WILLIAMS & NORRIS, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

MR. ALSAGER HAY HILL'S NEW VOLUME.

Now ready.

A HOUSEHOLD QUEEN: Sonnets and other Poems. Price 3s. 6d., cloth; Popular Edition, 1s. London: "LABOUR NEWS" OFFICES, 15, Russell-street, Covent-garden; and from all Booksellers.

CHARLES DICKENS and ROCHESTER.

By ROBERT LANGTON. Profusely illustrated with very choice Wood Engravings. Price 1s.

"We think most highly of it."—Academy. "Charles Dickens and Rochester" gives an additional interest from the carefully designed and executed illustrations."—Saturday Review.

London: CHAPMAN & HALL.

SYMONDS' LIBRARY.—FINE ARTS

and ANTIQUITIES.—The CATALOGUE of the COLLECTIONS of the late Dr. SYMONDS, of Clifton, is now ready. Post-free for Two stamps.—WILLIAM GEORGE, Historical and Antiquarian Bookseller, 29, Park-street, Bristol.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8.15, Mr. J. MORTIMER'S successful adaptation, in five acts, of Alexandre Dumas' Play, "La Dame aux Camélias," entitled

HEARTSEASE.

Preceded, at 7.15, by J. MORTIMER'S successful Comedy,

TWO OLD BOYS.

Box-office open from 11 to 5. Doors open at 7. Carriages at 11. No fees. Acting Manager, Mr. H. HENMAN.

DRURY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

To-night, THE WORLD.
A Grand Sensational Drama, by MERITT, PETTITT, and HARRIS, pronounced by the Times newspaper, in its review of the theatrical year, to be most undoubtedly the greatest success of the year.

Preceded by THE STORES.

Messrs. Augustus Harris, William Rignold, Macklin, Gibson, Boleyn, Idley, Gresham, Idley, and Harry Jackson; Mesdames Fanny Joseph, Fanny Brough, Maude de Vera, M'Namara, and Louisa Payne.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.

At 8.15, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CREST.

Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Gordon, O. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Misses Lillian Cavalier, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.

At 10.15, THE STEEPCHASE; or, TOOLE in the PIGSKIN.

Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees or booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.

LAST NIGHT.—At 8.15, the Opera Comique,

NAVAL CADETS.

Supported by Messrs. Celli, Hazy, Loredan, Ashford, and Harry Paulton; Mesdames Amadi, Douglas, Maxwell, &c.

NOTICE.—The Theatre will RE-OPEN on SATURDAY, APRIL 16, with an entirely new Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled

MARGOT

(first time in this country). Produced under the immediate direction of Mr. H. B. FAIRIE, supported by a strongly augmented company, and elaborate mise-en-scène.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

To-night, Miss BATEMAN (Mrs. Crow) as

MARY WARNER.

In TOM TAYLOR'S popular Drama, for TWO WEEKS ONLY.

Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. No fees.

This Theatre will CLOSE during Passion Week.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. D'OLY CARTE.

LAST NIGHTS.—At 8.45,

THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE.

A new and original Melodramatic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SELLIVAN.

Preceded, at 7.15, by

IN THE SULK.

Messrs. G. Grossmith, Richard Temple, Rutland Barrington, Durward Lely, F. Thornton, and Geo. Temple; Mesdames Emilio Petrelli, Ellen Shirley, Jessie Bond, R. Brandram, Gwynne, Barlow, and Alice Barnett. Conductor, Mr. F. Collier.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDOAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called

THE COLONEL.

By F. C. BURMAN.

Preceded, at 7.30, by a one-act Comedy, by SYDNEY GRUNDY,

IN HONOUR BOUND.

Messrs. Coghlan, Flockton, W. Herbert, Eric Mayley, Rowland Buckstone, and Edgar Bruce; Mesdames Amy Roselle, Myra Holme, C. Graham, Lash Murray, &c.

New scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith.

Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOOCH.

LAST POSITIVE NIGHT of Mr. EDWIN BOOTH'S ENGAGEMENT. MERCHANT OF VENICE and KATHERINE AND PETRUCHIO.

Mr. EDWIN BOOTH (by special desire) will enact

SHYLOCK and PETRUCHIO.

Preceded, at 7.15, by the Farce

THAT BLESSED BABY.

Doors open at 6.45. Box-office open daily.

On SATURDAY, APRIL 2, will be produced an entirely new and original romantic Drama of sensational interest, entitled BRAND EDD.

Written by RICHARD LEE.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 7.30, a new and original Drama, by JOE MACKAY, entitled

PEGOY.

To conclude with DON JUAN JUNIOR.

New in the full tide of its success. Mesdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Coveney, Amy Crawford, Ruth Francis, Florence Lavender, Sylvia Grey, and E. Hilda; Messrs. Edward Highton, Frank Cooper, H. Kealey, H. Martell, and Seymour Dallas.

New and realistic scenery specially designed and executed by Bruce Smith. Acting and general Business Manager for Kate Lawler, CECIL RALEIGH. Stage Manager, E. RICHMOND.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."

Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."

W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."

CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA. A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

TO PROPRIETORS OF NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, Brief Notes & Opinion, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION OF PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether Illustrated or Plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

BOOK and MAGAZINE PRINTING.—

UNWIN BROS., the Printers of six-and-twenty various Serial Publications, furnish estimates on application. They have large premises both in London and Chisworth, Stereotype Foundry, and every Modern Appliance for the production of High-class work in Modern or Old Style.—Address, 109A, Cannon-street, E.C. Telephonic communication with upwards of 700 Firms.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Madie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Colotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

The Woodbury Process is utilised for photographs of Art Manufactures, Portraits, &c., where mounting is not an objection.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Durne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS OF PAINTINGS AND DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMPTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 25 in. by 21 in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

COME INTO THESE YELLOW SANDS," after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

Pictures Cleaned, Restored, Framed.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Dene, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 63, THREEDNEEDLE STREET.

BRANCH OFFICES, 60, CHARING CROSS;

And Oxford-street, corner of Vero-street.

Very low premiums without participation in Profits, especially for young lives. Half Premium, Non-Fortifere, and Endowment Assurances granted.

Prompt settlement of Claims.

The Society's newly revised Prospectus, and a greatly simplified form of Proposal, will be forwarded on application.

J. G. PRIESTLEY, Actuary.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fullness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s. 9d. and 1s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal.

Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21

Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £5 6s. to 50 guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from £9 9s. to 45 guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21

Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

BRAND & CO'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.

Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.

Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.

Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.

Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.

BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY

MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS

Are free from SMELL

Are manufactured

Without Phosphorus

Are perfectly harmless

To the Operatives employed

Are very DAMP PROOF

LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

Now ready, in 4to, cloth, price 30s. ; in half-russia, 36s.

VOLUME XII. (HIR-IND)

OF THE

ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA.

Edited by Prof. THOS. SPENCER BAYNES, LL.D.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings on Wood and Steel.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

- | | | |
|--|---|--|
| HISSAR. C. E. D. BLACK. | HORTICULTURE. Dr. M. T. MASTERS and T. MOORE. | HYDROZOA. Prof. E. RAY LANKESTER. |
| HISTOLOGY. Profs. E. A. SCHÄFER and W. R. McNAB. | HOSEA. Prof. W. ROBERTSON SMITH. | HYGIENE. Prof. F. DE CHAUMONT. |
| HISTORY. J. C. MORRISON. | HOSEIERY. JAMES PATON. | HYGROMETRY. ALEX. BUCHAN. |
| HITTITES. Rev. T. K. CHEYNE. | HOSPITALS. Prof. F. DE CHAUMONT. | HYMENOPTERA. P. CAMERON. |
| HOBBS. Prof. G. CROOM ROBERTSON. | HOTTENTOTS. JOHN NOBLE. | HYMNS. LORD SELBORNE. |
| HODOGRAPH. Prof. JAMES BLYTH. | HOUND. E. D. BRICKWOOD. | HYSTERIA. Dr. J. BATTY TUKE. |
| HOGARTH. AUSTIN DOBSON. | HUGUENOTS. Rev. G. W. KITCHIN. | IAMBlichUS. W. R. SORLEY. |
| HOLBEIN. J. A. CROWE. | HUMBOLDT, A. VON. Miss A. M. CLERKE. | IBN BATUTA. Col. YULE. |
| HOLBERG. E. W. GOSSE. | HUMBOLDT, W. VON. Prof. A. H. SAYCE. | ICE. CARGILL G. KNOTT, D.Sc. |
| HOLLAND— | HUME, DAVID. Prof. R. ADAMSON. | ICELAND. J. A. HJALTALIN and F. Y. POWELL. |
| GEOGRAPHY. Prof. C. M. KAN. | HUMMING-BIRD. Prof. NEWTON. | ICHTHYOLOGY. Dr. A. GUNTHER. |
| HISTORY. Rev. G. W. KITCHIN. | HUNGARY. E. D. BUTLER. | IDAHO. HENRY GANNETT. |
| LANGUAGE. J. B. VINCKERS and Dr. J. H. GALLÉE. | HUNT, LEIGH. RICHARD GARNETT. | ILLINOIS. J. W. SHEAHAN and J. MEDILL. |
| LITERATURE. E. W. GOSSE. | HUNTER, JOHN AND WILLIAM. F. H. BUTLER. | ILLUMINATION. H. B. WILSON. |
| HOMER. D. B. MONRO. | HUNTING. E. D. BRICKWOOD. | ILLYRIA. W. M. RAMSAY. |
| HOMESTEAD. E. P. HANNA. | HUSBAND AND WIFE. Prof. EDMUND ROBERTSON. | IMAGE WORSHIP. Rev. J. S. BLACK. |
| HOMOEOPATHY. Dr. J. G. GLOVER. | HUSS. Rev. J. SUTHERLAND BLACK. | INCENSE. Dr. GEORGE BIRDWOOD. |
| HONDURAS. E. G. SQUIER. | HUTCHESON. Prof. T. FOWLER. | INDEPENDENTS. Principal A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D. |
| HONEY. F. H. BUTLER. | HUTTON, JAMES. Prof. A. GEIKIE. | INDEX. H. B. WHEATLEY. |
| HONG-KONG. A. MACDONALD. | HWEN T'SANG. Col. H. YULE. | INDIA. W. W. HUNTER, LL.D. |
| HOOD, THOMAS. LORD HOUGHTON. | HYAENA. JOHN GIBSON. | INDIANA. A. C. HARRIS. |
| HOOKE, RICHARD. T. F. HENDERSON. | HYBRIDISM. G. J. ROMANES. | INDIAN ARCHIPELAGO. H. A. WEBSTER. |
| HOP. E. M. HOLMES. | HYDROCEPHALUS. Dr. J. O. AFFLECK. | INDIAN OCEAN. Dr. W. B. CARPENTER, C.B. |
| HORACE. Prof. W. Y. SELLAR. | HYDROGEN. Prof. H. E. ARMSTRONG. | INDIANS, AMERICAN. A. H. KEANE and H. GANNETT. |
| HORNBILL. Prof. ALFRED NEWTON. | HYDROMECHANICS. Profs. A. G. GREENHILL and W. C. UNWIN. | INDIAN TERRITORY. H. GANNETT. |
| HORSE— | HYDROMETER. W. GARNETT. | INDIA-RUBBER. E. M. HOLMES and T. BOLAS. |
| ANATOMY. Prof. W. H. FLOWER. | HYDROPATHY. Dr. W. B. HUNTER. | INDIGO. JAMES PATON. |
| HISTORY, MANAGEMENT, &c. E. D. BRICKWOOD. | HYDROPHOBIA. Dr. AFFLECK. | |
| RACING. E. D. BRICKWOOD, Major J. R. HUBBARD, and W. T. CHESTER. | | |

EDINBURGH: ADAM & CHARLES BLACK.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 465.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MESSRS. C. KEGAN PAUL & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE PARCHMENT LIBRARY.

NOTICE.—The New Volume in the PARCHMENT LIBRARY, entitled "ENGLISH ODES," selected by EDMUND W. GOSSE, and with a Miniature Frontispiece by Hamo Thornycroft, A.R.A., is published this day, price 6s., parchment; 7s. 6d., vellum.

Royal 4to, cloth, price £9 9s.

AN ENGLISH-ARABIC LEXICON. In which the Equivalents for English Words and Idiomatic Sentences are rendered into Literary and Colloquial Arabic. By GEORGE PERCY BADGER, D.C.L., late Chaplain, Bombay Presidency.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

MATHEMATICAL PSYCHICS: an Essay on the Application of Mathematics to the Moral Sciences. By F. Y. EDGEWORTH, Barrister-at-Law.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

THE NICOMACHEAN ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. Translated by F. H. PETERS, M.A., Fellow of University College, Oxford.

Crown 8vo, cloth.

CLAIRAUT'S ELEMENTS of GEOMETRY. Translated by Dr. KAINES. With 145 Figures. [Next week.]

With numerous Illustrations, crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

SIGHT: an Exposition of the Principles of Monocular and Binocular Vision. By JOSEPH LE CONTE, LL.D., Professor of Geology and Natural History in the University of California.

* * Vol. XXXIII. of the INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE SPIRIT of the CHRISTIAN LIFE: a New Volume of Sermons. By the Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

Cloth extra, gilt top, price 4s. 6d.

SAINT BERNARD on the LOVE of GOD. Translated by MARIANNE CAROLINE and COVENTRY PATMORE.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

SANSKRIT and its KINDRED LITERATURES: Studies in Comparative Mythology. By LAURA ELIZABETH POOR.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

VIRGINIBUS PUERISQUE, and other Papers. By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON, Author of "An Inland Voyage," "Travels with a Donkey," &c.

Printed on hand-made paper, cloth, bevelled boards; gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

SEVENTY SONNETS of CAMOENS. Portuguese Text and Translation, with Original Poems. By J. J. AUBERTIN, Translator of "The Lusliads," Dedicated to Captain Richard F. Burton.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s.

AMARANTH and ASPHODEL: Songs from the Greek Anthology. By ALFRED J. BUTLER, Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford.

I. SONGS OF THE LOVE OF WOMEN.	III. SONGS OF DEATH.
II. SONGS OF THE LOVE OF NATURE.	IV. SONGS OF HEREAFTER.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

THE GEORGICS of VIRGIL. Translated into English Verse by JAMES RHODES, Author of "Timoleon."

Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

BEOWULF: an Old-English Poem. Translated into Modern Rhymes by Lieut.-Colonel H. W. LUMSDEN, late Royal Artillery.

LONDON: 1, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
SHADWELL'S LIFE OF LORD CLYDE, by D. C. BOULGER	235
MARSHAM'S POLAR RECONNAISSANCE, by W. WICHEAM	236
HATCH'S BAMPTON LECTURES, by G. A. SIMCOX	237
GENNADIUS' TRANSLATION OF LOUIS LARAS, by the Rev. H. F. TOZER	237
MANCHESTER AL MONDO, by W. E. A. AXON	238
NEW NOVELS, by A. BARKER	239
SOME BOOKS OF HISTORY	240
ORIGINAL VERSE: "ON READING THE SONNET, BY R. C. D., ENTITLED 'IN MEMORIAM G. P. C.'," IN "MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE," by Prof. J. K. INGRAM	241
NOTES AND NEWS	241
OBITUARY	243
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	243
DE LA BELLAUDIERE, by Miss E. L. MARZIALS	244
SELECTED BOOKS	245
CORRESPONDENCE:— Philip Agnes, by Samuel Waddington; "The Swiss Family Robinson," by the Rev. C. F. S. WARREN	245
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	245
SELL'S FAITH OF ISLAM, by S. LANE-POOLE	245
CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE	246
NOTES OF TRAVEL	247
SCIENCE NOTES	247
PHILOLOGY NOTES	247
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	248
LATEST EXCAVATIONS IN EGYPT, by Miss AMELIA B. EDWARDS	248
SOME ENGLISH STUDIOS	248
A ROMAN STUDIO	249
MR. MADOX BROWN'S PANEL AT MANCHESTER	250
ART SALES	250
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	250
"ROMEO AND JULIET" AT THE COURT THEATRE	251
STAGE NOTES	252
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEBLOK; &c.	252

THE COUNCIL OF FIFTH COLLEGE.

SHEFFIELD, intend to Appoint a PRINCIPAL who shall also be Professor either in the Literary or in the Mechanical Department of the College.

These Departments will comprehend respectively the following Subjects:—
1. Classics, History, Literature, Political Economy, Moral Science.
2. Mathematics, Mechanics, Engineering, Geology, Physics.

Applicants are requested to state in which of these Departments they would be prepared to act as Professor, and which of the Subjects in that Department they would be prepared to undertake.

The Salary of the said Principal will be £500 per annum, with half the Fee of his own Classes.

The Council will only make the appointment in event of suitable candidates presenting themselves.

Candidates are requested to give full particulars concerning age, experience, and any Academic distinctions they may have gained, together with any other information likely to affect the decision of the Council. The names of three gentlemen to whom references may be made should be given, but no testimonials need be sent unless they are asked for.

Applications to be sent on or before the 25th day of APRIL next, to ENSOR DEURY, Registrar.

Fifth College, Sheffield, March 24, 1881.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

BARLOW LECTURES on the DIVINA COMMEDIA.

Professor FARNELLI will give TWELVE LECTURES on "DANTE'S INFERNO," commencing on MAY 3RD. The Lectures will be given (in Italian) on TUESDAYS and FRIDAYS, at 3 P.M., and will be open to the Public, without payment or Tickets.

TALFOURD ELY, M.A., Secretary.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on SATURDAY, 3RD OF MAY.

F. W. MADDEN, M.B.A.S., Secretary.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely.

place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1852, for preparation of Candidates for Competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The Special Classes for H.L. CONSTITUTIONARY Cadetships have earned off 50 per cent. of the Cadetships offered for competition last year: First Place, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Sandhurst; over 320 have passed Army Exams, including 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 8th, 7th, at recent Competitions.—Apply to W. J. CRETWORTH CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.R.C.S., F.R.C.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WARBERRY

HOUSE, Bishopdown Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford. First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 300 Guineas.

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM,

13, LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS.

ANTIQUITIES, PICTURES, and SCULPTURE.

OPEN FREE, from 11 to 5, on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS in APRIL, MAY, JUNE, JULY, and AUGUST. Cards for Private Days and for Students to be obtained of the CURATOR, at the Museum.

NEW ETCHING by Mr. J. C. HOOK, "WISE SAWS." Sixty Remarque Proofs, 3 Guineas.—THE FINE ART SOCIETY, 148, New Bond-street.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE, 22, Albemarle-street, London, W.

The NEXT ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at YORK, commencing on WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 31.

President-Elect:

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., F.L.S., F.G.S.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS OF MEMOIRS.—Authors are reminded that, under an arrangement dating from 1871, the acceptance of Memoirs, and the days on which they are to be read, are now, as far as possible, determined by Organising Committees for the several sections before the opening of the Meeting. It has therefore become necessary, in order to give an opportunity to the Committees of doing justice to the several Communications, that each Author should prepare beforehand an Abstract of his Memoir, of a length suitable for insertion in the published Transactions of the Association, and the Council request that he will send it, together with the original Memoir, by book-post, on or before August 1, addressed thus:—"General Secretaries, British Association, 22, Albemarle-street, London, W. For Section . . ." Authors who comply with this request, and whose Papers are accepted, will be furnished before the Meeting with printed copies of their Reports or Abstracts. If it should be inconvenient to the Author that his Paper should be read on any particular day, he is requested to send information thereof to the SECRETARIES in a separate note.

Reports on the Progress of Science, and of Researches entrusted to Individuals or Committees, must be forwarded to the GENERAL SECRETARIES, for presentation to the Organising Committee, accompanied by a statement whether the Author will be present at the Annual Meeting.

No Report, Paper, or Abstract can be inserted in the Report of the Association unless it is given in before the conclusion of the Meeting.

O. GRIFFITH, Acting Secretary.

THE HIBBERT LECTURE, 1881.—

A COURSE OF SIX LECTURES on "THE ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF RELIGION as Illustrated by HINDUISM" will be delivered by Mr. RHYS DAVIES, at ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LAMHAM PLACE, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, on the following days—viz., TUESDAY, 26th APRIL, and five following TUESDAYS—viz., 3rd, 10th, 17th, 24th, and 31st MAY. Admission to the Course of Lectures will be by ticket without payment. Persons desirous of attending the Lectures are requested to send their names and addresses to Messrs. WILLIAMS & NORWORTH, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, W.C., not later than 10th April, and as soon as possible after that date tickets will be issued to as many persons as the hall will accommodate.

ON EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS and

DRAWINGS by the American Artist, the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art."—Gallery, 14, Grafton-street, Old Bond-street.

CORPORATION of LIVERPOOL.

AUTUMN EXHIBITION of MODERN PICTURES in OIL and WATER-COLOUR, 1881.

NOTICE to EXHIBITORS.

The above EXHIBITION will OPEN in the WALKER ART GALLERY on MONDAY, 5th SEPTEMBER. The days for receiving Pictures are from the 1st to the 13th of August, both inclusive.

Forms, Cards of Particulars, and all Information may be obtained on application to Mr. CHARLES UPDELL, Curator, Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool, to whom all Works of Art intended for Exhibition should be addressed. London Agent: Mr. JAMES BOURLET, 17, Nassau-street, Middlesex Hospital.

JOSEPH RAYNER, Town Clerk, Honorary Secretary

Re T. H. Gladwell, deceased.—29 and 21, Gracechurch-street.—On View.—

The Second Portion of the Valuable Collection of High-class Engravings and Water-colour Drawings to be sold, in consequence of arrangements recently sanctioned by the Court of Chancery.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce for SALE by AUCTION, on the Premises, 29 & 21, GRACECHURCH STREET, on TUESDAY NEXT, 5th APRIL, and following days, at 1 o'clock precisely, each day, several hundred Choice WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS, being a portion of the Stock of the late Mr. T. H. Gladwell, and including examples by

Abelom	Dibdo	Kilburne	Riviere
Bentley	Dutton	Lewis	Salmon
Hackley	Evans of Eton	Locas	Soper
Harrett	Green, C.	Nash	Stephanoff
Cattermole	Glover	Naffel, P. J.	Steeple
Callow	Hardy	Newton, Alf.	Tenkate
Calcott, Sir A.	Hart	Oakley	Taylor, F.
Chase	Hall	Philp	Walters
Davidson	Hill	Howbotham	Whitmore
Deakin	Joy	Reed	Wright

and many others. Also high-class modern Line and Mezzotint Engravings, Richlugs, &c., mostly in fine proof states. May be viewed at Nos. 20 and 21, Gracechurch-street, and Catalogues had.—54, Pall-mall.

WANTED, by a YOUNG LADY,

Engagement as COMPANION, or GOVERNESS. Thorough music, harmony, French, and needlework. Domesticated. Twenty. No objection to travel. Highest references.—M. Mrs. Childenden, Loose, or, Maidstone.

LIBRARY-ASSISTANT or ASSISTANT-

SECRETARY.—A GENTLEMAN wishes to Obtain a Situation in one of the above capacities.—Apply to F. E. T. Church House, Newport, Essex.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS.

All the Best New Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction are in Circulation at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

See MUDIE'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR for APRIL.

Fresh Copies of all the Best Books of the Season—English, French, German, and Italian—continue to be added as the demand increases, and arrangements are made with the Leading Publishers for an ample supply of the Principal Forthcoming Books as they appear.

FIRST-CLASS SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM

For a Constant Succession of the Newest Books.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTION, TWO GUINEAS and upwards,

According to the number of Volumes required.

CLASS B. SUBSCRIPTION (for Older Books)—

Twenty-five Volumes at one time, Five Guineas per Annum, And Five Volumes for every additional Guinea.

THE LONDON BOOK SOCIETY.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY Messengers call to deliver Books at the Residence of Subscribers in Every Part of London and the immediate neighbourhood, on a plan which has given general satisfaction for many years. Several Thousand Families in London and the Suburbs already subscribe to this Department of the Library, and obtain a constant succession of the Best New Books on or soon after the day of publication.

Revised Lists of New and Choice Books Lately Added to the Library, and Catalogues of Surplus Copies Withdrawn for Sale at Greatly Reduced Prices, are now ready, and will be forwarded, postage free, on application.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED),

510, 511, and 512, New Oxford Street; and 20, 21, and 22, Museum Street.

CITY OFFICE: 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Commission Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's).—Choice Works ON VIEW by Henry Dawson, sen., T. S. Cooper, R.A., E. J. Niemann, L. J. Pott, Ernest Sartori, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Stark, Jatsum, &c.

STUDIOS.—Remaining Set.—With Two
Audi-rooms, Lavatory, &c. Well placed in Layswater, near two Stations. Rent £50 per annum.—R. & F. SWAIN, 82, High-street, Notting-hill, W. (7.375.)

THIRTY-INCH BRASS TRANSIT
INSTRUMENT AND FITTINGS, in Box, and THEODOLITE, TO BE SOLD a Bargain, almost new.—Apply, 6, London-road, Southwark.

Now ready (One Shilling), No. 256.
THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE
For APRIL.

With Illustrations by GEORGE DE MAURIER and W. SMALL.

CONTENTS:
LOVE the DEBT. (With an Illustration.) Chap. X.—"In the Net,"
XI.—Reparation. XII.—Drifting.

RAMBLING among BOOKS. No. II.—Autobiography.

NIGHTINGALE and CUCKOO. By ALFRED AUSTIN.

THE YOUTH of HENRY the FIFTH. By ALEX. CHARLES EWALD.

THIASITHEOS. By EDMUND W. GOSSE.

WINTER NIGHTS at JAYOS. (Leaves from the Diary of an Invalid.)

A FOAMING ADVENTURE.

THE CENSUS of 1881.

A GRAPE from a THORN. By JAMES PAYNE. (With an Illustration.)
Chap. XIV.—A Confession. XV.—The Call. XVI.—Ella is given her "Chance." XVII.—Mr. Joceline becomes Confidential. XVIII.—A Double Game.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

For APRIL, 1881. Price 2s. 6d.

THE MILITARY IMPORTANCE OF GREAT BRITAIN. By Captain KIRCH-HAMMER, General Staff, Austrian Army.

WORKING MEN and the POLITICAL SITUATION. By THOMAS BURN, M.P.

PERIA and its PASSION DRAMA. By LIONEL TENNYSON.

THE CHILD CRIMINAL. By Mrs. SORRE.

REFORM of FEUDAL LAWS. By the MARQUIS of BLANDFORD.

JULES JAQUEMART. By FREDERICK WEMMORE.

HERESCAISM. By R. D. GREEN PRICE.

LA PHILOSOPHIE de DIDEROT. By PAUL JANET, Member of the Institute of France.

THE INCOMPATIBLES. By MATTHEW ARNOLD.

BUSINESS in the HOUSE of COMMONS. By the Right Hon. LORD SHERBROOKE.

London: C. KROAN PAUL & CO.

THOMAS CARLYLE. By MRS. OLIPHANT. See

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 258. For APRIL. Price 1s.

CONTENTS OF THE NUMBER.

1. THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. By HENRY JAMES, Jun. Chapters
XXV.—XXVII.

2. THE "PEOPLE'S CONCERT SOCIETY." By Mrs. JULIAN MARSHALL.

3. FREE LIBRARIES and THEIR WORKING. By W. ODELL, Jun.

4. LUCRETIA MOTT of PHILADELPHIA. By AGNES MACDONELL.

5. THE OTHER SIDE of the QUESTION. By FRANCES MARTIN.

6. ARCHAEOLOGY, LITERATURE, and HISTORY. By PERCY GARDNER, Disney Professor of Archaeology, Cambridge.

7. POETRY KEEPING in NORMANDY. By J. CHESNEY.

8. IN MEMORIAM, MAJOR-GENERAL SIR GEORGE POMEROY-
COLLEY. By the Archbishop of Dublin.

9. THOMAS CARLYLE. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

London: MACMILLAN & CO.

Now ready, Price 3s., Quarterly; Yearly, 12s., post-free.

MIND: No. XXII.

I. MONISM. E. GERNEY.

II. RENOUVEAU'S PSYCHOLOGY. S. H. HODGSON.

III. DICTIONARY-DEFINING. Rev. W. L. DAVIDSON.

IV. BUCKLE and the ECONOMICS of KNOWLEDGE. A. W. BENN.

NOTES, CRITICAL NOTICES, &c. By A. J. BALFOUR, Prof.
DAIN, J. SULLY, G. ALLEN, F. POLLOCK, A. SEIL.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS & NORWAT.

Now ready.

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

New Series, No. 118. APRIL, 1881. Price 6s.

CONTENTS.

1. KANT'S MORAL PHILOSOPHY.

2. LORD CAMPBELL'S MEMOIRS.

3. THE ORIGIN of RELIGION.

4. THE PERSIAN EMPIRE: England and Russia in the East.

5. ELECTORAL REFORM—ELECTORAL BURNERY: the Ballot.

6. THOMAS CARLYLE.

7. SHOULD UNIVERSITY DEGREES be given to WOMEN?

8. EAST INDIAN CURRENCY and EXCHANGE.

INDIA and our COLONIAL EMPIRE.

CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE.

London: TRUBNER & CO., 57 and 59, Ludgate-hill.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for APRIL

contains—The Music of Dvorak—The Great Composers: Berlioz—

Mr. Pears the Musician, by F. Huffer—Sacred Music in Italy—Crystal

Palace, Monday Evening, Bach Choir, Sacred Harmonic Society, Philharmonic

Society, Mr. Charles Hallé, and M. Lamoureux's Concerts—Music in Manchester—Dr. Stone on "The Combination of Voices with Musical Instruments"—Occasional Notes, Foreign and Country News, Reviews, &c. Price

3d., post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for APRIL

contains—"Holy Spirit, Come, O Come!" Anthem for Whitsuntide, by GEORGE C. MARTIN. Price, separately, 14d.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER, & CO.

have the honour to announce that they have purchased the ENTIRE STOCK and COPYRIGHTS of the Works hitherto published by MESSRS. NEUMEYER & CO., of Neumeyer Hall, including the whole of the valuable Compositions of HEINRICH HOFMANN, &c., &c.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

TRÜBNER & CO.'S

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of MARK RUTHERFORD,

Dissenting Minister. Edited by his Friend, REUDEN SHAPCOTT.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

JAMES A. GARFIELD,

PRESIDENT of the UNITED STATES: a Biographical Sketch. By Captain F. H. MASON, late of the United States Army. With a Preface by DEB HART. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Portrait, 2s. 6d.

THE FAITH of ISLAM.

By the Rev. E. SEEL, Fellow of the University of Madras. 8vo, cloth, 6s. 6d.

"THE MESNEVI"

(Usually known as the Mesnevi Sherif, or Holy Mesnevi) of Mevlana four Lord, Jalal-ud-din Muhammad Er-rumi. Book the First. With an Account of the Life of the Author, and Anecdotes by El Ebnaki.
Translated, and the Poetry Versified, in English, by J. W. REDHOUSE,
M.A., &c. Post 8vo, cloth, 21s.; large paper, £2 2s.

THE SCIENCE of BEAUTY:

An Analytical Enquiry into the Laws of Aesthetics. By A. W. HOLMES-
FORBES, M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE HISTORY of INDIA.

By J. TALBOYS WHEELER, late Assistant-Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department. Vol. IV. Part II. MOGHUL EMPIRE—AURANGZEB. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT within HISTORIC TIMES;

With Some Account of British Wild White Cattle. By J. E. HARTING,
F.L.S., F.Z.S. With Illustrations by Wolf, Whymper, and others.
Demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.; large paper, 31s. 6d.

DR. APPLETON:

his LIFE and LITERARY RELICS.

By J. H. APPLETON, M.A., and A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Queen's College,
Oxford. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE ENEMIES of BOOKS.

By WILLIAM BLADES, Typograph. Crown 8vo, on laid paper, with Five Plates, parchment, 5s.

THE GULISTAN;

Or, Rose Garden of Sheikh Muslihi-ud-din Sadi of Shiraz. Translated for the first time into Prose and Verse, with a Preface and Life of the Author from the Athi Kadah. By E. B. EASTWICK, M.A., &c. Second Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES;

Or, Jataka Tales. From the Jatakavastu. Translated from the Original Pali, by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 18s.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the HISTORY of the DEVELOPMENT of The HUMAN RACE.

Lectures and Dissertations. By LAZARUS GEIGER. Translated from the German by DAVID ASHER, Ph.D. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE RACES of AFGHANISTAN:

Being a Brief Account of the Principal Nations inhabiting that Country.
By Surgeon-Major H. W. BELLER, C.S.I., late on Special Political Duty at Kabul. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE CLASSICAL POETRY of the JAPANESE.

By D. H. CHAMBERLAIN, Author of "Yengo Henkaku Ichiran." Post
8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

NATURAL SCIENCE and RELIGION:

Two Lectures delivered to the Theological School of Yale College on "Scientific Beliefs" and "The Relations of Scientific to Religious Belief." By Prof. ASA GRAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

THE LIGHT of ASIA;

Or, the Great Renunciation. Being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Told in Verse by an Indian BUDDHIST. By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I. Crown 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.

THE GREAT AFRICAN ISLAND:

Chapters on Madagascar. By the Rev. J. SIMON, Jun., Author of "Madagascar and its People." Demy 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations, cloth, 12s.

LANGUAGE and its STUDY,

With Especial Reference to the Indo-European Family of Languages.
Seven Lectures by W. H. WHITNEY, Prof.-or at Yale College. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c., by the Rev. R. MORRIS, LL.D. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

Now ready, in 4to, cloth, price 30s.; in half-russia, 36s.

VOLUME XII.

(HIR-IND)

OF THE

ENCYCLOPAEDIA BRITANNICA.

EDITED BY

Prof. THOS. SPENCER BAYNES, LL.D.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings on Wood and Steel.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

BISSAC. C. E. D. BLACK.
HISTOLOGY. Prof. E. A. SCHÄFER and W. R. M'NAB.
HISTORY. J. C. MORRISON.
HITTITES. Rev. T. K. CHRYSE.
HOBBS. Prof. O. CHODD ROBERTSON.
HODOGRAPH. Prof. JAMES BLYTH.
HOGARTH. AUSTIN DORSON.
HOLMEIN. J. A. CHOWE.
HOLMBERG. E. W. GOSSE.
HOLLAND—
GEOGRAPHY. Prof. C. M. KAN.
HISTORY. Rev. G. W. KITCHIN.
LANGUAGE. J. B. VINCKERS and Dr. J. H. GALLÉ.
LITERATURE. E. W. GOSSE.
HOMER. D. B. MONRO.
HOMESTEAD. E. F. HANNA.
HOMOEOPATHY. Dr. J. G. GLOVER.
HONOURAS. E. G. SQUER.
HONEY. F. H. BUTLER.
HONG-KONG. A. MACDONALD.
HOOD, THOMAS. LORD HOUGHTON.
HOOKER, RICHARD. T. F. HENDERSON.
HOP. E. M. HOLMES.
HORACE. Prof. W. Y. SELLAR.
HORNBILL. Prof. ALFRED NEWTON.
HORSE—
ANATOMY. Prof. W. H. FLOWER.
HISTORY, MANAGEMENT, &c. E. D. BRICKWOOD.
RACING. E. D. BRICKWOOD, Major J. R. HUBBARD, and
W. F. CHESTER.
HORTICULTURE. Dr. M. T. MASTERS and T. MOORE.
HOSEA. Prof. W. ROBERTSON SMITH.
HOSIERY. JAMES PATON.
HOSPITALS. Prof. F. DE CHAUMONT.
HOTTESTOTS. JOHN NOBLE.
HOUD. E. D. BRICKWOOD.
HUGENOTS. Rev. G. W. KITCHIN.
HUMBOLDT, A. VON. Miss A. M. CLEWKE.
HUMBOLDT, W. VON. Prof. A. H. SAYCE.
HUME, DAVID. Prof. R. ADAMSON.
HUMMING-BIRD. Prof. NEWTON.
HUNGARY. E. D. BUTLER.
HUNT, LEIGH. RICHARD GARNETT.
HUNTER, JOHN and WILLIAM. F. H. BUTLER.
HUNTING. E. D. BRICKWOOD.
HUSBAND and WIFE. Prof. EDMUND ROBERTSON.
HOSS. Rev. J. SUTHERLAND BLACK.
HUTCHESON. Prof. T. FOWLER.
HUTTON, JAMES. Prof. A. GEIKIE.
HWEN TSANG. Col. H. YULE.
HYAENA. JOHN GIBSON.
HYBRIDISM. G. J. ROMANES.
HYDROCEPHALUS. Dr. J. O. APFELCK.
HYDROGEN. Prof. H. E. ARMSTRONG.
HYDROMECHANICS. Prof. A. G. GREENHILL and W. C.
UNWIN.
HYDROMETER. W. GARNETT.
HYDROPATHY. Dr. W. B. HUNTER.
HYDROPHOBIA. Dr. APFELCK.
HYDROZOA. Prof. E. RAY LANKESTER.
HYGIENE. Prof. F. DE CHAUMONT.
HYGROMETRY. ALEX. BUCHAN.
HYMENOPTERA. P. CAMERON.
HYMNS. LORD SELBOURNE.
HYSTERIA. Dr. J. BATTY TURE.
IAMBICUS. W. R. FORLEY.
IBN BATUTA. Col. YULE.
ICE. CARROLL G. KNOTT, D.Sc.
ICELAND. J. A. HJALTALIN and F. Y. POWELL.
ICHTHYOLOGY. Dr. A. GUNTHER.
IDAHIO. HENRY GARNETT.
ILLINOIS. J. W. SHEAHAN and J. MEDILL.
ILLUMINATION. H. B. WILSON.
ILLYRIA. W. M. RAMSAY.
IMAGE WORSHIP. Rev. J. S. BLACK.
INCENSE. Dr. GEORGE BRIDWOOD.
INDEPENDENTS. Principal A. M. FAIRBURN, D.D.
INDEX. H. B. WHEATLEY.
INDIA. W. W. HUNTER, LL.D.
INDIANA. A. G. HARRIS.
INDIAN ARCHIPELAGO. H. A. WHESTER.
INDIAN OCEAN. Dr. W. B. CARPENTER, C.B.
INDIANS, AMERICAN. A. H. KEANE and H. GARNETT.
INDIAN TERRITORY. H. GARNETT.
INDIA-RUBBER. E. M. HOLMES and T. BOLAS.
INDIGO. JAMES PATON.

EDINBURGH: ADAM & CHARLES BLACK.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S

NEW WORKS.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR APRIL, 1881.

- I. KITH and KIN. By JESSIE FORMERGILL. (Continued.)
- II. HAROUN ALRASHID.
- III. THACKERAY as a POET.
- IV. DOGS of LITERATURE.
- V. THE BEAUTIFUL MISS ROCHE. Part II.
- VI. A PEEP at the MOGHREBINS. III.
- VII. A SUNDAY at LEKSAND.
- VIII. THE FRERES. By Mrs. ALEXANDER. (Continued.)

* * Cases for binding the volumes of "Temple Bar" can be obtained at all Booksellers', price One Shilling each.

KITH AND KIN:

A NEW NOVEL

By the popular Author of "The First Violin" and "Probation," is continued in the APRIL NUMBER of

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE,

In which Number is also continued

THE FRERES:

A NEW NOVEL

By Mrs. ALEXANDER, Author of "The Wooing o't."

Now ready at all Booksellers'.

"One can never help enjoying Temple Bar."—Guardian.

THREE NEW NOVELS

AT THE LIBRARIES.

POLICY and PASSION. By Mrs.

CAMPBELL PRAED. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

SECOND EDITION OF

A CHILD of NATURE. By Robert

BUCHANAN, Author of "The Shadow of the Sword," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The work of a genius and of a poet."—Spectator.
"Simplicity, freshness, vivid presentment of scenes and figures, reminding us that we are reading the work of a poet, are the characteristics of 'The Child of Nature.' Miss Macdonald will be added in the thoughts of many readers to that fair company of immortals with which genius has peopled the world of imagination."
Pall Mall Gazette.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART."

AN OCEAN FREE-LANCE. By

W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NEW ADDITIONS TO

"BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS."

SECOND THOUGHTS. By Rhoda

BROUGHTON, Author of "Nancy," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

DOROTHY FOX. By Mrs. Parr,

Author of "Adam and Eve." Crown 8vo.

ALSO, IMMEDIATELY,

JOHNNY LUDLOW (Second

Series). By Mrs. HENRY WOOD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,

NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Now ready, complete in Five Handsome Quarto Volumes.

Professor MORLEY'S LIBRARY of ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Selected, Edited, and Arranged by HENRY MORLEY, Professor of English Literature at University College, London. With Illustrations, from Original MSS. and other authentic sources, consisting of Copies of trustworthy Portraits, Sketches of Places, Contemporary Illustrations of Manners and Customs, &c., &c.

Vol. I. SHORTER ENGLISH POEMS. 12s. 6d.

Vol. II. ILLUSTRATIONS of ENGLISH RELIGION. 11s. 6d.

Vol. III. ENGLISH PLAYS. 11s. 6d.

Vol. IV. SHORTER WORKS in ENGLISH PROSE. 11s. 6d.

Vol. V. LONGER WORKS in ENGLISH VERSE and PROSE. 11s. 6d.

"The plan of this valuable publication differs considerably from that of previous works of its class, and its survey of the field of English Literature is certainly far more searching and extensive than anything to be met with elsewhere. Among the most striking features of the contents of these handsome volumes are the freshness of matter selected and the intrinsic interest of the woodcuts, which are all of them authentic."—Daily News.

Just published, price 6s.; post-free, 6s. 6d. THE EDUCATIONAL YEAR-BOOK for 1881.

"This excellent annual improves in fullness and exactness, and is now without a rival as a directory of schools and colleges, and as a summary of educational facts."—Academy.

"We know no Year-book, either special or general, which excels in its fullness and accuracy of information, in completeness of classification, or in convenience of reference."—Scotsman.

OUR OWN COUNTRY. Vol. III.

With about 200 Original Illustrations and Steel Frontispiece. Extra crown 4to, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"There are, no doubt, several works on different aspects of these islands, and numerous special guide-books to particular districts, but there is no work that we know of so comprehensive in its aim as the one before us."—Times.

Now ready, royal 4to, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, £3 3s. LONGFELLOW'S POETICAL WORKS.

Fine-Art Edition. Illustrated throughout with Original Engravings by some of the best English, American, and Continental Artists.

BREWER'S

DICTIONARY of PHRASE and FABLE.

POPULAR EDITION, price 3s. 6d. (post-free, 4s. 2d.). Containing 1,000 pages, crown 8vo, strongly bound in cloth.

* * This POPULAR EDITION (being the Twelfth Edition) is Revised and Corrected to date, and is Enlarged by the addition of a Concise Bibliography of English Literature.

EIGHTH and CHEAP EDITION, in 1 vol., 640 pp., demy 8vo, with Coloured Maps, cloth, 10s. 6d.

RUSSIA.

By D. MACKENZIE WALLACE, M.A.

"A delightful book, instructive and attractive."—Scotsman.

EIGHTH EDITION, price 5s.; post-free, 5s. 6d.

GLADSTONE, Life of the Right Hon. W. E.

By GEORGE BARNETT SMITH. With Two Steel Portraits.

"The most comprehensive and satisfactory Life of Mr. Gladstone which has yet been given to the public."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

BOOKS ON THE LAND QUESTION.

SECOND EDITION, now ready, price 6s.

ENGLISH and IRISH LAND QUESTIONS. COLLECTED ESSAYS.

By the Right Hon. G. SHAW-LEFEBVRE, M.P.,
First Commissioner of Works and Public Buildings.

NEW EDITION, Revised, Corrected, and Enlarged,
price 3s. 6d.

SYSTEMS of LAND TENURE in VARIOUS COUNTRIES.

A Series of Essays, published under the sanction of the Cobden Club. Edited by J. W. PROBYN.

* * This New Edition is published at the Special Request of the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE.

Just published, price 12s. 6d.

ENGLISH LAND and ENGLISH LANDLORDS:

An Enquiry into the Origin and Character of the English Land System, with Proposals for its Reform. By the Hon. GEORGE C. BRODRICK. Published for the Cobden Club.

"It would be difficult to conceive a more valuable contribution to the literature of the Land Question than Mr. Brodrick's 'English Land and English Landlords.'"—Land.

CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & CO.,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S NEW LIST.

SUNRISE. By WM. BLACK.

SPECIAL NOTICE!—Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & Co. beg to state that, in consequence of the great and general demand for Mr. BLACK'S New Novel, SUNRISE, 3 Vols., the work has been out of print for a few days. A Fourth Edition is being prepared, and they hope to be able to execute all orders next week.

Over 2,500 Copies have been sold.

SUNRISE. By WM. BLACK.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The Second Part of

THE STEAM HOUSE,

By JULES VERNE,

ENTITLED

TIGERS and TRAITORS,

Is now ready, square crown 8vo, cloth extra, fully illustrated, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

* * One of Verne's most original and thrilling romances.

THROUGH AMERICA;

Or, Nine Months in the United States.

By W. G. MARSHALL, M.A.

1 vol., demy 8vo, with 100 new and original Illustrations, price 21s.

"Well worth reading."—St. James's Gazette.

"Mr. Marshall has done very well indeed."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"We know no book on America fuller of interest than Mr. Marshall's."—Graphic.

"Clever, fresh, and spirited."—Daily Telegraph.

"Really uncommonly thorough and readable."—Truth.

ENGLISH PHILOSOPHERS.

The New Volumes in this Series,

Edited by IWAN MULLER, M.A., are:—

BACON.

By Professor FOWLER,

Professor of Logic at Oxford.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s. 6d.

HARTLEY and MILL.

By GEORGE SPENCER BOWER.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

* * Other volumes are in preparation.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth extra.

MY START in LIFE.

By a YOUNG "MIDDY."

Part I. WITH the FLYING SQUADRON.

" 2. ON the CHINA STATION.

" 3. LETTERS to "COUSIN EMILY."

" 4. ON the AUSTRALIAN STATION.

For APRIL, now ready, No. 64, Vol. VI., 4to, in Wrapper, price 1s. 6d.

MEN of MARK:

A Gallery of Contemporary Portraits.

Three Permanent Cabinet Photographs, by Lock & Whitfield, taken from Life for this Work only, of EARL GRANVILLE.

DEAN OF ST. PAUL'S.

G. LESLIE, R.A.

With Brief Biographical Notices by THOMPSON COOPER, F.S.A.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1881.

No. 465, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscripts.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Life of Colin Campbell, Lord Clyde. Illustrated by Extracts from his Diary and Correspondence. By Lieut.-Gen. Shadwell, C.B. In 2 vols. With Portrait and Maps. (Blackwood & Sons.)

Few forms of literature appeal more directly to the sympathy of the English reader than "the plain unvarnished tale of a soldier." Gen. Shadwell narrates in these volumes the story of the career of one of the foremost of those soldier-leaders who, as distinct from great military geniuses, are so frequently to be met with in the pages of our history. Colin Campbell will always occupy the central position, by the side of the statesman Canning, in that band of illustrious men whose names have become "household words" in connexion with the great struggle of twenty-three years ago. Of the manner in which Gen. Shadwell has performed the duties of a biographer it may be at once said that he has done his part satisfactorily, and with the enthusiasm to be expected from an officer speaking of his old and favourite commander. The extracts made from the diary and correspondence are judicious, and show that Colin Campbell's views possessed the same simplicity and directness of purpose that characterised his operations in the field.

Colin Campbell was born in Glasgow on October 20, 1792. His father's name was MacIver, the descendant of a family of gentle rank long settled in the island of Islay. Fortune had not smiled, however, on this scion of an ancient race, and he was compelled to adopt the modest trade of a carpenter. The young Colin was taken in charge at an early age by his mother's relations, who gave him a good education, and at last, in 1808, through the influence of his maternal uncle, Col. Campbell, he received a commission as ensign in the 9th Foot. It was then that the future Field-Marshal adopted the name of Campbell in place of his own patronymic, and the circumstances which accidentally led to this change may be given in the words of the biographer:—

"At the Horse Guards he had been previously introduced to the Duke of York, the Commander-in-Chief, by his uncle. The Duke, supposing the boy, as he remarked, to be 'another of the clan,' entered him as Colin Campbell, and from that day he assumed his mother's name. This is the explanation of a change which has puzzled many, and has given rise to various surmises. Upon leaving the Duke's presence with his uncle, it is said that he made some remark upon the subject, which was met by telling him that Campbell was a name which it would suit him for professional reasons to adopt."

Within five weeks of his receiving his first commission Campbell was promoted to the rank of lieutenant, and within less than a similar interval after this step he was on his way to take part in the first British campaign in Portugal, which was marked by Wellesley's victories at Roliça and Vimiero, and which closed with the Convention of Cintra. Campbell arrived too late for the engagement at Roliça, but his regiment took a prominent part in the Battle of Vimiero, where it may be observed in passing that several of the veterans with whose names the present generation is acquainted for the first time "smelt powder." The only incident he preserved of Vimiero was one of a personal kind.

"It was at the commencement of this battle that a circumstance occurred to the young subaltern to which in after-years he was wont to refer with the deepest feelings of gratitude. Colin Campbell was with the rear company of his battalion, which was halted in open column of companies. His captain, an officer of years and experience, called him to his side, took him by the hand, and leading him by the flank of the battalion to its front, walked with him up and down the front of the leading company for several minutes, in full view of the enemy's artillery, which had begun to open fire on our troops whilst covering his attack. He then let go the boy's hand (Colin was not yet sixteen) and told him to join his company. The object was to give the youngster confidence, and it succeeded. In after-years, though very reticent of his own services—for Lord Clyde was essentially a modest man—he related the anecdote to the writer of this memoir, adding, 'It was the greatest kindness that could have been shown me at such a time, and through life I have felt grateful for it.'"

It is unnecessary to refer to Campbell's further services in the Peninsula. Severely wounded in the breach at San Sebastian, he returned home invalided, in 1813, after the Battle of the Bidassoa. In November of that year, only a few weeks after his twenty-first birthday, he was promoted without purchase to the rank of captain. In the years following the conclusion of the Great War he was employed in various ways in different parts of the globe—with his regiment in Nova Scotia and at Gibraltar, and on the staff of Sir B. D'Urban in the West Indies. In 1835 he was appointed to the lieutenant-colonelcy of the 9th Regiment, but immediately afterwards he was transferred to that of the 98th. It was not until more than twelve months after his being gazetted that he actually assumed command of his regiment, as it happened to be serving at the Cape. On its return, however, Col. Campbell soon showed those remarkable qualities which made him one of the most excellent commanders an English regiment ever possessed. Much might be quoted to prove how he drilled his battalion into the most efficient in the service, and how he thereby gained the esteem and friendly feeling of Sir Charles Napier and of the authorities at the Horse Guards. The great improvement he effected in the discipline of his corps was attained quite as much by his attention to the details of its internal economy as by the skill with which he manoeuvred it on parade.

"Frugal in his habits by nature and the force of circumstances, he laid great stress on the observance of economy in the officers' mess, believing that a well-ordered establishment of this kind is the best index of a good regiment. For this reason he determined not to sanction the use of any wine but port and sherry; the introduction of other wines he viewed as extravagance, and he set himself against any expenditure which he considered incommensurate with the means of his officers."

A characteristic anecdote of Sir Charles Napier is given by Gen. Shadwell in connexion with this subject, on the occasion of his dining at the mess of the 98th.

"Towards the close of dinner he looked up and down the table, and, having engaged the attention of all present, remarked: 'I suppose none of you young gentlemen will care to drink wine with "old Fagin" because there is no champagne on the table.' He was aware of the sobriquet he bore in the regiment on account of his arched nose, of a Jewish type, which corresponded in some degree with Cruikshank's etching of the Jew in Oliver Twist, at that time a recent and popular work. Drinking to the health of the officers, Sir Charles Napier seized the occasion of remarking on the wisdom of the rule limiting the mess wines to port and sherry, which he considered reflected credit alike on the commanding officer and the members of the mess."

In 1841 Campbell and the 98th proceeded to China, where they remained nearly five years, being principally stationed on the Island of Chusan. The climate caused great ravages in the ranks, and perhaps Campbell's good qualities and capacity for command were never more strikingly evinced than in the reconstruction of his emaciated battalion. He became, he said, after five hundred of his best men had been swept away and replaced by recruits, "quite at ease as to the appearance they would make on landing in India," and expressed a conviction that "a few drills under his own command would be sufficient to enable it to go through such a review as no corps in the East could surpass."

In 1846 Campbell left China for India, where he was at once given the responsible post of commander of the troops at Lahore. At any time a post of considerable importance, it required at the period of Campbell's nomination a man of exceptional vigilance and resolution, for the half-conquered Sikhs were silently preparing to contest with us a second time the supremacy in the Punjab. Up to this point Colin Campbell had not given any proof of a capacity to exercise a general command. He had shown great excellence as a regimental officer, but he was now, at the age of fifty-five, called upon for the first time to take a not unimportant part in the guidance of events during a grave crisis. The common-sense and clearness of vision which characterised all his measures at Lahore gained for him the friendship and regard of the two Lawrences. When Moolraj threw off all attempt at concealment, and attacked Mooltan, Campbell was appointed to the command of a division in Lord Gough's army. At Chillianwalla the brigade under his personal command specially distinguished itself—obtaining the success that compensated for the repulse of Pennycuik's brigade. In "the crowning victory" of Goojerat it was Campbell's artillery fire that broke the Sikh line, and drove them with little loss from a nullah forming the strongest point in their position. After the close of the Second Sikh War, and the annexation of the Punjab, Campbell was appointed to the command at Peshawur, where he was the first Englishman to be brought into contact and responsible relations with the Afghan tribes of that border. He has left on record many practical suggestions as to how these clans are to be coerced, and gradually converted into peaceable neighbours. Thirty years have not sufficed to attain this result in more than a very partial degree.

Of Campbell's later services in the Crimea, as commander of the Highland Brigade and as the defender of the lines of Balaklava, little need be said. How much less of his career as Commander-in-Chief in India! The second volume of this biography gives a complete and lucid description of the operations round Cawnpore and Lucknow, and generally throughout the great province of Oude. They serve to prove that Colin Campbell possessed most of the qualities essential to the successful leading of English soldiers. If not a great military genius, he was at least a most meritorious and able general, always accomplishing the end in view with the least possible expenditure of life. Careful of his men, he shared every danger and privation with them, so that, when the time came for sacrifice, his troops, realising the emergency, accepted the inevitable with cheerful fortitude. We doubt if there be a single virtue or qualification that is considered desirable in the British officer and soldier which he did not possess in a high degree. His death, in 1863, after a career of more than fifty years of active service, came suddenly, but not until he had received the highest honours in the power of his Sovereign to bestow and of his countrymen to applaud. "By means of patience, common-sense, and time," the young subaltern of Vimiero and Corunna had become a field-marshal and a peer of the realm. In the history of his country he has gained an imperishable name. But the example of Colin Campbell's career is still more conspicuous as an English officer. He might well be taken as the model of his renown as the man who took the foremost part in stamping out the flames of the Indian Mutiny—an epoch at once the darkest and the brightest in our national annals.

D. C. BOULGER.

A Polar Reconnaissance: being the Voyage of the "Isbjörn" to Novaya Zemlya in 1879. By Albert H. Markham, Capt. R.N. (London: C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

CAPT. MARKHAM is already well known as one of our most intrepid and accomplished Polar explorers, and his zeal and energy are in no degree abated. He now gives us an account of his cruise in the liveliest of little cutters, the Isbjörn, which was hired by Sir Henry Gore Booth in the summer of 1879 for a sporting trip to Novaya Zemlya. Sport alone was not a sufficient temptation; and, when invited by Sir H. Gore Booth to join him, Capt. Markham stipulated that part of their time should be employed in the more important work of the examination of the edge of the pack-ice at a late season of the year in Barents Sea. To this Sir H. Gore Booth agreed. They reached Tromsø at the end of May, and there embarked on board the Isbjörn. Capt. Markham gives an amusing description of the discomforts of this little craft:—

"Our accommodation was limited, and was rather snug and cosy than large and commodious. The cabin, common to my companion and myself, in which we slept, lived, ate our meals, and, in fact, did everything that could not be done on deck, for five months, was slightly raised, so as to give more standing room, by a small deck-house being built over it. Its dimensions were five feet and a-half in length by five feet nine inches in breadth!"

That is, it was hardly as large as a good-sized four-post bed. In this limited space, however, they entertained three officers of the Willem Barents at dinner. The Isbjörn was furnished with four funnels, all emitting dense columns of black smoke at the same time. The crew consisted of nine Norwegians, specially remarkable for indolence and timidity. They were too lazy even to look out proper water-casks, or to wash out those which they used instead, and these always flavoured the water supplied for the ship's use with something they had previously held. The first taken in had a strong taste of rum; this was, perhaps, the least objectionable. The next relay was put into unwashed salt-meat barrels, and caused intolerable thirst. The last experiment was to put the water into vinegar casks, which impregnated the water so strongly that preserved milk curdled when put into the tea. The stench of the rancid blubber kept below, for the profit, we presume, of the crew, was almost unbearable, even to one already hardened to the smell of a whaler. The timidity of the men, the last defect one would have expected in Northern sailors, was a constant hindrance and annoyance to Capt. Markham. They could hardly be induced to face the ice, and tried in every way, especially when unobserved, to shirk it.

For scientific exploration the Isbjörn sailed much too early in the year; in the middle of June she entered the Matyushin Shar, that curiously narrow and winding passage which separates the two principal islands of the Novaya Zemlya group, but only to find the passage barred by a barrier of ice right across the channel. Sir H. Gore Booth and Capt. Markham then sailed along the coast to the north, till they reached latitude $76^{\circ} 18'$, and then, retracing their steps, were successful in passing the Matyushin Shar at the end of July. At this season even Novaya Zemlya assumes a pleasant aspect. "Only four brief weeks before," writes Capt. Markham,

"the land was wrapped in a great white sheet; now this had all disappeared, revealing instead long stretches of greensward, carpeted with a rich and luxuriant vegetation, in which the Draba, Papaver, Astragalus, Potentilla, saxifrage, and the pretty little Myosotis, with many other members of the Arctic flora, some possessing delicate perfumes, clustered in rich profusion. In the valleys herds of reindeer would occasionally be seen grazing peacefully on the abundance that surrounded them, evidently making up for lost time, and laying in a good stock of unctuous flesh before the winter should set in and deprive them of their rich pasturage."

Ice again prevented any advance into the Kara Sea; but the Isbjörn sailed some way along the coast to the south, and here again the richness of the vegetation was striking, "the soft greensward over which we walked yielding to our tread like thick velvet, while flowers of the brightest colours lay around in rich profusion." Repassing the Matyushin Shar the Isbjörn sailed to the north, rounded the northern end of Novaya Zemlya, and then, taking a north-westerly direction, attained latitude $78^{\circ} 24'$, and returned to Norway by way of Hope Island.

Our author gives a summary of all the voyages of discovery to Novaya Zemlya hitherto made, and winds up with a chapter (written before he left England in November 1879) on the best route to the North Pole. He is decidedly in favour of that by Franz Josef Land, and his reasoning is conclusive. Since he wrote this chapter his views have received a remarkable confirmation in the voyage of Mr. Leigh Smith in the summer of last year, who, in his steam-yacht, the Eira, reached Franz Josef Land and discovered 105 miles of its south-western coast. It is now established that this is the route by which the highest northern latitude can be attained with the least danger or difficulty. If the Isbjörn, of only forty-three tons, with a cowardly and unwilling crew, attained a latitude corresponding to Smith's channel, and the Eira in one season passed the eightieth parallel, what might not be done by a Government expedition properly equipped, well manned, and commanded by an officer of energy and experience?

Capt. Markham is a keen observer of nature, and the results of his observation are charmingly told. He made considerable collections of plants, animals, and minerals, which were all submitted to high authorities on his return, and their notes on them are given in an Appendix, which forms by no means the least interesting part of the volume. Sir Joseph Hooker's notes, and his comparison of the flora of Novaya Zemlya with that of other Arctic lands, are especially valuable. Few naturalists have visited Novaya Zemlya, and but one full account of its flora has hitherto been published. Capt. Markham himself collected fifty-seven species of flowering plants, one of them not found before. Considering the great length of the islands of Novaya Zemlya, extending over more than six degrees of latitude, the probability is that there still exist undiscovered species. To our mind, one of the most interesting features of the flora of Novaya Zemlya is the presence of three species of the Leguminosae, a family entirely absent in Spitzbergen and the corresponding latitudes of Greenland. These—Astragalus alpinus and A. frigidus and Oxytropis campestris—were found in great abundance and growing luxuriantly. Sir J. Hooker's conclusion, that Novaya Zemlya was peopled by plants from the South, makes one wish that he had extended his valuable paper by a comparison between the plants of Novaya Zemlya and those of that part of the continent from which it is scarcely separated.

The illustrations are from photographs by Mr. Grant. The maps are good, and there is an excellent Index. We are confident that Capt. Markham's present work will be as successful as his former ones.

WILLIAM WICKHAM.

The Organisation of the Early Christian Churches. Bampton Lectures for 1880.
By the Rev. Edwin Hatch. (Rivingtons.)

If these Bampton Lectures had had the good fortune to be preached only twenty years ago, before the most fundamental questions of all were familiar, they might have started a controversy as noisy and perhaps more fruitful than that started by the famous lectures of Dr. Hampden. The author has brought into one focus the views suggested in his remarkable articles in the Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, and when they are brought together they appear very revolutionary indeed. It is due to him to say at once that he follows the excellent example of Mill and Darwin in aiming at the maximum of what he takes for enlightenment with the minimum of disturbance. The whole of the first lecture is devoted to an elaborate and eloquent vindication of the idea of science as applied to ecclesiastical history, and a no less eloquent assertion that the organisation of the Church may be conceived as equally divine when we grant that it was worked out by sociological agencies, just as the order of animal nature may be equally divine though worked out by physical agencies. Still it is startling to be told that bishops correspond in name and office to the heads of the contemporary pagan ἐπαροι and βιαροι; that their chief practical function was to distribute the funds of the Church, regarded as a benefit society, with the help of their relieving officers, the deacons. This is the substance of the second lecture. The third is like unto it. We learn that the essential business of the college of presbyters was not to minister the sacraments or to preach the Word, but to maintain discipline; and that, though the college came to be imagined as the equivalent of the local Sanhedrim, it originated in most cases as the analogue of the local Curia. These positions are supported with considerable appearance of apposite and solid learning, which is all the more effective because most English readers who occupy themselves with such studies are less ignorant of the early history of Christian doctrine than of the early history of Christian institutions; while Mr. Hatch seems even more at home among early Canons and Councils than among the Fathers.

The fourth lecture is decidedly less effective. We are carried back to the old theory that bishop and presbyter are used interchangeably, and to the other theory, which is not exactly new, that the bishop was enabled to establish his supremacy over his presbyters because something had to be done to protect Christianity from Gnosticism. In the fifth lecture, the author treats the distinction of clergy and laity from the point of view of the Montanist writings of Tertullian, suggesting that all the faithful were competent to perform all religious acts, though the highest were, as a matter of order, restricted in ordinary cases to special persons who had no special qualification apart from the choice of the society or its officers. It is certainly remarkable, as the author observes, that the minute directions of the "Apostolical Canons" for the appointment of a bishop say nothing of the "laying on of hands;" and that St. Cyprian, insisting on the perfect regularity of the election of St. Cornelius, says nothing of it either. Mr. Hatch abstains from reinforcing his argument by the present practice of the Roman Church (in which there are many "survivals"), whereby the Pope, though a layman if so be, is invested simply by his election with the plenitude of Papal power, although, if he is not a bishop already, he has to be made one in due canonical form. The sixth lecture carries the discussion a stage farther. We are told the clergy became a special class partly in virtue of the privileges which Christian emperors conferred upon them, and partly because, under the influence of monasticism, they were held to the personal observance of rules of life once binding upon all believers. The idea of catholicity is explained in the seventh lecture by the meetings of bishops, which became increasingly frequent after Constantine, and gradually organised Christendom into a federal union with territorial divisions modelled upon those of the Empire, though the organisation was less symmetrical because there were always "autocephalous" churches like that of Cyprus. The treatment of the parish and the cathedral in the last lecture involves little matter for hot debate. No one is interested in disputing the very probable theory that the organisation of a cathedral still roughly represents the final shape which the churches of the larger municipalities had taken by the fifth century; while the parish represents the arrangements made for large estates outside municipal boundaries, and for outlying communities which grew up afterwards. Much interesting information is given on these points. Among other things we read told of an attempt to revive the system of Chorepiscopi in Gaul in the early days of the Karlings, which the False Decretals vigorously denounce.

The whole book is full of brilliant side-lights upon ecclesiastical history; for instance, we are told that the chief object of "Ignatius" was not to establish the supremacy of the bishop in existing communities, but to insist that all believers ought to be united in communities—under a bishop. But the argument, as a whole, is not convincing. Very important factors are omitted; the author's grounds for practically leaving the New Testament out of the question are inadequate, especially as he uses the Clementines largely. Whatever may be thought of the Acts or the Pastoral Epistles, they are better authority. The former certainly proves that mystical importance was attached to the laying on of the apostle's hands; the latter go far to show that St. Paul wished to provide for a succession of persons holding a delegated authority not derived from the community. It is a pity that the author shrank from discussing these points, because his whole argument about the "succession" is one of the strongest parts of the book. Whether it was consonant with apostolic discipline or no, he makes it very probable that for some considerable time in many churches the clergy were viewed simply as office-bearers, more or less formally appointed, and having no title beyond the regular choice of the community. On the other hand, it is hard to reconcile the state of things described by Mr. Hatch in the second and third lectures with the state of things presupposed in the fourth—of a college of co-equal presbyters gradually coming into obedience to the bishop. Surely if the bishop was the treasurer of a benefit society his monarchical position was ready made. St. Callistus conquered the author of the Philosophemena, according to the author's own account, by laying out his catacomb. Besides, more weight should be given to the probability that, through most of the second century, outside Syria, Egypt, Asia Minor, and Rome, the Christian churches were very small; they did not want so many officers—probably one to offer the Eucharist was enough. Nor is sufficient said of the material difficulties of communication. All the meetings of the Christians involved some risk; for the heads of several communities to meet whenever one lost its head would have been a greater risk; and this may perhaps account for the apparent disuse of ordination, although the secular analogies alleged are weighty. Less can be said in favour of the sixth and seventh lectures. The sixth is accurately preposterous. When once the ministration of the sacraments was practically reserved to presbyters (though deacons occasionally offered the Eucharist, if we are to take words in their plain meaning, even in the fifth century), the mystical efficacy of the sacraments invested their ministers with a mystical character, in virtue of which the State gave them privileges and the Church exacted peculiar strictness. In like manner the duty of Catholic communion is historically and logically prior to the ecclesiastical organisation of the fourth and fifth centuries, and the theory of catholicity is not at all impeached by the gaps in that organisation. "Autocephalous" churches and patriarchs were fully responsible to Christendom.

G. A. SIMCOX.

Loukis Laras: Reminiscences of a Chiote Merchant during the War of Independence.
By D. Bikélas. Translated from the Greek by J. Gennadius. (Macmillan.)

Loukis Laras is a remarkable book, as is sufficiently shown by its having been translated, since its appearance in 1879, into French, German, Italian, Danish, and, finally, into English. Its author, M. Bikélas, is already well known as a successful writer, and his translation of some of the plays of Shakspeare into modern Greek was noticed some time ago in the ACADEMY. At the commencement of the narrative he speaks of himself as publishing the notes left by the person concealed under the name of Loukis Laras, who was a Greek merchant residing in England; but we learn from his translator that these notes were of the most meagre character, and that the greater part of the story and most of the personages are the author's own creation. We have seen the book advertised as a novel, but this description of it is apt to mislead, for ordinary readers of fiction are sure to be disappointed with it, while those who are likely to appreciate it may be led to overlook it under this title. It is a narrative, almost without plot, relating chiefly to the massacres in Chios (Scio) in the early period of the Greek War of Independence, which corresponded in many respects to the Bulgarian atrocities of our time, for they first aroused the indignation of Europe against the Turks, and thus, more than anything else, ultimately caused the Ottoman Government to lose the province of Greece, in the same way as the massacres in Bulgaria led to the independence of that country. What distinguishes it from other stories is the author's mode of handling his subject, and his style. The period to which it relates was no doubt an exciting one, but the most stirring events which signalised it are kept in the background, and the narrator himself, Loukis Laras, is represented as being small of stature, weakly in body, and commercial in disposition, and consequently no hero. But the simplicity both of the narrative itself and of the style is highly artistic; the scenes are conceived with great intensity of imagination, while some of the more moving of them are most pathetically described; and there prevails throughout the book a freedom from exaggeration and a repression of feeling which is as effective as it is rare. There is an entire absence of horrors. The reader feels that they are all around him, that the air is full of them, but he sees nothing of them. The style also, notwithstanding its simplicity, has a certain Oriental flavour in the descriptive passages; and poetical similes are occasionally introduced, as where the gathering of the panic-stricken inhabitants of a village on the eve of a massacre is compared to "the sudden whirl of the leaves on the ground before the storm bursts out."

The story commences in 1821, on the eve of the War of Independence, of which rising the actors were unaware before it suddenly came. The state of panic and suspense which prevailed at this time is vividly described. The scene at first is laid in Smyrna, but shortly afterwards is transferred to Chios, when the news came of the murder of the Patriarch at Constantinople. Here was Loukis Laras's home, and here for a time his family remained, looking doubtfully on the prospects of the insurrection, until the Turkish fleet appeared in the harbour, when they fled, together with a large part of the Christian population, to the west coast of the island. The massacres then commenced, and during this period they remained in hiding, and at last escaped, though under fire from the Turks, in a ship of Psara, first to the Island of Myconos, and afterwards to Spetzæ, off the coast of Argolis. After the father's death they return to Tenos, where Loukis becomes a successful trader. In the course of time he is seized with the desire to revisit his old home and endeavour to regain the valuables which had been concealed in the ground before their flight. The circumstances of this visit are very effectively described. On this occasion he learns that the daughter of an old friend and neighbour is now a slave in a Turkish harem, and, when he has recovered his treasure, he employs it in purchasing her freedom. He afterwards marries her, and settles in England. It will be seen from this outline of the story how simple it is; but some of the occurrences, such as the death of the faithful maid-servant, who drowns herself on the voyage in consequence of having been dishonoured by the Turks, and that of the old father, are exceedingly touching. Some prominent features of the Greek character, such as their strong family feeling and their shrewdness in business, are well illustrated throughout the volume; and the feeling of various classes of the people at the time of the struggle for independence is interestingly brought out. But it is especially as a work of art that the book deserves to be studied. The following description of the impression produced by the sights and sounds and scents of night in a moment of suspense may be quoted as a specimen passage:—

"Night had now approached, but darkness was not yet complete. The moon had still two hours to run on her slow course before she disappeared behind the hill, and the sky above us was lit up with her brilliancy. Her rays, coquetting with the leaves of the trees, formed on the ground, where I sat, thousands of fantastic devices. I gazed upon these varying shadows, I heard the barking of the dogs in the distant farms, and nearer me the chirping of the crickets, mingled with the harsher croaking of the frogs. But my thoughts were fixed elsewhere; I heard, but did not listen; yet my mind was impressed with those echoes of the serene night, with the perfume offered up by the flowers, and with the play of the moonlight through the branches of the trees."

It remains to say a word about Mr. Gennadius's translation. This is so good, and implies so complete a knowledge of English idiom, and so extensive and well applied a vocabulary, that it is difficult to realise that it is the work of a foreigner. There is all the more reason to regret that one who can handle our language so well as the late Greek chargé d'affaires in London should have been withdrawn from among us. In respect of paper, type, and margin the book possesses that dainty character which book-fanciers love.

H. F. TOZER.

Manchester al Mondo: a Contemplation of Death and Immortality. By Henry Mountagu, Earl of Manchester.

Spare Minutes; or, Resolved Meditations and Premeditated Resolutions. By Arthur Warwick. (Pickering & Co.)

Manchester al Mondo has had a curious history. It was first issued without the author's consent in 1631, the "stationers" probably making use of one of the MS. copies then circulating among the author's friends according to the fashion of the time. So far from being annoyed at this surreptitious edition, the noble author selected the same printers for the authorised issue of 1633. Its popularity was great; two generations exhausted fifteen editions, and it became a common practice to present copies of it to those who were present at funerals. The ninth edition was the first book issued after the Great Fire of London—a calamity in which literature had its share of sorrows by the loss of "almost an hundred thousand pounds' worth of books" (p. li.). After 1690 it fell into neglect as a current book, but in the present century has been increasingly sought after by collectors, and especially by the numerous tribe of them who are interested in the County Palatine of Lancaster. It was last year produced as a dainty little volume under the editorial care of Mr. John Eglington Bailey. The task is, perhaps, not altogether worthy of the powers of the biographer of Fuller, but he has done it well. The Introduction contains the first really adequate attempt to sketch the life of Henry Mountagu, the first Earl of Manchester, who seems to have practised by anticipation the comfortable gospel dear to these latter days of making the "best of both worlds." As to the present world Mountagu, after a hopeful course at school, distinguished himself at the University of Cambridge by his excessive attention to dress (a foppish trait which survived to later years: p. xii.), and, becoming a student of the Middle Temple, embarked upon a parliamentary career, and was successively Recorder of London, King's Serjeant, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, Lord Treasurer, Lord President of the Privy Council, Lord Privy Seal, Baron Kimbolton, Viscount Mandeville, and Earl of Manchester. The facts of this career Mr. Bailey has narrated with care and precision, though he has been prevented by the exigencies of the case from giving details. The majority of his readers will find the biography adequate, and those who wish for more information will be grateful for his plentiful references.

The Earl of Manchester's Contemplations on Death and Immortality are spiritual exercises by which he hoped to prepare himself for heaven. The fervour of his piety did not prevent him from being very careful of his worldly fortunes and estate, nor did it ever lead him into enthusiasm or the high-wrought fancies of mysticism. When we have surmounted the dislike occasioned by the piebald appearance resulting from the continual interlarding of unnecessary Latin phrases, we shall find that his English is firm and good, sometimes made picturesque by fancy and sometimes shining with antithetical brilliance. We are frequently reminded of Bacon's essays by these Contemplations, though we must allow for a long interval alike as to matter and form. His religious theory was that "the right way to die well was to live well" (p. 12). Perhaps this sentence will give a fair specimen of his style:—

"The Labourer from his work hastens to his bed; the Mariner rows hard to gain the Port; the Traveller is glad when he is within kenning of his Inn; yet we, when death comes to put us into our Port, shun it as a Rock; we fear what we should wish, and wish that we should fear" (p. 49).

Sometimes the thoughts, even when commonplace, are clothed in a garb of unexpected quaintness, as when he tells us that "In this world we are all Benonies, the sons of sorrow; the way to heaven is by weeping cross. The Kalendar tells us we come not to Ascension Day till the Passion week be past" (p. 67). He gives Chaucer's epitaph in a fresh arrangement (p. 77). There are passages which remind one of better-known words of later writers. Thus the three signs of approaching death might have suggested Mrs. Piozzi's Three Warnings. (It is not improbable that she derived a hint for her story from Chardin's travels.) "Men commonly discard those sins they can best spare, but retain those they love best," is an anticipation of a rougher Hudibrastic expression of the same truth (p. 190). The Earl of Manchester observes—"Seldom any enter into glory with ease; yet the Jews say of Moses, his soul was sucked out of his mouth with a kiss" (p. 206). This legend is given in Mr. Baring-Gould's Legends of Old Testament Characters (London, 1871; vol. ii., p. 135). It is curious to compare this religious fancy with the profane fervour of Marlowe's Faustus in perhaps the noblest passage of that wondrous drama.

"Was this the face that launched a thousand ships,
And burnt the topless towers of Ilium?—
Sweet Helen, make me immortal with a kiss.—
Her lips suck forth my soul; see, where it flies!"

It may be doubted whether the Contemplator had heard these words; his reading, so far as can be judged from his citations, was exclusively classical and largely patristic in its character. Augustine and Ovid, St. Bernard and Martial, jostle each other in his pages.

The work has been very carefully printed. In our reading we have only noticed two misprints, one of what should be the word oblectabam (p. 9), and the other where "sail" is transformed into "fail" (p. 201). Some of the words used are quaint and peculiar. Thus we have promooter (p. 23), retrait (p. 52), not-being (p. 85), godlily (p. 99), pleasant as a verb (p. 105), the Miltonic word glistening (p. 109), brag, cottaged (p. 123), Atheous (p. 184), ingeminates (p. 194), angelize (p. 231), and arreption (p. 236). These, and others which we forbear from noting, will doubtless be garnered in the great English Dictionary which, though still looming in the distance, is gradually coming nearer, to the great joy of all.

Arthur Warwick's Spare Minutes is in spirit a very similar work to that of the Earl of Manchester. The Rev. W. J. Loftie has not been able to add anything to our very scanty knowledge of the biography of this author, but he has gathered from the book itself some interesting indications of his circumstances (p. 20). Mr. Loftie's account of the bibliography is not so lucid. The book was registered March 24, 1631, but if printed then no copy is known to have survived. Of the second edition an exemplar in the Huth collection is the only one known. This is dated 1634. Between these two dates the author had died, and the dedication of the second part is signed by his father, who was also an Arthur Warwick. Since then it has been several times reprinted, Mr. Loftie's immediate predecessor being Mr. Henry Southern, who edited a very pretty edition of it in 1821, having previously—in 1820—admitted an article on it in the Retrospective Review (ii. 45) from the pen of Mr. George Robinson. The Spare Moments are brief essays or meditations, some of which are on set moral themes, while others have been suggested by certain aspects of nature. But whether the author is discoursing on "Ambition" or on the "Red-breast" he preserves uniformly a style of which the chief characteristic is its extreme condensation. He has thought much, but has compressed the result of his meditations into sentences that have the brevity of proverbs. He employs also the method of contrast which is so familiar an art of the popular proverbialist, and he is not always free from the Delphic uncertainty which so often accompanies oracular wisdom. His language, however, is not overburdened by classical quotations as is the case with Manchester al Mondo. Arthur Warwick had a better command of the English language than his learned and long-lived contemporary. His book, though not so popular as that of the patrician, stands on a higher literary level. He is frequently brilliant in his antithetical observations, but just as often he allows his fancy to riot in far-fetched conceits. The matter of the book is good. The moralist, perhaps more than any other writer, has reason to say, Pereant qui ante nos nostra dixerunt; for the same ethical precepts are common to many sages, and have been equally disregarded by their disciples.

These books were worth reprinting; and, if they have not the weighty grandeur of Lord Verulam's essays, they make good their authors' claims to be admitted into the goodly company of the earlier English essayists, and to share with Bacon and Feltham the praise of having originated a form of expression which has since become one of the greatest glories of our literature.

WILLIAM E. A. AXON.

NEW NOVELS.

St. Martin's Summer. By Shirley Smith. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

In Fair Bruges. By C. Beeston. (Remington.)

Ellice Quentin, and other Stories. By Julian Hawthorne. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

A Dweller in Tents. By L. T. Meade. (Isbister.)

Brigitta: a Tale. By Berthold Auerbach. From the German by Clara Bell. (Leipzig: Tauchnitz; London: Sampson Low.)

THE author of St. Martin's Summer, following in the footsteps of Mr. Anthony Trollope, has given his readers a realistic study of upper middle-class English life. Working, as he does, on a somewhat cumbrous plot, and making use of a portentous array of characters that are in truth only so many lay figures, it is to the credit of Mr. Shirley Smith that he has contrived to write a fairly readable three-volume novel. The senior heroine—the story, be it said, deals with the joys and woes of two generations—is a certain Catherine Courtenay, whose early womanhood is blighted by what the author terms the "reflected disgrace" of a felonious brother; for this young man, having robbed his employer's safe, and having barely escaped arrest by timely flight, is obliged to play at hide-and-seek with justice, until he falls a victim to consumption. But this consummation is not reached until the generous shelter afforded by Catherine to her disgraced brother has been the means of bringing about a misconception in the mind of Henry Vaughan, a young squire of family and fortune, which is fatal to the happiness of many years of the heroine's life. Mistaking, not unnaturally, the shadow of Catherine's dying brother thrown on a wall for that of a more highly favoured rival, Henry Vaughan throws up his suit in disgust, and quickly consoles himself by marrying a vain, shallow woman, with whose physical beauty he is fascinated. After years of wandering, Catherine settles down, apparently a confirmed old maid, in a quiet and old-fashioned cathedral town. Here she meets Henry Vaughan, junior, a gay sub-lieutenant, whose regiment happens to be in garrison at W—. This young gentleman falls desperately in love with Dora Roland, who may be called the junior heroine, and who is Miss Courtenay's especial pet. Dora Roland, although herself possessed of every grace and virtue, owns a Bohemian father, who not only gives music lessons, but actually performs in the orchestra at Covent Garden! To cut a long story short, we may say that at last Dora's unpresentable parent is safely shipped off to America, and the constancy and devotion of the junior hero meet their due reward in the shape of Dora's hand. This desirable result is in a large measure due to the good offices of Catherine Courtenay, who, in promoting the happiness of her young friends, finds a double recompense. Henry Vaughan, senior, has been a widower for some years, and, on meeting his old love once again, comes to the very sensible conclusion that he cannot do better than repair the mistake of his youth. As may have been seen, Mr. Shirley Smith's plot is far from sensational, but the general execution is above the average of that of the novel of the day. The book is well padded with dialogue, which, bearing in mind the fact that it proceeds from the lips of people not over likely to set the Thames on fire, is, for the most part, sufficiently entertaining. In the delineation of character the author has been less successful. It is only the greatest masters of fiction who can endow their more slightly emphasised figures with life and movement by a few bold strokes; but even in Mr. Smith's more laboured compositions we fail to realise that vivid sense of personality which alone can place a novelist's readers in full sympathy with his creations. Before taking leave of Mr. Shirley Smith, we feel constrained to call attention to an implication that young gentlemen who are fortunate enough to secure fascinating partners at balls and dances are in the habit of stealthily kissing their fair ones in greenhouses and other secluded places. Surely this is a most perilous doctrine to teach the rising generation?

Such intrigue as is developed by the authoress of In Fair Bruges is concerned with a few weeks' very commonplace love-making in the old Flemish town which gives the title to her story. Readers, however, who believe in the ultimate perfectibility of human nature will condone a flimsy plot in consideration of the manifold virtues and graces with which the creations presented to them are endowed. It is true that the heroine, Diana Saville, is a trifle proud, and, during the early days of courtship, looks down with unworthy disdain upon the hero, Grandby Forrest, who may be described as a gentleman-miller. But, after all, this weakness is excusable in the only daughter of a baronet of ancient lineage. As for the hero, when we have said that he combines in his person all the virtues which have won immortality for the Chevalier Bayard, with the many accomplishments of the Admirable Crichton, we shall have still conveyed but a feeble idea of this extraordinary paragon of perfection. It would, however, be doing less than justice to this highly gifted individual did we omit to record the fact that, while carrying on a large business as a corn-factor and miller, he yet contrived to fill the proud position of chief contributor to the Royal and Imperial European Chief Agricultural Chronicle, and that he might, had he chosen, have been the editor of that influential organ. The nearest approach to a villain throughout these pages is reached in the person of an English commercial traveller who had wandered as far as Bruges, and who happened to come across the heroine's path when the latter was alone one gala night in the midst of an illumination-gazing throng, having been temporarily isolated from a group of friends by a sudden rush of the crowd. This highly objectionable individual not only took advantage of Miss Saville's defenceless condition to thrust himself into her society, but he actually had the audacity to approach his lips to within three inches of her cheek. What atrocity he might have proceeded to commit will never be known, for just at this moment—but the authoress shall herself describe what befel this rude bagman—

"A white, well-shaped hand inserted itself in the collar of the man's coat; and the wearer, then executing one or two wild gyrations, to which evidently an impulse of no ordinary power had been given, fell among the crowd—which, however, obligingly opening for his passage right and left, allowed him to fall with considerable violence to the ground at a distance about eight or ten feet off!"

It is hardly necessary to add that the doughty champion whose "white, well-shaped hand" rescued the heroine from her unwelcome admirer was no other than Grandby Forrest, and that, after some more love-making, the tale is brought to a happy and orthodox conclusion. As a novel, In Fair Bruges is a poor piece of work, but as a guide-book to Bruges and its surroundings it has a certain merit and value.

Mr. Julian Hawthorne apologises in a somewhat discursive Preface for having rescued the five stories introduced by "Ellice Quentin" from the oblivion of magazine files. He might well have spared himself the trouble. Unhappily, the vivid imagination, the power of describing the material world in graphic language, and the subtle though keen sense of the humorous side of human life which have contributed in well-balanced proportions to the production of these brilliant little pieces are so rare that readers cannot afford to lose even their slighter manifestations. Avoiding detailed criticism of matter which has already been laid before the public, we may remark that "Ellice Quentin," the first story on the list, is a study in morbid psychology, and that, probably, it might have been expanded with advantage; that "The Countess's Ruby" and "A Lover in Spite of Himself" are two very readable love-tales; that "Kilburn's Oak," with which the author begins the second volume, is to our way of thinking the gem of the collection; and that in "The New Endymion," although exhibiting a rare grace and tenderness, the author has somewhat marred the effect by over-drawing upon his imagination. Before we close these volumes we should like to know why American grammatical freaks are reproduced in an English book. It is puzzling to read of a young lady who could take a "straight header" from a diving board that "she dove like a plummet."

A Dweller in Tents is a love-story of the orthodox type leavened by a religious purpose. The hero unexpectedly finds himself, by the sudden death of an aunt, left sole guardian and protector of a little half-brother. And thereby hangs the authoress's tale. For, being very far from blessed with Fortunatus's purse, David Malcombe is obliged to give up all hopes of marrying the woman of his choice in order that he may do his duty by his young half-brother. How everything comes right in the end we will leave Mrs. Meade to tell her readers. Suffice it to say that, unlike many books of its class, A Dweller in Tents is really a well-written story.

The publishers of the Tauchnitz German Authors series have been exceptionally fortunate in the latest addition to their collection. Concurrently with the appearance of the German original, the English public have been favoured with a graceful and thoroughly artistic translation of Auerbach's Brigitte. Readers familiar with the author's Schwarzwälder Dorfgeschichten will be pleased to find, on turning over these pages, that the right hand which penned those matchless sketches of peasant life has lost none of its cunning, and that in Berthold Auerbach Germany possesses a novelist who adds to glowing and unsurpassable descriptions of the beauties of nature that intense human interest which springs from a deep and subtle insight into human nature.

ARTHUR BARKER.

SOME BOOKS OF HISTORY.

Frederick the Great and the Seven Years' War. By F. W. Longman. "Epochs of Modern History" Series. (Longmans.) This is one of the most interesting books of the series, partly, it may be, from the inherent attraction of the story of the war in which Prussia obtained a leading position in Germany, while England gained India and Canada; but something also is due to the way in which the author has grouped his facts. Any English History of Frederick must be based on Carlyle's noble work. But Mr. Longman wisely ignores Carlyle's attempt to glorify Frederick's father, whose chief merit was to have created a fine army; and he omits all about the "tobacco Parliament," in which Frederick William was tricked by his own officers and their Austrian friends, and all about the King's political economy. Carlyle's Reminiscences seem to show that he transferred an idealised view of his own father to the old King. Von Arneth's History of Maria Theresa has given us a narrative from the Austrian point of view, but von Arneth is rather reticent about the claims on Silesia and the general current of Austrian policy. The publication of Frederick's Political Correspondence, which is now going on, perhaps came too late to be of use. After all, geographical considerations determine a nation's policy almost more than anything else. France naturally strove to reach the Alps and the Rhine, and keep Italy and Germany weak. Prussia, with her centre on the Middle Oder, naturally strove to gain the territory which would unite her with her outlying provinces on the Vistula and the Rhine, and tried to push down the Oder to the sea and up the Oder into Silesia. Austria wished to absorb Bavaria and extend her sway in Italy and towards Turkey, and keep the little German States weak and divided—her policy was Austrian and not German. England was anxious to restore harmony between the two German Powers and unite them against France; but when France, abandoning her old policy, combined with Austria to destroy Prussia, Pitt stood by Frederick and enabled him to fit out the armies which saved Prussia from being crushed, just as previously England had given similar help to Maria Theresa, and just as later on it was the English help that enabled Prussia to carry on the War of Independence against Napoleon. Perhaps a little more stress might have been laid on Frederick's years of peace and his early friendship for Suhm, Jordan, and others, on which Sainte-Beuve has some good articles in the Causeries du Lundi, and which exhibit the King in a more amiable light than usual. In his later years he was very lonely, his early friends (except Koith) were dead or scattered, and politics became all in all. There are two very useful maps, and four wood-cuts of Rossbach, Leuthen, Minden, and Quebec. Five chapters are devoted to English affairs, and the book is nearly as interesting for English as for Prussian history.

Wietersheim's Geschichte der Völkerwanderung. Zweite Auflage, besorgt von Felix Dahn, erster Band, mit einer Karte von H. Kiepert. (Leipzig: Weigel.) Wietersheim's book was much too diffuse, and Dahn has done good service by compressing it. The present first volume represents three of the old edition. All about the constitution of the Roman Republic, from Servius Tullius onwards, and much other miscellaneous matter is omitted, which the author had printed apparently to get it off his hands. Dahn adds a statement of his own view that the great migrations were caused mainly by the growth of population and the pressure of famine, though partly also by the onward movement of the tribes behind.

"From out the frozen forests of the North
The sons of slaughter pour in myriads forth."

He is also careful to note the forms of the early German tribal constitutions, and the way in which the later confederacies of tribes grew up by a natural process; just as our counties became grouped into kingdoms and the kingdoms gradually welded into larger kingdoms, a process which was aided by the growth of Christianity. Dahn can be the briefer in all this because he can of course refer to the Könige der Germanen. The first book reaches to the war with the Marcomanni; the second book takes the Gothic age and all down to the death of Valentinian. A map is added to illustrate the first excursus on the settlements of the tribes before the migration. Another excursus discusses the now discarded hypothesis that the Getae and Goths were the same, and the character of Jordanis's History; a third examines the chronology of the events in the time of Valerian and Gallienus. The work is now probably the most comprehensive picture of the time that we possess.

THE seventh volume of the English translation of M. Guizot's History of France (Sampson Low) is a decided improvement on the sixth. Treating of the Consulate and Empire up to the Russian campaign, the author and editor have a straightforward tale to tell, and have done their work well. The story of the Revolution was one which was not likely to prosper in the hands of strong political partisans; but all the world is now pretty much of one mind about Napoleon. The translation is not always so idiomatic as it should be, and appears to have been done in a hurry. We are told, for instance (p. 4), that in Sieyès' Constitution the Great Elector was to appoint "two Councils of peace and war," though they appear rightly as Consuls on the next page.

Histoire des Romains. By Victor Duruy, Member of the Institute, &c. New Illustrated Edition. Vol. II. (Paris: Hachette.) M. Duruy's admirable History of Rome "from the earliest times to Diocletian" has already been reviewed in these columns (June 28, 1879), together with the first volume of the new illustrated edition. This edition is well entitled to a place in the libraries of students of Roman history, and ought certainly to be conspicuous among our school prize books. The second volume is even richer than the first in illustrations. It embraces the period from the close of the Second Punic War to the First Triumvirate. We can hardly overrate the value of the engravings, numbering upwards of six hundred, which bring before us both the scenes and the actors in every important event; the former through views of famous sites and of architectural remains, the latter chiefly through the medium of coins. The present volume, dealing with the Roman conquest of Greece and the wars in Asia Minor, is copiously furnished with illustrations of the art of those countries. Among these are several splendid chromo-lithographs representing "Corinthian" vases and paintings from Pompeii, with numerous copies of ornaments from Panticapæon and the other treasures of Greek and Oriental art. The remaining volumes will embrace the history of the Empire, which, as the original edition shows, has received much fuller and more original treatment from M. Duruy than that of the Republic.

First Principles of Roman History. By T. S. Taylor. (Belfe Bros.) Mr. Taylor has already decocted the history of England and France for the benefit of children, and he now offers them a very slight glimpse of the history of Rome. It is difficult to understand for what sort of juveniles such a meagre and superficial sketch can be of service. The little book is judiciously written, as far as it goes, but it omits far too much. Of what use, for example, is an outline of the Roman religion in which there is barely room for Jupiter himself? Or an account of the early Roman society where we are vaguely told that "the king was helped to govern by a Senate and an assembly of the people"? This last term is constantly used without the limitations necessary to make it intelligible. The clients are not once mentioned; and, in enumerating the wars of Rome, Mr. Taylor contrives to forget the Cimbri and Teutones. In his anxiety to write down to the level of children the author has produced, instead of a simple consecutive story, a mere residuum which must of necessity be dry from its very brevity. We already possess excellent primers of Roman history and antiquities. If anything more is wanted for very young readers, it is a selection of biographies such as might easily be made from Plutarch.

History of the Establishment of British Rule in India. By the Rev. Sir George Cox. (Longmans.) A History of British India for English elementary schools is, we confess, what we had scarcely expected to see within the present century. We have no astonishment left for the fact that Sir George Cox should be its author. We are sorry to say that we are doubtful about the success of the undertaking. Not that Sir G. Cox has not done his task well. Indeed, he has done it too well. Coming fresh to the subject, he has comprehended too much within its scope. As with an overcrowded map, or, rather, as with one of those historical pictures in which every face is guaranteed to be a portrait, the general result is too accurate, and, therefore, bewildering. Even a professed student of Indian history may fairly admit himself ignorant of some of the names and places here mentioned. For our part, we think that, if Indian history is to be read in schools at all, it should only be read in episodes; and that those episodes should be as little military as possible. Why should not Macaulay's famous essays serve as a model, to which someone might perhaps add Wellesley and Dalhousie and Lawrence? By-the-way, we notice that Sir G. Cox follows Macaulay so closely that he makes Clive advance upon Plassey from Cosimbazar; and that he omits altogether the most stirring of Hastings' achievements, the conquest of Guzerat with a Bengal army. Might he not also have left poor Elijah Impey alone?

The English History Reading Book, by Miss Yonge (London: National Society's Depository), is one among many manuals lately published to meet the requirements of the new Education Code of 1880. It was no easy matter to compress the History of England for more than a thousand years into 109 small pages; yet this has been done by Miss Yonge without any important event being left out, and without the style once becoming dry. The confusion, however, both of language and arrangement is much to be regretted, and the inaccuracies are too frequent to enumerate. But the greatest flaws are a want of appreciation of the due proportion of things, and even sometimes a want of fairness, and a narrow view of morality. It is of no importance that children should know that Henry I. died from eating lampreys, and it is as useless as it is cruel to make them learn the names and dates of all the Saxon kings; but it is of the utmost importance that their hearts should be stirred by stories of such courage as that of Caractacus and Boadicea, and their reverence for goodness strengthened by such noble lives as those of Alfred and St. Anselm. Of St. Anselm Miss Yonge says not a word; while Edburga is held up as an example because she chose a prayer-book instead of a toy, and became a nun instead of a wife! It is very misleading to describe the Turks as "one of those Eastern tribes who had been led away to believe the false teachings of Mahomed, a man who pretended to be a greater prophet than our blessed Lord." Children would naturally infer from this that Turks had once been Christians, whereas Mahometanism must have been an enormous advance on their old religion. It is hardly fair to extol the Crusaders, and entirely to pass over the dreadful cruelties committed by some of them when Jerusalem was taken. Yet still more to be regretted is the narrow view of morality which leads the writer to represent the misfortunes of Harold and of Stephen as having been punishments inflicted on those kings for oath-breaking. Such teaching can only lead children to suppose that they will always see wrong-doing visibly punished. Pictures and verses are added to make the book more attractive, but where architecture is introduced care ought to have been taken to make it historically correct; and we look in vain for any of the stirring songs of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, which, with a few verbal alterations, are quite intelligible to children. The next instalment of Miss Yonge's History will, it is to be hoped, have the attractiveness of the present book without its defects.

An Anecdotal History of the British Parliament. By G. H. Jennings. (Law Times Office.) This compilation is an expansion of a work published some eight years since under the joint authorship of Mr. Jennings and Mr. William S. Johnstone, which met with sufficient support from the public to justify the present author on this his second venture. The book is not in any way a formal history or historical essay on the rise and development of Parliament and its usages, but simply what its title imports—a collection of anecdotes bearing more or less on the subject, compiled in many instances from rare and inaccessible works, and arranged in neat paragraphs with convenient handles in the shape of Egyptian headings. The author divides his subject into three sections—the first dealing with the rise and progress of Parliamentary institutions, the second being devoted to personal anecdotes, and the third to miscellaneous matter, such as Parliamentary privilege, the practice and conduct of elections, and so forth. The volume is completed by a fairly good Index; which, however, in another edition might be expanded with advantage.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

ON READING THE SONNET, BY R. C. D., ENTITLED 'IN MEMORIAM, G. P. C.,' IN "MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE."

YES! mourn the soul, of high and pure intent,
Humane as valiant, in disastrous fight
Laid low on far Manjuba's bloody height!
Yet, not his death alone must we lament,
But more such spirit on evil mission sent,
To back our broken faith with armed might,
And the unanswered plea of wounded right
Strike dumb by warfare's brute arbitrament.
And while these deeds are done in England's name,
Religion unregardful keeps her cell:
The tuneful note that wails the dead, we hear;
Where are the sacred thunders that should swell
To shame such foul oppression, and proclaim
Eternal justice in the nation's ear?

JOHN KELLS INGRAM.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. ALEXANDER MACMILLAN received, on March 26, the honorary degree of Master of Arts from the University of Oxford. A similar distinction has been conferred before upon some of those gentlemen who have been partners with the University in the management of the Clarendon Press. In Mr. Macmillan's case, a graceful acknowledgment has been made of his services as publisher to the university for seventeen years, services only terminated when the university resolved to come forward themselves as publishers by their own agent. Apart from this, there will be a widespread feeling of satisfaction that the university should thus recognise the part which business, energetically and honourably conducted, plays in the advancement and dissemination of learning.

ON April 20, the University of Edinburgh will confer the honorary degree of LL.D. upon (among others) Mr. James Burgess, the eminent Indian archaeologist; Prof. S. B. Gardiner, Sir David Macnee, Prof. Bonamy Price, and Prof. A. W. Williamson. The Independence Belge adds also the name of M. Emile de Laveleye, the distinguished political economist and professor in the University of Liège; but we do not find it in the list given in the Scotsman.

MESSRS. HARPER AND BROS., declaring that they had arranged, through Mr. Moncure Conway, in 1879, with Mr. Carlyle himself for the publication of his Reminiscences, and that Mr. Proude, disregarding this arrangement, used his position as editor to furnish advance sheets to his own American publishers, announce that they will issue the work in two forms, one with portraits for sixty cents, the other for fifteen cents.

MESSRS. REEVES AND TURNER are about to publish a volume of prose Essays and Phantasies, by James Thomson, author of The City of Dreadful Night, &c. The leading pieces of the new book are "A Lady of Sorrow" and "Proposals for the Speedy Extinction of Evil and Misery." The other contents include "An Evening with Spenser," "Open Secret Societies," "A Word for Xantippe," "The Fair of St. Sylvester," "In our Forest of the Past," with notes on Forster's Swift and on George Meredith.

M. EMILE DE LAVELEYE is about to publish an important work on Contemporary Socialism. Among the subjects treated of are:—Contemporary Socialism in Germany—(1) the theorists, Rodbertus, Marlo, Karl Marx, (2) the agitators, especially Ferdinand Lassalle, (3) the Conservative and the Evangelical Socialists, (4) the Catholic Socialists; the greatness and decline of the International; the universal alliance of democracy and the apostle of universal destruction—Nihilism, Bakunin, &c. M. Muquardt, of Brussels, is the publisher of this singularly well-timed work.

UNDER the title of The New Phrynichus, Mr. W. Gunion Rutherford, M.A., of Balliol College, Oxford, has in the press, and will shortly publish, an edition of the well-known second-century Atticist, based on a thorough rescension of the text, with collation of new MSS., but containing also a great deal of original work in the direction of the emendation of Attic texts by the scientific application of the testimony of Phrynichus, with an attempt at the same time to justify his position as to the un-Attic character of the diction of the Tragic Poets and of Xenophon. Messrs. Macmillan and Co. are the publishers.

THE same publishers have in the press for their "Classical Library for Higher Students" an edition of the Medea of Euripides, by Mr. A. W. Verrall, and Martial's Epigrams, Books I. and II., edited by Prof. J. E. B. Mayor. In the "Classical Series" they announce for early publication Mr. Postgate's Select Poems of Propertius; Demosthenes adversus Leptinem, edited by the Rev. J. R. King; the Hippolytus of Euripides, edited by Prof. Mahaffy; and Select Orations of Lysias, edited by Mr. E. S. Shuckburgh. For the "Elementary Classics" Mr. C. E. Graves has prepared an edition of Plato's Euthyphro and Menexenus.

WE hear that over a hundred thousand copies have been sold of the six-shilling edition of Mr. Tennyson's Works in one volume. We wish we could persuade Mr. Browning to issue his works in a like one-volume edition, and to add to some of his poems one of those little notes which he sends to correspondents now and then on the circumstances or object of his works. One such on his Lost Leader and Wordsworth was published a year or two ago. Another, dated January 23 last, has just appeared in The Literary World of Boston on "How they brought the Good News from Ghent to Aix." Mr. Browning writes:—

"There is no sort of historical foundation for the poem about 'Good News to Ghent' [? Aix]. I wrote it under the bulwark of a vessel, off the African coast, after I had been at sea long enough to appreciate even the fancy of a gallop on the back of a certain good horse 'York,' then in my stable at home. It was written in pencil on the fly-leaf of Bartolio's Simboli, I remember."

WE would fain see Mr. Browning with twenty or thirty thousand more readers among the thoughtful men of England than he has now, and a cheap edition of his works would give him these at least.

MESSRS. EYRE AND SPOTTISWOODE have ready the New Testament, with copious revision notes at the foot of the pages, by the same eminent editors as their well-known "Variorum Reference Bible."

MESSRS. REEVES AND TURNER promise that their new edition of Keats shall be even a handsomer book than their Shelley, which won them so much praise. Mr. Buxton Forman has much new material for it.

WE are glad to hear that Prof. ten Brink is working at the second volume of his History of English Literature, and that he hopes to finish it in a few months. He has been lecturing on The Canterbury Tales this winter, and his new volume will contain the latest results of his investigations into Chaucer. We hope that he will let his translator, Mr. Kennedy, have advanced sheets, so that the English second volume may soon follow the first, which Messrs. G. Bell and Sons here, and Messrs. Holt and Co. in New York, have promised us.

A SELECTION from the Latin and Greek verses in Kottabos, from its commencement to the present time, will appear under the editorship of Prof. Tyrrell in the Dublin University Press series.

WE understand that the Marquis of Blandford will answer in this week's issue of Land some criticisms on his recent writings on land questions, and that one of the English Commissioners who have charge of the Daira Lands will shortly commence a series of papers on the subject in the same journal.

THE Society of Cymmrodorion have arranged to publish the work on the Gododin left in MS. by the late Mr. Thomas Stephens. It comprises a full historical introduction, text with various readings, and a translation, illustrated by notes and elaborate historical dissertations. The work will be issued to members in the usual way, and a few copies offered for subscription to non-members.

THE correspondence between Talleyrand and Louis XVIII. at the time of the Congress of Vienna, which we have already announced, will be published in French, German, and English on the same day, towards the end of April.

THE Rev. Dr. Badger has a long and important article on "Muhammad and Muhammadanism" in the forthcoming volume of Smith and Wace's Dictionary of Christian Biography. We understand that it is not confined to the theology of Islâm, but that it discusses frankly a variety of questions of political and literary interest at the present time.

FROM the last price list of Messrs. Harper and Bros., of New York, we find that, in the absence of international copyright, the following works (among others) are published at fifteen cents, or sevenpence halfpenny:—Mr. Black's Swirise, Miss Braddon's Asphodel, Mr. Anthony Trollope's Dr. Wortle's School, and Miss Yonge's Love and Life. In the case of some other books, apparently, there is not so much competition. Prof. E. Dowden's Shakspeare is offered at one dollar, seventy-five cents (7s.); and Mr. Anthony Trollope's Life of Cicero and Dr. Andrew Mitchell's The Past in the Present both at three dollars (12s.).

PROF. U. J. RUDOLF, of Solothurn, has just published an Abridgment of the History of English Literature—Ein Abriss der Geschichte der englischen Literatur (Solothurn: Jent and Gassmann—for the use of the upper classes in the gymnasial and industrial schools. It gives, on the whole, a fair account of the development of English literature, pays special attention to the religious, political, and social life of the English people, and emphasises the relations of English and German literature during the "Blüthezeit" of the former in the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries. The Abridgment has also appeared in an English form, which may be obtained from Messrs. Sampson Low.

A NEW edition has just been published

(Paris: Leroux) of M. V. Guérin's valuable work upon the Island of Rhodes.

As a proof of the ardour with which the classical authors of Spain are now studied in the most remote parts of the country we may point to the articles on "Cervantes Vascófilo, ó sea Cervantes vindicado de su supuesto anti-Vizcairismo," by Don Julian Apraiz, now appearing in the Euskal-errria of San Sebastian. The same journal announces that Señor Arrese y Beitia is preparing an ode in Basque for the commemoration of Calderon. Don Vicente Arana has in the press a collection of "Leyendas Bascongadas," to be published shortly in Bilbao.

THE Philological Society having resolved to allow the Reformed Spelling of which it has approved to be used in its publications by any of its members, Mr. Henry Sweet, one of the Society's Vice-presidents, who edits the Monthly Abstract of its Proceedings, has adopted the Reformed Spelling, and cut out the useless vowels, &c., which the society has condemned. Members are accordingly informed that "the Papers red ver" so and so; that "Mr. Sweet thought it probable that . . . his earlier views," &c.; that they "have onse been;" that the distinction "could not be anything but a graphic one," and so on, while the forms 'uzed, reazons, theze, servs, sum-one, becum,' often occur. That the changes proposed are in the main justified by etymology and the history of the language, no one can deny, while the use of z for the flat sound of s is surely a gain. The unfamiliarity of the new spellings to the eye soon stops. We hope that no mere feeling of conservatism or prejudice will prevent a fair discussion of the new scheme.

PROF. FARINELLI, the Barlow Lecturer at University College, will commence on May 3 a course of twelve lectures on Dante's Inferno. They will be given (in Italian) on Tuesdays and Fridays, at three p.m., and will be open to the public without payment or ticket. The introductory lecture will be on the life and work of Dante.

THE Académie Française has appointed M. Renan to the post of "directeur" for the coming quarter. As a result, it will fall to him to deliver the address which accompanies the annual award of the prizes for virtue.

THE eminent French historian, M. Henri Martin, will shortly pay a visit to Algiers, with the object of studying on the spot the antiquarian remains to be found in the province of Constantine.

THE International Literary Association will meet this year at Vienna some time in the month of September. M. Emile Augier has accepted the post of honorary president of the committee of organisation.

IN explanation of Carlyle's ill-natured remarks in his Reminiscences about Charles Lamb, the following story is told. The two were once members of a party who were taken to see a pen of exceptionally fine game-fowls. Carlyle, in his high moral manner, began to improve the occasion by expatiating upon the lessons to be learnt from the birds. At last poor stammering Lamb broke in, "P-p-p-perhaps you're a p-p-p-poulterer?"

TWO new novels of importance have recently been published in Paris:—Madame de Dreux, by Henry Greville (Plon), and Noirs et Rouges, by Victor Cherbuliez. Of the latter of these we hope to give a short review.

UNDER the title of Les Contes d'à Présent, the firm of Ollendorff has just published in an elegant volume the collection of "monologues on vers" by M. Paul Delair which have become so popular when recited by C. Coquelin at the Comédie française. The value of the is enhanced by a Preface from M. Coquelin himself upon the art of public recitation.

As Canon Simmons's edition of the Lay Folk's Catechism will not be ready in time for the first issue of the Early-English Text Society's books this year, Prof. Skeat's edition of Archbishop Ælfric's Anglo-Saxon Metrical Lives of Saints, part i., will be the companion book to Mr. Hertridge's Catholicism. The Anglo-Saxon text will have a modern Englishing by Miss Gunning and Miss Isabel Wilkinson, revised by Prof. Skeat.

MR. GRIGGS's facsimile of the First, or Roberts Quarto of The Merchant of Venice, with forewords by Mr. Furnivall, is nearly ready for issue; and the Quarto of The Merry Wives, with Introduction by Mr. P. A. Daniel, is being rapidly got on with.

MR. FURNIVALL is copying a set of the earliest English wills in the Probate Office, for publication hereafter by the Early-English Text Society. Unluckily, there is no original will in the office before 1485; but in the old Registers the copies of English wills start with Lady Alice West's in 1393, and others follow pretty frequently after 1400, both in the Probate Court and the Commissary Court of London. The dialects of the different will-makers have, no doubt, been corrupted more or less by the London scribes, but the copies still keep many interesting dialectal forms and local terms.

A RUMOUR has been circulating for some time past in philological circles that Prof. Eduard Sievers, of Jena, has accepted a professorship in one of the leading American universities. We are glad to be able to state that this is not the case, and that consequently Germany and Europe will not lose their foremost representative of general Teutonic philology, who is, at the same time, the best German phonologist.

A COLLECTED edition of the dramatic works of "Murad Effendi" is about to be issued by Herr Weigel, of Leipzig.

THE first part has just appeared of a new Italian Review, entitled Rassegna critica di Opere filosofiche, scientifiche e letterarie. The editor is Prof. A. Angiulli.

THERE is an American Bibliography of Carlyle in the Literary World (Boston, U.S.A.) of March 12, 1881. The Harpers are the chief publishers of his separate works; Scribner and Co. and Lippincott of his complete works.

A DRAPERS' Dictionary is being published in the Warehousmen and Drapers' Trade Journal, illustrating historically the technical terms of the trade by quotations from various sources. For example, under "Aprons" there are references to Shakspere, Spenser, Pope, Goldsmith, and other writers.

A CATALOGUE of the valuable library of the late Michel Chasles is in preparation. The sale will take place in the first fortnight in May.

THE third volume of M. Georges Gniffrey's edition of the works of Clément Marot has just appeared. It contains the whole of the epistles, including a considerable number hitherto unpublished.

M. PAUL DE RÉMUSAT will publish shortly, with M. Calmann Lévy, two volumes of the correspondence of his grandmother, M^{me}. de Rémusat, in the years 1804-14.

THE articles on Carlyle by Dr. Eugene Oswald which have recently appeared in Das Magazin für die Literatur des In- und Auslandes will be published shortly in a separate and enlarged form.

THE students of Edinburgh University held a meeting on March 25, at which a proposal was favourably received to found a Lectureship in History as a memorial of Carlyle. At present none of the four Scotch universities has any chair devoted solely to history.

MESSRS. BURNS AND OATES will shortly publish a detailed reply by Father Ryder, of the Birmingham Oratory, to the Rev. Dr. Little-dale's Plain Reasons for not joining the Church of Rome.

THE Rassegna Settimanale announces the publication in April of Francesco Berni, con nuovi Documenti, by Antonio Vergili.

WE have received Notes of an Irish Tour in 1846, by Lord John Manners, New Edition (Blackwood); The American View of the Copyright Question, by Richard Grant White (Routledge); Speeches of Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee, 1876-80 (Calcutta: R. C. Palit); Indian Finance, by Thomas B. Moxon (Manchester: Heywood); What must I do to be saved? by Robert G. Ingersoll (Leicester: Bent); Plutarch's Lives, translated from the Greek, with Notes and a Life of Plutarch, by Aubrey Stewart and George Long, Vol. II. (George Bell and Sons); A Complete Dictionary to Caesar's Gallic War, with an Appendix of Idioms and Hints on Translation, by Albert Creak, Fifth Edition, Revised (Hodder and Stoughton); Institutes de Gaius, 6^e édition (1^{re} française), d'après l'"apographe" de Studemund, par Ernest Dubois (Paris: A. Marecq); A Dream of the Nineteenth Century upon the Decline and Fall of British Agriculture, by an Oxfordshire Landholder (Stanford); Hibernia's House—the Irish Commons assembled at Dublin—a Forecast, by M. Pee (E. W. Allen); The Land Question, Ireland, No. IX., Mr. Gladstone's Commissioners and Mr. Gladstone (William Ridgway); The Irish Land Bill of 1870, and the Lords' and Tories' Amendments thereon, by Sydney C. Buxton (National Press Agency); The Retention of Candahar, Speech of Lord Derby, Revised by the Author (National Press Agency); &c., &c.

OBITUARY.

THE greatest of Swedish historians, Prof. Anders Fryxell, died at Stockholm on March 21, aged 86 years. He was the author of the Berättelser ur Svenska Historien, which appeared in eighty-five volumes (1823-80). Portions of this great work have been translated into foreign languages, as his known History of Charles XII. into German. Two volumes, translated into English by Schoultz, of his Handlingar rör Sveriges Historia were published in London in 1843.

THE death is announced at Michelstadt, in the Grand Duchy of Hesse, on March 29, of Lieut. Karl Wyprecht, the commander of the Austrian expedition to the North Pole in 1873 which discovered Franz Josef Land. Lieut. Wyprecht, who was only forty-one years of age, died of pulmonary disease contracted on that expedition.

THE death is also announced of Mr. Lawrence Goodchild, aged sixty-seven, a well-known character in the county of Northumberland. Afflicted with blindness when twenty years old, he yet devoted himself with energy to the work of teaching, and won a high reputation in the North of England. Of his published works, The Rebel's Wooing has been compared by local critics to Redgauntlet, while his spirited ballads and songs are extremely popular. A sympathetic obituary notice of him was given in the North of England Advertiser of last week.

IN France there have died during the past week M. Auguste de Chatillon, aged seventy-three—a poetical contemporary of Victor Hugo, Théophile Gautier, and Alexandre Dumas père—whose Grande Pinte and Leverette en Pal'tot have afforded laughter to more than one generation; and M. Achille Delesse, aged sixty-four, member of the Académie des Sciences, and eminent both as a geologist and a geographer.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Scottish Celtic Review (Glasgow: MacLachlan), edited by Mr. Alexander Cameron, is a quarterly Review devoted chiefly to the study of Gaelic after the comparative method, which has been so fruitful of results elsewhere. It is also intended to give English readers the means of judging of the extent and merits of Gaelic literature, of putting on record the folklore of the Scottish Highlands, of helping the study of the dialects of the country, of interpreting Gaelic place-names, and of mending the orthography of Gaelic, which, by the way, is worse than English in that respect, and that is saying a very great deal. We cannot, perhaps, do better than give the reader the contents of the present number, which is a large octavo of eighty pages:—(1) Introductory remarks on the place of Gaelic in the Indo-European family of languages, the tests of etymological affinity, and Grimm's Law with illustrations of its application; (2) Indo-European roots, with derivatives and analysis of some Gaelic compound words; (3) the laws of Auslaut in Irish, translated from a paper by Prof. Windisch; (4) a grammatical and etymological analysis of Gen. i. 1-8; (5) specimens of Old Gaelic—St. Patrick's hymn, with translation and analysis of a part of the hymn; (6) the West Highland tale, how the Tuairisgeul Mor was put to death, with a translation; (7) a Gaelic song, by John Macdonald—the Keppoch Bard; (8) notes on Gaelic grammar and orthography; (9) the Gaelic air of "The Corrie of the Mist." Most of the earlier articles are earnest efforts on the part of the editor to initiate his countrymen into reasonable views on Scotch Gaelic, which they do not as a rule like to see connected too closely with Irish, it being, as they have usually thought, a much finer thing to dip at once into Sanskrit or Hebrew or anything Oriental than into the source to which history clearly directs them. We wish him success; but, at the same time, we anticipate that he must expect a warm reception from Charles Mackay, LL.D., the author of a work which we see advertised as The Gaelic Etymology of the Languages of Western Europe. The portion of this first number which will interest outsiders most is, perhaps, the tale of the Tuairisgeul Mor, which the editor has obtained from Mr. Campbell of Tiree, and as to which he says that it was written down some years ago, in Gaelic, from the dictation of John Campbell of Hianish, in the Island of Tiree. We cannot here give a summary of the tale; but we would point out to those who are interested in the non-Arthurian tales included among the Welsh Mabinogion, that it contains certain incidents which throw much-needed light on some of the strangest occurrences in the Mabinogi of Pwyll Prince of Dyfed. Let us hope that this Review may long last to record such unpublished tales as the one from Tiree, as well as to realise the other aims the editor has in view.

THE most important articles in the Revista Contemporanea of March 15 are continuations of "The Founders of Constitutionalism in Spain," by Perez de Guzman, and of "The Spanish Expedition to Italy in 1849," by the Marqués de Mendigorría. The former summarises the great debate on the abolition of the Inquisition of December 8, 1812, in the Cortes of Cadiz; the latter relates the events connected with the flight of the Popo from Rome in November 1848, the proclamation of the Roman Republic, and the protests from Gaeta. The Conde de Toreno discusses the authority of the State in education, arguing that, though the Church does not claim, and never has claimed, liberty of teaching as a good thing per se, she now demands it rightly as a defence against atheistic and pernicious teaching, since she has lost the power of influencing the official instruction. We also note a lively paper of mordant "Refranes y Desvergüenzas" (dictions, the French would call them), collected by Fernandez Duro in the neighbourhood of Zamora; and a report of the "Discurso" on the "Ethics of Calderon," by Mariano Catalina, on his reception into the Royal Academy of Spain.

THE current number of the China Review contains fewer articles of interest than usual. It begins with a translation of some chapters of the Lii-li, or general code of laws of the Chinese empire; on the land tax and the inspection of lands in times of dearth, which, however, do not embody any important principle, and consist only of administrative regulations. To students of the minutiae of Chinese law these are, no doubt, valuable; but they lack a wider interest. Following on this, Mr. Chalmers gives a list of the rhymes of the Shi-king. The list is full; but its importance is marred by the fact that it is based on the well-known theory of Dr. Edkins that the sound of each compound character found in the classics follows that of its part which has at a later period been treated as its phonetic portion. Recent research, however, points conclusively to the presumption that the ancient characters were composed on a phonetic system, in which each part contributed to the sounds of the characters, in contradistinction to the modern method, by which, speaking generally, the sounds of compound characters are those of what has, in the post-classical age, been called their phonetic portions only. The result is that, while in many instances the influence of the phonetic parts of the characters is noticeable more especially in the terminations, the attempt to make all the characters rhyme in the composition of which the same phonetics appear must fail. Mr. Balfour next contributes a translation of the Su-shu, or "Book of Plain Words," a tract with Taoist tendencies which is attributed to the third century B.C. "Notices of Eminent Statesmen of the present Dynasty," and a graphic account of "The Yang-tze Gorges and Rapids in Hu-pei," by Mr. Parker, complete the body of the number, which concludes with short notices of new books and some notes and queries.

"How the Census is taken" is the title of an article in Cassell's Magazine for April, in which a former enumerator relates some interesting experiences in connexion with census-taking.

DE LA BELLAUDIÈRE.*

LOUIS BELLAUD DE LA BELLAUDIÈRE, whose poem, Le Dondon Infernal, has recently been lithographed by La Societa Prouvençaliste de l'Aube, for the benefit of its members, from the original copy printed at Aix in 1588, is one of the few prominent figures among the crowd of Provençal poetasters who have followed in the wake of the renowned masters of song. The crusades against the Albigenes in the thirteenth century ruthlessly crushed the fantastic life and loves of the Troubadours, and hushed their brilliant, if somewhat artificial, song and speech. But, given an impressionable Southern temperament, and a language the very prose of which has almost the melody of verse, what wonder that the Provençal muse has never been wholly silent?

* Le Dondon Infernal ou sont Descrites en Langage Provençal les Misères et Calamités d'une Prison. Par L. de la Bellaudière, de la Maison et Compagnie de Monseigneur le Grand Prieur de France. (1588; reprinted 1880. Aix-en-Provence: Michel Coyzot; Paris: Maisonneuve.)

De la Bellaudière was born at Grasse in 1532. He belonged to la petite noblesse, and, like almost every man of his time and station, joined one of the two great camps into which France was divided. The profession of arms in those days was in perfect harmony with his tastes and character. It gave him change, and turbulent occupation, and roystering companions, and fresh fields for licentious enjoyment—notably at Avignon, where Italian customs prevailed, and gave a keener edge to pleasure. Whatever learning he may have picked up as a lad was probably of a very elementary kind, and was not likely to have been much prized by him. In 1572 his company was disbanded on the occasion of a hollow peace; and for seven months, his occupation being gone, he seems to have wandered about in very straitened circumstances. The Massacre of St. Bartholomew, with the general ferment that ensued, and the insecurity of all classes, made it expedient for Bellaud to seek the protection of his native place rather than be a wanderer at the mercy of an uneven and summary justice. Before he reached Grasse he was arrested and cast into prison, though he does not seem to have made himself in any way really amenable to the laws. These were sore straits indeed for a man whose energetic and sensuous nature rebelled instinctively against confinement. He had scant means of making the miserable fare or quarters more endurable; he was stung by a sense of wrong, and keenly felt the horrors of the then existing state of prison life. This feeling found a deeper and more subjective expression than was usual with him. It was while smarting under the sting of privation and suffering, and irritated by the venality and tardiness of justice, that he wrote his vigorous satire, "The Infernal Ding-dong," for once sinking his own personality, save as he made himself a mouth-piece for all in the same sorry plight as himself, and dealing good sounding blows against an iniquitous state of things.

The poem opens with an exclamatory address to those who are so blessed as never to have heard the "ding-dong" of the Palace bell—palace and prison, but liker to the pit of Tophet than to a King's house!

"Blessed he who never heard the frightful sound of this ding-dong—the veritable messenger of fear and terror, of tears and sighs. May he be damned who made such a bell! No sooner has one entered into the pit of this hell, foul with brimstone, than the ding-dong suddenly sounds, and assembles the folk of Purgatory to examine the prisoner, and fix his term of imprisonment. If by chance the poor fellow have done nothing; if he's accused of having bitten the moon; suddenly, God knows how! he's put into a cursed hole with double doors, and therein, all alone, he lies without comfort, not knowing why he is so troubled."

Then follow the description of the hole, infested by importunate vermin—

"Rate, rattons, rattos, and ratonnaillo"— and the sufferings of a prisoner, which may be compared to those of Ixion, Tantalus, Sisyphus:—

"Ah! the man who is free doesn't wait three hours morning and evening, all shivering and agape, to see Messers the Councillors go by, and cripitiously for justice. He doesn't have a hole for hostelry, stretched like a dog upon his straw, with bread and water for his only company. Better for him than this were the house-room of the grave-yard."

The portrait of Justice as she once was is then drawn; but now her balance is used to weigh golden pieces, her sword is rusty, and she is glad to be rid of her threadbare bandage, that she may the better judge of the worth of crowns, of cent. per cent., of usurious lending, and swell the list of abuses. As newly painted she has the likeness of a mighty spider, whose net catches and keeps the small fly, while fat folk, with well-lined purses, break through easily enough.

"O lawsuits, serpent with seven heads, how to exterminate thee, who can say! When a clerk, with malignant pen, takes down on paper one's age, name, and station, with the surplus of all one's life, at the dictation of some 'big-wig,' the stoutest heart must be astounded!"

So the poet goes on, showing up the malpractices of Justice, the bribery and corruption—Madam Largesse, without which there is no getting on—the lawsuits and trials, spun out for the better and more wholesale robbery of the luckless prisoner; the heartlessness and brutality of all, down to the varlets and gaolers; the sickening of disappointed hope, the suffering inflicted by the winter's cold. And if complaints do reach a higher quarter, the poor wretch who dared complain had better have called down the lightning of Jupiter. Pluto's palace (for Bellaud mentions no real names, that he may with impunity strike the harder) is, indeed, inspected twice a year, "but, ah, Sirs, if you came without noise you would see another stato of things, and we should at least have clean straw a little oftener!" "The best plan is to arm oneself with the patience of Job, lest one die as rabid as a dog!"

At last Bellaud succeeded, by repeated importunities, in stirring up his brother, a canon in Paris, to petition in his behalf; and he was liberated after nineteen months of imprisonment. Freedom must have been exquisitely pleasant to him, and he does not seem to have settled down to any regular life. Indeed, he was twice again imprisoned before very long for turbulence and rioting—once, in particular, for infringing the regulation that forbade a band of rufflers and rollickers, called Arquins, from holding any meetings in hostelry or inn. One cannot help being a little reminded of Villon in following Bellaud's life of straits and prison experiences, "assoiled," in a measure, to posterity by song; but Bellaud never strikes that truly fine and pathetic note which makes Villon so genuine a poet. After a time, seemingly spent in no very profitable manner, Bellaud obtained, through the influence of friends, a place in the household and company of Henri d'Angoulême, natural son of Henri II., the Grand Prior of France and Governor of Provence. In the brilliant and luxurious little Court at Aix Bellaud had his place as poet and member of the Grand Prior's Company of Gentlemen, writing verses to solicit his pay, and publishing his Dondon Infernal. When his patron came to a violent end in some murderous fray, where the Valois was true to his vindictive race, Bellaud lost a place in which the new Governor did not see fit to reinstate him. He then moved to Marseilles, and took up his abode with an uncle, whose habits, as a former Arquin, induced him to receive the poet as a congenial companion. Family business having called Bellaud to Grasse in 1588, he seems to have experienced a touch of real feeling on finding himself amid early scenes; but the verses wherein he records any such purer emotions, the regret—if he felt any—at the life of misrule and vice which was even then prematurely killing him, have been lost. Here he died, and his uncle received the legacy of his verses,

"tout ce qu'il avait à disposer en ce monde . . . qui estoient aucunes de ses œuvres qu'il se trouvait avoir encore derrière luy; tout le reste estant égaré et tombé en mains mortes."

The Obros et Rimos, written in the colloquial Provençal of Bellaud's time, were printed at the printing press newly erected at Marseilles, and published in 1596 through the generous help of Louis d'Aix and de Casaulx. We are greatly indebted to M. Fabre's monograph for much interesting matter connected with the poet and the first edition of his works.

E. L. MARZIALS,

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- AUBRETTIN, J. J. Seventy Sonnets of Camoens. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 7s. 6d.
- CART, T. Goethe en Italie. Neufchâtel: Sandoz. 5 fr.
- CEANUSCH, H. Le Bimétallisme à quinze et demi nécessaire pour le Continent, pour les Etats-Unis, pour l'Angleterre. Paris: Guillaumin. 2 fr.
- ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA. Ed. T. S. Baynes. Vol. XII. A. & C. Black. 30s.
- GEYMUELLER, H. v. Die ursprünglichen Entwürfe f. Sanot Peter in Rom v. Bramante, Raphael Santi, Fra Giocondo, den Sangallo's u. A. Wien: Lehmann. 160 M.
- GERGOA, W. Notes on the Folk-Lore of the North-East of Scotland. Elliot Stock. 13s. 6d.
- MIGNATY, M. A. Le Corridage: sa Vie et son Œuvre. Paris: Fischbacher. 10 fr.
- PIZMAIER, A. Die älteren Reisen nach dem Osten Japans. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 4 M.
- SMIT, J. A. R. Die Transvaal-Republik u. ihre Entstehung. Cöln: Mayer. 2 M.
- THOROUGH the Ranks to a Commission. Macmillan. 6s.
- VAUGHAN, H. H. New Readings and Renderings of Shakespeare's Tragedies. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 25s.

THEOLOGY.

- MIDAASCH, der, zum Buche Esther. Uebersetzen v. A. Wünsche. Eingeleitet u. m. Noten versehen v. J. Fürst. Leipzig: Schulze. 3 M.
- SIMONS, E. Hat der dritte Evangelist den kanonischen Matthäus benutzt? Bonn: Strauss. 2 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BREAZZO, V. Il Regno di Vittorio Emanuele II. Libro terzo. Torino: Loescher. 4 fr.
- BURDINOKA, M. Cicero u. der Patriciat. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 3 M. 20 Pf.
- FOURNEL, H. Les Berbères, Etude sur la Conquête de l'Afrique par les Arabes, d'après les Textes arabes imprimés. T. 2. Paris: Leroux. 30 fr.
- HOBENRE, M. Altherthümer der Herzegovina. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 2 M. 50 Pf.
- LA HUOUAR, Michel de. Mémoires inédits de, p. p. le baron A. de Ruble. T. 3. Paris: Loones. 9 fr.
- LATZ, J. Louée de la Vallière et la Jeunesse de Louis XIV. Paris: Plon. 8 fr.
- NOLL, O. Etude historique sur l'Organisation financière de la France. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
- NORTZACK, E. v. Siegel aus dem Rovaler Rathsarchiv. Regal: Frahm. 28 M.
- SCHANZ, G. Englische Handelspolitik gegen Ende d. Mittelalters, m. Besond. Berücksicht. d. Zeitalters der beiden ersten Tudors, Heinrich VII. u. Heinrich VIII. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 32 M.
- SCHIRMACHER, F. W. Geschichte Castiliens im 12. u. 13. Jahrh. Götting: Perthes. 12 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BRAUN, H. Die Entwicklung d. Wellenpapagei's (Melospitacus undulatus Sh.) m. Berücksicht. der Entwicklg. anderer Vögel. I. Hälfte. Würzburg: Staudinger. 16 M. 80 Pf.
- CHALMERS, J. B. Graphical Determination of Forces in Engineering Structures. Macmillan. 24s.
- ETTINSHAUSEN, C. v. Beiträge zur Erforschung der Phytogenie der Pflanzenarten. III.—VII. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 4 M. 60 Pf.
- HAECKEL, H. Metagenesis u. Hypogenesis v. Aurelia aurita. Ein Beitrag zur Entwickelungsgeschichte u. zur Teratologie der Medusen. Jena: Fischer. 5 M. 40 Pf.
- MICHELIA. Commentarium mycologicum fungos in primis Italicos illustratos. Curantis P. A. Saccardo. N. 7. Patavii. 13s.
- MILNE EDWARDS, A. Etudes sur les Xiphosures et les Crustacés podophtalmiques. Paris: Imp. Nat.
- PAROLA, G. Saggio di Climatologia e di Geografia nosologica dell'Italia. Torino: Bocca. 12 fr.
- PRINGSHEIM, M. Untersuchungen üb. Lichtwirkung u. Chlorophyllfunction in der Pflanze. Leipzig: Engelmann. 12 M.
- SIBSON, Francis. Collected Works of, ed. Wm. M. Ord. Macmillan. 63s.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- FABRICIUS, B. Die Elezen d. Albius Tibullus u. einiger Zeitgenossen erklärt. Berlin: Nicolai. 2 M. 50 Pf.
- FLOUET, V. Oyrus u. Herodot. Nach den neugefundenen Keilschriften. Leipzig: Friedrich. 6 M.
- FRANCK, K. De hymni in Cererem Homericis compositione, dictione, setate. Kiel: v. Maack. 1 M. 20 Pf.
- LOEW, J. Arabische Pflanzennamen. Leipzig: Engelmann. 12 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PHILIP AYRES.

47 Connaught Street, W.: March 28, 1881.

My attention has recently been called to this now forgotten minor poet, whose Lyric Poems, published in 1687, are of interest as including no fewer than forty sonnets written at a time when the form had almost disappeared from our literature. Milton had then been dead thirteen years, and Thomas Edwards, the author of The Canons of Criticism, who was the next leading sonneteer after Milton (he wrote forty-five sonnets), was not born till 1699. "Bluo-Stocking" Stillingfleet followed three years later, and Gray's renowned sonnet On the Death of Richard West was not written till 1742. Warton, who is sometimes honoured as being the reviver of the form, did not begin to write till about 1735.

Of the personal history of Philip Ayres little is known, but the following excerpt from the Preface to his poems may serve to throw some light on his character:—

"If any quarrel at the structure of these poems, many of them being sonnets, canzonas, madrigals, &c., objecting that none of our great men, either Mr. Waller, Mr. Cowley, or Mr. Dryden, whom it was most proper to have followed, have ever stooped to anything of this sort; I shall very readily acknowledge that, being sensible of my own weakness and inability of ever attaining to the performance of one thing equal to the worst piece of theirs, it easily dissuaded me from that attempt, and put me on this, which is not without precedent; for many eminent persons have published several things of this nature, and in this method, both translations and poems of their own—as the famous Mr. Spenser, Sir Philip Sidney, Sir Richard Fanshawe, Mr. Milton, and some few others."

Among the forty sonnets in his volume, many are translations from the Italian, Portuguese, and other poets, but the following may be quoted as a fair example of his work:—

"THE REQUEST.—(TO LOVE.)

"O Love, who in my breast's most noble part,
Didst that fair Image lodge, that Form Divine,
In whom the sum of Heavenly graces shine,
And there engrav'd'st it with thy golden Dart:—
Now, mighty Workman! Help me by thy art,
(Since my dull pen Trembles to strike a line,) That I on paper copy the Design
By thee express'd so lively in my Heart.
Lend me—when I this great attempt do try—
A Feather from thy wings, that whilst to write
My hand's employ'd, my thoughts may soar on High;
Thy Torch, which fires our hearts and burns so bright,
My darker Fancy let its Flame supply,
And thro' my numbers dart celestial Light."

In this sonnet Philip Ayres has followed the Gtuttonian model, in others he has adopted that used by Shakspeare, while a few of his sonnets are written after the manner of those by William Habington. S. WADDINGTON.

"THE SWISS FAMILY ROBINSON."

Farnborough, Banbury: March 29, 1881.

I think the subject is hardly enough considered when it is said that Wyss's Swiss Family Robinson is "the very best of all those Robinsoniads which have been constructed after the model of Defoe's great book." Capt. Marryatt pointed out its defects thirty years ago in his Preface to Masterman Ready. "I promised my children," he says,

"to write a book for them. . . . They said that they wished me to continue a work called The Swiss Family Robinson, which had never been completed. . . . I found difficulties which were to me insurmountable, and which decided me not to continue that work, but to write another in the same style. . . . The fault which I find in it is that it does not adhere to the probable, or even the possible. . . . I pass over the seamanship, or rather the want of it, which occasions impossibilities to be performed on board of the wreck. . . . But what compelled me to abandon the task was that much ignorance or carelessness had been displayed in describing the vegetable and animal productions of the island on which the family had been wrecked. The island is supposed to be far to the southward, near to Van Diemen's Land; yet in these temperate latitudes we have not only plants, but animals, introduced which could only be found in the interior of Africa or the Torrid Zone, mixed up with those really indigenous to the climate. This was an error which I could not persuade myself to follow up. . . . Fiction when written for young people should, at all events, be based upon truth."

To my mind Masterman Ready itself is one of the best "Robinsoniads."

C. F. S. WARREN.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- MONDAY, April 4, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
- 8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "The Visible Universe," by Prof. Balfour Stewart.
- 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lectures: "The Art of Lace-Making," by Mr. Alsn S. Cole.
- TUESDAY, April 5, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Blood," by Prof. Schüfer.
- 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Canada: the Old Colony and the New Dominion," by Mr. E. Hepple Hall.
- 8 p.m. Society of Biblical Archaeology: "The Times of Israel's Servitude and Sojourning in Egypt," by the Rev. E. de Bunsen; "Abydenus and the Book of Daniel," by Prof. Eb. Schrader.
- 8 p.m. Photographic Society.
- 8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "The Actual Lateral Pressure of Earthwork," by Mr. B. Baker.
- 8.30. Zoological: "The Habits of the Manatee," by Prof. W. H. Flower; "Descriptions of the Amphibaenias and Ophidiens collected by Dr. I. B. Balfour in the Island of Socotra," by Dr. A. Günther; "The External Characters and Anatomy of the Californian Sea Lion," by Mr. W. A. Forbes.
- WEDNESDAY, April 6, 7 p.m. Entomological.
- 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Discrimination and Artistic Use of Precious Stones," by Prof. A. H. Church.
- 8 p.m. Geological.
- 8 p.m. British Archaeological: "The Roman Mosaics at Brading," by Mr. T. Morgan; "The Norman Cathedral at Bath discovered during the Repairs in 1869," by Mr. J. T. Irvine.
- THURSDAY, April 7, 4.30 p.m. Royal.
- 8 p.m. Society of Arts.
- 8 p.m. Society of Fine Arts: Conversazione.
- 8 p.m. Linnean: "The Parasites of Elephants," by Prof. T. S. Cobbold; "The Indian Species of Primula," by Dr. Watt; "The Green Colouring of the Hair of Sieths," by Mr. H. O. Sorby; "Individual Variation in the Bronchial Sac of Ascidiens," by Dr. W. A. Herdman.
- 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
- 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Ornament," by Mr. H. H. Statham.
- FRIDAY, April 8, 8 p.m. New Shakspeare Society: "Shakspeare's Old Men," by Miss Constance O'Brien.
- 8 p.m. Quaker.
- 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Conversion of Radiant Heat into Sound," by Prof. Tyndall.
- SATURDAY, April 9, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "American Humorists," by the Rev. H. R. Haweis.
- 3 p.m. Physical: "Thermal Electrolysis," by Dr. J. H. Gladstone and Mr. Tribe.

SCIENCE.

The Faith of Islām. By the Rev. Edward Sell, Fellow of the University of Madras. (Trübner.)

THIS is a work written on the lines of Mr. Hughes' admirable Notes on Mohamadanism, which was reviewed in the ACADEMY of December 4, 1875. Mr. Sell's book, however, does not cover all the ground surveyed in the Notes, since it is strictly limited to the consideration of the religious dogmas and duties of Islām, to the complete exclusion of civil law and other kindred subjects. The narrower field enables Mr. Sell to enlarge considerably on Mr. Hughes' extremely useful, but necessarily concise, statements, and to present his information in the form of a readable book instead of a technical dictionary. If he is not quite so systematic in his arrangement as Mr. Hughes, Mr. Sell is more interesting; and, while he is scarcely less hostile to Islām, he keeps his aversion generally out of sight, and obtrudes the zeal of the Christian propagandist but rarely. Though the compass of his volume excludes the possibility of absolute completeness, there is very little that is important in the modern system of Mohamadan doctrine that he omits. His first chapter sets forth the four foundations of faith—the Korān, Sunneh (or Tradition), Ijma' (or "Consent of the Fathers"), and Kiās (or analogical reasoning). The second chapter deals with the exegesis of the Korân and the Traditions. The third traces the history of dogma among the leading sects. The fourth enumerates and comments on the articles of faith and their handling by the leading sects—God, angels, sacred books and prophets, Resurrection and Day of Judgment, with predestination and free-will, and an interesting but very slight Appendix on Muslim philosophy. In chap. v. the practical duties of Islâm—the profession, prayer (and ablution), fasting, almsgiving, and pilgrimage—are well described. Chap. vi. is an interesting account of the chief Mohammadan feasts, such as the Moharram festival of the Shiya'is, &c.

The importance of a book of this kind is very great. It stands to the Korân as one of Dr. Tristram's orations before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council does to the New Testament. There is no more serious mistake than to regard the Korân as the sole foundation of the Mohammadan religion; if it were so, the rationalising of Islâm would be a comparatively easy matter. The teaching of the Korân is on many points so vague and contradictory that a fixed and absolute body of dogma could scarcely be formed from it, and certainly could not be maintained for any time. Unfortunately, Islâm rests on more pillars than one. The word of Mohammad as recorded in the Korân is not enough; there is also the word and example of Mohammad as recorded in the Sunneh, or Traditions of his contemporaries. Nor, further, are these two sources sufficient. You must not draw your own conclusions from them, but in all doubtful cases must abide by the decision of the elders, or, in default of this, the analogical deductions of the great theologians. The result of all this is that Islâm is not the elastic creed which may be deduced from the Korân, nor even the far more definite creed which Mohammad in his later years endeavoured to formulate, but a collection of hard-and-fast rules whereby the most minute details of what the Muslim shall believe and what he must do are rigidly controlled. Mr. Sell's account of the gradual growth of this system of traditional authority, and the fruitless resistance to its paralysing influence, is deeply interesting, and will help English readers to understand more accurately the real difficulties of Islâm as a State religion. One might do something towards widening the religion of the Korân, but when the plastic clay has become fixed by the action of centuries of theological fire the reform seems hopeless. The faith described by Mr. Sell is that form most prevalent in India, but it is practically the same in Egypt and Turkey. The Faith of Islâm is modern Mohammadanism—about as like the faith of Mohammad himself as the religion of Knox or Laud, of the Church Association or the Church Union, are like the Christianity of the Gospels; but, nevertheless, modern Mohammadanism is what we need most to understand thoroughly at present.

S. LANE-POOLE.

CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE.

United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries. Part VI. Report of the Commissioners for 1878. (Washington: Government Printing Office.) This portly volume is of that order of literature known in England as a "Blue-book," and in America as a "Congressional Document." Both these records of official sapience are heavy reading, compiled without much regard for the requirements of the public at whose expense they are printed, and not unfrequently with a supreme contempt for the English tongue in which they are supposed to be written. But while the "papers presented to Parliament" are shovelled into the Stationery Office badly arranged, and brought forth unindexed, unbound, and in folio or other inconvenient form, the "report ordered to lie on the table" of Congress is well printed, excellently indexed, of a convenient size, strongly bound in cloth, and evidently edited by someone with more than elementary ideas of literary taste. The result is that the American "Blue-books" are preserved, and valued both at home and abroad; while, perhaps not greatly to the loss of the nation and much to the saving of its credit in other countries, most of our Parliamentary publications are destined for a humbler fate. Ill-arranged, unbound, cumbersome in form, and entirely unedited, they are unbought by the people; while the Government, conscious of how little they would add to our credit, takes care neither to send them abroad nor to present them to libraries at home. In bitterness of spirit we feel compelled to pass these criticisms, odious though the comparison may be, after reading the admirable report of Prof. Baird and his colleagues now before us. Ostensibly, it is an account of their operations for one year, in restocking the American rivers and lakes with the fish of which in earlier days they were so recklessly despoiled. But, in reality, it is an admirable series of monographs on fishes and fish tackle, and on American marine invertebrates. The history of the Commissioners' operations in not only stocking the American rivers, but in aiding the fish-farmers of Europe and the Antipodes to introduce Transatlantic species into their waters, is given in ample and interesting detail; while there are excellent papers on the statistics of food fishes, the propagation of various species, and on the sea-fisheries both of Europe and the United States. Several articles on these subjects, and even on deep-sea research, are translated from the German and the Norse, while Messrs. Hargraves and Wilson contribute fully illustrated treatises on the Isopoda and Pycnogonida of New England and adjacent waters. Nor does this exhaust the contents of this valuable "Congressional document." From Bonn, Jena, Edinburgh, Bremen, and Bohuslân come papers on all manner of ichthyological questions; while the carp, cod, salmon, and herring families are accorded an additional three or four hundred pages for the discussion of their public and private relations. Finally, after a few miscellaneous remarks by Dr. Farlow on a new fungus affecting dried cod, the volume of over a thousand pages ends by an exhaustive Index, even though several of the monographs have special indices to themselves. We have no desire to return to an unpleasant matter. But after the patriotic Briton studies this noble volume, distributed broadcast by the liberality of the United States Government, he feels that the English Government, in doling out its proverbially badly got up Blue-books with a niggard hand, only acts with a laudable jealousy for the national reputation.

Water Supply. By G. H. Balfour Browne. (Macmillan.) This small work discusses with much minuteness the question of the water supply of our large cities, the purity of waters, the quantity necessary for each individual, and the most effective methods of drainage. It may be consulted with advantage by managers and promoters of water companies.

Natural History Rambles: Ponds and Ditches. By M. C. Cooke. In Search of Minerals. By D. T. Ansted. (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.) These books quite maintain the character of the preceding works of the series. They are clearly written and well illustrated, and they contain a store of information easily assimilated by young people.

Introduction to the Study of Flowers: being Practical Exercises in Elementary Botany. By Andrew Wilson, Ph.D. (Chambers.) The arrangement of this little book is admirable. It aims mainly at practical botany, and a beginner could not have a better handbook in the field. Minute directions for the dissection of many common typical flowers are given, and the elements of their classification are deduced therefrom. The following is an example of the mode of treatment:—

"Pull one or two flowers of the Iris or 'fleur de lys.'

Observe the sword-shaped leaves of the plant.

Their venation is parallel, like that of the tulip and lily.

The parts of the iris-flower are arranged in threes. We thus find parallel venation again united to a three-symmetry (as in tulip and lily).

Iris is, therefore, a monocotyledon."

The descriptions are accompanied by a few well-drawn sections of flowers.

Primer of the Industrial Geography of France. By G. Phillips Bevan. (Sonnenschein.) A very useful book as a supplement to the ordinary geographies of France. Full details are given of the coal, iron, and other mining industries; of the forest and wood, food and drink, and agricultural statistics; and of the trades in hardware, pottery, glass, and textile fabrics. The annual produce, value, number of men employed, amounts exported, and other details are given in each case; and the book will be useful both to the general reader as a work of reference and for school purposes.

American Journal of Mathematics. Vol. III. No. 2. (Published under the Auspices of the Johns Hopkins University.) This number opens with the concluding portion of Mr. Rowland's paper, "On the General Equations of Electro-Magnetic Action, with Application to a New Theory of Magnetic Attractions, and to the Theory of the Magnetic Rotation of the Plane of Polarisation of Light." Mr. T. Craig follows with "Orthomorphic Projection of an Ellipsoid upon a Sphere," where by orthomorphic projection is meant "projection by similarity of infinitesimal areas." The general theory has been worked out by Gauss, Lambert, and Lagrange. Mr. Craig has taken one of the numerous particular solutions of the problem—one that he thinks likely to be of interest, as, at the present time, there is a run upon the view of the earth being a general ellipsoid. "On the Calculation of the Generating Functions and Tables of Ground-forms for Binary Quantics," by Mr. F. Franklin, is an account (in twenty-seven pages) of methods of calculating the above functions due to Messrs. Cayley and Sylvester, by which the number of fundamental invariants and covariants of any order and degree may be determined. The Cavaliere Fra de Bruno (Turin) contributes "Notes on Modern Algebra"—viz., on the development of functions, on a theorem in determinants, on a property of the Jacobian (proof of Clebsch's theorem "the square of a Jacobian of two given forms is a homogeneous quadratic function of these same forms"), and three other notelets. Mr. Hammond (the only English contributor to this number) writes "On General Differentiation," a subject which he has brought under the notice of the Mathematical Society. "Notes on Relative Motion" is a short article by Mr. J. Loudon, of Toronto, which calls for no particular notice on our part. Dr. Sylvester's contribution is a short one, and consists in part of the correction of slight errors and inaccuracies in previous papers. The title is "On Certain Ternary Cubic-form Equations" under two excursions: C. On the trisection and quartisection of the roots of unity; B. On the law of squares. Two notes close a number up to the usual average of this periodical—viz., "Change of the Independent Variable," by Mr. J. C. Glashan, and "Note on the Intersections of Two Curves," by Mr. F. Franklin. We have seen a copy of this number which has pp. 113-20 twice over, while pp. 169-76 are conspicuously absent. This is a fault we have come across in previous numbers, and one that is apt to make the recipient of the number think hard words, if he does not utter them, against some person or persons unknown.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

WE understand that the large-scale map of Eastern Equatorial Africa, between N. lat. 10° and S. lat. 20° and between 25° and 52° E. long., on which Mr. E. G. Ravenstein has for some time been engaged for the Scientific Purposes Committee of the Royal Geographical Society, is now approaching completion. When published this map will be reduced from the original drawings to a scale of fifteen miles and three-quarters to the inch, and will be comprised in twenty-four sheets, each twenty-two inches square. Mr. Ravenstein is also compiling a bibliography of African travel and geography, which will give the authorities on which the map is based, and form a useful companion to it.

THE letters from the Algerian missionary expedition in East Central Africa furnish some useful particulars respecting the little-known region at the head of Lake Tanganyika in which one of their principal stations has been formed. Père Augier writes that the country of Urundi has its physical features strongly marked, a chain of treeless mountains traversing it from north to south. The population is numerous, but very timid. They appear to be agricultural in their habits—manioc, bananas, beans, &c., being largely cultivated. Although there are some marshes, Urundi is reported to be healthier than Ujiji, an additional recommendation being the entire absence of Arabs. The Wabikari, who live near where the missionaries are settled, have shown themselves well disposed, though they have the reputation of being thieves and enemies to all strangers. They were anxious for the party to settle among them on their arrival, but, the Bikari district lying low, it was thought wiser to occupy the right bank of the Murembue, which appeared a healthier site.

In the April number of Good Words Capt. A. H. Markham, R.N., brings to a conclusion his interesting papers on his yachting cruise in the Isbjörn to Novaya Zemlya and the adjacent seas. In the same number we also find the first part of a paper on Confucius by Dr. Marcus Dods; but Mr. Thomson's excellent account of his East African expedition is discontinued, which is the more disappointing as we hoped to have heard something of Lake Hikwa, which he discovered and named Lake Leopold. This interesting phase in his journey will, we hope, be fully dealt with in his forthcoming work.

MR. E. WHYMPER is to read a paper on the Andes of Ecuador at the Royal Geographical Society's meeting on May 9.

THE most contradictory statements are current with regard to the condition of the colony which the Marquis de Rays has been attempting to form in New Ireland, and to which we have before alluded. The John Hunt, a missionary vessel lately returned to Sydney, reports that the expedition is in a flourishing state, and that great progress was being made in clearing and building. On the other hand, a telegram from Sydney, dated March 24, avers that the scheme has totally collapsed, and that the colonists have reached Noumea in a deplorable condition.

THE Committee of the International Congress of Geography, which is to meet at Venice next September, have announced that the exhibition of objects of geographical interest will be held in the Royal Palace, and the meetings in the Palace of the Doges. The municipal authorities have decided to have commemorative medals struck for presentation to the members, which will bear the effigies of the famous Italian travellers, the brothers Nicolo and Antonio Zeno.

ACCORDING to statistics published in the Ceylon Observer, there are now 35,000 acres in the island planted with chinchona, the total number of plants being nearly one hundred million, valued at two millions sterling. About 10,000 acres are planted with tea, giving an annual yield of 500,000 pounds. The relative importance of coffee in Ceylon is not what it was; but yet it is gratifying to hear that the prospects for the forthcoming crop are very good.

SCIENCE NOTES.

British Ethnology.—Under the title of Our Nationalities, a series of small works on the ethnology of the British Isles is in course of production by Mr. James Bonwick. The third of the series—entitled Who are the Welsh?—has recently been published (David Bogue). In this work Mr. Bonwick gives an excellent sketch of the present state of our knowledge of Welsh ethnology—an obscure subject, upon which false notions are widely current in the Principality itself. While giving due weight to the traditions of the Cymry, Mr. Bonwick brings the results of modern science—such as the discoveries in the domain of prehistoric archaeology—to bear upon the solution of the problem under discussion. He is forced to conclude that the Welsh are a decidedly mixed people, and that the chief elements which enter into their composition belong to the early Silurian or Iberian type and to the later so-called Celtic type. The preceding volumes of the series have been devoted to the questions Who are the Irish? and Who are the Scotch? The next will deal with the interesting problem Who are the English?

IT has been suggested that the approaching centenary of the birth of George Stephenson would be a favourable opportunity for erecting a memorial building at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, to be called the Stephenson College of the University of Durham. Such a building would be of great service in offering accommodation to the Newcastle College of Physical Science, which is at present located in premises connected with the Mining Institute.

AT the meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres on March 10, Dr. Lagneau read a paper upon "The Ancient Races of Spain." These he divided into four—(1) the Atlantes, who originally crossed over from the opposite coast of Africa; (2) the Iberians, who at one time inhabited all the shore of the Mediterranean west of the Rhone; (3) the Ligurians, who took the place of the Iberians along the sea; (4) the Celts, who occupied the north of the peninsula, and coalesced with the Iberians to form the Celt-Iberians.

As we briefly announced last week, Messrs. Trübner have nearly ready for publication a translation of Faber's Mind of Mencius, by the Rev. A. B. Hutchinson, of the Church Missionary Society. The subordinate title of the book is "Political Economy founded upon Moral Philosophy," which may give some idea of its character to those who are not familiar with the name of the great Chinese philosopher. Faber's task, which has been recognised as of the highest value, was to arrange the teachings of Mencius according to a principle of systematic classification. To Faber's comments and explanations Mr. Hutchinson has added some additional notes of his own.

THE Royal Academy of Sciences at Turin have issued a notice that the Bressa Prize, referred to before in the ACADEMY (vol. xi., p. 10), will be awarded after December 31, 1882, to the author or inventor, whatever his nationality, who, during the preceding four years, shall have published the most valuable scientific work or made the most important and useful discovery. The value of the prize thus thrown open to competition is 12,000 Italian lire (£480). Under the epithet "scientific" is comprised not only the physical sciences, but also history, geography, and statistics.

THE electric light will shortly be introduced in Indian railway stations, in accordance with a recommendation of Mr. Louis Schwendler, the superintending electrician to the Government of India. Messrs. Siemens' dynamo-electric machines, with some modifications, and the Serrin lamp will be used; and the light will be tried in the first instance at the Allahabad Railway Station.

LAST week we announced that the municipality of Marseilles had granted a subsidy towards the laboratory of marine zoology proposed to be established on the Gulf of Lyons. We now hear that a dredging excursion in the Australian Seas, organised in connexion with the Sydney Museum, has brought back more than a thousand specimens of marine fauna, some of which are said to be new to science.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

A Treatise on the Use of the Tenses in Hebrew, and some other Syntactical Questions. By S. R. Driver, M.A. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) Mr. Driver's work on the Hebrew Tenses was quickly recognised as among the most satisfactory products of English scholarship. This second edition, besides having been carefully revised, contains two new Appendices on the Principle of Apposition in Hebrew, on the Casus Pendens, on some uses of the infinitive with Lamed, and on instances of variation in the order of words. The third Appendix, on the illustrative use of Arabic, is enriched with some valuable specimen lists, exhibiting the interchange of consonants in the best-known Semitic languages. The fourth contains an interesting grammatical note on Ps. civ. 4. The critical summary of opinions on the origin of the forms of the tenses added in this edition to the Introduction well deserves reading. Mr. Driver has also defined his position more distinctly with regard to emendation of the text.

Darache Hammesiqah, sive Leges de Accentus Hebraicæ Linguae Ascensione. Scripsit Jos. Wijnkoop. (Leyden: Brill.) A treatise, exhibiting great diligence and critical discernment, on the laws which govern the ascension or retraction of the accent from the ultima to the penultima.

WE are glad to receive the seventh instalment of Prof. Fleischer's Beiträge zur arabischen Sprachkunde, reprinted from the Transactions of the Royal Saxon Society of Sciences, 1880. The present part carries the commentary on de Sacy's Grammaire arabe down to p. 127 of vol. ii. (second edition). The criticisms are searching and suggestive, and fully sustain the reputation of the ripest Arabic scholar of Germany.

DR. G. JAHN has issued the fifth part of his edition of Ibn Ya'ish's Commentary on the "Mufassal" of ez-Zamakhshari. This brings the Commentary to p. 96 of Broch's text of the "Mufassal," or about half the entire work.

DR. LANDAUER, of Strassburg, has edited for the first time the text of Sa'adja Gaon, or Sa'id ben Jusu's theological work, the Kitab al-Amānāt wa'l-Itigādāt, which has hitherto been chiefly known through Jehuda b. Saul ibn Tibbon's Hebrew translation. The text is edited from the Bodleian and St. Petersburg MSS., and the matter is of some interest from an Israelitish point of view. The necessity of a creator, his attributes, revelation and divine law, man the end of creation, free-will, punishment and reward, the state of the soul after death, the Messianic era, &c., are the subjects treated in the work; and the value of the expositions is considerably augmented by the frequent Biblical and Talmudic quotations with which they are illustrated and supported.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, March 14.)

PROF. T. McK. HUGHES, F.S.A., President, in the Chair.—Mr. Griffith communicated notes on a series of neoliths collected in Cape Colony and the Diamond Fields by Mr. J. Rickards, now resident in Cambridge.—Mr. W. W. Cordeaux exhibited an Anglo-Saxon fibula mould, which had been found at Lincoln during the latter end of last year, and seems to have been formed from a concretionary nodule found in the Kimmeridge clay.—Mr. Lewis exhibited a unique small bronze coin, which he had bought at Athens last January: it was struck at Nicaea in Bithynia, and bears on the obverse the youthful bust of Marcus Aurelius; on the reverse Homer, bearded and laurel-crowned, seated on a rock, and looking at a scroll which he holds in his left hand.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.—(Tuesday, March 22.)

SIR H. C. RAWLINSON, K.C.B., in the Chair.—Prof. Beal read a paper on "The Chinese Inscriptions lately discovered at Buddha Gaya," and, in connexion with this part of his subject, referred to the travels of fifty-six Buddhist pilgrims from China to India, whose history has been written by I-tsing, a Chinese Priest-writer of the sixth century A.D. The account I-tsing has left shows that the route followed by the priests who went from China to India was by the Southern Sea—i.e., by the Straits of Malacca and the coast of Pegu to Tamralipti (the modern Tamluk, near the mouth of the Hughli), as well as by the northern way of Thibet and Nepal. Sri-bhoja seems to have been a great centre of trade at the time spoken of, and this probably represents the portion of Java bordering on Surabaya. The paper contained many important historical data.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.—(Wednesday, March 23.)

SIR P. COLQUHOUN, Q.C., in the Chair.—Mr. C. F. Keary read the first part of a paper on "The Genuine and the Spurious in the Eddaic Mythology," having special reference to the theories put forth by Prof. Sophus Bugge, of Christiania, respecting the origin of the Eddaic myths. Premising that he did not intend any direct criticism of the professor's views, the writer pointed out those features of the Eddaic mythology which appeared to him of genuine and early Germanic origins, and examined the myths of death and of the other world which are presented to us in the two Eddas. He laid special emphasis on the belief connected with the burning of the dead—a rite he considered more Teutonic than Celtic. Even among the Northern Germanic races, however, this rite was falling into disuse at the beginning of the twelfth century, so that its influence on the construction of the Eddaic myths must be referred to an earlier date than the age of Somund. Mr. Keary then quoted from the Arab traveller, Ibn Hankal, tenth century, an account of the funeral rites of a Gothic people then inhabiting the north of Russia, and compared this with the account of the funeral of Baldr.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—(Thursday, March 24.)

EDWIN FRESHFIELD, Esq., V.-P., in the Chair.—The Secretary read a paper written by Mr. P. Orlando Hutchinson upon the gradual decay of ruins, especially castles and abbeys. After referring to Lydford Castle, which has been unroofed and wastonly destroyed since the Stannary Courts ceased to be held there and the prison was no longer required, and to Okehampton Castle, once the residence of the Courtenays, which is in a still worse condition, Mr. Hutchinson described the gradual injury done to old walls by ivy and by damp. He suggested that ruins might be preserved by picking out the joints of the stones and pointing with fresh mortar, which can be coloured with a mixture of red ochre and soot to take off the look of newness. Similarly, walls may be protected from the evil effect of damp soaking down through them, by covering the tops with coal tar and gravel, which would not be conspicuous enough from below to be unsightly.—A discussion followed the paper, some speakers maintaining that Mr. Hutchinson had exaggerated the danger of simple exposure to the weather, and that the processes he suggested might lead to the removal or renovation of portions of ruined buildings, which would be still worse evils.—Mr. C. S. Perceval exhibited and described various seals and matrices, including those of Ecclesiastical Courts temp. Edward VI.; of the lordship of Chirk temp. Henry VIII.; of the borough of Dunwich; and some Italian specimens, among which were the seals of the University of Bologna and of a doctor in law, representing him in the act of lecturing; and also those of Azzo d' Este, Marquis of Ferrara at the end of the thirteenth century, and of Malatesta de Rimini, who lived about a century after.—Mr. Ferguson exhibited some stone implements from Cumberland and Westmoreland, and maps prepared by him showing the Roman roads and remains in those counties.

FINE ART.

LATEST EXCAVATIONS IN EGYPT.

ANOTHER pyramid has been opened in the great necropolis which extends from Memphis to the Fayoom. It will be remembered that M. Emile Brugsch, at a recent meeting of the Egyptian Institute, gave an interesting account of the last excavations carried out by Mariette-Pasha during the short interval which elapsed between his return to Cairo and his lamented death. Three pyramids had then been opened, one of which was bare, while the others yielded a rich harvest of inscriptions and the sarcophagi of two kings of the ancient empire—namely, Pepi-Raméri (Sixth Dynasty), and his son and successor, Mirenzi (gy. Merenra). Not less fruitful has been the first excavation undertaken by Prof. Maspero. The pyramid last attacked belongs to another group, and proves to be the place of sepulture of a still earlier monarch, Unas (Gr. Onnas), the last king of the Fifth Dynasty, who was hitherto supposed to have been buried under the huge pile known as the Mastabat-el-Faraoun. An entrance having been forced by the workmen on February 28, the pyramid was entered and examined on March 8 by Prof. Maspero and his archaeological staff. It proved to have been already violated by tomb-breakers of the Græco-Roman period; and it was through a breach rudely tunnelled by these early resurrectionists that the party made their way into the narrow passage which leads from behind the first portcullis-stone to the first chamber. At the end of this chamber, which is half full of sand, there opens a passage, some sixty or seventy feet in length, thrice blocked by enormous portcullis-stones, and so narrow that some of the party had no small difficulty in crawling through it. The ancient treasure-seekers had not attempted to remove these portcullis-stones, but had worked a passage round them through the masonry. The last portcullis being passed, the corridor becomes larger, and is lined in part with polished granite, and in part with fine Toorah limestone. The limestone is covered with hieroglyphs, filled in with green, and the ceiling is adorned with stars of the same colour. Then follows a chamber with inscribed walls; then another corridor, leading to a chamber containing niches for funeral statues; and, finally, a passage which ends in the burial-chamber of the king. Three of the walls of this chamber are covered with inscriptions; but the fourth is cased with fine alabaster, richly painted with decorative designs. The sarcophagus is of black basalt, and bears no inscription. The lid lies in one corner of the chamber, and the mummy has been pulled out and broken up. One perfect arm, the fragments of the skull, and the ribs of one side of King Unas, have been already removed to the museum at Boulak; and it is hoped that, when the débris which covers the floor is properly sifted, the rest of this very ancient skeleton may be recovered. The texts on the walls of the sepulchral chamber are almost identical with those upon the walls of the tomb of Pepi-Raméri, and are similar to other texts found on certain little-known tombs at Thebes. It is Prof. Maspero's intention to publish these new texts as soon as possible. In the meanwhile, he has set his excavators to work upon another pyramid, and hopes to find, in the discovery of more of these early funeral texts, full corroboration of the theories which he advanced in his lectures on Egyptian tombs delivered at the College of France. Egyptologists have long been puzzled by the great historical gap which has hitherto existed between the Sixth and Tenth Dynasties. This period has hitherto remained an incomprehensible blank. But M. Maspero has always refused to believe that any such blank really exists. Observing that the pyramid groups are classed, so to say, from north to south, beginning with tombs of the Fourth Dynasty at Gheezeh, going on to tombs of the Fifth Dynasty at Abouseer, and ending with pyramids of the Thirteenth Dynasty at the Fayoom, Prof. Maspero conceives that the pyramids scattered over the ground between Abouseer and the Fayoom are all successive links in the one chain, and that they will be found to belong to the sovereigns of the Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, and Tenth Dynasties. These last discoveries, showing the Sakkarah group to be dedicated to the Kings of the Fifth and Sixth Dynasties, so far corroborate M. Maspero's hypothesis. It is his desire, if the necessary funds are forthcoming, to explore every pyramid from Abou-Roash to the Fayoom, including, of course, the famous pyramid of Mejdoum, where King Seneferoo of the Fourth Dynasty still sleeps undisturbed in that stately sepulchral pile, which to this day has baffled the inquisitiveness of robbers and savants, and to which its occupant gave the proud name of "The Crown."

AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

SOME ENGLISH STUDIOS.

MR. ALFRED HUNT has just finished two remarkable oil pictures, the scenes of both of which are laid in places with which the artist has for some time been known to be familiar. One picture, destined doubtless for the forthcoming Royal Academy, represents a stretch of land-locked water near the Norwegian coast, on the edge of the Arctic circle. Shallow and very calm waters are touched by the light of the midnight sun; peaks are faintly rosy in the distance; and in the foreground the colours and forms of various craft are sharply and strongly defined. This work, which it is needless at the present moment to describe minutely, and of which no description could render the precise effect, will, we imagine, be accounted an advance even on Mr. Hunt's former essays in the record of Northern scenes, and yet more of Northern air and light. Mr. Hunt's second picture deals with subjects at Whitby, an aspect of the town less immediately recognisable than many he has presented heretofore being this time selected. The quaint Yorkshire coast town, faced by the sea, topped by its gray, ruined church, and backed by the stretching moors, has set Mr. Hunt many a difficult problem, in whose intricacy he would seem to find a pleasure; and in the present example the difficulty of treatment is as great as ever it has been. Few landscape painters, and no figure painters in the audacity of their occasional assault upon the ground of the landscape painter, dare to grapple with matters so complex. The present Whitby is (after Mr. Hunt's wont) not so much a study of form as a study of light; but it will not be imagined that the intricacies of form have been neglected because they have not been displayed. In the foreground—a space of harbour with the last of the tide now lying shallow on mud and stones—the many boats that follow the herring fishery in its autumnal descent from the North to the South are now shoulder to shoulder in Whitby port, some from Montrese, some from Kirkcaldy, some from St. Ives, and some from Penzance, the smoke from their little kitchens clouding the lower air, thinned and diffused in the upper strata, where sunset light breaks over the cliff tops. In middle distance, the red roofs of the town—sailors' houses, eighteenth-century chapels, quaint harbour-side inn—rise in happy confusion, the nearer and higher roofs aglow with the sunset, the others quieter of hue. A bright, but windy, sky stretches high over the scene; its light warm-coloured, yet keen and clear.

MR. HALE, many of whose drawings have been much remarked at the rooms of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, has but recently completed a landscape in oils which can hardly fail to strengthen his position among artists in landscape. The scene chronicled is a turn in the road at Combe Dingle, Westbury-on-Trym; the time, approaching sunset on an early November day, still bright and glowing, and, indeed, with the peculiarly soft brightness that is the immediate follower of rain. A village girl makes her quiet way along the road, the high banks at its edge being planted with fir-trees, and the hedge-row elms, now bare of leaves, skirting the drive. At the time of year and in the kind of day selected, the English foliage, generally heavy, is least obtrusive, so that there is space in the foreground, and a sense of air and freedom even in the turn of the valley. The road, slightly wot, catches reflections of the sunset light, and the whole picture is as remarkable for its delicacy and purity of colour as for its refinement of design.

MR. CECIL LAWSON, among his recent works, has completed three Yorkshire subjects—one of them intended for the Royal Academy, and the other two for the Grosvenor Gallery. The Academy picture is called Barden Moors, but strict local accuracy has not been observed in it. It represents, however, with a great deal of force, a tract of uncultivated, upland country such as is met with often on the broad Yorkshire hills, the middle distance brown and strong like a de Koning, the sky seen miles behind the farthest of the visible land as in a Crome at the National Gallery. One may feel, indeed, in seeing Mr. Lawson's picture, that the painter has seen attentively the work of the more poetic of the Dutchmen—for of Ruysdael, as well as of de Koning, there is in certain of his pictures a memory—and that he has learnt something from the Englishman who most successfully formed himself upon Dutch models. The barren land, stretching into the distance, and the clear and airy sky above it, form, so to say, the whole of the subject of Mr. Lawson's Barden Moors, of which the real charm lies in the successful grappling with ungainly Nature and the vivid realisation of atmospheric effect. One of the Grosvenor pictures is The Valley of Desolation—an apparently sensational name given to a certain stretch of upland in the regions about Bolton. The scene, visible often under tranquil effects very unsuggestive of its title, assumes weirdness and significance in hours of storm, and in such hours Mr. Lawson has painted it—the land flat and featureless, writhed over by the limbs of one giant tree. It is darkened and solemnised by congregated clouds, livid blue and angry brown. It may be that the very storm and stress of the landscape as here depicted make the picture one to be seen rather than one to be lived with. But no objection of a similar kind can await Mr. Lawson's third design (called either Bolton Woods or The Strid at Bolton), which depicts the golden green and brown foliage of the Wharfedale at beginning of autumn; the barren hills extending beyond and above it; and below it, seen in occasional breaks, the blue and white flashes of a rapid stream that hurries to the river. For unity of effect, obtained by the resolute suppression of inadmissible detail, this is probably the most noteworthy landscape which the painter has given us, and at the same time it is probably the most poetical, the most endowed with elegance and grace of nature.

MR. J. D. LINTON's admirable picture of The Benediction—that scene in the interior of St. Mark's, in the series of "The Life of a Warrior" which we described a little while ago—is intended, we hear, not for the Grosvenor Gallery, but for the exhibition of the Royal Academy. In its union of high qualities, and its avoidance of occasional defects, it will prove, we believe, the most remarkable oil painting which the artist has produced.

MR. LONG will send to the Royal Academy one very important picture, of which the subject is sufficiently dramatic to afford him that full opportunity for the exhibition of his powers which his recent single figures have not granted. The question Diana or Christ?—which is itself the title of the picture—is asked of a maiden who is bidden to show her rejection of Christianity by a pagan sacrifice. A crowd of on-lookers, some of them derisive and a few sympathetic, emphasise by their presence and expression the critical nature of the moment, and the result which will follow from the girl's faithful answer to the query. Mr. Long's dramatic feeling serves him in good stead in the treatment of a theme in which archaeological accuracy is not all that is to be desired.

MR. HENRY HOLIDAY has very recently completed a large and thoroughly studied statue of the recumbent figure of a woman of noble proportions, with thin draperies falling in broad and flowing folds over the trunk and limbs.

M. VAN HAANEN, whose memorable Venetian interior was perhaps the greatest success among the genre paintings in last year's Academy, has sent to Burlington House this year a smaller genre subject from contemporary Venetian life. It is called Washers, and represents an open house-door and its flight of stone steps seen from a narrow side canal. Beyond the open door all is shadow, but on the near side of it sunlight and colour. On the steps, just over the water, are two girls—buxom young women. The one, tucking up her sleeves for washing, stands erect in the doorway; the other, bending to the surface of the canal, has her red head so low that it touches her blue skirts. A picture simple in theme, happy in treatment, happier in the type which the robust taste of the painter has led him to select.

A ROMAN STUDIO.

MR. EUGENE BENSON, whose pictures in the Grosvenor Gallery and Royal Academy have before now commanded attention, sends to London this spring, from his charming studio in Rome, at least three pictures of undeniable merit. One of these is called Art and Nature—a subject from the Italian Renaissance. "Art" is represented by the young prince of a Roman villa, which is seen in the middle distance nestling in its trees. He is richly dressed, and is seated on the flowery turf fully intent on his violin. Behind him is a thick boschetto of laurel, and in the centre of the composition stands "Nature," in the form of a nude maiden who leisurely leans against a marble fountain. To her left are two peacocks (one of which is white) standing in a very Eden of flowers; while behind them is a stretch of undulating campagna, as it appears in summer time the moment after sunset, and a glimpse of the far-off sea. This picture will be a favourite with those in England whose happy lot it was to winter in the Eternal City, and who can now no longer do so.

"passing fair to see,"

Mr. Benson likewise sends another of his Venetian pictures. It is called Distinguished Company in Titian's Garden. Here, several famous Venetians of his time are brought together; Titian, Cardinal Bembo, Pietro Aretino, Sansovino, and others are seated on an August evening at a supper table, in an open loggia overlooking a broad lagoon, which is lighted by the rays of the sun setting behind the line of Venetian Alps. The accessories are entirely of the Venetian Renaissance period, and few painters but Mr. Benson could have brought into a single picture so many of the charms of the locale. Probably this is the best picture this artist has as yet painted, and it shows in a very marked way his well-known love of Titian, whom he seems to have taken as his master. An old grammarian visiting Venice at this period states that these suppers given by Titian were most charming, and that he met at them most delightful company.

The name of the third picture is Narcissus. The scene is laid in "Titian's country," near Certina. The towering Dolomites in the background on the left are shadowed by storm-clouds, while in the intense blue noonday sky of these high regions white cumulus clouds are rapidly rising from the horizon on the right and gathering round the mountain's peak. In the centre, on a sloping pasture gay with wild Alpine flowers, a flock of sheep is seen huddled together, under the shade of a wide-spreading mountain ash. In the foreground on the right stands "Narcissus," the nude figure of a manly youth, gazing intently into a still pool at his feet, utterly unconscious of aught around, and brooding over his own image reflected in the water. The pasture slope, with a white ewe giving suck to her black lamb, as well as the lustrous figure of "Narcissus," is in full sunlight. A small study of this interesting picture was exhibited in the Grosvenor Gallery two years ago; but the present work is a larger and more developed treatment of the same subject, and Mr. Benson has treated it in full sympathy with the tradition and methods of old Venetian art.

MR. MADOX BROWN'S PANEL AT MANCHESTER.

MR. MADOX BROWN'S third panel in the Manchester Town Hall depicts the expulsion of the Danes from Manchester A.D. 910. The Vikings who so much harassed Europe about that period made many plundering expeditions into the dominion of Northumbria, and the picture just finished represents the flight of the invaders after an unsuccessful expedition of this kind. The Danes usually began their apprenticeship to rapine early in life, and hence they are represented as very young men—many of them beardless boys, with here and there a man of maturer years. For the better safe-keeping of their pillaged treasure, they were accustomed to convert it, where practicable, into gold bracelets, and these are seen worn on the wrists of every Dane—the number and value of them denoting the rank and wealth of the wearer. The front of the picture shows a narrow winding street of a small wood-built city, and down its steep pavement a number of the Danes, after their repulsed assault, are seen rushing in headlong flight. A rich young chieftain, badly wounded, has been snatched up by his comrades from the thick conflict where he fell, and is being borne hurriedly past on a hastily constructed stretcher, while over his prostrate body and the heads of those who bear him are held the shields of his many followers, to ward off missiles thrown from windows overlooking the scene, where the townsfolk not actively engaged in hand-to-hand encounter (women, old men, and young children) bear their part in the general struggle. An effectual part it is, too, for a tile just thrown from the still out-stretched hand of a woman has struck down the Raven standard-bearer, and over and about him three other Danes have fallen confusedly, while beyond the spot where their bodies cumber the pathway a number of their vanquished companions, who have gained the shelter of the rampart gate, pause and regather their strength to fire parting shots from their crossbows, and hurl back threats of future vengeance—before they make for the open country beyond, where the peaceful fields lie green in the early sunshine, and the old Saxon church in the distance breaks the line of the far purple hills. Compared with its predecessors, this fresco is seen to have less contrast of subtle characterisation than the Baptism of Edwin, and to be less distinguished by some one signally happy thought, such as the pervading breeze which animates the entire surface of the Romans; but it is also seen to heave with restless energy from the foot-worn steps of the city gate on the right to the public square on the left, where the soldiers of Edward the Elder are smiting the loiterers in the race for life. The colour of the first panel is mainly the red of the old sandstone on a bleak, sunless day, relieved by a silvery streak of river where the Medway is seen winding between the half-built fort and the remote blue Derbyshire hills. The colour of the second panel is the blue of an interior, and finds central expression in the dress of the young queen and the robe of the officiating priest. The scene just described is painted in the full flood of morning sunlight cast upon the dark sailor costumes of the Danes, and upon the white of the wood-built houses and of the quoins of the sandstone gate. It would not be easy to convey an adequate sense of its brilliancy.

ART SALES.

AN important print sale was held at Christie's on Wednesday in last week, when a large collection of the etchings of Méryon and other prints were disposed of. The Méryons were, as a whole, much more remarkable for quantity than quality. They were not the carefully chosen assemblage of a collector, but had apparently been brought together promiscuously for purposes of trade. A few, however, out of the one hundred and fifty sold were of really fine quality, and it is chiefly of some of these that we append the prices. The ordinary published state of Le Pont Neuf et la Samaritaine fetched £10, the same of the Pont au Change vers 1784 selling for £9 9s. Both are after Nicolle, and among the best of Méryon's smaller work. A fine impression of the always rare subject, Entrée du Couvent des Capucins français à Athènes, in the second state, fetched £12 12s. (Fine Art Society); a not very brilliant impression of the Strège, called in the sale catalogue "second state," but really the first, fell for £11 11s. A good impression of Le Pont Neuf reached £11 10s.; and a very bright impression of Le Pont au Change, in the first state, with the balloon "Speranza," £15 15s. (Horne); an impression of the Abside, described in the sale catalogue as in the second state, but really in the third, with the date erased, fell for £11; while a magnificent impression of the second state of that subject—the state immediately before that in which the date was erased—was properly appreciated by connoisseurs, and reached the sum of £25 4s. (Noseda). There were likewise a few pencil drawings by Méryon; not generally the completed drawing which he made before executing the etching, but charming fragmentary and preparatory studies. One of the best lots—a preparation for the Rue des Chantres—fell to Mr. Thibaudeau; who also purchased a New Zealand drawing, not really that which Méryon made on the spot, but, as his own words inscribed upon it testify, "after my original drawing made at Akaroa." The distinction between Méryon's preparatory studies and the finished work afterwards made from them as the final preparation for the etching is always interesting to the amateur.

Of the highly priced impressions of The Liber Studiorum of Turner sold the same day, we note the "Castle above the Meadows," commonly known as Oakhampton—a very pleasant impression—£10 10s. (Addington); The Little Devil's Bridge, £21 (Waller); The Leader Sea-piece, £14 3s. 6d.; London, from Greenwich, a tolerable impression, £11 (Agnew); The Junction of the Severn and Wye, a beautiful impression, undoubtedly in the second state, £14 14s. (Agnew); Woman at a Tank, sometimes called "Hindoo Ablutions," £12 12s. (Waller); The River Wye, £19 19s. (Whitehead); and The Source of the Arveron, a fine first state, £21 (Colnaghi). A few etchings by Whistler, Waltner, and other artists were also sold.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. HUBERT HERKOMER, A.R.A., has been for some time past engaged in the preparation of a large picture for the proprietors of the Magazine of Art, which he has executed for the special purpose of raising art in the streets to a higher level and bringing its influence to bear on those who have little other opportunity of being benefited by it. The subject is one on which the artist feels very strongly. In a recent lecture he said "the hideousness and vulgarity of pictorial advertisements seem an insult to the understanding of our thinking and educated classes," and the magnificent work he has just completed is designed to promote a better state of things. The picture is now being engraved, and it is hoped the means to be employed in carrying out the artist's object will have the desired effect.

THE Irish National Gallery has just become possessed of a very characteristic example of Franz Hals, A Young Man selling Fish. It came from the Wilson sale in Paris, and was bought for about four hundred pounds. The picture is engraved in the earlier illustrated catalogue of the Wilson collection—the catalogue issued a few years ago.

MR. ANDREW TUER is far advanced, we hear, with a book on Bartolozzi, which will contain not only a series of carefully issued illustrations, but all kinds of particulars with reference to this now fashionable engraver, his works, his pupils, prices, and other matter. Mr. Tuer's own collection of Bartolozzi's, formed to assist him in the writing of his forthcoming volume, will shortly come into the market.

MR. W. THOMPSON WATKIN informs us that a new Tabula Honestae Missionis has been found on the banks of the Meuse at Liège. It is apparently of the early part of the reign of Trajan, but the exact year has not yet been determined. Its chief interest consists in its giving the name of a new Legate, or Governor, of Britain, Titus Avidius Nepos. It is in favour of two alae and six cohorts, all of which were previously known as forming part of the Britannio-Roman army.

THE most important contribution to the twentieth volume (new series) of the Numismatic Chronicle is Mr. B. V. Head's admirable essay on "The Chronological Sequence of the Coins of Ephesus," which has been published in a separate form as a History of the Coinage of Ephesus, and reviewed in the ACADEMY (Sept. 11, 1880). Another valuable paper is Canon Greenwell's notes "On Some Rare Greek Coins" in his own collection, including an unpublished tetradrachm of Eryx with Aphrodite and Eros on the obverse, a fine tetradrachm of Amphipolis, an octadrachm of Abdera, and a very noteworthy Cyzicene stater with a bearded and bald laureate head, which is undoubtedly a portrait, and probably the first portrait of a living man ever set upon a coin. Mr. Thomas contributes a curious and interesting paper on the Indian Swastika, the triquetra, and other sun symbols; and Prof. Percy Gardner attacks a kindred subject in his article on "Ares as a Sun-god," in which he traces solar symbols in the coinage of Macedonia and Thrace. The Thracian Ares Prof. Gardner identifies as a sun-god, and takes the laureate head on the gold coins of Philip II. of Macedon to represent, not Heracles or Apollo, but Ares. Prof. Gardner has also a paper "On Some Coins of Syria and Bactria," in which he discusses a coin of Agathocles, with types of Alexander, and some early Seleucid pieces. Dr. A. Colson, of Noyon, has two articles—on a coin of Tarentum illustrating farriery, and on coins generally ascribed to Livia wife of Augustus. Mr. Arthur Evans has a good paper on a series of Illyrian coins, which, he says,

"shows us the two ends and some of the intervening links of a long chain of foreign influence. The earlier issue of King Genthius displays the shield and helmet of Macedon; the coins of the unknown prince, whom we may justly look upon as the last of his successors, bear upon them the tutelary divinities of Republican Rome."

MR. B. V. Head contributes a curious account of a Himyaritic tetradrachm copied from the coinage of Alexander, and bearing in Himyaritic letters the name of a king, which Mr. Head reads Ab-yatha', but which is unknown in the history of Arabia Felix. In the same paper Mr. Head examines M. Schumberger's views as expressed in Le Trésor de San'd. Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole furnishes a lithographic table of the Mohammedan dynasties during the Khalifate, with the view of assisting Oriental numismatists. There are also a good many papers on English and Scotch coins, and one on the coins of the decline of the Mongols in Persia by Gen. Schindler.

WE have already noticed the researches that Dr. Richter has been making among the various writings of Leonardo da Vinci, and the interesting results he has gained. These writings are so scattered, that it is very difficult to gain a clear and consecutive meaning from them. Often pages are lost; and the subject begun in one place is broken off, and continued perhaps in quite another book in a different collection. Nothing, in fact, can well be more intricate than the manner in which the MSS. are composed. Sometimes they are the mere hasty jottings of an artist's note-book; at others they are the well-considered results of scientific knowledge. It is impossible to say what may come next, or where gold may be hidden. Under these circumstances it is no small boon to the artistic world that M. Ravaissou-Molliou has undertaken the task of translating and editing the whole of the twelve books of MS. in the possession of the French Institute. In the March number of the Gazette des Beaux-Arts M. Ravaissou gives a history of the da Vinci MSS., and describes the difficulty he had in deciphering them. In the first place, instead of reading through a looking-glass, as most translators have done, he thought it better, considering the gigantic task before him, to construct an entire da Vinci alphabet; but, even when he had mastered this, the capricious distribution of syllables, the irregularities of spelling and punctuation, and the utter want of all arrangement threw endless difficulties in his way. In spite of all, however, M. Ravaissou persevered; and, the French Government giving their cordial support, he decided to publish the whole of the twelve books in exact photographic facsimile, as well as a translation. The first publication of this grand undertaking was made at the beginning of this year, and consists of the MS. marked A by Venturi, which is reproduced with a faithfulness extending even to the discoloration of the paper. Other books are soon to follow, so that the world will soon be in possession of all the wisdom stored in these Paris MSS., which are known to contain notes on hydraulics, optics, astronomy, and other sciences far in advance of Leonardo's own time, if they do not actually reveal anything unknown to modern science. If we add to this patriotic French undertaking the work which Dr. Richter is about to bring out in English and German giving a fresh translation of the Trattato, we shall see that it only needs the complete translation of the Ambrosian MSS. at Milan to solve all the mysteries that have hitherto clung to the name of Leonardo da Vinci.

We learn that M. Lefebvre, author of the well-known Traduction comparée des Hymnes au Soleil composant le XV. Chapitre du Rituel funéraire égyptien, has been appointed to the Directorship of the new French School of Egyptology at Cairo. M. Lefebvre has hitherto filled a subordinate place in the French postal service, and well merits the promotion which enables him to devote his talents to science.

SENHOR GERSON DA CUNHA has published at Bombay the first part of a work entitled Contributions to the Study of Indo-Portuguese Numismatics, which carries the subject from the foundation of Goa down to the year 1580.

M. BASCHET announces a photograph—to form a pendant to that of the “Liberateur du Territoire”—from a drawing by M. G. Lefebvre, of the “Punch” given by the commercial travellers to M. Gambetta at Cherbourg.

A SOCIETY has been formed in Paris by some amateur archaeologists for the purpose of re-opening the excavations at Tunis, which yielded such interesting results some years ago when they were undertaken by the Baron de Billing on the part of the French Government. Several curious objects have been discovered, not only the usual amphorae, paterae, &c., found in burial-places, but a number of small skulls in stone of very strange form sealed with little bits of bronze. These are to be opened only in the presence of the members of the society. The latest discovery announced in the Chronique des Arts is that a temple, dedicated to Heracles, has been uncovered, and that in it has been found a beautiful statue of that god in white marble, and seemingly of Greek origin.

WE learn from the Times that M. Léon Cahun, who went out last year to the East charged with a mission from the French Minister of Public Instruction, has just returned. He has been able to explore little-known parts of Northern Mesopotamia, and examine a good number of undescribed ruins. Among the most interesting are those of a manufactory of pottery established at Rakka in 1108 by the Sultan Mahmoud-Abou-al-Hasim, Parthian ruins at Djaber, and a Roman villa absolutely intact at Kessafa, the ancient Sergiopolis, between Palmyra and the Euphrates.

ON May 1 a national exhibition will be opened at Milan under royal patronage, at which all objects will find a place, from fine art to agriculture. The number of paintings promised from all parts of Italy is about 3,000, of works of sculpture 1,000. The exhibition will remain open till the end of November.

M. A. CARBAULT has published (Paris: Thorin) a little volume upon the Athenian Trireme, originally written as a thesis for a doctor's degree at the Sorbonne. In it he maintains the orthodox view, which has recently been questioned, that the rows of oars were placed diagonally one above the other.

AN important international photographic exhibition is being held in the Austrian Museum at Vienna. It seems to be more devoted to the scientific and technical applications of photography than to portraiture or landscape. Some of the most noteworthy works are the biographs and chemographs exhibited by the Royal Military Geographical Institute. These show the important applications to military science of which photography is capable. A large space is also accorded to the so-called momentary photographs, which take objects in rapid movement. None of these, however, are so remarkable as those exhibited lately in England.

THE most interesting article in the Gazette des Beaux-Arts for March is that by M. Ravaissou-Molliou noticed above, but others remain which call for remark. M. O. Rayet, an archaeologist well known by his own researches, expresses his views regarding the much-talked-of statuette of Athene Parthenos recently found at Athens, and described by Mr. C. T. Newton in the ACADEMY of February 12. “The Preservation and Restoration of Historic Monuments” forms the subject of a first article by M. Paul Gont. M. L. Gonse continues his account of the works of Jules Jacquemart, the recent acquisitions of the Louvre in modern sculpture are discussed by M. Courajod, and the collection of M. Roxard de la Salle is reviewed by M. Paul Mantz.

HERR ALFRED RUBERT has communicated to the Deutsches Montagsblatt an account of the recently discovered portrait of Goethe. It is an original chalk-drawing by Gerhard von Kügelgen. Hitherto, three life-size portraits of the poet by this master, all of them in oil, have been known to exist. The first of these, painted in 1808, is in the possession of the Imperial Russian University of Dorpat. The second is the property of Baron Franz von Bernus, of Neuburg, near Heidelberg. The third was purchased in 1822, after the painter's death, by Dr. Rauch, of Dorpat, one of the Czar's physicians in ordinary, and was by him bequeathed to his daughter, Frau von Dehne, of Rückel, in Esthonia. The two latter paintings were copies by Kügelgen's own hand from his original life-size picture of Goethe. Both were painted in 1810. The chalk-drawing which has just come to light has many points of resemblance to the three oil-paintings, but where the copies of 1810 differ from the original of 1808 it resembles the original. Herr Rubert believes that it served as the sketch from which Kügelgen worked while executing the likeness of 1808, and goes so far as to say that in many points it is preferable to all the three oil-paintings. There is no doubt about its genuineness; it bears on its back the inscription, “del. Gerh. v. Kügelgen.” Goethe himself gave it to the Hofrath Rochlitz, of Leipzig, who bequeathed it in his will to the Kirchenrath Meissner, of Dresden, who in turn left it to his daughter, the wife of Pastor Engel, of Greiz, in whose possession it now is. It may be satisfactory to many to learn that the picture and its history have undergone the severe probation of what we may call the final court of appeal on all matters relating to Goethe—the Freie deutsche Hochstift of Frankfurt, which has published the following judicial document:—“Das Goethebild ist äusserst willkommen. Die Kreidezeichnung muss offenbar von Kügelgen mit grossem Fleisse liebevoll ausgeführt sein. Das Vorhandensein einer solchen war bisher völlig unbekannt.” As a photographer in Greiz has been commissioned to copy the chalk-drawing with a view to publication, a lengthened description of it seems unnecessary.

THE death is announced of Mr. John Prescott Knight, R.A., on March 26, at the age of seventy-eight. He first exhibited portraits in about 1827. In 1844 he was elected a member of the Royal Academy, and two years later secretary, an office from which he retired in 1873.

MESSRS. MARCUS WARD AND Co. have sent us a packet of “Easter Cards,” each conveniently fitted into an envelope of the right size. The designs are seasonable, being for the most part bright flowers of the opening spring, with a short text. In our opinion, Christmas cards, in becoming too popular, have sadly lost their appropriateness. No such charge can be brought against these, which seem to us far more graceful presents than Easter eggs. The name of the publishers speaks for the artistic character of the execution.

THE STAGE.

“ROMEO AND JULIET” AT THE COURT THEATRE.

MDME. MODJESKA'S Juliet, which was seen for the first time in London on Saturday, is a creditable and distinguished effort in the face of difficulty, but it is not a success. We have had foreign Juliets before now, and one of them, Mdle. Stella Colas, was extraordinarily triumphant. Her foreign accent was stronger than Mdme. Modjeska's, but she had youth, impulse, the beauty of colour and gesture, that fitted her for Juliet precisely. Mdme. Modjeska is beautiful and graceful, and we have said already her outland accent is not so pronounced as was that of Mdle. Colas. But it is not the exact degree of foreign accent that is the mischief in the English theatre—it is the presence of it at all. Again, the beauty of Mdme. Modjeska does not accord with Juliet's; her grace of gesture is of more mature years than that of the Veronese maiden; and when she says of marriage that, by reason of her tender years, it is “an honour” that she “dreams not of” the inappropriateness of the observation is distinctly visible. These are things which a purely conventional view of the functions of stage comment might lead us to pass over, but they are of the essentials of the matter, and we must be suffered to point them out. The wild joy of Juliet, her girlish rapture and distress, her grace and glow—so Italian, if you will, but, still more, so young—these the accomplished Polish actress is unable to exhibit. Her passion and her coquetry are those of a woman. But even early in the performance—as early as the balcony scene—it becomes evident that the actress has studied the character with her usual intelligence and with her usual closeness, and that her interpretation has been conceived in the spirit of an artist. No unworthy success, no twisting of the text to novel and inappropriate purposes, is attempted; and the art of facial expression and the knowledge of stage business—both of them employed by an actress of refinement and taste—result in a performance which, as we said at the beginning, is in a high degree creditable. We should like to be able to add that it is wholly satisfactory, but the warmer admirers of M^{me}. Modjeska may profitably reflect that even our English-born actresses have hardly given us one ideal Juliet since the days of Miss O'Neil. Miss Neilson much more recently was delightful in the part—she, at least, was splendidly Southern in her beauty and impulse. Since her death there has been no one. Mr. Forbes-Robertson is fairly to be credited with a success in Romeo. He has earnestness, if he has hardly intensity of passion, and his rendering of a character is always one which he has thought out carefully for himself. Mr. Wilson Barrett is one of several actors who have played Mercutio with noticeable excellence. The public, however, is a little too much inclined to forget that the part, though short, is almost necessarily effective. Generally it suffers only from over-boisterousness; and, in Mr. Barrett's hands, this is not so. Again, the public is too apt to expect undue effect from the delivery of the famous address beginning "Oh! then I see Queen Mab hath been with you." A real success is not to be made or tested by the delivery of stated speeches closely observed—such a speech as this one, such a speech as Portia's on the "quality of mercy," such a speech as Jacques' on the Seven Ages. The delivery of such addresses might fairly test a pupil in a class for elocution, but it is but an insignificant part of the business of an actor, and both by the public and the profession far too great a point is generally made of it. The character of Friar Lawrence is played by Mr. John Ryder with equal vigour and discretion. The actor who plays the apothecary—Mr. G. W. Anson—does not make the mistake of making too much of him. Romeo and Juliet at the Court Theatre appears to be equipped for a considerable run. The scenery is sufficient and the dresses bright, and there is some originality—but we cannot say wholly commendable originality—in the arrangement of the scenes. Shakspeare's words are spoken from beginning to end, and the ridiculous conclusion commonly adopted is, at the Court, discarded; and this measure of respect to Shakspeare makes us wish that even a yet larger homage had been paid—by the subordination of the convenience of the stage carpenter to the faithful presentation of all scenes in their rightful sequence. Still, even then, with M^{me}. Modjeska as Juliet, we could not have considered the performance a satisfactory one.

STAGE NOTES.

We hear that the new play in preparation at Sadler's Wells is an adaptation of a successful English novel. It is made by the young dramatist to whom we owe A Clerical Error, the bright little piece long played at the Court Theatre. The new play, in which Miss Bateman (Mrs. Crowe) will have a principal part, is nevertheless not a one-part play. There are good parts for Mr. E. H. Brooke and Mr. Beveridge; and also for Miss Kate Pattison, the young actress who, during Mrs. Kendal's absence from the cast of The Money-Spinner, took that lady's part with uncommon success.

At the Imperial Theatre, of afternoons, Miss Helen Barry, who has hitherto been reckoned more an actress of drama than of comedy, has been playing with some vigour the principal part in Mr. Boucicault's early comedy London Assurance.

THE new piece at the Princess's Theatre will be played for the first time to-night. It is by Mr. Richard Lee, and it is understood that its interest will be of a sensational rather than of a literary kind.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

AN overture by Herr Svendsen was the only novelty at the third Philharmonic Concert (Thursday, March 24). It is a "symphonic introduction" to the triple drama of Sigurd Stenbe, or "Bastard," written by the famous Norwegian poet, Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson. The play deals with no actual or historic Sigurd, but with an imaginary hero of that name. The music is interesting and original, if not altogether satisfactory. The overture was placed at the end of an unusually long programme, and we shall hope to hear it again, under more favourable circumstances. Herr Joachim played in magnificent style Beethoven's violin concerto and a nocturne of his own composition. Spohr's Power of Sound, and Sterndale Bennett's fantasia overture, Paradise and the Peri, were performed with much precision and more than usual delicacy. M^{lle}. Orgein and Mr. Sims Reeves were the vocalists announced; the latter did not appear, Mr. Frank Boyle taking his place. M^{lle}. Orgein sang "L'Amore," from Mozart's dramatic cantata, Il Re pastore, the violin obbligato being played by Herr Joachim.

Cherubini's grand and solemn Requiem in C minor was performed last Friday for the first time by the Sacred Harmonic Society. The scanty applause seemed to betoken that the work was not properly appreciated; it has, however, only to become generally known in order to become greatly admired. The music is too grand and too sublime to be at once understood; it contains no solos, and appeals in no way to the popular taste. It is regarded, and justly, as Cherubini's masterpiece. The performance of the work, though good, was not all that could be desired with respect to pure intonation and shading. The programme included Handel's Coronation anthem, The King shall rejoice, and Mendelssohn's Athalie. The attendance was very large.

It is scarcely possible to imagine a finer rendering than that given last Saturday at the Crystal Palace of Schubert's immortal symphony in C major. It is the last of the nine, and, in fact, the culminating work of the composer's life. It was commenced in March 1828, and he died in the following November. It was discovered in 1838 by Schumann, performed at Leipzig in the following year under the direction of Mendelssohn, and first given in England at the Crystal Palace in 1857. Mr. George Grove and Mr. August Manns deserve the hearty thanks of all lovers of music for the opportunity granted to them of hearing such perfect performances of the whole of Franz Schubert's symphonies. The last two are the greatest, but they are all interesting, and there is not a dull bar in any one of them. The programme of Saturday's concert was extremely long, and, as usual, the novelty—Mr. Mackenzie's Scottish Rhapsody—was placed at the end.

M^{me}. Schumann again delighted a large and critical audience at last Monday's Popular Concert. She played Chopin's beautiful nocturne in B major (op. 62) and his scherzo in B minor (op. 20), and, for an encore, a valse by the same composer. Her interpretation of Chopin is perfect; she makes us forget the player—one thinks only of the dreamy, romantic, and fitful music. Mr. Eugene d'Albert took part in a trio by Mozart and the Hungarian dances by Brahms and Joachim. The concert commenced with a very fine performance of Beethoven's quartet in F minor by Messrs. Joachim, L. Ries, Zerbini, and Piatti. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

WE regret to announce the death of Herr Nicholas Rubinstein, the younger brother of the illustrious pianist and composer, Anton Rubinstein, and himself a pianist of great ability. He appeared at the Musical Union in 1861. He was Director of the Moscow Conservatoire of Music.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW for

APRIL will be published on TUESDAY, APRIL 12TH. ADVERTISEMENTS intended for insertion cannot be received by the Publishers later than TUESDAY NEXT, the 5TH INSTANT.

London: LONDMAN & CO., 39, Paternoster-row, E.C.

NEW WORK BY MR. SHADWORTH H. HODGSON.
In crown 8vo, half-bound, with gilt top, price 8s. 6d.

OUTCAST ESSAYS AND VERSE

TRANSLATIONS, BY SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., LL.B. Editor of "The Philosophy of Reflection," "Time and Space," and "The Theory of Practice."

London: LONDMAN & CO.

USEFUL GUIDES.—One Shilling, post-free.

HOW BOYS can GO to SEA.

HOW to ENTER the CIVIL SERVICE.

THINGS every CLERK ought to KNOW.

London: B. C. SUTHERLAND, 23, Benhill-road, E.C.

OLD BIBLES.—Rare Editions of TYNDAL'S, CHAMBER'S, BISHOP'S, GENEVAN, &c., for DISPOSAL.—Particulars of JOSEPH J. GREEN, Stanstead, Mount Fitchet, Essex.

BIBLE REVISION.

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Welford, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Cranmer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorized, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or Morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman."

London: S. BAGSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.

And sold by all Booksellers.

Now ready, small folio, price 12s. 6d.

A NEW ARTISTIC ALPHABET.

Designed by THEODORE DE BIRT, MUXCV.

From the Athenaeum.

"A capital reproduction from one of the rarest works of its kind, made in facsimile from a copy in the library of the late Sir W. Stirling Maxwell. These letters have a charm of their own, which is due to careful combination of lines, delicacy and extreme spirit of delineation, picturesque grouping of incidental detail, and precise engraving."

From the Jeweller and Metal Worker.

"Messrs. G. Waterston & Sons have produced this rare work in a first-class style. It should be extensively patronised by all interested in artistic ornamentation."

London: GEORGE WATERSTON & SONS, 9, Rose-street; and Edinburgh: 36, Hanover-street.

THE EARL of BEACONSFIELD.—The ENGRAVING by R. JOSEY after Mr. H. WEIGALL'S Portrait is now completed, and can be VIEWED at the FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 148, N.W. BOND STREET.—Artist's Proofs, £1 4s.; Prints, £1 1s.

MAITLAND CLERK BOOKS.—For SALE.

A PERFECT SET in 107 VOLUMES, all printed on the Club Paper, and all in the original Club Binding.—Apply to Mr. MACLEBOSK, Bookseller to the University, Glasgow.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq.

This Library contains 50,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £5 a-year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £5; Life-Membership, £50.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town, Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application.

ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian

TO PROPRIETORS OF NEWSPAPERS

AND PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Illustrator, the Printing Times, Truth, Chief News & Opinion, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION OF PERIODICALS, in all languages, whether illustrated or plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

RARE ETCHINGS, ENGRAVINGS, and

DR. DRAWINGS by the most esteemed OLD MASTERS may be obtained at GEORGE LOVES OLD PRINT SHOP, 81, BENHILL ROW, LONDON. The Engravings, &c., are in fine condition, and have found portions of the most celebrated collections. A Catalogue of a small portion of the Stock will be sent on receipt of two penny postage stamps.

* Established above 60 years.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8, will be acted SHAKESPEARE'S Tragedy of
ROMEO AND JULIET.
Characters by Messrs. Wilson Barrett, John Ryder, Forbes-Robertson,
Clifford Cooper, E. Price, Norman Forbes, E. B. Norman, Brian Parley,
Neville Doone, J. W. Phipps, W. P. Grainger, E. Butler, &c., and G. W.
Anson; Mesdames Helena Modjeska, M. A. Giffard, E. Garnier, J. Clifford,
&c., and R. G. Le Thiere.
Preceded, at 7, by TWO OLD BOYS.
Box-office open from 11 to 5. Doors open at 6.45. Carriages at 11. No fees.
Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

DRURY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

To-night, THE WORLD.
A Grand Sensational Drama, by MERITT, PLATT, and HARRIS, produced by the Times newspaper, in its review of the theatrical year, to be most undoubtedly the greatest success of the year.
Preceded by THE STORES.
Messrs. Augustus Harris, William Hignold, Macklin, Gibson, Boleyn,
Lilly, Graham, Liddle, and Harry Jackson; Mesdames Fanny Josephs, Fanny Brough, Maudie de Vere, M'Namara, and Louisa Payne.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.
At 8.15, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE EPPER CREST.
Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Hignold, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D.
Ward; Misses Lillian Cavalier, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.
At 10.15, THE STEEPCHASE or, TOOLE in the PIGSKIN.
Box-office open from 11 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees or booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.

NOTICE.—The Theatre will RE-OPEN on SATURDAY, APRIL 16, with an entirely new Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled
MARGOT
(first time in this country). Produced under the immediate direction of Mr.
H. B. FARRIE. Supported by a strongly augmented company, and elaborate mis-en-scène.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

To-night, Miss BATEMAN (Mrs. Crowe) as MARY WAINSWORTH.
In TOM TAYLOR'S popular Drama, for TWO WEEKS ONLY.
Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. No fees.
This Theatre will CLOSE during Passion Week.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. DOVLY CARTE.

LAST NIGHT.—At 8.45,
THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE.
A new and original Melodramatic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN.
Preceded, at 8, by IN THE SULK.
By Messrs. FRANK DESPREZ and ALFRED CELLIER.
Messrs. G. Grossmith, Richard Toole, Richard Barrington, Burward
Lely, F. Thornburn, and Geo. Temple; Mesdames Emilie Petrelli, Ellen Shirley, Jessie Bond, H. Braudran, Gwynne, Barlow, and Alice Barnett.
Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier.
At EASTER will be produced a new aesthetic Opera by Messrs. W. S.
GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called
THE COLONEL.
By F. C. BURMAN.
Preceded, at 7.50, by a one-act Comedy, by SYDNEY GRUNTY,
IN HONOUR BOUND.
Messrs. Coghlan, Flockton, W. Herbert, Eric Bayley, Rowland Buckstone, and Edgar Bruce; Mesdames Amy Rosalie, Myra Holms, C. Graham, Leigh Murray, &c.
New scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith.
Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOUGH.

To-night, at 7.45, an entirely new and original romantic spectacular
Drama of sensational interest, entitled BRANDED,
Written by RICHARD LEE.
New and realistic scenery by Charles Brooks. New overture and incidental music by Michael Connelly. New military costumes direct from the Army Contractors, Paris. The horses supplied by Mr. George Sanger.
Preceded, at 7, by the Farce,
THE INTIGUE.
Doors open at 6.30. Box-office open daily.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 7.30, a new and original Drama, by JOE MACHAY, entitled
PEGOY.
To conclude with DON JUAN JUNIOR,
Now in the full tide of its success.
Mesdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Convey, Amy Crawford, Ruth Francis,
Florence Lavender, Sylvia Grey, and E. Ritta; Messrs. Edward Nighton, Frank Cooper, H. Keley, H. Martell, and Seymour Dallas.
New and realistic scenery specially designed and executed by Bruce Smith.
Acting and general Business Manager for Kate Lawler, CECIL BALDWIN.
Stage Manager, E. RIGGON.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

EXTRACT

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."
Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.
"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."
W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.
"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."
CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.
Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1831.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.
The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880.

FRANCIS HAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Mudie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.
AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissner, Corot, De Nieuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Colours the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS OF PAINTINGS AND DRAW-INGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMPTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 28 1/2 in. by 21 in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

COME INTO THESE YELLOW SANDS," after the painting by W.
FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.
The Works, Ealing Dene, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
The original, best, and most liberal.
Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.
Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21,
Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £5 6s. to 50 guineas.

Drawing-room Suites, from £9 9s. to 45 guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21,
Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.

BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY

MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS.
Are free from SMELL.
Are manufactured
Without Phosphorus.
Are perfectly harmless
To the Operatives employed.
Are very DAMP PROOF.

LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS!

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds

The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £230,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS.

Bonus allowed to Insurers after Five Years.

£1,630,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, and West end Office, 8, Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing-cross, or 64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

OF INTEREST TO SINGERS, SPEAKERS, AND ALL WHO SUFFER FROM GUEST COMPLAINS.

RECEIVED MARCH 2, 1881, from

S. PEARSON, Esq., Vicar Choral, Lichfield Cathedral:—"Kindly send me a few more boxes of

DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.

I cannot get on at all without them."

They give instant relief, and taste pleasantly.

Price 1s. 1/2d. and 2s. 9d. per box.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones.
Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.

Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.

Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.

Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.

Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

Fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, uneasy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulder, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s. 9d. and 1s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache,

Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies,
Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

REVISED VERSION.

THE JOINT PROPERTY
OF THE
UNIVERSITIES of OXFORD and CAMBRIDGE.

SIX EDITIONS, in various sizes of type, will be published by the UNIVERSITY PRESSES about the middle of May, in Cloth and various styles of Bindings:—

	Cloth.	Paste Grain.	Morocco.	Morocco Circuit.
Pica, Royal 8vo - - - - -	12s. 6d.	—	25s. 0d.	—
Pica, Demy 8vo - - - - -	8s. 0d.	—	18s. 0d.	—
Longprimer, Crown (two styles of type) - - - - -	4s. 6d.	6s. 0d.	9s. 6d.	12s. 0d.
Brevier, 16mo - - - - -	2s. 6d.	3s. 6d.	6s. 0d.	8s. 6d.
Nonpareil, 32mo - - - - -	1s. 0d.	2s. 0d.	4s. 6d.	6s. 0d.

LONDON:

HENRY FROWDE,
Oxford Warehouse,
7, PATERNOSTER ROW.

C. J. CLAY, M.A.,
Cambridge Warehouse,
17, PATERNOSTER ROW.

The Revised Version of the New Testament.

The following OXFORD EDITIONS will be ready on or about the 17th of MAY next. Prompt supplies may be secured by ordering immediately of the Booksellers.

	Cloth.	Paste Grain.	Morocco.	Morocco Circuit.
Pica, Royal 8vo - - - - -	12s. 6d.	—	25s. 0d.	—
Pica, Demy 8vo - - - - -	8s. 0d.	—	18s. 0d.	—
Longprimer, Crown 8vo - - - - -	4s. 6d.	6s. 0d.	9s. 6d.	12s. 0d.
Brevier, 16mo - - - - -	2s. 6d.	3s. 6d.	6s. 0d.	8s. 6d.
Nonpareil, 32mo - - - - -	1s. 0d.	2s. 0d.	4s. 6d.	6s. 0d.

ALSO IN OTHER BINDINGS.

The Revised Version is the Joint Property of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

The Greek Text of the New Testament, With the Revisers' Readings,

Will be published, in three sizes, simultaneously with the REVISED VERSION.

Demy 8vo.		Foolscap 8vo.		Large Paper Edition.
Cloth - - -	10s. 6d.	Cloth - - -	4s. 6d.	Cloth - - -	15s. 0d.
Morocco - - -	20s. 0d.	Morocco - - -	9s. 0d.	Morocco - - -	33s. 0d.

Full particulars at all Booksellers'.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, 7, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THE LITURGY and RITUAL of the CELTIC CHURCH. With Facsimile of the Stowe Missal. By F. E. WARREN, Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 14s.

THE BOOKS of JOB, PSALMS, PROVERBS, ECCLESIASTES, and the SONG of SOLOMON, according to the Wycliffite Version made by NICHOLAS DE HEERFORD about A.D. 1381, and Revised by JOHN PURVEY about A.D. 1398. Formerly Edited by Rev. JOSIAH FORSHALL, F.R.S., and Sir FREDERICK MADDEN, F.R.S., and now Reprinted. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

THE USE of the TENSES in HEBREW, and some other SYNTACTICAL QUESTIONS. By S. R. DRIVER, M.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE ROMAN POETS of the REPUBLIC. By W. Z. SELLAR, M.A., LL.D.; Professor of Humanity in the University of Edinburgh, and formerly Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 14s.

CICERO DE ORATORE. With Introduction and Notes by A. S. WILKINS, M.A., Professor of Latin, Owens College, Manchester. Book II. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 466.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
MEMOIRS OF PRINCE METTERNICH, by Sir TRAVERS TWISS	253
SAINTSBURY'S DRYDEN, by J. C. COLLINS	254
VOSMAER'S AMAZON, by Mrs. HAIGHTON	255
BUTLER'S AMARANTH AND ASPHODEL, by R. ELLIS	255
HULME'S MARELBOROUGH, by E. F. IM THURN	256
NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE	256
SOME BOOKS OF TRAVEL	258
ORIGINAL VERSE: "AGNOSTICISM," by SAMUEL WADDINGTON	259
NOTES AND NEWS	259
AMERICAN JOTTINGS	260
OBITUARY	260
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	261
LETTER FROM SMYRNA, by the Rev. A. H. SAYCE	261
SELECTED BOOKS	263
CORRESPONDENCE:—
A Forgotten Edition of Imitatus , by the Rev. J. H. Backhouse; "Charger" and "Surger," by the Rev. H. Friend
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	264
FISON AND HEWITT'S GROUP-MARRIAGE AND RELATIONSHIP, by E. B. TYLOR	264
OBITUARY: SIR P. DE MALPAS GREY-EGERTON	266
NOTES OF TRAVEL	266
SCIENCE NOTES	266
BOOKS ON ORIENTAL STUDIES	267
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	268
EXHIBITIONS: THE SOCIETY OF PAINTER-ETCHERS, by COSMO MONKHOUSE; THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS	268
OBITUARY	269
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	269
STAGE NOTES	270

THE COUNCIL OF FIRTH COLLEGE.

SHEFFIELD, intend to appoint a PRINCIPAL who shall also be Professor either in the Literary or in the Mechanical Department of the College.

These Departments will comprehend respectively the following Subjects:—

1. Classics, History, Literature, Political Economy, Moral Science.

2. Mathematics, Mechanics, Engineering, Geology, Physics.

Applicants are requested to state in which of these Departments they would be prepared to act as Professor, and which of the Subjects in that Department they would be prepared to undertake.

The salary of the said Principal will be £500 per annum, with half the Fee of his own Class.

The Council will only make the appointment in event of suitable candidates presenting themselves.

Candidates are requested to give full particulars concerning age, experience, and any Academic distinctions they may have gained, together with any other information likely to affect the decision of the Council. The names of three gentlemen to whom references may be made should be given, but no testimonials need be sent unless they are asked for.

Applications to be sent on or before the 25TH day of APRIL next, to ENSOR DRURY, Registrar.

Firth College, Sheffield, March 24, 1881.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, NOTTINGHAM.

THE TOWN COUNCIL OF NOTTINGHAM have resolved to appoint FOUR PROFESSORS as follows:—

ONE PROFESSOR who shall undertake one or more of the following subjects: Classics, Literature, History, Political Philosophy, Moral Science; and

THREE PROFESSORS who shall each undertake one or more of the following subjects: Mathematics (including Theoretical and Applied Mechanics), Physics, Chemistry, Physiology, Biology, Geology.

The work of the College will be divided into FOUR DEPARTMENTS, whose arrangement will depend to some extent on the subjects undertaken by the Professors elected, but it is intended that the Three Scientific Departments shall severally comprehend:—

1. Mathematics and Mechanics,

2. Chemistry,

3. Natural Science,

and that the subject of Physics shall be placed as a subject of principal importance in one or other of these departments.

Applicants are invited to specify the subjects which they would be prepared to undertake.

Applications for the above appointments to be addressed to the TOWN CLERK, Municipal Offices, Nottingham, endorsed "University College," on or before the 7TH day of MAY NEXT. Particulars of salaries, duties, and conditions will be sent upon application to the Town Clerk.

Candidates are especially requested to abstain from canvassing.

SAM. GEO. JOHNSON, Town Clerk.

Municipal Offices, Nottingham, 22nd March, 1881.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

Professor POSTGATE, M.A., will deliver an INTRODUCTORY COURSE OF TWELVE LECTURES ON "THE SCIENCE OF LANGUAGE," at 3 P.M., on WEDNESDAY and FRIDAY, beginning on MAY 4TH. Fee, 1s.

For particulars apply to the College, Gower-street, W.C.

TALFOURD ELY, M.A., Secretary.

LEICESTER SCHOOL BOARD.

The BOARD are prepared to receive applications for the post of NEEDLEWORK EXAMINER and INSPECTOR OF INFANT SCHOOLS. The Salary will be £160 a year, and the person appointed will be required to devote the whole of her time to the service of the Board.

Only those who are well acquainted with the best methods of teaching Needlework to large numbers of children, and who are thoroughly conversant with the work of Public Elementary Schools, need apply.

Applications, on forms to be obtained from the CLERK, to be received before SATURDAY, the 23RD of APRIL NEXT.

By order of the Board,
Town Hall, Leicester, 4th April, 1881. A. H. BURGESS, Clerk.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 3RD of MAY.
F. W. MADDEN, M.A.S.A., Secretary.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS. — WARBERY

HOUSE, Bishopsdown Park — PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Class, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely-

place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1852, for preparation of Candidates for Competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The Special Classes for I.I. CONSTABULARY Cadetships have carried off 80 per cent. of the Cadetships offered for competition last year: First Place, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Sandhurst; over 320 have passed Army Exams., including 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 6th, 7th, at recent Competitions.—Apply to W. J. CRETWOOD CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.G.S., F.R.G.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT

BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

LECTURE ARRANGEMENTS AFTER EASTER, 1881.

LECTURE HOUR, 3 O'CLOCK P.M.

Professor DEWAR, M.A., F.R.S.—SIX LECTURES ON "THE NON-METALLIC ELEMENTS," on TUESDAYS, APRIL 28 to MAY 31. One Guinea the Course.

Professor TYNDALL, D.C.L., F.R.S.—SIX LECTURES ON "PARA-MAGNETISM AND DIAMAGNETISM," on THURSDAYS, APRIL 25 to JUNE 2. One Guinea.

Professor H. MORLEY.—THREE LECTURES ON "SCOTLAND'S PART IN ENGLISH LITERATURE," on SATURDAYS, APRIL 30, MAY 7, 14.

ONE LECTURE ON "THOMAS CARLYLE," on TUESDAY, JUNE 7. Half-a-Guinea.

E. C. TURNER, Esq., Lecturer at the University of St. Petersburg.—FIVE LECTURES ON "THE GREAT MEDIEVAL WRITERS OF RUSSIA," on TUESDAYS, MAY 21, 28, JUNE 4, THURSDAY, JUNE 9, and SATURDAY, JUNE 11. Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription (to Non-Members) to all the Courses during the Season, Two Guineas. Tickets issued daily.

MEMBERS may purchase not less than Three Single Lecture Tickets, available for any Lecture, for Half-a-Guinea.

The FRIDAY EVENING MEETINGS will be resumed on APRIL 29TH, at 8 P.M. Professor J. S. BLACKIE, F.R.S.E., will give a DISCOURSE ON "THE LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE OF THE SCOTTISH HIGHLANDS," at 9 P.M. Succeeding Discourses will probably be given by the Hon. G. C. BROADBENT, Mr. FRANCIS GALTON, Mr. W. H. POLLOCK, Professor H. E. ROSE, Professor W. G. ADAMS, and Professor DEWAR. To these Meetings Members and their Friends only are admitted.

Persons desirous of becoming Members are requested to apply to the SECRETARY. When proposed, they are immediately admitted to all the Lectures, to the Friday Evening Meetings, and to the Library and Reading Rooms; and their Families are admitted to the Lectures at a reduced charge.

Payment: First Year, Ten Guineas; afterwards, Five Guineas a Year; or a composition of Sixty Guineas.

Persons desirous of becoming Members are requested to apply to the SECRETARY. When proposed, they are immediately admitted to all the Lectures, to the Friday Evening Meetings, and to the Library and Reading Rooms; and their Families are admitted to the Lectures at a reduced charge.

Payment: First Year, Ten Guineas; afterwards, Five Guineas a Year; or a composition of Sixty Guineas.

Persons desirous of becoming Members are requested to apply to the SECRETARY. When proposed, they are immediately admitted to all the Lectures, to the Friday Evening Meetings, and to the Library and Reading Rooms; and their Families are admitted to the Lectures at a reduced charge.

Payment: First Year, Ten Guineas; afterwards, Five Guineas a Year; or a composition of Sixty Guineas.

Persons desirous of becoming Members are requested to apply to the SECRETARY. When proposed, they are immediately admitted to all the Lectures, to the Friday Evening Meetings, and to the Library and Reading Rooms; and their Families are admitted to the Lectures at a reduced charge.

Payment: First Year, Ten Guineas; afterwards, Five Guineas a Year; or a composition of Sixty Guineas.

Persons desirous of becoming Members are requested to apply to the SECRETARY. When proposed, they are immediately admitted to all the Lectures, to the Friday Evening Meetings, and to the Library and Reading Rooms; and their Families are admitted to the Lectures at a reduced charge.

Payment: First Year, Ten Guineas; afterwards, Five Guineas a Year; or a composition of Sixty Guineas.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE, 22, Albemarle-street, London, W.

The NEXT ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at YORK, commencing on WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 31.

President-Elect:

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., F.L.S., F.G.S.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS OF MEMOIRS.—Authors are reminded that, under an arrangement dating from 1871, the acceptance of Memoirs, and the days on which they are to be read, are now, as far as possible, determined by Organising Committees for the several sections before the beginning of the meeting. It has therefore become necessary, in order to give an opportunity to the Committees of doing justice to the several Communications, that each Author should prepare beforehand an Abstract of his Memoir, of a length suitable for insertion in the published Transactions of the Association, and the Council request that he will send it, together with the original Memoir, by book-post, on or before August 1, addressed thus:—

General Secretaries, British Association, 22, Albemarle-street, London, W.

For Section Authors who comply with this request, and whose Papers are accepted, will be furnished before the Meeting with printed copies of their Reports or Abstracts. If it should be inconvenient to the Author that his Paper should be read on any particular day, he is requested to send information thereof to the SECRETARIES in a separate note.

Reports on the Progress of Science, and of Researches entrusted to Individuals or Committees, must be forwarded to the GENERAL SECRETARIES, for presentation to the Organising Committee, accompanied by a statement whether the Author will be present at the Annual Meeting.

No Report, Paper, or Abstract can be inserted in the Report of the Association unless it is given in before the conclusion of the Meeting.

G. GIFFITH, Acting Secretary.

GUY'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL SCHOOL.

—The SUMMER SESSION will COMMENCE on MONDAY, MAY 2ND.

The Hospital contains 800 beds, and includes special departments for the Diseases of the Eye, Ear, Skin, &c. Classes are held in the Hospital for Students preparing for the Examination of the University of London and other Examining Boards.—For prospectus and further information with reference to Classes, Scholarships, &c., apply to the DEAN, Guy's Hospital, S.E.

ST. ANDREW'S HALL, PLYMOUTH.

ART AND INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION, 1881.

£200 in PRIZES.

OPENING MONDAY, MAY 23RD.

SPECIAL PRIZES.

£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best Picture painted by any Artist residing in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, or Dorset, each Competitor being allowed to show three Pictures. 2nd Prize, SILVER MEDAL; 3rd, BRONZE.

£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best Picture exhibited. Open to all England.

£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best exhibit in the Exhibition.

N.B.—Pictures will not be eligible for this competition.

Winners of these Gold Medals will be paid in Money if preferred.

100 Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals will be given in the following Classes:—

Class 1.—Professional Workmanship.

Class 2.—Amateur Productions, made by Exhibitors who follow some other trade than that to which their articles belong.

Class 3.—Inventions and Novel Contrivances. To include both Amateur and Professional Workmanship.

Class 4.—Models, Architectural, Mechanical, Marine, and Ornamental.

Class 5.—Fine-Arts, including Oil and Water-Colour Paintings. Open to all England.

Class 6.—Oil and Water-Colour Paintings and Drawings, open to Students of any recognised School of Art or Private School.

Class 7.—Oil or Water-Colour Paintings, open to residents in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, or Dorset. Each competitor will be allowed to exhibit three pictures.

Class 8.—Carving and Fret Work. Two Classes—Amateur & Professional.

Class 9.—Sculpture.

Class 10.—Preserved Natural Objects.

Class 11.—Ladies' Work of all kinds.

Class 12.—Musical Instruments.

Class 13.—Furniture.

Class 14.—Painters' Gilding of Wood.

Class 15.—Photography.

Class 16.—Bicycles, Tricycles, and Sewing Machines.

Class 17.—China Painting.

Class 18.—Electrical Inventions.

Class 19.—Pen and Ink and Crayons by Amateurs.

Class 20.—Pottery.

Class 21.—Miscellaneous. This will include all objects not properly belonging to any of the other Classes.

Further particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, Mr. THOS. MARTIN, Plymouth.

EXHIBITION OF FINE ARTS, 1881.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.—The days for the RECEPTION of WORKS of ART are 22ND and 23RD APRIL, but, for the convenience of Artists, Works can be received on the 18th April and following days, up to and including the 23rd April, between the hours of 10 and 5.

EXHIBITION OF FINE ARTS, 1881.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.—SPECIAL NOTICE to ARTISTS of these Works submitted during the present year to the ROYAL ACADEMY, and conditionally retained by them, but which cannot be placed at Burlington House for want of space.

Days reserved for the reception of such Works are 30ND and TUESDAY, 25TH and 26TH APRIL, between the hours of 10 and 5.

SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.—

FIFTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION NOW OPEN at the

SUFFOLK STREET GALLERIES, FLEET STREET, from 9 to 6 daily

Admission, 1s.

THOMAS ROBERTS, Secretary

ROYAL-MANCHESTER INSTITUTION.

SIXTY-FIRST EXHIBITION OF MODERN WORKS OF ART.

This EXHIBITION will be OPENED early in the month of SEPTEMBER

NEXT, and will close about Christmas. Works should be delivered out later than AUGUST 6TH.

Persons desirous of exhibiting, with Regulations, &c., may be obtained on application to EDWIN W. MARSHALL, Assistant-Secretary, 33, Barton-arcade, Manchester.

ON EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS and

DRAWINGS by the American Artist, the late WILLIAM MORRIS

HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art,"—Gallery, 14, Grafton-street, Old Bond-street.

DRAWINGS by R. CALDECOTT.—A large selection of Mr. CALDECOTT'S WORKS, including the original

"Stories in Britany," "Punch, Graphic, &c., NOW ON VIEW at THE FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 148, New Bond-street.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall-mall.—The

TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of PICTURES by Artists of the Continental Schools (including Portraits of the Right Hon.

W. E. Gladstone, Prince Bismarck, Count Moltke, Dr. Dollinger, and other works by Franz Leubach) is NOW OPEN. Admission 1s.

MRS. W. DINZEY BURTON receives as

Boards GENTLEMEN from INDIA, the COLONIES, or the PRO-VINCES, Students or otherwise, who desire a Home in Town while preparing for professional or public life. High-class references. Terms on application.

—39, Amphil-square, N.W.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Commission Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's).—Choice

Works ON VIEW by Henry Dawson, Geo. T. S. Cooper, R.A., E. J. Newman, &c. J. Pott, Ernest Sartou, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Stark, Jutsum, &c.

STUDIOS.—Remaining Set.—With Two

Ante-rooms, Lavatory, &c. Well placed in Hayswater, near Two Stations. £50 per annum.—E. & F. SWAIN, 27, High-street, Notting-

hill, W. (7375.)

W. H. SMITH & SON'S

SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,

186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their books. There are 500 Bookstalls available for this purpose. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or 186, Strand, London.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS, OR 186, STRAND—

		6 Months.	12 Months.
		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time	(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 12 0	1 1 0
For Two Volumes	(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 17 6	1 11 6
For Four	"	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Eight	"	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Fifteen	"	3 0 0	5 5 0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

		6 Months.	12 Months.
		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time	(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 12 0	1 1 0
For Two Volumes	(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 17 6	1 11 6
For Three	"	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Four	"	1 8 0	2 10 0
For Six	"	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Twelve	"	3 0 0	5 5 0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &c.

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time	...	5 5 0	9 9 0
For Thirty-six	"	8 0 0	14 2 6
For Forty-eight	"	10 10 0	18 16 0
For Sixty	"	13 0 0	23 9 0
For Seventy-two	"	15 10 0	28 2 0
For Eighty-four	"	18 0 0	32 15 0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

TERMS FOR SPECIAL TRAVELLING SUBSCRIPTIONS, Lists of Books in circulation, or any other information can be obtained at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or at 186, Strand, London.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,

No. 314, will be published on TUESDAY NEXT, the 12TH INSTANT.

CONTENTS.

- I. THE OXFORD MOVEMENT.
- II. EGYPT BOUND AND UNBOUND.
- III. THE SONG OF ROLAND.
- IV. THE PUBLIC LIFE OF MR. HERRIES.
- V. RIVER FLOODS.
- VI. THE PELLAGRA IN ITALY.
- VII. REMINISCENCES OF THOMAS CARLYLE.
- VIII. DARWIN ON THE MOVEMENTS OF PLANTS.
- IX. SCHLIEMANN'S Ilios.
- X. LOCAL DEBTS AND GOVERNMENT LOANS.

London: LONGMANS & Co.; Edinburgh: A. & C. BLACK.

Now ready.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S PUBLICATIONS.

PROCEEDINGS OF the SCIENTIFIC MEETINGS OF the SOCIETY for 1880. Part IV., concluding the Volume, containing the Papers read at the Scientific Meetings in November and December, 1880. With Fifteen Plates, mostly coloured, 12s.; with Plates uncoloured, 3s.

TRANSACTIONS OF the SOCIETY.

Vol. XI., Part III., price 30s., containing—
Mr. F. MOORE.—ON THE GENERA AND SPECIES OF the LETHIDOPTEROUS SUB-FAMILY OPHIDOPTERINAE inhabiting the INDIAN REGION. With Three Coloured Plates.
Mr. W. K. PARKER, F.R.S.—ON THE STRUCTURE OF the SKULL in the CHAMELEONS. With Five Plates.

Vol. XI., Part IV., price 10s., containing—
Mr. W. A. FORBES.—ON the MALE GENERATIVE ORGANS OF the SUMATHIAN RHINOCEROS (Ceratobatis Sumatrensis). With One Plate.
Dr. M. WATSON.—ON the ANATOMY OF the FEMALE ORGANS OF the PROBOSCIDEA. With Two Plates.
These publications may be obtained at the Society's Office, 11, Hanover-square, W.; at Messrs. LONGMAN'S (the Society's Publishers), Paternoster-row, E.C.; or through any Bookseller.

The Folk-Lore Society's Publications for 1878-80.

THE FOLK-LORE RECORD. Vols. I.—III. Issued to Members only. [Ready.]

NOTES ON the FOLK-LORE of the NORTHERN COUNTIES OF ENGLAND and the BORDERS. By WILLIAM HENDESON. A New Edition, with considerable Additions by the Author. 12s. [Ready.]

AUBREY'S REMAINS OF GENTILISME and JUDAISME. With the Additions by Dr. WHITE KENNY. Edited by JAMES BRITTON, F.R.S. 13s. 6d. (Published for the Society by SATCHEL & Co., Tavistock-street, Covent-garden.) [Ready.]

NOTES ON the FOLK-LORE of the NORTH-EAST OF SCOTLAND. By the Rev. WALTER GREGOR. 13s. 6d. (Published for the Society by ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.) [Nearly ready.]

* Prospectus on application to the Hon. Sec., G. L. GOMME, Esq., 2, Park-villas, Lonsdale-road, Barnes.

This day is published.

THE LIFE

OF

COLIN CAMPBELL, LORD CLYDE.

ILLUSTRATED BY EXTRACTS FROM HIS DIARY AND CORRESPONDENCE.

By LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SHADWELL, C.B.

With Portrait, Map, and Plans. In Two Vols., 8vo, 36s.

EDINBURGH AND LONDON:

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

Just published, crown 8vo, price 5s., cloth (postage 5d.).

LATHE-WORK: a Practical Treatise on the Tools, Appliances, and Processes employed in the Art of Turning. By PAUL N. HASLICK. With numerous Illustrations drawn by the Author. London: CROSBY LOCKWOOD & Co., 7, Stationers' Hall-court, E.C.

Just published, crown 8vo, price 5s., cloth (postage 5d.).

PRACTICAL ORGAN BUILDING. By W. E. DICKSON, M.A., Precentor of Ely Cathedral. With numerous Illustrations. London: CROSBY LOCKWOOD & Co., 7, Stationers' Hall-court, E.C.

Just published, crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, price 3s. 6d., cloth (postage 5d.).

THE LADIES' MVTUM in PARVO FLOWER GARDEN and AMATEURS' COMPLETE GUIDE. By SAMUEL WOOD, Author of "Good Gardening," &c. London: CROSBY LOCKWOOD & Co., 7, Stationers' Hall-court, E.C.

On the 14th instant will be published, Vol. I., in 8vo, pp. 329, with Plates and Woodcuts, price 7s. 6d., cloth.

OLD YORKSHIRE: being Historical Notes relating to the People, Customs, and Traditions of the County. Edited by W. SMITH, F.S.A.S., with an Introduction by the Rev. Dr. R. COLLIER, New York.

* A limited number only for sale, 1,100 copies having been subscribed for.

London: LONGMANS & Co.

WE hereby beg to draw the attention of the readers of the ACADEMY to a GERMAN NOVELTY offering a high COMMERCIAL INTEREST—viz., the illustrated Work, "PREUSSEN'S HEER UND KAISER WILHELM" ("The Prussian Army under the Emperor William"), from the Paintings by Schindler. Cheap 4to Edition on Fifty Chromographic Plates from the Art Publishers, von Seitz, at Wandaseck, and arranged according to the magnificent edition dedicated to and approved by H.I. Majesty.

We know by experience how readily such works are received amongst foreign military circles, as well as by all those who have previously served as German soldiers, who, recollecting their military service-time, are interested in the Army of the Fatherland.

Special terms for shipping. Sample gratis. Please apply to HOFBUCHHANDLUNG MEIDINGER, Berlin.

BIBLE REVISION

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Crammer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorised, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman." Observer.

London: S. BAGSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.

And sold by all Booksellers.

"Specially called for by Revisers' New Edition."—Contemporary Review. "Professors Westcott and Hort are practically co-editors."—Church Times. Just published, cloth, 2s. 6d.; leather, 4s.; morocco, 8s.

VARIORUM NEW TESTAMENT.

By CLARKE, GOODWIN, and SANDAY; separate from the VARIORUM TEACHERS' BIBLE, by CHENEY, DRIVER, LEMAY, SAYCE, TRISTRAM, &c. The authority for each selected various reading or rendering is discriminated and authenticated by the names or authorities. The Authorised Version is left intact, the ample Revision Notes being at foot of each page.

Prospectuses through the Booksellers.

London: EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE, Great New-street, Fleet-street, E.C.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for APRIL

contains—The Music of Dvorak—The Great Composers: Berlioz—Mr. Pops the Musician, by F. Huetter—Sacred Music in Italy—Crystal Palace, Monday Popular, Bach Choir, Sacred Harmonic Society, Philharmonic Society, Mr. Charles Hallé's, and M. Lamoureux's Concerts—Music in Manchester—Dr. Stone on "The Combination of Voices with Musical Instruments"—Occasional Notes, Foreign and Contemporary News, Reviews, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for APRIL contains—"Holy Spirit, Come, O Come!" Anthem for Whitsuntide, by GEORGE C. MARTIN. Price, separately, 1d.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER, & CO.

have the honour to announce that they have purchased the ENTIRE STOCK and COPYRIGHTS of the Works hitherto published by MESSRS. NEUMEYER & CO., of Neumeyer Hall, including the whole of the Valuable Compositions of HENRICH HOFMANN, &c., &c.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & Co., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s., post-free.

STUDIES IN PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

The Sun; Transit of Venus; Spectrum Analysis; the Moon; the Stars and Planets; Comets and Meteors; Atmospheric Electricity; Whirlwinds; Glaciers; the Telephone. By W. J. MILLAR, C.E., Secretary to the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland; Author of "Principles of Mechanics," &c.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

RARE ETCHINGS, ENGRAVINGS, and

DRAWINGS by the most esteemed OLD MASTERS may be obtained at GEORGE LOVE'S OLD PRINT SHOP, 81, BUNHILL ROW, LONDON. The Engravings, &c., are in fine condition, and have formed portions of the most celebrated collections. A Catalogue of a small portion of the Stock will be sent on receipt of two penny postage stamps.

* Established above 60 years.

The Solicitors' Journal.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

VOL. XXV.—ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

The following constitute the general contents of the JOURNAL:—

CURRENT TOPICS—LEADING ARTICLES—RECENT DECISIONS—CASES OF THE WEEK—CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS—SOLICITORS' CASES—PENDING LEGISLATION—LEGISLATION OF THE YEAR—REVIEWS—NEW ORDERS—GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE—COURTS—PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION—APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the week, and Special Attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

The FIRST NUMBER of VOLUME XXV. Published November 6th, 1880.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s.; when paid in advance. Single number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

* * * The JOURNAL and REPORTER can be ordered from any date, and a proportionate reduction will be made in the Subscription up to the end of the current volume.

Cheques and Post-Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 52, CAREY STREET, LINCOLN'S INN.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

THE NEW SEASON—NOTICE.

A New Edition of the List of Books recently added to MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, containing every Recent Work of acknowledged merit and general interest, is now ready, and will be forwarded on application.

All the best New Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction continue to be taken in large numbers on the day of publication, and fresh copies are added as the demand increases.

Arrangements have again been made with the Leading Publishers for an ample supply of the Principal Works already announced for the New Season, and of many other Forthcoming Books as they appear.

FIRST-CLASS SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM,

For a Constant Succession of the Newest Books.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY SUBSCRIPTION, TWO GUINEAS PER ANNUM,

For the Free Delivery of Books in every part of London.

THE NAMES OF NEW SUBSCRIBERS ARE ENTERED DAILY.

BOXES AND PARCELS OF THE NEWEST BOOKS

Are forwarded Daily to FAMILIES and BOOK SOCIETIES in every part of the Country, on the lowest possible terms.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD STREET.

CITY OFFICE: 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

SOME STANDARD
AND MISCELLANEOUS WORKS

PUBLISHED BY

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY. From the German of Professor Max DUNCKER. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., of Balliol College, Oxford. The first 4 vols. are now published in demy 8vo, 21s. each.

THE HISTORY of ROME. From the German of Professor THOMAS MOMMSEN. By the Rev. W. P. DICKSON. With an Introduction by Dr. SCHMITZ. The Library Edition, with Index, 4 vols., demy 8vo, 75s.; or the Popular Edition, with Index, 4 vols., crown 8vo, 46s. 6d.

THE HISTORY of GREECE. From the German of Professor ERNST CURTIUS. By A. W. WARD, M.A. 5 vols., demy 8vo, price 18s. each.

THE FIFTEEN DECISIVE BATTLES of the WORLD, from Marathon to Waterloo. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. Twenty-sixth Edition. With Plans. In crown 8vo, 6s. Also a LIBRARY EDITION, in 8vo, with Plans, price 10s. 6d.

THE RISE and PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. Twelfth Edition. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE HEAVENS: an Illustrated Handbook of Popular Astronomy. By AMÉDÉE GUILLÉMIN. Edited by J. NORMAN LOCKYER, F.R.A.S. Revised Edition. Demy 8vo, with over 200 Illustrations, 12s.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL. From the French of Mons. GUIZOT. By A. SCOBLE. With Four Portraits. Price 6s.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of Mons. GUIZOT. By A. SCOBLE. With Two Portraits. Price 6s.

THE INGOLDSBY LEGENDS; or, Mirth and Marvels.

THE ANNOTATED EDITION. A Library Edition, with a History of each Legend and other Notes. The Illustrations by Cruikshank and Leech. 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.

THE ILLUSTRATED EDITION. In crown 4to, with Sixty-three Illustrations by Cruikshank, Leech, and Tenniel, 21s.

THE CARMINE EDITION. In crown 8vo, with Carmine Border, and Seventeen Illustrations by Cruikshank and Leech, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

THE EDINBURGH EDITION. In large type, crown 8vo, with Thirty-two Illustrations by Cruikshank, Leech, Tenniel, and Du Maurier, specially re-engraved for this Edition by George Pearson, 6s.

THE POPULAR EDITION. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE VICTORIA (Pocket) EDITION. Fcap. 8vo, 2s.

FRANK BUCKLAND'S CURIOSITIES of NATURAL HISTORY.

THE PEOPLE'S EDITION. 4 vols., illustrated, 11s., or separately.

FIRST SERIES, containing Rats, Serpents, Fishes, Monkeys, &c. 3s. 6d.

SECOND SERIES, containing Wild Cats, Eagles, Worms, Dogs, &c. 3s. 6d.

THIRD SERIES, containing Lions, Tigers, Foxes, Porpoises, &c. 3s. 6d.

FOURTH SERIES, containing Giants, Mermaids, Salmon, &c. 3s. 6d.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST & BLACKETT'S
NEW WORKS.

PLAYS, PLAYERS, and PLAY-HOUSES, at HOME and ABROAD; with Anecdotes of the Drama and the Stage. By LORD WILLIAM FITZ LENNOX. 2 vols., 21s. "These volumes are full of good stories and anecdotes, told with remarkable spirit, and will be a treasure to old playgoers."—Graphic. "A vast amount of curious information and anecdotes have been gathered together in these pleasant, gossiping volumes, which will be read with great interest."—Sunday Times.

OUR HOLIDAY in the EAST. By Mrs. GEORGE SUMNER. Edited by the Rev. G. H. SUMNER, Hon. Canon of Winchester. 8vo, with Illustrations, 15s. "An attractive volume; very agreeable reading."—John Bull. "A most charming narrative of a tour in the East amongst scenes of the deepest interest to the Christian."—Record.

MY JOURNEY ROUND the WORLD. By Capt. S. H. JONES PARRY, Royal Madras Fusiliers. 2 vols., 21s. "A very pleasant book, well worth reading."—Spectator.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Especial Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the Nobility. Fifteenth Edition. 1 vol., with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges. "A work of great value. It is the most faithful record we possess of the aristocracy of the day."—Post.

THE NEW NOVELS.

HARRY JOSCELYN. By Mrs. OLIPHANT, Author of "Chronicles of Carlingford," &c. 3 vols.

LOVE-KNOTS. By the Author of "URSULA'S LOVE STORY," &c. 3 vols.

BESIDE the RIVER. By Mrs. MACQUEEN, Author of "Patty," &c. 3 vols.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER. By the AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN," 1 vol., 10s. 6d. "This is an interesting book, written in a pleasant manner, and full of shrewd observation and kindly feeling. It is a book that will be read with interest, and that cannot be lightly forgotten."—St. James's Gazette.

MISSING! By Mary Cecil Hay, Author of "Old Myddleton's Money," &c. 3 vols.

HER DESERTS. By Mrs. ALEXANDER FRASER, Author of "Guardian and Lover," 3 vols. "A striking novel, which cannot fail to engross all readers, and will probably be one of the most attractive of its author's works."—Post. "Her Deserts" is a powerful book!—Sunday Times.

IDONEA. By Anne Beale, Author of "Fay Arlington," &c. 3 vols. "A story of no common order, well worth reading."—Sunday Times. "Miss Beale's novel cannot fail to be attractive."—Court Journal.

BERYL FORTESCUE. By Lady DUFFUS HARDY, Author of "Madge," &c. 3 vols. "This story can be read with unusual interest."—St. James's Gazette.

FIXED as FATE. By Mrs. Hous-
TON, Author of "Recommended to Mercy," &c. 3 vols.

STRICTLY TIED UP. By the Right Hon. A. J. B. BRESFORD HOPE, M.P. SECOND EDITION. 3 vols. "A clever story. In 'Strictly Tied Up' we have a novel which may be read with profit as well as pleasure."—Times.

CHEAP EDITIONS.

Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 5s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Sir J. GILBERT MILLAIS, HUNT, LEECH, POYNTEY, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S
STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS of POPULAR MODERN WORKS.
Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature. Sam Slick's American Humour. Barbara's History. By Amelia B. Edwards.
John Halifax, Gentleman. Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Crescent and the Cross. By No Church.
Nathalie. By Miss Kavanaugh. Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
A Woman's Thoughts about Alice Forbes. By George MacDonald.
Women. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
John Halifax. Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Adam Graeme. By Mrs. Oliphant. A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Sam Slick's Wise Saws. Cardinal Wiseman's Popes. Dixon's New America.
A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Leitch Hunt's Old Court Suburb. Ronald, LL.D.
Margaret and her Bridesmaids. The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Sam Slick's Old Judge. Annals of an Eventful Life. By G. W. Buent, D.C.L.
Darius. By Eliot Warburton. David Elginbrod. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Sir B. Burke's Family Romance. A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
The Laird of Norlaw. By Mrs. Oliphant. Hannah. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
The Englishwoman in Italy. Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Freddie's Life of Jeanne d'Albret. The Valley of a Hundred Fires. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Burke's Romance of the Forum. Adele. By Miss Kavanaugh.
St. Olave's. Stories from Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Grandmother's Money. Jeaffreson's Book about Doctors.
Mistress and Maid. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Les Misérables. By Victor Hugo.
St. Olave's. Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO'S
NEW LIST.

NEW WORK on ONE of the LEADING TOPICS of the DAY.

DR. EMIL HOLUB'S SEVEN YEARS in SOUTH AFRICA: Travels, Researches, and Hunting Adventures (1872 to 1879). Translated by ELLEN E. FRETHER, Translator of Schweinfarth's "Heart of Africa," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with 200 Illustrations and Map, cloth extra, 42s.

* The publication of Dr. HOLUB's work has been eagerly looked forward to by the geographical world. It will be found to contain an immense amount of information of the greatest interest to all who appreciate accounts of travel in new lands, and amongst the most part, unknown tribes. The Doctor's experiences and adventures are most varied, and most vividly described. His life was frequently in danger from savages and wild beasts.

TWO OTHER BOOKS on RECENT AFRICAN EXPLORATION to be published during the coming week.

MAJOR SERPA PINTO'S HOW I CROSSED AFRICA: from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean, through Unknown Countries; Discovery of the Great Zambesi Affluents, &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Twenty Full-Page and 118 Half-Page and smaller Illustrations, Thirteen small Maps and One large one, cloth extra, 42s.

* As an indication of the perilous nature of the journey, it is sufficient to mention that of the entire force comprising the expedition, and numbering over one hundred, only a very few survived, the rest having been destroyed by savages, wild beasts, fevers, &c. THE DOER WAR.—Major PINTO has added to his work a chapter describing his experiences amongst the Transvaal Boers.

TO the CENTRAL AFRICAN LAKES and BACK: the Narrative of the Royal Geographical Society's East Central African Expedition, 1878-80. By JOSEPH T. TOMSON, F.R.G.S. 2 vols., crown 8vo, with Portrait and brief Memoir of the late Keith Johnston, and with Portrait of the Author and Map, cloth.

SUNRISE. By William Black.—Special Notice.—Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO., beg to state that, in consequence of the great and general demand for Mr. BLACK'S NEW NOVEL, "SUNRISE," 3 vols., the work has been out of print for a few days. A FOURTH EDITION has been prepared and is now ready. Nearly 3,000 Copies have been sold.

Among the Press Opinions are the following:—"The interest of Mr. Black's last novel depends in a large measure upon the character of the heroine, which is at once conventional and picturesque. From the outset the girl exercises a sort of fascination over the reader."

Not only is the story full of interest, but the characters, from that of Natalie downwards, stand out with welcome distinctness."—Times. "The Daily News says:—"It deals with those secret societies the workings of which have exploded on the public mind so suddenly and so terribly in the murder of the Emperor of Russia. . . . Mr. Black shows his old power on new ground. There is something wonderful in the constant freshness of Mr. Black's style. . . . Natalie Lind is placed in circumstances entirely different from those of any of Mr. Black's former heroines, and has to play a bolder and more difficult part. . . . Even with the recollection of Coquette and Sheila before us, we are inclined to think 'Sunrise' Mr. Black's best novel. There are those who will always believe 'The Daughter of Ith' to be the sweetest of stories, yet even such must recognise the growth of power, the larger grasp, the stronger stroke in this last book. The magic art of description, which is peculiarly his own, has been used in it with more restraint, but equal effect."

"The best of the novelist's writings."—John Bull. "The finest work of fiction since George Eliot gave us the result of her first labours."—Court Journal.

The SECOND PART of
THE STEAM HOUSE, by Jules Verne,
ENTITLED

TIGERS and TRAITORS,
Is now ready, square crown 8vo, cloth extra, fully Illustrated, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

* One of Verne's most original and thrilling romances.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 6s.

MY START in LIFE. By a Young "Middy."

Part 1. WITH the FLYING SQUADRON.
" 2. ON the CHINA STATION.
" 3. LETTERS to "COUSIN EMILY."
" 4. ON the AUSTRALIAN STATION.

Now ready, in Pocket-book style, interleaved for Notes, leather binding, price 6s.

MILITARY MAXIMS & APOPHTHEGMS of COMMANDERS (Ancient and Modern): the Soldier's Diary. Compiled by Captain BARTLE TEELENG.

NEW and CHEAPER EDITIONS of JULES VERNE'S NOVEL.

MICHAEL STROGOFF, the COURIER of the CZAR. By JULES VERNE. With Illustrations. Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

MICHAEL STROGOFF. In 2 Parts, with Illustrations, boards, each 1s.

THROUGH AMERICA; or, Nine Months in the United States. By W. G. MARSHALL, M.A. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with 100 new and original Illustrations, 21s.

"We know no book on America fuller of interest than Mr. Marshall's." "Clever, fresh, and spirited."—Daily Telegraph. "Really uncommonly thorough and readable."—Truth.

ENGLISH PHILOSOPHERS.

The New Volumes in this Series, Edited by IWAN MULLER, M.A., are:—BACON.

By Professor FOWLER, Professor of Logic at Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s. 6d.

HARTLEY and MILL.

By GEORGE SPENCER BOWER. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. * Other volumes are in preparation.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,

SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1881.

No. 466, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Memoirs of Prince Metternich. Edited by his son Prince Richard, and translated by Mrs. Alexander Napier. Vol. III. (R. Bentley & Sons.)

It is impossible to read these Memoirs without coming to the conclusion that, during the period which the third volume embraces, Prince Metternich exercised a moderating influence upon the counsels of the Great European Powers, and that one of his most difficult tasks was to restrain the preponderating authority, which the Emperor Alexander I. of Russia thought himself entitled to exert upon the politics of Western Europe after the Peace of 1815. In this object the Prince was successful; but he was powerless to prevent the untoward development of Russian influence in the East, and the commencement of a system of political complications which constitute what is termed in the present day the Eastern Question. It is in the light which these pages throw upon what may be regarded as the incunabula of that question, in which Count Capo d'Istria played so prominent a part, that their great value to the statesman of the present day and of the future consists. Although other portions of the Memoirs are of much historical interest in enabling us to understand the policy which guided the counsels of the Austrian empire during the presidency which Austria exercised over the Confederated States of Germany, that policy is a thing of the past, the inheritance of which no future statesman would willingly claim, even if he could succeed to it, as the Roman jurists would say, cum beneficio inventarii.

The fault which we should be disposed to find with these Memoirs is that they are of a somewhat fragmentary character. But Prince Richard has informed us that his object has been to present to the world a portrait of his father as drawn by his own hand; and accordingly the history of many important events will be found detailed in letters from the Prince addressed to members of his family or to intimate friends, and sometimes containing his impressions on passing events communicated in full confidence to the chief personages in the State without any idea of future publication. We are thus introduced, as it were, behind the scenes of the Prince's public life, and we make his acquaintance while he is in his study writing at his ease in his robe-de-chambre—unlike the "Grand Monarque" of France, who would not permit even his valet-de-chambre to enter his dressing-room until he had put on his perruque à large fond.

The primary duty which the Prince had to discharge was to pilot safely the vessel of the Austrian State through the troubled waters of the period which separates the ancient Roman empire of the Germans from the German empire of 1871. The Emperor Francis had rejected the suggestion of the Prince Regent of England that he should resume the Imperial Crown of his ancestors. His answer is well known. "I will not be," he said, "a Jacobin Emperor." A compromise was therefore necessary, under which it was indispensable to work up some of the old materials into a new political edifice, constructed somewhat after the pattern of the Confederation of the Rhine, with the presidency of Austria in the place of the protectorate of Bonaparte. The care of keeping this confederation of States from parting asunder was an ungrateful task for the Austrian State-Chancellor. "My life," he says (vol. iii., p. 395),

"has fallen at a hateful time. I have come into the world either too early or too late. Now, I do not feel comfortable; earlier, I should have enjoyed the time; later, I should have helped to build it up again; to-day, I have to give my life to prop up the mouldering edifice. I ought to have been born in 1900, and I should have had the twentieth century before me."

These lines were penned between the Conferences of Carlsbad (1819)—which had been convoked in consequence of the alarm created throughout Germany by the assassination of the Russian Staats-Rath von Kotzebue at Mannheim by the student Sand—and the Ministerial Conferences of Vienna, where the Final Act of the Germanic Confederation was settled in 1820.

We have spoken of the Memoirs as somewhat fragmentary; at the same time they may be compared to a variegated mosaic, in which here and there sparkling gems are introduced alongside of larger pieces of pietra dura. There are two most agreeable interludes of travel, in one of which the Prince describes his impressions of Northern Italy during his journey to Leghorn in 1817 in the suite of the Archduchess Leopoldine, the newly married Princess of Portugal, and in the other his visit to Rome in 1819, when he was accompanied by his eldest daughter, Marie Countess Esterhazy, whom he was destined to lose so soon. He gives an interesting account of his kindly reception by Pope Pius VII., who had suffered so much from Bonaparte, and who reminded him of more than twenty occasions in which the Prince had interceded with the latter on behalf of his captive. But it is not so much the political incidents of the Prince's visit to Rome which will interest the reader as his account of what he saw during the Holy Week, and his remarks upon the antiquities and the art treasures of the Holy City. We have his critiques upon the Forum and the Coliseum, upon the works of Michelangelo and of Raphael, upon the studios of Canova and of Thorwaldsen. In his opinion the effect of the illuminated cross of St. Peter's surpassed all description; while the double illumination of the cupola of the cathedral was equally magnificent, and the girandole at the Castle of S. Angelo was the most beautiful exhibition of fireworks that he had ever seen. This is no slight encomium from one who had seen the famous girandole let off in the Place Louis Quinze at Paris in 1810. Such was Rome in 1819. Such also was Rome when we saw it ourselves in 1834, on the occasion of the visit of the King of Naples. Future ages may be glad to have the high testimony of Prince Metternich to the ancient glory of the Roman Easter.

The pleasure which the Prince had derived from his visit to Rome and to Naples, where he witnessed a magnificent eruption of Vesuvius, was destined to be soon alloyed with bitter domestic sorrow. Within two months he lost two daughters, the young and charming Princess Clementine, whose portrait by Sir Thomas Lawrence warrants her father's eulogium on her beauty, and his eldest daughter, the Princess Marie, wife of Count Esterhazy, who was almost an alter ego of her father. "The burden which Providence lays upon me," he says (vol. iii., p. 387),

"is very heavy, and would crush many men. As I loved this daughter, she on her side loved me more than as a father. For many years she has been my best friend. I had no need to confide my thoughts to her; she divined them. She knew me better than I knew myself. She had never a thought which did not become mine; never spoke a word which, in her place, I would not have said. I was constantly impelled to thank her that she was what she was. I have sustained an irreparable loss. The only blessing is that I feel myself but slightly bound to earth." "In such a mood of mind," he goes on to say, "the world weighs on my shoulders with all the important matters it has of late heaped up" (July 25, 1820). "Even on the day of my daughter's death I had to sit six hours and a-half at a Ministerial Council and eight at my writing-table."

The côté faible of Prince Metternich's policy in the view of many Englishmen was Italy, and they have been disposed to resent the suppression of the military insurrection at Naples by Austrian troops in 1820. But two things must be borne in mind in respect of Italy. Prince Metternich was not the advocate of the replacement of the Bourbons on the throne of Naples. That was Prince Talleyrand's handiwork; and the result was brought about by the unexpected return of Bonaparte from Elba, and the consequent defection from the cause of the Allies of Murat, who had been left, by the Peace of Paris in 1814, in possession of the Neapolitan throne. Prince Metternich, even after Murat's defection, offered him an asylum within the Austrian dominions; and, if the execution of Murat at Pizzo and of Ney in Paris were political blunders, they were Bourbon blunders, with which the Prince was in no way concerned. But it must not be overlooked that there was good reason for Austria to suspect, in 1820, that Russian hands were fanning the flame of insurrection in Italy; for Italy, since 1815, had been flooded with Russians, who spread an idea, however false it might be, that every liberal movement would find a protector in their Emperor. Austria had also reason to dread a dynastic alliance between Russia, France, and Italy against herself and Prussia (Gentz's Memoir, vol. iii., p. 192). And although, under certain circumstances, she might count on the alliance of England, the English Ministry, after the downfall of Bonaparte, was disposed to shake itself free from all Continental alliances, and this notwithstanding it had been at the urgent instance of the Prince Regent that the Emperor of Austria had consented to burden himself again with the Crown of Lombardy, as being the only Power competent to protect the plains of Northern Italy against the encroachments of France. Italy was, as it proved to be, a damnosa hereditas to the Austrian Emperor; and one of Prince Metternich's earliest State papers is a memorandum upon the internal condition of Italy and suggestions for a national government of the Lombardo-Venetian provinces. What happened, in fact, was a general maladministration of Italian affairs, arising partly from the rupture of all administrative traditions consequent on the conquest of Italy by Bonaparte, partly from the inexperience and the incompetence of the ministers, whom the various reigning princes invited from time to time to co-operate with them in the business of administration. We are disposed to think that it was a mistaken policy on the part of Austria to countenance the abolition by the Neapolitan Government of Lord W. Bentinck's Constitution in Sicily, although England was a consenting party. We speak from personal experience of the sentiment of the Sicilian people so late as 1834, when they still clung tenaciously to the memory of "il tempo degli Inglesi" as a period of great prosperity and of great contentment. The financial difficulty—the sting which Bonaparte left behind him rankling in the wounds of the States which overthrew him—seems to have been the chief excuse for this retrograde step.

The Congress of Verona forms the diplomatic conclusion of the third volume; and the last State paper deserves attentive perusal, as it is a memorandum addressed by Prince Metternich to the Emperor Alexander I., in which he discusses the revolutionary efforts of secret societies, and the distinction between the agencies which brought about the military revolt at Naples (1820) and the civil revolution in Piedmont (1821). The former he attributed to pure Carbonarism, owing its origin to national sources; the latter to a combination between the French dissidents and the Piedmontese revolutionists, who had compromised their hatred against Bonaparte. The limits of our space bid us pause here, but our notice of these Memoirs may perhaps be continued on a future occasion.

TRAVERS TWISS.

"ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS."

Dryden. By George Saintsbury. (Macmillan.)

THE scope and character of this little work are sufficiently indicated by the title-page. It was no part of Mr. Saintsbury's task to provide us with the fruits of original research, to solve problems, to furnish us with new views. What he has undertaken to do is to put into a popular shape what others have presented less attractively—in other words, to compile from the biographies of Johnson, Malone, Scott, and Christie a clear and accurate narrative of Dryden's career, to give us a critical account of his principal writings, a dissertation on his genius and style, and a general estimate of his services to literature. All this Mr. Saintsbury has done, and done on the whole skilfully, honestly, and pleasantly. His work is not likely to supersede the vigorous, and in many respects admirable, biography by Scott; it is still less likely to supersede the masterly critique by Johnson; but, with these exceptions, it is, beyond question, the best account of Dryden which has yet appeared.

Where Mr. Saintsbury principally fails in the biographical portion of his work is where he is dealing with that period in which Dryden comes into contact with political history. Now, in discussing such works as Absalom and Achitophel, The Medal, the Religio Laici, and The Hind and Panther, historical commentary is of the very essence of his task. Without constant reference to contemporary history these works become almost unintelligible. Indeed, between 1681 and 1688 the whole key to Dryden's conduct and work is to be sought in the events which were passing round him. It is impossible to contemplate them apart. But on contemporary history Mr. Saintsbury is altogether silent. He has consequently failed to comprehend the significance of some of Dryden's most characteristic contributions to the literature of his age. He tells us, for example (p. 101), that the Religio Laici was not composed to serve any political purpose; his account of the circumstances under which Absalom and Achitophel appeared is meagre in the extreme; and in The Hind and Panther he sees nothing but a sort of combination of Absalom and Achitophel and of the Religio Laici (p. 96). To the controversy with Stillingfleet he does not even allude. We are still more disappointed with his account of Dryden's private life and character. We know comparatively little of both, it is true, but that little Mr. Saintsbury ought surely to have given us. We look in vain for the beautiful anecdote told by Dean Lockier, for the many stories of the poet's generosity and exceeding kindness to all with whom he was brought into friendly contact, for any allusions to his love for his children, to his noble conduct with regard to Collier, to the touching account of his last moments. We are sorry to have to notice these omissions, for, as lovers of Dryden, we are grateful to Mr. Saintsbury for so ably vindicating his hero both from the aspersions cast on his private character by Mr. Christie, and on his change of faith by Macaulay. It is, however, a pity that Mr. Saintsbury has weakened this vindication by an assertion, which, if not positively inaccurate, is, as he must well know, a quibble. Dryden, he says (p. 104), "gained, as can be proved, not one penny by his conversion." We are, for facts and Macaulay, against Mr. Robert Bell and sophistry. A case can undoubtedly be made out for Dryden, but it must be argued quite apart from the question of pecuniary gain.

Of the critical portion of Mr. Saintsbury's study the most valuable parts are the discussion on the dramas, which will be read with great pleasure by all who are interested in Dryden; the discussion on the Chaucerian imitations, and the interesting remarks on Dryden's versification. The examination also of the earlier works is full of instruction, and the discovery of great poetic promise in the poems prior to the Heroic Stanzas is singularly novel and interesting. It savours of paradox; it may possibly savour of truth. Modern English literature can boast few sounder critics than Mr. Saintsbury, and if he can discern merit where others discern only failure the probability is that he is right and that they are wrong. Where Mr. Saintsbury's criticism appears to least advantage is where he is discussing the translations and the prose works. A comparison between Dryden and Juvenal was not only invited but indispensable, but this Mr. Saintsbury has altogether avoided. When he tells us that Dryden's is the standard translation of Juvenal, he must surely have forgotten Gifford's—beyond question the finest version of a Roman classic in our language. Nor is he more successful in his remarks on the translations of Persius and Virgil; and when he informs us that Dryden's versions of Horace are by "no means excessively Horatian" he creates the impression that he is treading on unfamiliar ground. Mr. Saintsbury must surely be aware that in genius, temper, and style no two poets could be more radically and essentially different. On Dryden's theory and method of translation, on the influence which these translations exercised on our literature between the end of the eighteenth century and the first quarter of the nineteenth, he says nothing. With the prose works he has dealt at some length, but he has not sufficiently discriminated the various styles, nor has he marked with sufficient precision either the exact position of Dryden in the history of our prose literature or the several stages in the development of his prose style. If Mr. Saintsbury will consider attentively the Preface to the Annus Mirabilis, the Dedications and the Preface to the Fables, he will see what we mean. If, too, he will turn to Denham's Preface to his translation of the Second Aeneid and to Cowley's Preface to his Miscellanies, he will, we think, modify what he says on p. 21. It is almost incredible that Mr. Saintsbury should have passed by, without even an allusion, the piece which is, regarded as a composition, the finest of Dryden's prose writings; we mean the Dedication to The State of Innocence.

In treating of Dryden's poetry it is remarkable that Mr. Saintsbury should have omitted to point out the poet's two distinguishing characteristics. In brilliant and sonorous declamation, at once copious and pointed, at once majestic and easy, at once massive and flexible, he stands alone. There is nothing in Lucretius, the only poet who could for one instant be compared with him, which will not pale before the rhetorical splendour of such passages as the lines in Absalom and Achitophel commencing "Auspicious Prince;" as the lines in The Hind and Panther, part i., commencing "But, gracious God;" as the lines in part iii. of the same poem commencing "Be vengeance wholly left." They are rhetoric without a flaw. Again, in Dryden's hands satire became once more what for nearly eighteen centuries it had ceased to be. He was at once the pupil and the rival of the Roman satirists. Nor has Mr. Saintsbury pointed out the great change which passed over his versification between 1688 and 1700. We think, too, that he might have paused for a moment over that beautiful poem, the Epistle to Sir Godfrey Kneller; and that, in curtly dismissing Eleonora, he should at least have taken the trouble to direct attention to the four most exquisite verses Dryden ever wrote:—

“As precious gums are not for lasting fire;
They but perfume the Temple, and expire;
So she was soon exhal'd, and vanished hence,
A short, sweet odour of a vast expense.”

We recommend the verses—and all who have properly studied Dryden would be at no loss to recal other passages only less beautiful—to the consideration of those critics who would deny Dryden's title to be called a “poet.” Mr. Saintsbury has done ample justice to his author's lyrics. We wish he had been at the same pains to do justice to the true poetic sensibility of which we find so many traces in Dryden's narrative and occasional works.

In conclusion, we must pay a just tribute to the minuteness and accuracy of Mr. Saintsbury's information; but we hope he will forgive us if we protest against the language in which he has clothed his excellent matter. He has assuredly not sought his model in the works of the great man with whose prose he must necessarily be familiar. Indeed, his style too often unites the vices of the worst school of this bad age. Such phrases as “a literary tit for tat,” “the Whigs were so desperately hard up for literary talent,” “the spirit of literalism,” “literary personality” (whatever they may mean), “a pot-boiling adaptation of Troilus and Cressida,” “This, too, was something of a pot-boiler,” “this poem possesses a very fair capacity for holding water,” and the like meet us at every turn. When Mr. Saintsbury wishes to tell us that the arguments against the sincerity of Dryden's apostasy will tell equally against Cardinal Newman, he puts it thus:—“But what is sauce for the nineteenth-century goose is surely sauce for the seventeenth-century gander.” This may pass for true Attic pleasantries with some of Mr. Saintsbury's readers. In our opinion it savours of something very like vulgarity.

J. C. COLLINS.

Amazone. By C. Vosmaer. (The Hague: Nyhoff.)

M. VOSMAER, the well-known Dutch littérateur and author of Rembrandt, sa Vie et ses Œuvres, has just issued a new book of high excellence. It is greatly to be regretted that he has not again availed himself of the French language to give expression to his admirable thoughts, since the number of persons able to read Dutch is so small that the work will hardly be known beyond the limits of Holland. And yet it deserves a larger public, for Amazone is a very remarkable book. It is cast in the form of a novel or novelette, but it is certainly not for the sake of the plot that these 364 pages will be read. The story is merely a thread on which to hang reflections upon literature and art—reflections full of exquisite observation, deep thought, and subtle insight.

The impulse to write this book was given by a journey to Italy; it is, in truth, the record of all the author saw, experienced, and thought under a fictitious guise. The hero, Siward Aisma, goes abroad to seek balm for the wounds of his heart. When the reader first meets with him his aim has succeeded so far that he is able to ridicule himself, and to perceive that a man heart-sick is to other people either annoying or absurd. At Paestum he falls in with some fellow-travellers, two ladies and two gentlemen, with whom he soon finds that he has tastes in common. All are Dutch, except an Italian composer, and are depicted as really interesting persons, of pronounced and very different characters. They see all the sights of Paestum together, and discuss the subjects of architecture and art. A fine description of the temples is given, beside many charming reflections. Thus M. Vosmaer contends that only when we recognise that architecture is nothing but mathematics converted into poetry will the feeling for architecture be awakened in us. Then we learn to feel the full pleasure given by a line, by its elongation or contraction; then we enjoy the result as a music of lines, a symphony of stones, for the melody and harmony of the lines produce the same effect as those of sounds in music.

The party become firm friends, and we find them afterwards in Naples and Capri. In the course of their conversation we learn to know them better, and discover that, though they are very different, they have the love of art and a higher education in common. The principal female figures are those of Ada Ebers and Marciana van Buren—Ada the victim of a mismanaged education, conducted by two devout old aunts, Marciana the victim of an ill-assorted marriage. Their speculations upon life are of course coloured by their individual experiences, and are sharp, sarcastic, ironical, and lofty according to the various speakers.

The fifth chapter contains a description of the contrast between the North and South of Italy as expressed in nature as well as in art, and these observations become the starting-point of an antithesis between Roman and Greek art. This is followed by reflections upon Pompeian and Japanese art—the author according high praise to the latter—and by observations upon the fact that in former days the artist and artisan were the same person. Roman art is discussed a little farther on, and Vosmaer advances the statement that Rome itself disappoints the artist at first sight. Dutch literature is also a theme for conversation and reflection. We wander with the friends through the Capitol and Vatican galleries, where they much enjoy comparing the different expressions of the Wounded Amazon statues. Of course these walks through Rome afford endless opportunities for observations on art—observations that are as instructive as they are entertaining. A few pages are devoted to a discussion of Ouida's Ariadne, which is treated as an artistic work, the idea of which Aisma asserts is derived from Hawthorne's Faun in Transformation. The question “Why do artists paint?” is discussed, and afterwards an admirable explanation is given of how drawing should be taught. One of the friends contends that we ought to learn drawing as we learn to read. Reading and writing are taught that we may know how to express ourselves and to understand what other people write, but not in order that we may ourselves become authors. It is the same with drawing; it need not be taught to make us artists, but in order that we may learn to understand the language and grammar of art. The story ends with the betrothal of the hero and Marciana; but the novelistic part, as we have said, has the least of all to do with the book. It is a work full of deep, suggestive thought. M. Vosmaer, in writing it, has but added another testimony to his artistic greatness and depth.

ELISE A. HAIGHTON.

Amaranth and Asphodel: Songs from the Greek Anthology. By Alfred J. Butler, Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

THIS little volume is so good as to make it a real task to select specimens. It is as sweet as it is short; far too short, we think, to remunerate its author. It would probably have commanded a wider sale if it had been four or five times as long.

Mr. Butler is right in claiming for the Greek Anthology the special interest of scholars. There is, as he well says (Preface, p. ix.), no book in which the motives and conditions of Hellenic life can be more widely and variously studied. Every circumstance of every-day existence, from the cradle to the grave, finds a place in it. Most of the great names belonging to the history or literature of Hellas are commemorated in it. Lastly, many of the choicest remains of Hellenic poetry are preserved in it alone. Few books, notwithstanding, have been so little edited or require so much still to be done. The editions of Jacobs and Dübner, the two best known, are both of them somewhat unwieldy; the smaller editions are uncritically edited and without notes. It would be difficult to mention any work which would be more acceptable to philologists than a thoroughly revised edition, with a really good commentary.

Mr. Butler divides his volume into four parts—Songs of the Love of Women, Songs of the Love of Nature, Songs of Death, Songs of Hereafter. Here is his version of Ἀστέρας εἰσαθρῆς, ἀστὴρ ἐμός:—

“Thine eyes are fixed upon the starry skies,
Thou star of mine!
Would I were heaven with multitudinous eyes
To gaze on thine.”

Both Sappho's Odes are translated; the following is from the Ode to Aphrodite:—

“What doth thy wild heart most desire?
Whom lovest thou dost thou long to lead?
Who, Sappho, doth requite thy meed
With scorn and wronging?”

“Know, one that flees shall follow thee,
One taking not thy gift shall give,
One loving not for love shall live,
Though loth her longing.”

Neither of these we think quite up to the level of the original, or, indeed, of most of Mr. Butler's volume. Far more successful is the version of the beautiful lines ascribed to Plato:—

"Be still, ye wooded cliffs and waterfalls
And mingled bleatings from the murmuring meads,
For Pan with sweetly ringing music calls,
Laying his lip on pipe of bounden reeds:
And round him, dancing swift with glimmering feet,
Nymphs of the forest and the fountain meet."

If Mr. Butler has a fault it is perhaps an occasional affectation or over-refinement, such as "bounden" in the passage above; or

"daffodils
Bloom as the rain befriends their dewy frills" for θάλλει δὲ φίλομβρος Νάρκισσος; or

"The shadowy lashes of thy lightning eyes" for γλήναι λασίασιν ὑπ' ὀφρύσιν ἀστράπτουσαι;
and the lines immediately following,

"Yet why show curs the quarry? Midas' reeds Show how a tongue without a fastening speeds," for

Ἄλλὰ τί μὲν' ὡς κυσὶν ὀστῆα; μάρτυρές εἰσιν τῆς ἀθυροστομίας οἱ Μίδεοι κάλαμοι.

The verses headed "A Poor Fisherman," as a whole, are so good as to deserve quotation at length, and will be interesting to those who tire of the over-sweetness of Mr. Butler's amorous Muse. They are, besides, particularly characteristic of the Greek Anthology.

"By cunning creels he got his daily prize,
Wont like a merlin o'er the waves to leap,
Netting the crannied rocks in fisher's guise,
Scorning the stately galley's long-oared sweep.
His fourscore years did break not suddenly
By stormy star or hurricane from the steep;
But in his reed-hut, as a taper dies,
After his many days he fell asleep.
This tomb nor child nor goodwife bade arise,
But faithful fellow-craftsmen of the deep."

We doubt, however, whether the fourth line will convey to most readers the impression which Mr. Butler means. To us it suggested, not that the fisherman used a small boat—οὐχὶ πολυσκάλμου πλώτορα ναυτίλης—but that, intent on his netting, he disregarded the dangers which a too close proximity to some many-oared trireme might involve.

Like most versifiers of the time, our translator has his experiments; notably what seems a peculiar modification of the elegiac couplet. We take as a sample "Democritus, the Laughing Philosopher."

"This is the sage's laughter, when at the last he saith,
'Truth unlaughing I spoke, "Time and Life are a laugh,"
'Seeing for all my wisdom and host unnumbered of books,
'Under a tomb I lie, leaving naught but a laugh."

We confess this experiment sounds ill to our ears. Why has not Mr. Butler tried the "genuine article"—in other words, reproduced the Greek metre exactly, or at least with that positional quantity which seems most nearly to approach it? We are inclined to believe that in his hands, at any rate as an occasional variety, it might prove a success. But, for fear of prejudging what others may approve, we give one more specimen:—

"Down from the hills unbidden the oxen came to the fold,
Came in a grievous plight covered with flakes of snow.
Woe's me! under an oak Therimachus, fallen asleep,
Taket his last long rest, sent by a flash from heaven."

R. ELLIS.

The Town, College, and Neighbourhood of Marlborough. By F. E. Hulme, F.L.S., F.S.A. (Stanford.)

PROBABLY no other English district of equal size could supply the general historian with matter more interesting, or more varied, than can the country round the Wiltshire town of Marlborough. The town itself has a long and unusually eventful history, the written records of which, as well as those which survive in the habits of the people, because of the seclusion of the place, have been comparatively little obliterated; and in the country round are scattered, in most attractive profusion, old buildings, such as churches and manor-houses, as well as still more ancient monuments, such as the stone-circle of Avebury and Silbury Hill. Moreover, though the literature of the subject is extensive, yet the more generally interesting facts have never been summed up in any compact and readily accessible form. Mr. Hulme, a member of—to use his own favourite expression—"the magistral staff" of Marlborough College, seeing the opportunity, has in this book attempted to supply in a convenient form an account of the town, as it is at present, and of its history, of the college, the fame of which has now swallowed up that of the town, and of some of the interesting features of the country, within a somewhat arbitrarily drawn circle, with a radius of six miles from the town. For the historical portions he has drawn, from the municipal records, from files of old newspapers, and from previous writers, many amusing and some interesting extracts; but these, being strung on no thread, give, as the author himself modestly suggests, no better idea of the history than a number of separate bricks do of a whole house. In describing the present aspects of his subject, Mr. Hulme, being able to rely upon his own observations, has attained greater success. As to the account of the college, we have, if we are not mistaken, read something, in many points, very similar in a recent number of the New Quarterly Magazine. Of the natural history of the district the author takes but little notice, except to refer his readers to various scattered writings on the subject. On the whole, he has supplied, not the desired and altogether delightful book that might be written on the subject, but an unusually amusing, if somewhat incomplete, local guide.

A few of the purple patches scattered through the book may serve as a sample of the rest. A curious story is quoted how, one market-day in 1771, the Mayor of Marlborough went with his officers into the market and seized more than a hundredweight of butter, which he afterwards distributed to the poor, because it was being sold at less than eighteen ounces to the pound; and, the market people objecting, the mayor settled the matter by a peremptory decree that butter was only to be admitted into the market in half-pound and pound parcels of nine and eighteen ounces respectively. Again, the following advertisement is quaintly precise:—"On Tuesday, September 28, 1773, one guinea will be given to be played for at backsword, which will be adjudged to the man who breaks most beads; and eight men breaking eight heads shall receive five shillings each. The blood to run an inch or deemed no head." Coming down to the present time, Mr. Hulme records the interesting fact that about Marlborough mummers still pass from house to house at Christmas-time with their old-fashioned play; though, by-the-way, we believe he exaggerates the rarity of this survival.

Space for much more interesting matter might have been made in the book by the omission both of many trivial passages, such as that which gives an elaborate account of the colours of the riband on the caps of the college boys, and also of much that is but slightly connected with the subject, such as the full schedule of the ancient monuments included in the recently proposed Act, and the memorandum by the Society of Antiquaries of London on the difference between wise and foolish restorations of old buildings.

Though it is not mentioned by Mr. Hulme, it is not going far from his subject to point out that the Marlborough College Natural History Society is now preparing for publication a very elaborate and important map of the district, on which the Rev. A. C. Smith, of Yatesbury, has been engaged for many years in accurately marking each of the many burial-mounds, standing stones, and other antiquities; while, in an Index, each of these objects is duly described, with references to, and quotations from, all works in which it has been particularly noticed.

EVERARD F. IM THURN.

NEW NOVELS.

Miss Williamson's Divagations. By Miss Thackeray (Mrs. Richmond Ritchie). (Smith, Elder & Co.)

Mr. Caroli: an Autobiography. Edited by L. G. Seguin. In 3 vols. (Sampson Low.)

Love Knots. By the Author of "Ursula's Love Story." In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Divided. By the Author of "Shakspeare's Stories Simply Told." In 2 vols. (Remington.)

His Little Mother, and other Tales and Sketches. By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." (Hurst & Blackett.)

MISS THACKERAY—who, it may be presumed, wishes to be still known under her maiden name—has, as a writer of fiction, such a special gift that we gladly welcome her re-appearance in volume form, even although this volume contains nothing more than a number of magazine "reprints with additions." No novelist of the present day has anything approaching to her two powers—of making little things tell in description by simply adjusting them properly to their surroundings, and of striking a gently sarcastic rather than cynical humour out of the most ordinary circumstances. These powers come out especially in the first and the last of the stories in this volume, "Da Capo" and "Fina's Aunt," which present, in many respects, a perfect contrast. The latter is the narrative by a faded governess of some incidents in the life of a commonplace family of the Kensington sort. There is nothing notable in any of these people; but how real they all are—Mrs. Ellis always doing wrong in the right way; Miss Ellis with her pomposities and proprieties, and her Captain Blower of the Heavies; poor, much-enduring, inarticulate Aunt Josie; matter-of-fact, rather too articulate Sophy King; and the shabby doctor-hero, with his honest pride and his professional skill! There is one page which is so realistic that it actually seems to leave some Kensington dust on the reader's hands. The most ambitious story in the volume, and on the whole the best, is the first, "Da Capo;" and it is so good that we cannot but regret that Miss Thackeray should have given it the feeble and scarcely necessary sequel of "A Postscript from a Stage-box." The chief scene is laid in Switzerland, and the story narrates the troubles experienced by Aurelius Baxter, a proud, fiery colonel, in detaching Felicia Marlowe, a young beauty and heiress, with a temper quite equal to his own, from some very odious people with whom she is travelling. These are Mr. Bracy, a fat nonentity; Mrs. Bracy, a poetess; and their nephew Jasper, who seems made for—or by—Mr. Burnand and Mr. Du Maurier. Here he is sketched as he first appears, gazing at the sky:—

"He was handsome, with one of those silly expressions which came from too much intelligent detail.

"I beg pardon," said he, "that amber cloud floating in ultra-marine called me irresistibly;" and he pointed and stood quite still for an instant, as actors do at the play, who have, of course, to emphasise their movements as well as their words."

But it is Miss Thackeray's power of describing objective nature that is most notable in "Da Capo;" it is manifestly not only growing, but growing on her. She has almost as much capacity for nature-photography as Mr. Black; and quite as much power of spiritualising such photography as Mr. Hardy. There is a description in particular of a sunset at Interlaken, in which this power of introducing "far-off interests" is conspicuously shown.

"The fire leapt from snow to snow, dazzling in tender might. The mountain seemed to put out great wings, to tremble with a mysterious life; the snow-fields hung in mid-air, the radiance of their summits seemed to spread into space. . . . Voices changed, people changed; for a few moments one impulse seemed to touch all these human beings, calling them to something most mysterious and beyond them, utterly beyond expression or remembrance. . . . Upon a balcony of the hotel our poetess had appeared shrouded in a long gauze veil. She stood, tablets in hand, pausing for inspiration."

We are glad of Miss Williamson's Divagations, as of any small mercies from the gifted authoress; but we should be almost sorry if this volume does not turn out to be merely the prelude to a worthy successor to Old Kensington.

Miss Seguin's venture in the field of fiction is a most happy and successful one. There is a vraisemblance as of Robinson Crusoe in the autobiography of Mr. Caroli, and it is besides a very charming and thoroughly wholesome story. It tells of the life-romance of the son of the captain of an Italian merchant vessel by an English mother. The elder Caroli is a man of good descent and corresponding character, but he is throughout unfortunate, and ultimately disappears from his family. Before that catastrophe, his wife takes up her abode in London with her brother Jacob. To what type of Englishman the latter belongs we at once learn from our first introduction. Mrs. (or the Countess) Caroli flings herself "into the arms of a short, stout, elderly man, in a snuff-coloured suit, a brown wig, and gaiters," and kisses him on both cheeks. "Pah!" cries the man, as though he had swallowed something which he disliked, "none of your fancy foreign ways here, Bel." Then he takes her head between his hands, and kisses her lips. As might be expected, Giuseppe Caroli and his uncle Jacob do not agree well; and there is ultimately a quarrel between them, in which the mother takes her son's part, over the disappearance of the poor Italian captain, whom the coarse-grained rather than bad-hearted Londoner more than suspects of wholesale swindling. As it turns out, the elder Caroli has fallen into the hands of Algerine pirates, a fate which also befalls his wife and son. A very large portion of the book is occupied with the adventures of the latter in Algeria, which is ground thoroughly familiar to Miss Seguin. There is interwoven with this portion of the story a complicated love affair. Finally, Mr. Caroli escapes from Algeria and returns to London, only to find the Angela he supposed to be his married to his cousin. All ends well, however. Angela proves a coarse virago; and Mr. Caroli learns, like Mr. Richard Swiveller, that all his years of trouble there has been "a young lady saving up for him" in Antoinette Dufours. The interest in this simple and tender story is sustained from first to last, and the close is genuinely affecting. Miss Seguin attempts no elaborate portrait-painting; but the characters she does draw, such as "cockney" Uncle Jacob and Miss Potts, who marries and tyrannises over him, are as true to life as the story itself is realistic in virtue of its very simplicity.

At p. 163 of the third volume of Love Knots—the author of which, we are carefully informed, is not Miss Alice King, but Mrs. Gertrude Parsons—Lord Dowry informs Mrs. Deane, "I loved you from the first. I was conquered by your grace and loveliness here, where I first saw you, when you spoke to me from the carriage that sweet evening which seems now to have been so long ago." This is surely the language of an ardent lover; and the reader of it will not be surprised to learn that it requires a considerable supply of "the smaller creature comforts," in the shape of "tea, cold meat, and poached eggs," to bring him to reason, although even then he "felt so overpowered by admiration that he scarcely dared to trust himself to look in her face." Yet at p. 306 of the same volume this Adonis of forty tells Hester, a young lady not yet of age, "Mine is a love so strong that, though I could endure refusal now, I could not bear disappointment afterwards. My love is such as—you may believe me—I never felt before." Hester does "believe," and trembles in a very ladylike manner, and so her "love knot" is tied. It is not the first of the kind, however, in the book, for are there not "Lord Byermere and his wife," and Richard Lanesbey, "whose marriage is the brightest fact in his history"? And after Lord Dowry is married there remain John Deane and Sir Francis Carminowe. "They visited India, China, Japan, the United States, and Canada, and then returned to their mothers; and their mothers were beginning to feel uncomfortable, for these young men had not yet found their mates." This is a little difficulty, however, that is easily got over. Mrs. Merrifield Smith becomes a widow at a convenient time, and Sir Francis Carminowe falls in. As for John Deane, whom his mother wished for one time to marry Hester, he says, in answer to his mother's question, "What takes you to the castle?" "My love for Amy, I suppose. Would you like it?" The advice of that remarkable woman is "Secure her," and he follows it. Three volumes so full of cross purposes, kissing, and match-making we have not come across for a long time; one emerges from them with a feeling akin to that which Tommy Traddles must have experienced after he and his head of hair had escaped from the embraces of the Crewler sisterhood.

Divided is an unnecessarily, even a harshly, pathetic story. No end seems to be served, no moral is pointed, by "dividing" poor Sylvia Wyndham and Dr. Clarke Taylor before they are united. The reader of Divided, however, will not deeply regret the death of Lionel Wyndham, as arrant a cad as ever figured in a novel. It is thus that this "gentleman" speaks of his wife to a physician whom he consults for the first time; "What is the matter with her now? They tell me she is going on well; where's the proof of it so long as she lies there looking so detestably weedy? . . . She has lost everything in the way of good looks. I can't bear to see a woman emaciated and washed out." There is considerable promise in the author, in spite of tendencies to boarding-school English. By-the-way, what is meant by "the extreme elegance and femininity [the spelling and italics are the author's] of her drawing-room?"

Mrs. Craik's latest volume consists about equally of short stories and short and light papers of what the well-known writer who describes himself "A. K. H. B." might style the "concerning" order. We are not equally satisfied, however, with the two sections of the volume. It seems to show that the author can write good short sketches—there is a great deal of vigour and sense in the paper "About Travelling and Travellers"—but cannot write short stories of the same degree of excellence. There is a pure vein of tenderness in fictions of the type, and by the author, of John Halifax, Gentleman. But it is a perilous vein, and is apt to run into what Carlyle calls "weak-eyed sensibility," just as Wordsworth's simplicity sometimes degenerated into downright silliness. "Tenderness over drowning flies" is only a shade worse than the tenderness over a drowned dog which sobs through the thirty odd pages that constitute "Poor Prin: a True Story." "There is such a thing," says our author, "as heroic pain, sympathetic pain, pain which almost does one good." We feel tempted to parody this and say, "There is such a thing as maudlin tender ness, silly tenderness, tenderness which almost disgusts one." There is decidedly more "body" in "His Little Mother;" and there is genuine pathos as well as artistic delicacy in the delineation of the relations between Dorcas and Cyprian Hall, ending in the catastrophe of the "Little Mother's" death. But then Mrs. Craik allows the reasonable space of eighty pages for the telling of the story. Clearly she requires three volumes to do herself justice.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

SOME BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

Sacred Palm-lands; or, the Journal of a Spring Tour. By A. G. Weld. (Longmans.) This small book gives the account of a journey made by a lady and her mother to Egypt and Palestine. It does not pretend to deal with knotty questions, either of archaeology or of politics. The author tells her story very pleasantly, describing what she saw, and taking a keen interest in everything, whether it be places, people, flowers, or remains of art. Some people fear to visit Palestine lest the holy places should lose their charm, and many who have gone there declare how disenchanted they became; but the author affirms that this has not been the case with her. At the time of her visit, the month of March, the ground was covered with flowers, in which she takes a great delight. Having the advantage of a Syrian gentleman, Mr. Kayat, to look after them, the lady and her mother managed to see a little of the inhabitants; their sex also gave them occasional advantages in this way, and the work gives interesting glimpses into the character and manners of the people. The writer points out that the "Arab of Palestine" is not an Arab at all, but the direct descendant of the ancient Canaanite. This question has recently been very ably dealt with in a paper by M. Clermont Ganneau published by the Palestine Exploration Fund, where it is shown that many of the old Canaanite customs, and even religious rites, still remain, scarcely hid under the outward forms of the prevailing Mahommedanism. The Jews, she says, "seem to get on well with the Fellahin and other Arabic-speaking inhabitants of this country;" to which she adds that it is "from the Hebrew element in the population of the Holy Land that I cherish most hopes of the ultimate well-being of this country, looking forward to the time when the removal of disabilities, under an improved form of government, shall encourage more of the hard-working men of this race to return to the home of their fathers."

The author has evidently studied the late writers on Jerusalem, such as Wilson, Warren, and Conder; still she gives a very slight account of the Haram-es-Sherif, and some of the most interesting points are without mention. The Bahr-el-Khebeer, or Great Sea, in the rock between the Kubbet-es-Sakhr and the Aksa, one of the wonders of the place, she seems not to have even heard of. This vast underground cistern is full of water, and is supposed to have been connected with the Temple services, which must have required a large supply. There is a conduit all the way from the Pools of Solomon, beyond Bethlehem, from which the water came to this reservoir. The tunnel and conduits under the convent of the Sisters of Zion are connected with another water supply which came from the north. When visiting the Huldah gate, the author expresses her regret that the large column and fine old capital in the entrance hall cannot be drawn or photographed, on account of the religious scruples of the Moslems. The lady may be surprised to hear that Mr. Tipping sketched the spot. The capital will be found in Mr. Forgysson's first work in which he started his theories of the topography of Jerusalem; and what looks very much like a copy of Mr. Tipping's drawing of the column and passages will be found in Pierotti's book. The writer of this notice made more than one sketch of the interior of this gateway, and found no difficulty from Moslem scruples. In the case also of the tomb of David there was no hindrance to enter and sketch in 1869. Things must have changed since then; and the present feeling will show that the Noble Sanctuary, or Place of Sacred Rest, has not escaped the acrimonious results of the political situation, a condition of things which other travellers also agree in describing.

Jewish Life in the East. By Sydney Montagu Samuel. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) This book is written by a Hebrew, and gives minute details of the condition of his people in the East. A great many Jews, in spite of poverty, manage, when they are old, to make their way to the Holy Land, principally to Jerusalem, to die there; and the distribution of the funds raised to support them (Haluka) has long been a scandal. The writer seems to have been at great trouble to make himself acquainted with every thing connected with this subject, and he also records his opinions in a very open and candid manner. The Jews are divided into two great bodies—the Sephardim and the Ashkenazim; the former of these are the Liberals, while the Ashkenazim may be described as the High Church party. They refuse to move with the times. They consider that all study should be confined to the Tora, or the Law, and the Talmud. Having this rigid limit of knowledge strongly fixed in their mind, they oppose all attempts to improve the standards of education in the schools. A library was formed in honour of Sir Moses Montefiore; but, as it was composed of secular works, the Rabbis launched their excommunication against it, and the library was dispersed. A German philanthropist sent a sum of money to Jerusalem to be spent in the cultivation of "secular knowledge;" but the money was returned. The Rabbis of this sect can enforce their excommunications by withholding from the offender any share in the Haluka, of which they control the distribution. The author believes that, if the Jews were better educated, they could find employment, and cease to be dependent upon charity. He also gives some statistics of agricultural movements begun by Jews, which he thinks are hopeful. The Jews were originally an agricultural people, and why should they not become so again? The soil of Palestine is fertile when irrigated and properly cultivated; but the Jew, it would seem, is not acclimatised to his native soil, and cannot work in the sun like the fellahin. Mr. Samuel met Mr. Lawrence Oliphant at Constantinople, and discussed with him the scheme which has since appeared in The Land of Gilead, and of which he writes in high praise. Although he is evidently a sincere follower of the faith of his brethren, that does not prevent him from appreciating a clever thing. In treating of Mr. Oliphant's scheme he quotes a saying which has been put into the mouth of a well-known French banker:—"Quand le Messie viendra nous rassembler en Palestine, je le prierai de m'offrir l'ambassade de sa Majesté judaïque à Paris!"

Prospects of Peru. By A. J. Duffield. (Newman.) This is a very lively picture of Peru during the Guano age, and tells many disagreeable truths about the Government of that country in no measured language. Mr. Duffield takes for granted that Chili will occupy Peru for a considerable period, and thinks that it will be for the benefit of the country. Those who know anything of Peru will allow that Mr. Duffield's language, if strong, is not exaggerated. A country which might be one of the most productive in the world has been governed since its independence with the exclusive aim of putting money in the pockets of those for the time being at the head of affairs. Like a spendthrift, Peru has been living on its capital of guano instead of working and using its revenues for the development of industry. It is to be hoped that the late disasters may bring the higher classes to a sense of their folly, and call a real patriot to the head of the State. With an honest and wise Government that will invite capital and labour into the country, its future may be glorious; but it is to be feared that long years of dissipation, dishonesty, and laziness have incapacitated the present race of semi-Spaniard rulers for any serious work of reform. At any rate, their recent thrashing can do them no harm, and it will be to their advantage if they take to heart the home truths contained in Mr. Duffield's book. Of a country where courtesy and hospitality extend from the highest to the lowest, and where vulgarity is unknown, it is difficult to despair. Probably the best thing Chili could do for herself and Peru would be to annex all the deposits of guano; Peru, thus left without pocket-money, would be compelled to develop her other natural advantages. These, both mineral and agricultural, are inexhaustible; and a few years of honest labour and frugality would raise Peru to a higher and nobler position than she has ever yet occupied since her independence.

The Flight of the "Lapwing": a Naval Officer's Jottings in China, Formosa, and Japan. By the Hon. Henry Noel Shore, R.N. (Longmans.) The life of gunboat officers on the China station in time of peace is so very uneventful that he must be a bold man who ventures to record his experiences; but Mr. Shore has, nevertheless, contrived to fill a very substantial volume with the impressions of what came under his notice during a cruise of about two years' duration. Some eighty pages of the book, it is true, are filled with reprints from the Times, &c.; and in his Preface the author tenders "his grateful acknowledgments for the valuable assistance derived from numerous pamphlets, magazines, and newspaper articles," as well as to a number of books, including Marco Polo's Travels and Records of the Missionary Conference at Shanghai in May 1877, so that it is hard to say what he gives on his own authority. The account of the stranding of the Lapwing, however, is, without doubt, the narrative of an eye-witness, and Mr. Shore supplies us with illustrations showing the gunboat ashore and resting on a "gridiron" of spars. The book contains plenty of readable matter, and throws some light on the progress of European civilisation in the Far East. It gives a map of the Island of Formosa, and another showing the course of the Lapwing from Hongkong in the south to Newchwang on the coast of Manchuria and thence to Nagasaki in Japan.

Notes of Travel in Fiji and New Caledonia. By J. W. Anderson, M.A. (Ellis.) Mr. Anderson's jottings are intended to rectify the "glowing and gushing descriptions" of ordinary travellers, and probably give us a fair idea of the impressions of the settler. For such a one a primrose is hardly even a yellow primrose. The summer isles of Eden are good or bad ground, as may be, for growing sugar and cotton; the inhabitants are "labour," good or bad, and their qualities are estimated mainly in reference to their power of work, or of driving a bargain. We have also some accounts of their natural habits and ways of thought, their feasts and dances, houses and implements, with a slight general sketch of the group of islands; but most of this has been done before. We hear the usual complaint that Government, by receiving the taxes in kind at a fixed rate, instead of in money, has injured the local traders; but the measure, besides according with previous custom, was an obvious protection to the natives against imposition. The author has some original views about missionaries. The people are not yet intellectually capable of choosing a new religion, and should therefore be placed, for a hundred years or so, under professors of morality and sanitary science, till able to decide which form of Christianity, if any, they should finally adopt. The origin of the Pacific races requires a longer study than Mr. Anderson has given to it. Hawaiian and other traditions throw more light than he is aware on the later migrations. He imagines these might have proceeded by land; but he computes the submerged continent at 50,000 square miles, which would have afforded a very narrow bridge to New Zealand and Hawaii. His statement that the Papuan hair grows in tufts has long been disproved. Hawaiki is less generally known as the "underground" region (except that it is below the Western horizon), than as the traditional home of the race. Mr. Anderson says of himself that he is "not descended from two first parents who sauntered about in the Garden of Eden," but "is a development of the extinct Catarrhini lipocerci, or tailless and narrow-nosed apes;" and he speaks of another "ambiguous race called Pro-Malays," whose ancestors he identifies with certain Indian races by half-a-dozen verbal resemblances. After this philological flight he should not write syrup de grosseilles, or porceppe for porc-épic. His notes on New Caledonia, and on the traces of an intercourse between its inhabitants and the Australians, are not without interest.

Aide-Mémoire du Voyageur. Par D. Kaltrunner. (Zurich: Wurster.) This volume is intended as an introduction to the same author's Manuel du Voyageur, favourably noticed by us some time ago. It aims at presenting its readers with a general view of geographical science—a vast subject to be adequately dealt with in a volume of moderate size. Yet, by conciseness of diction and a careful selection of facts, the author has succeeded in doing justice to his subject, and in producing a work which may be perused with advantage by the "travelers, students, and men of the world" for whose use it is specially intended. Physical geography is treated of in the most satisfactory manner. The chapter on the political geography of the United Kingdom is not quite free from errors, but, upon the whole, the work has been done conscientiously. The maps are excellent, and present some novel features; paper and typography alike leave nothing to be desired.

The Zermatt Pocket-book: a Guide-book to the Pennine Alps from the Simplon to Arolla. Intended for the Use of Mountaineers. By W. M. Conway. (Stanford.) This volume, small and light enough to find a place in any pocket, gives mountaineers all needful practical information as to every possible route up a peak or over a pass in a district where the enterprise and obstinacy of the Alpine Club have come near to exhaust possibilities. It is a supplement for the regular guide-books to the ordinary traveller; a substitute for them to the mountaineer who, after many seasons' experience, carries in his own brain all they can tell him. The information, so far as we can test, is most accurately given, and the number of references to Alpine literature will make the Pocket-book serviceable in the library as well as on the mountains. On one point, however, of some historic interest, Mr. Conway is not so clear as he might be. He has not realised that his Schwarzenberg joch (or Mattmark Weisssthor) is the New Weisssthor, not only of Mr. Marshall Hall in 1849, but of all early travellers and guide-books; the arête blanche, which affected so severely the nerves of the first generation of mountain explorers, was the ridge forming part of the south boundary of the Schwarzenberg Glacier. The confusion between the distinct passes which of late years have shared the name of New Weisssthor was cleared up in Murray's Handbook (ed. 1879). Mr. Conway is probably right in abstaining from references to scenery. But he gives a bad reason for doing so. "If a man with the view before him cannot see its beauties," he writes, "it is beyond the power of the present writer to mend his wits." The object of references to scenery in guide-books is surely to aid the traveller, who cannot go up every peak to select the most repaying viewpoints. But a traveller who does not wish to go up every peak is, perhaps, outside the range of Mr. Conway's "wits." On tourists who climb for glory his sentence is summary. "Travellers who have never climbed before will probably insist on going up the Matterhorn, Weisssthor, and so forth, in their first season, and think themselves rather remarkable people because they come down unskilled; they are, however, none the less fools." After this, no one can say the Alpine Club preach rashness, whatever they may practise. Lists of inns and climbers' requisites are given. In the former the good inn at Val Tournanche is omitted; the latter errs, if at all, on the side of over-elaboration. The "complete mountaineer" of to-day appears to be a somewhat heavily burdened individual.

AGNOSTICISM.

FROM night to night, thro' circling darkness whirled,
Day dawns, and wanes, and still leaves, as before,
The shifting tides and the eternal shore:
Sources of life, and forces of the world,
Unseen, unknown, in folds of mystery furled,
Unseen, unknown, remain for evermore:—

To heaven-hid heights man's questioning soul would soar,
Yet falls from darkness unto darkness hurled!

Angels of light, ye spirits of the air,
Peopling of yore the dreamland of our youth,
Ye who once led us thro' those scenes so fair,
Lead now, and leave us near the realm of Truth:
Lo, if in dreams some truths we chanced to see,
Now in the truth some dreams may haply be.

SAMUEL WADDINGTON.

NOTES AND NEWS.

DR. HUNTER'S Imperial Gazetteer of India, which is on the point of publication by Messrs. Triibner, will be dedicated by special permission to the Queen. A special feature will be the article "India" itself, which is the most elaborate account of the country yet published, whether from the physical, economical, or historical point of view.

MR. TENNYSON has, we are glad to hear, given careful and full readings of his chief dialectal poems to the Nestor of phoneticians, Mr. Alexander J. Ellis, the present President of the Philological Society. Mr. Ellis has carefully corrected his previously prepared phonetic copies of Mr. Tennyson's texts by the Laureate's own pronunciation, so that his very tones and accent will be reproducible to all time from Mr. Ellis's copies, as music is from notes. These copies will be printed in the fifth part of Mr. Ellis's great work on Early-English Pronunciation for the Philological, Early-English Text, and New Shakspeare Societies, which will contain the English dialects, and will be published next year.

Catharine of Aragon and the Sources of the English Reformation is the title of a work, translated from the French of Albert du Boys, and edited, with notes, by Charlotte M. Yonge, to be shortly published, in two volumes, by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett; who will also issue during the present month a new novel, entitled Sydney, by Miss Georgiana M. Craik, in three volumes.

THE Life of the Rev. J. M. Phillippo, late a missionary in Jamaica, written by Dr. Underhill, hon. secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, is now in the press, and will be issued during the present month by Messrs. Yates and Alexander.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH AND FARRAN will shortly publish The Song of Solomon, rendered in English verse, in accordance with the most approved translations from the Hebrew and Septuagint, by the Rev. James Pratt, D.D. Careful and reverent study has convinced the author, in common with Dr. Ginsburg and other critics, that the allegorical view of the book is not correct. An effort has been made to do justice to the poetry of the Song by giving a metrical rendering. The volume will be illustrated with wood-engravings representing various scenes in the Holy Land.

THE Rev. Dr. Grosart has issued a prospectus of "The Huth Library," a new series of old English books—Elizabethan and Jacobean—which he proposes to print for subscribers. Mr. Alfred H. Huth has generously placed his book-treasures at the disposal of Dr. Grosart, with a view to reprinting such rare books as he may please. "The Huth Library" will include the works in prose and verse of Robert Greene, with a translation of Prof. Storojenko's biography and critical study of Greene; the works of Nash; of Gabriel Harvey; the prose works of Sir Philip Sidney; the works of George Whetstone; the non-dramatic works of Thomas Dekker; the translation of The Courtier of Count Baldessar Castilio by Thomas Hoby, 1561, with unpublished annotations by Gabriel Harvey from autograph notes in Dr. Grosart's copy of The Courtier; and various works by Chettle, Munday, Middleton, and others. Dr. Grosart's prospectus gives a portrait of Henry Huth, Esq., engraved by W. J. Alais from a photograph.

IN accordance with one of the last wishes expressed by Thomas Carlyle, a tree has been planted at Haddington on the site of the house in which John Knox was born, and within view of the churchyard where Mrs. Carlyle lies buried. The expense, including that of an enclosure and a suitable inscription, will be defrayed by a niece of Carlyle.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH AND FARRAN are preparing for early publication a volume entitled Poetry for the Young. The collection consists almost entirely of complete poems. They are arranged in four parts, the first part containing the simplest pieces, and the last the most difficult. A few pages of explanatory matter have been appended to each part, but it has been thought desirable to make the notes as few in number and as concise as possible.

THE same publishers have in the press a small volume entitled His Native Land, by the Rev. A. J. Bunnic, M.A., with a Preface by the Rev. J. Miles Moss. It will be illustrated with a map and photographic view of Jerusalem. The author's object is to arouse a deeper interest in the Scriptures by giving some account of the land where the events they record took place.

THE Rev. S. W. Earnshaw proposes to print for private distribution the parish registers of Ellough, in Suffolk. They date from 1540, and are of considerable interest to the local genealogist. Two hundred and fifty copies will be printed, and the subscription price is fixed at 10s. The proceeds derivable from the sale of the work will be devoted to the restoration of the nave of the parish church.

MESSRS. TRUBNER AND Co. will immediately publish the second and concluding part of Dr. C. M. Ingleby's Shakespeare: the Man and the Book. To this volume Mr. Fleay contributes an essay on "Metrical Tests applied to Shakespeare," together with the tables on which the essay is based.

THE following have been elected members of the Athenaeum Club under its special rule:—Mr. John Brett, A.R.A., Gen. Pitt-Rivers, and Prof. Rawlinson.

PROF. MARTIN DUNCAN, F.R.S., and Mr. Percy Sladen, F.L.S., have completed their work on the Echinodermata of the Arctic Sea.

THE Life of Bishop Macilvaine, by the Rev. Canon Carns, is in the press, and will be issued shortly by Mr. Elliot Stock.

THE Atlantic Monthly for May will have for its initial article a paper on Carlyle, by Mr. Henry James. This will be followed by additional chapters of "The Portrait of a Lady;" poems by Mr. Whittier, Mr. Trowbridge, and others; and a variety of fiction, criticism, &c.

FOLLOWING UP the success of his Linguistic and Oriental Essays, Mr. R. N. Cust has in preparation, and will shortly publish with Messrs. Trübner, a second series, entitled Pictures of Indian Life, sketched with the Pen, 1852 to 1878.

THE chapters which Mr. G. J. Holyoake has contributed to the Co-operative News, chiefly upon co-operative and emigrant education and incidents in America, will shortly be published in a collected form by Roberts and Co. American and Canadian editions, which will include also the article entitled "A Stranger in America" contributed by Mr. Holyoake to the Nineteenth Century, will be issued by Messrs. Belford, Clarke and Co., of Chicago and Toronto.

THE third and last volume has just been published (Librairie des Bibliophiles) of Scar-ron's Roman Comique, edited by M. Paul Bourget, after the original editions of 1651 and 1657, together with the continuation, known as "La Suite d'Offray." The volumes, which form part of the "Petite Bibliothèque Artistique," are enriched with ten etchings by M. Léopold Flameng after the designs of his son, M. François Flameng.

THE History of Slavonic Literatures by Pípin and Spasovich, which was reviewed in the ACADEMY of March 12 last, has been translated into French by M. Ernest Denis (Ernest Leroux).

WE are glad to hear that the long-expected second volume of Prof. Pasquale Villari's work on Machiavelli and his Times has just appeared.

MR. H. C. CALVERLEY, of Hull, has projected a somewhat novel literary enterprise. He proposes to publish simultaneously in a limited number of provincial newspapers a new book which he has in hand upon Carlyle.

TWO new volumes (xx. and xxi.) of the complete works of Herder, edited by Bernhard Suphan, have just been published (Berlin: Weidmann).

WE learn from the Revue Critique that Mr. Kumanoudis, of Athens, is preparing a list of "Addenda" to the Thesaurus of Henri Estienne, mainly derived from inscriptions and the Byzantine writers.

THE total number of students at the German universities during the winter term of 1880-81 amounts to 21,164. Berlin takes the lead with 4,107; Leipzig has 3,326; Munich, 1,890; Breslau, 1,281; Halle, 1,211; Tübingen, 1,074; Göttingen, 959; Würzburg, 921; Bonn, 887; Königsberg, 788; Strassburg, 745; Marburg, 604; Greifswald, 599; Heidelberg, 543; Erlangen, 473; Freiburg, 443; Jena, 438; Giessen, 391; Kiel, 284; Rostock, 200. The greatest number of foreigners were in Heidelberg and Strassburg.

AMONG English works recently translated into German we notice Prof. Mahaffy and Prof. Sayce's Appendices to Dr. Schliemann's Ilios, on the origin and on the language of the Homeric poems respectively; Merrifield on the Deviation of the Compass in Iron Ships; and Holden's Life and Works of Sir William Herschel, to which Prof. W. Valentiner, of the Karlsruhe Observatory, contributes a Preface.

Our Times is the title of a new magazine to appear in London next month, under the editorship of Mr. A. J. Duffield, the translator of Don Quixote.

HERR BAENSCH, of Berlin, is about to publish a reply, which is said to be by an author who possesses a considerable knowledge of French and German militarism, to M. L. Seguin's pamphlet, "The Next Campaign," which has attracted so much attention on the Continent.

THE prize for history given in Belgium every fifth year has just been awarded to M. Gachard, the royal archivist, for his work entitled Histoire de la Belgique au Commencement du dix-huitième Siècle.

AT the meeting of the Clifton Shakspeare Society held on March 26 reports in connexion with Henry IV. were presented from the following departments:—Rare Words and Phrases, by Mr. L. M. Griffiths; and Plants, by Mr. Leo Grindon, of Manchester. A paper on "Falstaff," by Mr. J. W. Mills, B.A., was read. Mr. J. A. Sanders read a paper on "The Likeness between 'Bobadil' and 'Falstaff.'"

VICTOR HUGO's new poem, Les quatre Vents de l'Esprit, will appear in May, and will have four divisions—satirical, dramatic, lyrical, and epic.

M. G. DE MOLINARI has published in a collected form (Paris: Dentu), under the title of L'Irlande, le Canada, Jersey, the interesting letters which have been appearing lately in the Journal des Débats.

THE French Association for the Promotion of Greek Studies has awarded its annual prize to M. Gevaert for his learned work on the history and the theory of ancient music.

AMERICAN JOTTINGS.

THE most interesting piece of literary news from America is the forthcoming volume by the veteran poet, Mr. J. G. Whittier. It is entitled The King's Missive, and consists chiefly of republished verses. There is, however, a "Prelude" which is fresh, and is not without a touch of genuine pathos. The aged poet thus addresses his friends, old and young:—

"I spread a scanty board too late;
The old time guests for whom I wait
Come few and slow, methinks, to-day.
Ah! who could bear my messages
Across the dim unsounded seas
On which so many have sailed away!

"Come, then, old friends, who linger yet,
And let us meet as we have met,
Once more beneath this low sunshine;
And grateful for the good we've known,
The riddles solved, the ills outgrown,
Shake hands upon the border line.

"The favour, asked too oft before
From your indulgent ears, once more
I crave, and, if belated lays
To slower, feebler measures move,
The silent sympathy of love
To me is dearer now than praise.

"And ye, O younger friends, for whom
My hearth and heart keep open room,
Come smiling through the shadows long,
Be with me while the sun goes down,
And with your cheerful voices drown
The rumor of my even song.

"For, equal through the day and night,
The wise Eternal oversight
And love and power and righteous will Remain; the law of destiny,
The best for each and all must be,
And life its promise shall fulfil."

WE learn from the Nation that a performance of the Oedipus Rex of Sophocles, in the original Greek, will be given by the students of Harvard University on the evenings of May 17, 19, and 20. Prof. J. K. Paine has composed an orchestral accompaniment for the choruses.

PROF. GOLDWIN SMITH has reprinted (Toronto: Hunter, Rose and Co.), though only for private circulation, a considerable number of his scattered essays, reviews, and letters to periodicals, excluding only those that are purely political.

A BIOGRAPHY of the violinist, Ole Bull, is being prepared by his widow, in conjunction with Prof. R. B. Anderson, of Wisconsin, who has just finished a translation of the works of fiction of Björnsterne Björnson.

A NOVEL undertaking, but one by no means to be censured, is announced from America. A "Summer Tramp in Europe" is to be conducted by two professors in the Western States, Prof. D. S. Jordan, of Indiana, and Prof. H. B. Boisen, of Williams College.

MESSRS. HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN AND Co., of Boston, will shortly publish, under the title of England Without and Within, a collection of the papers by Mr. Richard Grant White which have recently appeared in the Atlantic Monthly.

MESSRS. JAMES R. OSGOOD AND Co., announce that they have in hand the second volume of the Memorial History of Boston.

THE recent celebration in Germany of Chamisso's centenary birthday seems to have found a responsive echo also in America. Mr. Henry Phillips, jun., of Philadelphia, has just issued an English version of the poet's fragmentary dramatic sketch of Faust. The translation is smooth and elegant; and it is only a pity that the able translator did not try his hand at Chamisso's humorous ballads, which are quite unknown to those not conversant with German.

WE hear that Mrs. Oliphant's new story, Left in Trust, will appear as a feuilleton in the Sunday edition of the New York Tribune.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS have in preparation for the Society of Political Education, What is a Bank? by Mr. E. Atkinson, of Boston; The Usury Question, comprising the essays of Jeremy Bentham and John Calvin, with a summary of the results of the usury laws of the United States, by Mr. David A. Wells; and a classified bibliography of all books relating to political science. This last will include material prepared by Prof. Sumner, of Yale, Messrs. David A. Wells, R. L. Dugdale, and George Haven Putnam, and a list of books on Protection prepared by Mr. Henry C. Baird.

PROF. J. M. HART, of Cincinnati, has just published a Syllabus of Anglo-Saxon Literature (Cincinnati: R. Clarke and Co.), adapted mainly from ten Brink's well-known History of English Literature. Prof. Hart's short sketch may be recommended as, on the whole, the best introduction to Old-English literature that is accessible to the English reader.

OBITUARY.

THEODOR SCHEIBE, the most popular of German novelists, recently died at Vienna, aged sixty-one. He produced no less than one hundred and twenty romances dealing with the social life of Vienna or with familiar incidents in the national history, most of which appeared originally as feuilletons in the newspapers. Ten stories have to do with the revoclutionary movement of 1848, in which Scheibe himself played a part, being condemned to death par contumace, but shortly afterwards included in the general amnesty.

THE death is announced, in Guernsey, of M. Georges Metivier, at the advanced age of ninety-two. He was the compiler of a valuable dictionary of the Franco-Norman language.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

In the Fortnightly Mr. Herbert Spencer gives the usual instalment of his Principles of Sociology, this time on political heads—chiefs and kings. After noting the original absence of political control in primitive societies, and the resistance which it meets with when first attempted, he goes on to consider the causes which aid its growth. Among them are, first, the recognised superiorities of seniority, of bodily strength, of mental pre-eminence, and of wealth; and, secondly, the military life, especially in communities where war is chronic. The most novel point, however, is the influence ascribed to the medicine-man and the ghost-theory, in abetting the rise of kingship or chieftainship, together with the pregnant hint that headship tends to become hereditary mainly through the operation of nomad pastoral life in producing a patriarchal system. The chapter is broken off somewhat abruptly in the middle, we hope through no more serious exigency than that of space. Sir John Lubbock has a most interesting paper on Fruits and Seeds, illustrated by wood-cuts, the latter, we fancy, a revolutionary innovation in the Fortnightly. It is a very thorough study in the new biology, admirably exemplifying the quickening tendency of Darwinism in turning away attention from mere structural and classificatory details to the real active life of the organism itself, in its relations with the outer world. Sir John deals mainly with the various devices whereby seeds get themselves dispersed, either by the agency of the wind, or by elastic valves, or by burying themselves in the earth, or by clinging to the hair of animals, or by offering special attractions of colour and sweet juices to birds, who swallow them whole, digesting the pulpy coverings, and rejecting the hard-coated seeds themselves. The cases chosen for illustration are extremely apt and suggestive, and much of the reasoning is both novel and acute. Mr. Horsley, Chaplain of the Clerkenwell Prison, has a curious paper on what he calls "The Crime of Suicide," with suggestions for putting down "this form of murder, which is often more cowardly than those forms of the offence which are expiated on the scaffold;" but in spite of his truculent mode of regarding so pitiable a confession of utter failure, and the strangely unsympathetic tone of his remarks towards the miserable "criminals," the article is full of useful statistics and sound common-sense. The stern professional bias does not wholly outweigh the value of observations made officially upon over two thousand would-be suicides. Mr. R. L. Stevenson discourses in a pleasant literary essay, written in his usual finished style, upon the Morality of the Profession of Letters—an essay in which the manner is exquisitely light and graceful, and the matter naught. He writes as though Grub Street were wholly extinct, and all authors had nowadays a permanent settled income at their backs of £500 a-year. Now, the truth is, Grub Street has only changed its place, cleaned its life, and grown scrupulously respectable; but it exists, as poor and shifting as ever. Most authors begin with fond expectations of doing their best work and living modestly on the proceeds; but, unless they happen to be wealthy, they soon find that they must do their best work in stolen moments as a paragon for pure love, and give up the main part of their time to their worst work for the filthy lucre whereon to keep body and soul together. This is an evil which Mr. Stevenson's cunningly wrought optimism will not cure.

THE Day of Rest for April has an interesting article on Dean Alford by Mr. Alexander Strahan, being one of a series entitled "Twenty Years of a Publisher's Life." It does not attempt to give even a sketch biography of the Dean, but well illustrates his marvellous industry and versatility from the experience of the writer. Incidentally, it discloses something of the early history of the Contemporary Review, of which Mr. Strahan was the founder as well as publisher, and of which Dean Alford was the editor from its first appearance in December 1865 until his death in 1871.

THE Rivista Europea of March 16 finishes a paper by Signor Fraccaroli on "The Genesis of Classical Metre," which is an attempt to analyse the prosody of the Italian language so as to discover the limits within which it admits of the use of classical metres. Signor Mola contributes a series of documents from the Venetian archives which throw light on the character of Giacomo Casanova, the famous adventurer, in his early days at Venice. Signor Mabellini publishes a few hitherto unedited sonnets of Reprandino Orsato, a Paduan poet of the end of the fourteenth century.

IN the current number of the Archivio Storico Italiano, Signor Livi publishes a number of documents illustrative of the condition of the silk trade in Bologna in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries; it owed its prosperity to the energy of some merchants banished from Lucca. Signor Gherardi makes a contribution to university history in the fifteenth century by quoting some letters addressed to Lorenzo de' Medici concerning a squabble in the University of Pisa in the year 1474. The Archivio publishes as an Appendix the beginning of a Catalogue raisonné of the Strozzi papers contained in the Florentine archives; the papers are full of interest for students of Italian history at the beginning of the sixteenth century.

LETTER FROM SMYRNA.

March 24, 1881.

If the weather is fine, I know of no voyage in the Mediterranean so pleasant as that from Beyrût to Smyrna in one of the comfortable steamers of the Messageries Maritimes. Tripoli, Laodicea ad Mare, Issus and the Beilân Pass, Tarsus and Soli, can all be visited by the passenger if he so choose; while the vessel coasts along the historic shores of Phœnicia and Asia Minor, within sight of the mountain of Baal Kasios and the Khimaera and the scanty relics of Knidos and Halikarnassos.

The chief object of my drive to Tarsus was the Duneq Tash, the so-called tomb of Sardana-palos, which is still a standing puzzle for the archaeologist. It is formed of huge masses of concrete composed of stones embedded in mortar, and once garnished on the outside with blocks of cut stone, a few of which still remain. The lower part of the inner surface of the wall on the southern side shows traces of having been lined with stone slabs, probably sculptured like those of an Assyrian palace, and above them is a row of holes for the beams of a roofed corridor. The structure is of rectangular shape, the enclosing walls, which have the appearance of an inverted flight of steps on the outside, being nearly twenty-three feet broad. Within them, at the two narrow ends of the rectangle, are two square masses of solid concrete, the easternmost of which has been tunnelled by M. Langlois. In the angles of the enclosing wall on either side of this square mass are the original entrances into the building, which face north-west and south-east; while the other side of the enclosing wall to the north-east of it has been built like an inverted flight of steps, corresponding to the form of the inner side of another parallel wall of concrete, which rises beyond it. These two walls once enclosed a covered gallery, the flat roofing-stones of which rested on the upper steps of the walls where they approached nearest to one another. The places where some of these roofing-stones rested are still visible. As all the enclosing walls of the monument have the same curious appearance on the outside as the walls which formed the gallery, it is probable that the gallery formerly ran the whole way round the structure, though its external wall has now been everywhere destroyed except on the north-eastern side. The interior of the monument has been converted into an Armenian burial-ground; and it is here, if anywhere, in the soil which has accumulated to a considerable depth that excavations would be likely to be successful. On the southern side of the building I noticed numerous fragments of marble which may have come from it. The original purpose of the monument is hard to determine. I can only suggest that the square blocks of concrete at either end of the rectangle may once have been pyramidal, and have served as the bases of statues of the Kilikian Hēraklēs, who is represented on coins of Tarsus as standing on the top of a pyramid. Not far from the Duneq Tash the walls of the Greek city are being quarried for building purposes, and in one place several fragments of marble columns have been brought to light. But the only inscription I saw was the well-known one beginning Ο ΔΗΜΟΣ Ο ΤΑΡΣΕΩΝ.

A day or two after my arrival at Smyrna, I accompanied Mr. Dennis upon a visit to the figure of Niobē, which I shall leave him to describe in his own words. I will only say that, by tying two ladders together, we succeeded in climbing up to the inscription he has discovered at the side of the figure, and in examining the details of the figure itself more thoroughly than has been done before. The inscription consists of four very legible Hittite characters, the cap, the bent arm, the bull's head, and the boot—which all occur in the inscriptions of Carchemish and Hamath—and two, or perhaps three, others, which are unfortunately much obliterated. Thanks to the ladders, we found that a curious ornament, in form like a lotus bud or the uræus serpent, rises from the middle of the back of the figure's head, and that a single lock of hair is rudely sculptured in an oblique line across each of the shoulders. In fact, I have been more struck than ever with the Egyptian character of the figure and its resemblance to the sitting image of Nofre-tari, the wife of Ramses II., carved in the rock a little to the north of Abu Simbel. However, when we remember the Egyptianising character of the Hittite sphinxes at Eyuk, or the close relations that existed between the Hittites and Ramses II., we need not be surprised that Egyptian art should have had an influence upon the rude art of the Hittite conquerors of Western Asia Minor. We further found two shelf-tombs cut in the rock a little above the figure of Niobē on the western side; and, if Mr. Dennis's compass is to be trusted, we also ascertained that the figure faced, not north-west as I had supposed, nor north-by-east as Major Gordon believed, but north-north-west.

Our next expedition was to Ali Agha, where Mr. Baltazzi offered us kind hospitality and proposed escorting us to the ruins recently visited by himself, in company with Mr. Ramsay and M. S. Reinach, on a rugged mountain summit called Nimrud Kalessi, as well as to a figure carved on the rock, and resembling the pseudo-Sesostris which M. Guichon averred he had seen several years ago in the same neighbourhood. M. Reinach is at present conducting excavations for the French School of Athens on the sites of Kyme and Myrina, midway between which Ali Agha stands. Mr. Dennis and myself left Smyrna by a steamer which called first at Old Phokaea, then at New Phokaea, and finally landed us at Ali Agha. On our way we passed the sites of Klazomonae and Leukê, where, unlike Mr. Pullan, we saw fragments of ruined wall through the glass, and, as we sailed past the Arginusae Islands, had a good view of the acropolis of Pergamos rising above Elea, with the long line of débris which marks the excavations of Mr. Humann glistening in the sun. After reaching Ali Agha, we walked over to the scene of M. Reinach's excavations at Kyme, where some interesting archaic stone figures had just been discovered. One of these, which was unfortunately headless, closely resembled the sitting figures discovered by Mr. Newton at Branchidae, and still retained traces of the red paint that once adorned it; the others were sitting figures of Kybelê, which seemed to me archaistic rather than archaic. However, a few days afterwards a fragment of early Phoeniko-Hellonic pottery was discovered in the same place. The spot where they were found was a necropolis of the Graeco-Roman period; and, as M. Reinach had excavated there down to the rock itself, I can account for the presence of these archaic remains only by supposing that the ground subsequently turned into a cemetery had been originally a suburb of the ancient Greek city, where, perhaps, a temple of Kybelê stood. I fancy that the prae-Hellenic city, whose foundation was ascribed by legend to the Amazons, lay on one of the heights farther inland, at a little distance from the sea, by the side of which the Aeolic settlers built their "village." At any rate, I know of no other prehistoric site immediately on the seashore.

Our expedition to Nimrud-Kalossi was prevented, partly by a snow-storm which overtook us the day after our arrival at Ali Agha and confined us to the house the whole day, partly by M. Reinach's report of the ruins, from which we gathered that they were not older than the Alexandrine period. We therefore devoted our time and energies to the rediscovery of the sculptured warrior, whom we fancied might turn out to be of Hittite origin. Our quest, however, was fruitless; but in searching for the warrior we made some other discoveries, which are of possibly greater importance. As soon as the weather allowed, we rode across the plain to the west of Güzel Hissar, in a north-easterly direction, passing on our way a small eminence of cretaceous limestone, containing rifled tombs and an old raised road of Greek or Roman construction. After crossing the Kojah Chai we rode up a broad and rocky slope, and found ourselves at the foot of a crag which had a double summit. This crag was surrounded with the remains of a well-built Cyclopean wall, and a little examination soon showed that it was the site of a prehistoric fortress. As we climbed the highest or western summit of the crag, we came across other portions of Cyclopean masonry, and at the top found the entrance, which faced the east. The two door-posts, each consisting of a single block of stone like those of Mykenae, still remained, though one was fallen and broken in two, but the lintel-stone was wanting. The posts, however, showed traces of the ledges on which it had rested. According to M. Reinach's measurements, the upright monolith is two mètres five centimètres long by one mètre twenty-five centimètres broad in the thickest part, while the fallen monolith is two mètres fifteen centimètres long by one mètre ten centimètres broad. The difference of length is easily accounted for by the fact that a part of the upright monolith is buried in the ground. The path led from the entrance of the acropolis into the valley of Uzûn Hassanly, and at a little distance from the gate consisted of a flight of steps. After passing through the entrance, we came to the remains of some building, which may have been a temple. The lower or eastern summit of the crag was fortified like the rest of the acropolis, and one of the corner-stones of its enclosing wall which I measured was eighty-eight inches long by fifty-five broad. The stone had been shaped by cleavage; the drill-holes were still visible in many places, and there was no trace of a metal tool. Nor was there any trace of Hellenic masonry, from which we may conclude that the fortress was deserted either before or shortly after the arrival of the Greeks. This conclusion is confirmed by the existence of Greek tombs cut in the rock of the crag both without and within the Cyclopean walls. One of these is on the very summit of the acropolis, and close to the remains of the building I have spoken of. I noticed traces of Greek letters of large size cut in the rock over it, but could make out only four of them. We found no pottery of the historical age on the site, except fragments of Hellenic ware in the neighbourhood of the rifled tombs. I believe that the site represents the prae-Hellenic city of Myrina, or Smyrna, founded according to tradition by the Amazons, or, as I should prefer to say, by the Hittites. It is about four miles distant from Kalabassary, the site of the historical Myrina, at the mouth of the river (the Kojah Chai) and on the sea-coast.

The day after the discovery of this early site, we first visited the excavations at Kalabassary, and then rode along the northern bank of the Kojah Chai, keeping a ruined aqueduct on our right and passing an old raised road that must once have led to Pergamos and have joined the raised road to which I have already alluded. We passed the site we had discovered the preceding day on the opposite side of the river, and noticed two or three rock-tombs below it which we had not observed before, and then came to a point where a narrow channel was cut through a projecting ridge of rock. After this we had to climb a rugged mass of cliff and then descend the opposite side of it in order to regain the bank of the river. Here we unexpectedly came across an artificial cutting through the rock about thirty-two yards in length and twenty-five feet in height at the highest part, the cutting itself being about two feet broad. The channel curved towards the north-east, and at the eastern end led into a sort of natural basin full of deep water. At this end the rock had been left so as to form a double arch. Just midway in the cutting a large basaltic block in the right or southern wall was carved into the likeness of a bull's head, as M. Reinach was the first to notice. The rock through which the channel was cut jutted out into the river; and the remains of a tablet, which probably once contained an inscription, were visible in one part of its external face just over the water. The channel was evidently intended for an aqueduct, the course of which could still be traced by a raised mound of earth as far as the cutting I have previously mentioned, and from thence by means of a ruined mediaeval conduit as far as Kalabassary. I have no hesitation, therefore, in regarding it as an aqueduct made by the Greek inhabitants of the historical Myrina, and used and repaired as late as Byzantine times.

After examining this curious cutting, we forded the river and led our horses up the steep and rugged bank on the opposite side. Here we found ourselves on a lofty plateau, above which towered a crag of broken rock partially covered with snow. Up this Mr. Dennis, M. Reinach, and myself made our way on foot, and soon discovered that the whole crag was surrounded by a wall of Cyclopean masonry of far ruder construction than that of the site we had visited the day before. We made our way along the line of it with some difficulty, but found nothing that indicated a later date. At the western end a triangular mass of the rock jutted out at a lower level than the rest of the crag, and looked towards the site we had previously discovered, the summit of which lay at a considerable distance below. This triangular mass was carefully fortified with a well-preserved rude Cyclopean wall, and the foundations of a square building lay a little in its rear. From the line of wall we looked down upon Nimrud Kalossi, which rose into the sky somewhat farther up the valley of the Kojah Chai. On this side a Juruk village was perched upon the slope of our acropolis; in the valley on the other or southern side was the village of Uzûn Hassanly. As this valley was broad and seemed to have an easy outlet, while the approaches to both the prehistoric cities we had discovered led into it, I came to the conclusion that the old road from Magnesia to the plain of Kymê lay through it. On questioning Mr. Baltazzi afterwards, he told me that this is actually the road to Magnesia still followed by the cattle-drivers, and considered by them the shortest route. Mr. Dennis suggests that it is part of the road from the Ephesian territory to Phokaea meant by Herodotus; at any rate, it is quite possible that Hittite sculptures like those in the pass of Karabel may be discovered upon it. I must not forget to mention that we found three Hellenic tombs cut in the rock within the precincts of the old fortress, one of which we explored. We found, however, no other traces of late occupation upon the site, except a fragment of Hellenic pottery which I picked up near one of the tombs; and the style of building, as well as the situation, would seem to show that it was earlier than the site which I venture to call Old Myrina.

The day after our discovery of this ancient acropolis we rode to Menemen, past the two sites which are supposed to represent Larissa and Aëon Teikhos. At Menemen I could find nothing earlier than the Byzantine period, and the hill in which some explorers have seen the acropolis of Temnos shows no trace of having been occupied before the Middle Ages. A deserted mosque in the town would probably be of interest to lovers of Byzantine architecture, as it is a good specimen of a Byzantine basilica, the east end of which has been supported on the north and south sides by enormous buttresses, as a protection, I suppose, against earthquakes. I noticed another mosque which had evidently been once a basilica. According to Mr. Spiegelthal an old site exists on one of the ridges of Sipylos to the south of Menemen.

My last excursion from Smyrna was with Mr. Ramsay, in search of the inscribed stones I had heard of two years ago as existing at a village called Kara Oghlanya, at the eastern extremity of Sipylos. They turned out to be Greek mortuary inscriptions. One of them was in the village church, and consisted merely of the two words: ΜΗΝΟΦΙΑΟΝ ΜΕΝΕΚΑΤΟΡ[Σ]. A second was upon one of the two ancient columns which served to support a fountain, and ran

... ΗΣΤΙΣ ΜΕΝΕΚΑ
[ΤΟΤΕ] ΤΗΡ ΑΤΤΗΣ ΚΑΙ
[ΑΝ]ΔΡΟΣ ΑΤΤΗΣ ΚΑΙ ΤΕ
[Κ]ΙΝΩΝ ΚΑΒΙΟΤ ΕΤΥ[ΑΡ]ΙΣ
ΤΗΠΙΟΝ ΑΝΘΩΚΗΝ.

The third was a good half-mile distant, at a fountain close to a collection of hovels called Kojah Kushely. It was inscribed on a marble tablet which had been broken, but had once represented the façade of a temple supported upon two Ionic columns with three groups of figures between them. The inscription was as follows: ΑΡΙΣΤΟΒΟΤΑΟΝ ΠΥΘΟΚΑΗΟΥΣ ΑΡΕΜΟΤΝ ΠΥΘΟΚΑΗΝ ΑΡΙΣΤΟΒΟΤΑΟΥ ΣΩΣΙΤΕΝΟΥ. Three wreaths were below, the first of which contained the letters Ο ΔΗΜΟΣ; the other two were broken. We heard of other inscriptions in a ravine a little to the westward of Koja Kushely, which runs between the high ground on which both Koja Kushely and Kara Oghlanya stand and the precipitous eastern cliff of Sipylos. A Greek city probably existed here, from which the columns and inscriptions have been brought, and I believe that the old road from Nimphi and Karabel to Magnesia will be found to have run through it. We intended to have visited "Humann's acropolis," eastward of the Niobe, the day after our exploration of Kara Oghlanya; but bad weather obliged us to return to Smyrna.

A. H. SAYCE.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ARANA, D. B. Histoire de la Guerre du Pacifique, 1879-80. 1^{re} Partie. Paris: Dumaine. 4 fr.
- BOYD, R. N. Chili: Sketches of Chili and the Chilians during the War, 1879-80. W. H. Allen & Co. 10s. 6d.
- CAPPEL, A. The Old and New Churches of London. Bumpus. 16s.
- GOSSE, E. W. English Odes, with a Critical Introduction. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 6s.
- GUTTERBOCK, P. Die englischen Krankenhäuser im Vergleich m. den deutschen Hospitälern. Berlin: Hirschwald. 2 M. 50 Pf.
- HELLENBACH, L. B. Aus dem Tagebuche e. Philosophen. Wien: Rosner. 5 M.
- HULME, F. E. The Town, College, and Neighbourhood of Marlborough. Stanford. 6s.
- KERULF, R. Ueb. den Kopf d. Praxitelischen Hermes. Stuttgart: Spemann. 2 M. 65 Pf.
- PLUMACHER, O. Zwei Individualisten der Schopenhauer'schen Schule. Wien: Rosner. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- STATHAM, F. R. Blacks, Boers, and British. A Three-cornered Problem. Macmillan. 6s.
- STEVENS, R. L. Virginius Puerisque, and other Papers. O. Kegan Paul & Co. 6s.
- TAOLLOPE, H. M. Corneille and Racine. Blackwood. 2s. 6d.

HISTORY.

- AUBÉ, B. Les Chrétiens dans l'Empire romain, de la Fin des Antiques au Milieu du III^e Siècle. Paris: Didier. 7 fr. 50 c.
- BLANC, Louis. Dix Ans de l'Histoire d'Angleterre. T. 10^e et dernière. Paris: C. Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
- BOHMKE, J. F. Regesta imperii. V. 1198-1272. Neu hrsg. u. ergänzt v. Ficker. 2. Lfg. Innsbruck: Wagner. 16 M.
- MADAME DE CAYLUS. Souvenirs et Correspondance de. mis en Ordre par Kaüicé. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
- MAGNIENVILLE, R. de. Le maréchal d'Humières et le Gouvernement de Compiègne (1648-94). Paris: Plon.
- OESTRALBY, II. Historisch-geographisches Wörterbuch d. deutschen Mittelalters. 2. Lfg. Gotha: Perthes. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- POSECK, O. Die Markgrafen v. Meissen u. das Hans Wettin bis zu Conrad dem Grossen. Leipzig: Giesecke. 9 M.
- RUSLE, A. de. Antoine de Bourbon et Jeanne d'Albret. T. 1. Paris: Lahitte. 8 fr.
- SZANTÓ, E. Untersuchungen üb. das attische Bürgerrecht. Wien: Konegen. 1 M. 60 P.
- TOMASCHKE, W. Die Goten in Taurien. Wien: Holder. 2 M.
- VILLARI, P. Niccolò Machiavelli e i suoi Tempi. Vol. II. Torino: Loescher. 7 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BERT, Paul. Premières Notions de Zoologie. Paris: G. Masson.
- CARTAILHAC, E. Congrès international d'Anthropologie et d'Archéologie préhistoriques: Rapport sur la Session de Lisbonne. Paris: Nilsson. 5 fr.
- ENDSWORTH, F. W. Mathematical Psychics: An Essay on the Application of Mathematics to the Moral Sciences. O. Kegan Paul & Co. 7s. 6d.
- FRASER, A. C. Berkeley. Blackwood. 3s. 6d.
- HANIEL, J. Die Fühl- und Geruchsinne in der Stoppenberger n. Horst-Hertener Mulde d. westfälischen Steinkohlengebirges. Essen: Bader. 30 M.
- HARPER, T. The Metaphysics of the School. Vol. II. Macmillan. 18s.
- LOBIOL, P. de. Description de quatre Echinodermes nouveaux. Berlin: Friedländer. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- MAJOR, C. J. F. Beiträge zur Geschichte der fossilen Pferde insbesondere Italiens. Berlin: Friedländer. 16 M.
- SCHUECK, A. Die Wirbelstürme od. Cyclonen n. Orkangewalt nach dem jetzigen Standpunkte unserer Kenntnis derselben. Odenburg: Schulze. 6 M.
- WALDNER, H. Deutsche Fauna, m. Berücksicht. der angrenz. Gebiete Oesterreichs, Frankreichs u. der Schweiz. 6. Hft. Heidelberg: Winter. 2 M. 50 Pf.

PHILOLOGY.

- HAUPF, P. Akkadische u. sumerische Keilschrifttexte. 2. Lfg. Akkadische Texte. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 10 M.
- KRAUL, J. Demotische u. assyrische Contracte. Wien: Konegen. 80 Pf.

LANE'S Arabic-English Lexicon. Ed. S. Lane-Poole. Vol. VII. Fasc. 1. Williams & Norgate. 6s.

LUEBBERT, E. Dissertation de Pindari cermine Olympico decimo. Kiel: Universitäts-Buchhandlung. 1 M. 20 Pf.

PIZAN, O. de. Le Livre du Chemin de long Estude. Publié pour la première fois d'après sept Manuscrits de Paris, de Bruxelles et de Berlin par R. Püschel. Berlin: Damböhrer. 6 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A FORGOTTEN EDITION OF IGNATIUS.

Laverton Rectory, Bath: March 29, 1881.

It may be interesting to some of your readers to have an account of an edition of the Ignatian (and other) Epistles published at Paris in 1516 (in quarto, at the Ascension Press), which, though it was an editio princeps in respect of one Ignatian letter (and also of seven letters of St. Antony the Great), and though it is mentioned by Ussher and Pearson, has been almost universally forgotten for the last two hundred years. The account will bring to light such an amount of errors and omissions as is, perhaps, without a parallel in the case of any other work.

In order to make my statement intelligible, I must begin by saying that the first publication (but in Latin only) of the fifteen reputed Ignatian Epistles took place at Paris at the close of the fifteenth and in the early part of the sixteenth century. Three of the Epistles (as well as the Reply of the Virgin to the last of the three) were published in 1495, at the end of a Life of Thomas à Becket. Eleven others (with Polycarp's Epistle, never before printed) were published by Faber Stapulensis in 1498, annexed to the works of Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite. All these fourteen Ignatian letters (as well as the Virgin's letter and that of Polycarp) were republished by Symphorien Champier (Champierius) in 1516, with the addition of another Ignatian letter never before printed, viz., that to Maria Cassobolita. They were annexed to seven Epistles (printed now for the first time) of St. Antony the Great. The book bore the title of Epistolæ Sanctissimorum, followed by an enumeration (see below) of the writers of the Epistles, and the number written by each. The contents of this 1516 book were republished at Cologne in 1536 (in folio, at the press of Peter Quentel), annexed to the works of Pseudo-Dionysius (with the Commentary of Dionysius Carthusianus). Strangely enough, the 1516 book has been almost entirely overlooked by bibliographers and editors, having been confounded with the 1536 reprint. This is the more surprising, because Ussher, in his edition of Ignatius, in two of the three passages (Prolegomena, pp. cxxvii. and cxlii., and second page of Preface to Notes) in which he mentions Champier's edition, expressly distinguishes it from the 1536 reprint, of which he himself made use. Moreover, though he often quotes the readings of the latter, he nowhere associates Champier's name with it. Apparently, however, he had not seen the earlier book, for (contrary to his wont) he does not, in mentioning it, give its date, or the place of its publication, or its other contents (i.e., in addition to the Ignatian Epistles), nor does he ever quote its readings.

Pearson also, though he mentions the earlier book, seems never to have seen it, and was apparently mistaken as to its date. For his account (Vind. Ign., pp. 25 and 27, A. C. L. edition) implies that it was published at the close of the fifteenth or very beginning of the sixteenth century, whereas its real date was 1516. This mistake, however, shows that Pearson did not (like almost all subsequent writers) confound it with the 1536 reprint. In fact he never mentions the latter, for the words "Anno MDXXXVI," inserted in square brackets in the A. C. L. reprint of the Vindiciae, are due to a mistake of the learned and usually most accurate editor, Archdeacon Churton, who was misled by the common account, the incorrect-ness of which it is surprising that he did not discover from its inconsistency with Pearson's own words.

In spite, however, of the mention of the earlier book by Ussher and Pearson, its existence seems to have been unknown to all the bibliographers except Panzer, and to all the editors of Ignatius (since Ussher) except Zahn, and even to the latter till after a large part of his edition had been printed off. Moreover, Panzer and Zahn make strange mistakes in connexion with it, as shall now be shown.

Panzer mentions the book twice, on two consecutive pages (vol. viii., p. 30, No. 851; and p. 31, No. 859) under two quite different titles, evidently in ignorance that his two articles relate to one and the same work. In his former article, he gives the title thus: "Epistolæ S. Antonii Magni VII. cum explanationibus Symph. Champierii. Item Ignatii Antiocheni Epistolæ XV. et aliorum," the words "et aliorum" being substituted for "Divae Virginis Mariæ ad Ignatium Epistola I. Divi Polycarpi ad Philippenses Epistola I." The importance of this non-enumeration of the full contents will appear hereafter. In his later article, Panzer gives the title as "Epistolæ Sanctissimorum immo et Sancti Sanctorum collectæ industria Symphoriani Champierii," without any further specification of the contents. It is plain that Panzer had never seen the book itself, but derived his two titles from two different catalogues (which he mentions), each of which evidently gave a different part of the full title. Moreover, in his two notices (vol. vi., p. 434, No. 801, and Supplement, vol. xi., p. 407) of the 1536 book, he does not mention Champier's name, nor give any intimation that a portion of its contents consisted of a reprint of the 1516 book. It is clear, however, that he had not himself seen the 1536 book any more than the earlier one.

Zahn has made still more extraordinary mistakes. In his note on p. 298 he follows the common account in speaking of Champier's edition as having been published at Cologne in 1536, adding, however, that he had never seen a copy of it. But in his subsequently written note on p. xli. of the Prolegomena, he says that he had afterwards found a copy of the 1516 book (of the existence of which he had apparently never before heard), and gives its title at length. But his discovery of the book seems to have led him into the strange error of inferring that the 1536 edition never had any existence at all!

Nor is this all. Strangely enough, Zahn nowhere in his edition mentions the fact that Champier was the first who published the Epistle to Maria Cassobolita. On the contrary, his critical note on p. 179 would naturally lead the reader to suppose that that Epistle was included in Faber Stapulensis' edition of 1498. And similarly, his words on p. 298 seem naturally to imply that Champier merely republished together the two sets of Epistles which had already been published separately, one set in 1495, the other in 1498. This omission of any reference to Champier's having been the first to publish the Epistle to Maria Cassobolita is the more surprising because the matter is stated correctly (except in respect of the date of Champier's edition) on p. 82 of Zahn's previous work upon Ignatius (published in 1873), and also because in his edition itself the non-insertion of that Epistle in Faber Stapulensis' edition is mentioned on p. xxix. of the Prolegomena (compare also p. xxv., where the number of Epistles in Faber's edition is rightly said to be eleven, not twelve). Apparently, therefore, the omission can only be attributed to some extraordinary oversight.

It may further be mentioned that a notice (plainly derived from Panzer) of the 1516 book is to be found in the article "Ignatius," in Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography and Mythology. The account is correct so far as it goes, but imperfect, the writer having evidently been misled by Panzer's non-enumeration (already pointed out) of the full contents of the book. Accordingly, he does not mention among its contents the letter of the Virgin or that of Polycarp. Moreover, in his later article, "Polycarpus," he makes no reference at all to the 1516 book, evidently not having been aware that Polycarp's Epistle was included in it.

It may be added that there is no copy in the Bodleian of either the 1516 or 1536 book, though there are copies of the earlier ones of 1495 and 1498. The absence of the 1536 book is the more surprising, because there are copies of other works of Dionysius Carthusianus printed at the same press in 1533, 1534, 1535, and 1543. But a copy of the 1536 book was made use of by Funk, the latest editor of Ignatius (see his Prolegomena, p. lv.), who, however, seems to have been quite ignorant of the existence of the earlier book of 1516.

J. H. BACKHOUSE.

PS.—It may be useful to enquirers into the early editions of Ignatius to be informed that two editions (not one only, as generally stated) of eleven of the Epistles were published (along with other works) in the year 1502—one at Strassburg (Argentina), the other at Venice. Ussher and most other editors and bibliographers mention the former only; Zahn the latter (which he himself made use of: see his Prolegomena, p. xxvi.). Panzer mentions both—the Strassburg one in vol. vi., p. 29, No. 21; the Venice one (of which he himself had a copy) in vol. viii., p. 353, No. 117. But in the Index to Panzer (vol. x.) under "Ignatius" the Strassburg edition is by an oversight omitted. The Bodleian has no copy of either.

"CHARGER" AND "SURGER."

Newton Abbot: April 6, 1881.

Speaking to some old folk in a Devonshire village the other evening on the changes which have come over words since our present version of the Bible came into use, I mentioned the word charger. An old man remarked that he remembered people speaking of a charger and a surger, used years ago for sifting meal, the one being fine and the other coarse. Perhaps students of our dialects have met with the words elsewhere. HILDERIO FRIEND.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, April 11, 7.30 p.m. Aristotelian: "Fichte," by Mr. J. Wallis.
8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "Supposed Palaeolithic Tools of the Valley of the Axe, Devonshire," by Mr. N. Whitley.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Kafiristan and the Shiah-Posh Kahr of the Hindu Kush," by Col. H. C. Tanner.
TUESDAY, April 12, 7.45 p.m. Statistical.
8 p.m. Anthropological Institute: "The Ethnological Relations of the Gypsies," by Mr. J. Lucas; "Sepulchral Remains at Rathdown, County Wicklow," by Mr. G. A. Kinahan.
8 p.m. West London Scientific Association: "Ancient Life—History of the Earth," by Mr. J. Logan Lobley.
8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "The Relative Value of Upland and Tidal Waters in producing Scour," by Mr. W. R. Browne.
WEDNESDAY, April 13, 4.30 p.m. Royal.
8 p.m. Microscopical: "The Diatoms of the London Clay," by Mr. W. H. Shrubsole and Mr. F. Kitton.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
THURSDAY, April 14, 8 p.m. Society of Telegraph Engineers: "The Application of Electricity to Lighting and Heating," by Mr. St. George Lane Fox; "A Portable Absolute Galvanometer and a New Transmission Dynamometer," by Prof. Ayrton and Prof. Perry.
8 p.m. Mathematical: "The Geodesic Curvature of a Curve on a Surface," by Prof. Cayley.

SCIENCE.

Kamilaroi and Kurnai. Group-marriage and Relationship, and Marriage by Elopement, drawn chiefly from the Usage of the Australian Aborigines. Also the Kurnai Tribe, their Customs in Peace and War. By Lorimer Fison, M.A., and A. W. Howitt, F.G.S. With an Introduction by Lewis H. Morgan, LL.D. (Melbourne: Robertson; London: Macmillan.)

MR. FISON, a missionary long resident in Australia and Fiji, and Mr. Howitt, the well-known Australian explorer, have, in this volume, done an important piece of anthropological work. Their evidence belongs to the now fast-growing study of the social systems of prehistoric man, by investigation of the remains of rude forms of marriage and descent which have lasted on in the world. Among these relics of early society are—parentage or clanship reckoned on the mother's side, not the father's; kinship traced not in lines but in classes, as where, for instance, a man's uncles and aunts as we call them are reckoned as his fathers and mothers; the custom of exogamy or marrying-out, which forbids a man to take a wife of his own clan or group; marriage by capture, where the husband forcibly carries off a wife from her people, or pretends to do so as a ceremonial form; lastly, the rule of mutual avoidance between the married couple and their fathers-and mothers-in-law, who "cut" one another when they meet by chance, and may not even mention one another's names. These and various other remarkable customs are so widely spread and so characteristic of the lower stages of civilisation that, notwithstanding the doubt and difficulty in fully accounting for them, it seems clear that they are rooted in the primitive history of mankind. On each and all of these early social institutions the present authors have information to give. We may or may not agree with their interpretation of the facts; but the facts are there to be explained on some theory. To understand Messrs. Fison and Howitt's way of explaining the savage society which they know so intimately, it must be borne in mind that they were led into its study by following up the well-known researches of Dr. L. H. Morgan, who stands godfather to the volume before us, writing an Introduction to it. Here the temptation must be resisted of plunging into a general discussion of Dr. Morgan's theory of early marriage and descent. It will be enough to bring into view Messrs. Fison and Howitt's own observations, and see how they bear on the problem of primitive society as it stands at present.

Years ago, when Dr. Morgan's experience as a naturalised Iroquois had set him collecting information as to barbaric marriage-law, one of his circulars of questions reached Mr. Fison, who thereupon got information of a state of marriage-customs among the Australians which has not been found anywhere else in the world. It had long been known that the Kamilaroi tribes are divided into four classes or groups, persons being not only forbidden to marry in their own group, but restricted to one of the other three, which is their inter-marrying group. But a settler, Mr. Lance, now added that, although the natives are thus limited to marriage with the women of one group, they have some sort of marriage-tie with all the women of that group, so that, for instance, any Kubbi meeting any Ippata (these are two of the class-names) addresses and considers her as a wife. This account was taken up by Dr. Morgan as one of the fundamental facts in his Ancient Society, but (as was pointed out by the present reviewer in noticing that work, ACADEMY, July 20, 1878) more examination was needed before students could accept and understand a conjugal system, under which "one-quarter of all the males are united in marriage with one-quarter of all the females." From Mr. Fison's further enquiries, we now find it confirmed that such a tie is really considered to exist; but on the other hand that it is only practically carried out in a limited way, especially in the frequent shifting of marriages, and in still more temporary unions, as when a native travelling perhaps 1,000 miles from home, and falling in with a tribe whose very language he may not understand, but which is connected with his own by the Kamilaroi class-system, has only to make the regular gesture sign, and a wife of the proper class will at once be made over to him. This is certainly "group marriage" on an extraordinary scale, and the system of female kinship naturally goes with it, for no other would be possible. Indeed, it is admitted by all students that the reckoning of kinship on the mother's side is evidence of marriage being, or having been, in a low and promiscuous state. Even its ruder forms are, however, strictly regulated by custom, and must not be mistaken for mere lawlessness. Thus the Kamilaroi marriage-system, as now disclosed, proves that many Australian practices set down by civilised travellers to want of moral sense were, to the natives, rightful acts. Nothing can be more instructive to the student of morals than the comparison of acts held immoral by an Australian and a European. The natives who take as a matter of course the extremely mixed marriage just described with a man's proper wife-class, look with horror at his marrying a girl of either of the prohibited classes. Though she may not be at all nearly related to him (as Europeans reckon relationship), the offence is punishable by death. This brings us at once into the perplexed problem of exogamy. Why do men in so many regions, and from savagery upward, divide into groups or clans and forbid marriage within one's own? The system appears in its simplest form where there are only two divisions; for instance, the Mount Gambier tribe divides into two inter-marrying groups, Kumite and Kroki. As Mr. Fison plainly sees, this simplest division was no doubt the earliest, and the more complex systems are to be explained by subdivision of the original two groups. Now, as to the cause which brought about the division into inter-marrying groups. Dr. Morgan takes it that marriage began in an earlier and lower stage, where the community formed a "consanguine family," and afterwards the practice of groups marrying not within themselves but with other groups arose "by the gradual exclusion of own brothers and sisters from the marriage relation, the evils of which could not forever escape human observation." His remarks in the Introduction here are not clear as to whether he thinks the change was made consciously and intentionally. Mr. Fison to some extent follows this line, arguing that, if men ever did live in an undivided commune, such a "reformatory movement" would be the most likely method by which they might begin the advance to a better system of marriage. But he faces more directly than his leader the awkward question how men living in so rude and promiscuous a state could become aware of the evils arising from near unions which they could hardly even trace, and which, when traced, would offer difficult discussion to a society of physicians and anthropologists, let alone a herd of savages. Knowing the savage mind perhaps as well as any man living, Mr. Fison is so sensible of the incapacity of utter savages to have made such a social move, that he quits his usual naturalistic mode of argument, and suggests that they must have had an impulse from a higher power. But the reader, before entertaining the question how savages came to such a reform, will do well to ascertain how far it really would be a reform in preventing close marrying-in. Take the two divisions among the Queensland natives, which bear the totem-names of Eaglehawk and Crow, and see the effect of two such classes being obliged to marry into one another, all the children bearing the mother's name. It is quite true that an Eaglehawk man will be excluded from marrying his sisters or half-sisters, who must be Eaglehawks like himself, while also he is cut off from cousins on the female side indefinitely. But there is nothing to prevent his marrying his own daughters, who, like their mothers, are Crows, as are also his aunts and nieces on the male side. The Kamilaroi system of four classes, worked two by two in alternate generations, is really effective in barring kin-marriage; but Mr. Fison would admit, what is doubtless the case, that this by no means model institution, in which we have already noticed the curious combination of restriction and promiscuity, is a special growth among a particular set of tribes. It is, in fact, unproved that exogamy had originally anything to do with preventing marriage between blood-relations. Mr. McLennan's theory of its origin is quite different, that it arose from the practice of female infanticide leading to the custom of carrying-off wives from other tribes, so that home-marriage with one's own people was superseded. Sir John Lubbock gives it a different turn by the suggestion that, whereas in the commune at home no wife was the private property of a husband, if he brought home a captive she at any rate belonged to him, and so arose the custom of always getting wives out of other tribes. Messrs. Fison and Howitt bring against these views some evidence which is at any rate important for itself. They confirm Eyre's statement made years ago that, though infanticide is common, girls are not more often deserted than boys—indeed, they can soon take care of themselves, and gather more food than they consume. Thus it is argued that among low savages there is no such scarcity of women as would bring on the practice of capture.

In fact, the women are there, and it is the class-law which does not allow the men to marry them. Capture is one of the ordinary ways of getting a wife; but it appears that, among part at least of the Australian population, it is only a rough way of enforcing an already existing legal right, for a man may only carry off a wife from the class he is allowed to marry into.

"If a warrior took to himself a captive who belonged to a forbidden class, he would be hunted down like a wild beast; and, unless he managed to keep out of the way until the hot wrath of the tribe had cooled down, he would be killed, and his captive with him. This is a strong statement, but it rests upon strong evidence."

To account for this, it would, doubtless, be answered on the other side that the rule of exogamy, once established, may have become so strong as to control the very capture it arose from. But it would lead us too far afield to go into this, much more to discuss other causes which may have led to the law of marrying out of the clan. The fact is that, though exogamy is practically connected both with wife-capture and with barring kin-marriage, its first motive may have been something different from either.

Mr. Howitt's account of the Kurnai people just north of Bass's Straits introduces us to a new set of marriage customs. Here the rule is elopement. The lad and girl make love to one another without the knowledge of her parents, and run away together. The bride's family, furious, go in quest of her; and if caught and brought back she will be severely punished, her mother and brother will beat her, and her father even spear her through the legs. As for the husband, whenever he returns, he has to fight his wife's male relatives. The pair may have to elope two or three times, with new pursuit and fighting, till at last her family grow tired of objecting, and the mother will say, "Oh! it's all right, better let him have her." The wonderful thing is that this is not exceptional, but the regular marriage rite of the tribe. The anger is not real, and when the people are charged with being cruel they answer that it is not intended as cruelty, but simply to follow an ancestral custom. The consequence of this Kurnai custom is a change toward civilised ideas of marriage; it is no longer a shifting union between one group or tribe and another, but a real pairing by mutual choice of man and wife, and, to some extent, male descent comes in with it. An ingenious attempt is made to account for this social change by the Kurnai becoming cut off from others by moving into this corner of the land. No longer having their corresponding groups within reach to marry into, they would be compelled to marry within their own community; but, the old feeling being still strong upon them, they would still go through the pretence of treating such marriages as criminal, as they would be under Kamilaroi law. The Kurnai elopement marriage shows another interesting feature. Though it is condoned at last by the wife's family, the man is never allowed to look at, speak to, or live in the same camp with his wife's mother. This is the best fact yet produced in favour of the explanation of the custom of avoiding parents-in-law, as meaning that the act of taking their daughter, though practically allowed, cannot be openly agreed to by their acknowledging him. So deeply rooted is this custom in Australia that it retains its hold on natives under missionary influence.

"A Brabrolung, who is a member of the Church of England, was one day talking to me. His wife's mother was passing at some little distance, and I called to her. Suffering at the time from cold, I could not make her hear, and said to the Brabrolung, 'Call Mary; I want to speak to her.' He took no notice whatever, but looked vacantly on the ground. I spoke to him again sharply, but still without his responding. I then said, 'What do you mean by taking no notice of me?' He thereupon called out to his wife's brother, who was at a little distance, 'Tell Mary Mr. Howitt wants her,' and, turning to me, continued reproachfully, 'You know very well I could not do that—you know I cannot speak to that old woman.'"

Among the customs of the Kurnai here described is their use of the instrument they call turndün, which travellers elsewhere in Australia know by other native names, as witarna, müyümkar, &c. It is merely a flat slip of wood a few inches long, narrowing to one or both ends, and fastened by one end to a thong for whirling it round, when it gives an intermittent whirring or roaring noise, heard a long way off. The action of this simple contrivance is mechanically curious, and it is known as a country boy's plaything in Europe, called in England a "whizzer" or "bull-roarer," in Germany a "brummer." How old it may be in the civilised world is hard to say, even ordinary books on games not mentioning anything so rifling. But among the Australian savages it is a solemn and awful instrument, used to warn off the women from the scene where initiation into manhood or other mysterious rites are going on. For a woman to see it, or a man to show it her, was, by native law, death to both. The Gippsland deluge-tradition is that long ago there was land to the south where the sea now is, till some children found a turndün, which they took home to the camp and showed to the women; immediately the earth crumbled away, and it was all water, and the Kurnai were drowned. What calls the more attention to the account of the Australian bull-roarer is that lately a similar instrument has been sent from South Africa; and, strange to say, it appears that it is there used for just its two principal Australian purposes—namely, for rain-making, and in connexion with the rites of initiation to warn the women off. There is also a New Zealand bull-roarer in the Christy Museum, but the customs connected with it have perhaps not yet been set down. It need hardly be said that the extraordinary correspondence in its ceremonial use among races so different as the Kafirs of South Africa and the Australians calls for careful enquiry. Very likely these lines may be read by someone who has further information to give.

In anthropology nothing is insignificant. Enough has been said of the contents of Messrs. Fison and Howitt's work to confirm the scientific importance of the Australian marriage-customs, if only they can be thoroughly understood and reduced to a system. This is not easy to do; indeed, the exceptions and anomalies and variations of rule among different tribes make the study of the subject in its whole difficulty a task for legal minds used to the problem of contingent remainders. The simpler and clearer points which have been here noticed sufficiently prove that a careful study of Kamilaroi and Kurnai will repay the student's labour.

EDWARD B. TYLOR.

OBITUARY.

GEOLOGISTS throughout the world will observe with deep regret that the obituary of the current week includes the name of Sir Philip De Malpas Grey-Egerton. For nearly half-a-century Sir Philip was a diligent student of palaeontology, and became known as one of the highest authorities on fossil fishes and reptiles. His list of scientific writings includes upwards of fifty papers, commencing as far back as 1833. He also contributed to the Decades of the Geological Survey some important descriptions of fossil fishes. Like the Earl of Emswiler, he possessed a fine cabinet of fish remains, and was always anxious that his specimens should be studied by his fellow-labourers in palaeontology. Up to almost the very day of his death he took an active interest in the affairs of the Geological Society of London, and was a regular attendant at its meetings. In 1873 the society awarded to him its highest prize—the Wollaston Medal—which he received at the hands of the Duke of Argyll, who was then the president of the society.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

PETERMANN'S Mittheilungen publish maps of Dr. Felkin's route from Lado to Dem Suleyman and Dar Fur, and of the southern portion of the Argentine Confederation, the latter based upon surveys made during Gen. Roca's expedition against the Indians. The forts established along the Rio Negro as a defence against the Indians are shown upon this latter; and as the river is navigable throughout the year for a distance of 350 miles, and flows through a valley of great fertility, it appears to present great facilities for the establishment of agricultural colonies. Unfortunately, these advantages are almost neutralised by disastrous floods, which occur regularly in October and December, when the snows melt in the Andes, and inundate the country for miles around. Herr Buchta contributes a paper on his recent journey to the Upper Nile, in the course of which he took numerous photographs, which we understand are about to be published as an album.

DR. CREVAUX is reported to have arrived at Trinidad. He ascended the Rio Magdalena as far as Neyva, crossed the Andes to the Goyabezo, a head-stream of the Orinoco, and followed the latter to its mouth.

THE April number of the Monthly Record of Geography opens with Mr. W. M. Crocker's notes on Sarawak and North Borneo, illustrated by an interesting map of the island. A noticeable feature in Mr. Crocker's paper is the information he furnishes regarding the strange customs of the Milanows, about whom hardly anything was previously known. Dr. B. F. Bradshaw furnishes a sketch-map and some notes on the Chobe River, South Central Africa, of which probably no one is better qualified to speak, as he has travelled on it more or less for six years. The account of a journey along the coasts of New Ireland and the neighbouring islands by the Rev. G. Brown deals with a region regarding which hardly any accurate information is yet accessible. Among the geographical notes we find some particulars as to Uguha, Central Africa, and its inhabitants, among whom, as has been mentioned in the ACADEMY, the agents of the London Missionary Society founded a station about the end of 1879. In Mr. Brounmon's account of his visit to the Miao-tze tribes in the Chinese province of Kweichow some interesting information is given respecting the customs, dress, &c., of those little-known people, as well as a description of their singular musical instruments. There is afterwards an account of the recent exploration of Nullarbor plain on the west side of South Australia; nor must we omit to refer to M. Sibirakoff's narrative of the voyage of the Oscar Dickson to its unintended winter quarters in Gyda Bay, West Siberia, and his subsequent proceedings.

THE International Geographical Institute of Berne has put forward a project for the establishment of an international school for training travellers. The programme of study is a formidable one, and is divided into two distinct divisions. The first includes instruction in numerous branches of knowledge more or less necessary for a traveller, and the second practical training in the field.

BEFORE leaving for Siam, Mr. Carl Bock, who has recently been engaged for some time in travelling in Southern and Eastern Borneo, made arrangements with Messrs. S. Lord and Co. for the publication of his experiences in that island. The work will contain numerous illustrations, some of the most interesting of which, we believe, will depict the light-skinned race found in the forests of the interior.

At a meeting of the French Geographical Society on April 1, Dr. Oscar Lenz gave an account of his journey through Morocco to Timbuktu, and thence to Senegal. In the interior of Morocco he mentioned having met with prehistoric, Punic, and Roman remains, which, owing to the fanaticism of the people, foreigners have never yet had an opportunity of examining. In the desert he found stone implements scattered about, which at Timbuktu are used for crushing grain. Dr. Lenz also gave particulars of the manners and customs of the tribes through which he passed during his journey; and he stated that he had met with no trace of writing or hieroglyphs among them, their legends, &c., being preserved and handed down by priests.

WE regret to learn that a report has reached Paris of a terrible disaster having befallen Col. Flatters' expedition, which was engaged in exploring the route for the Trans-Sahara Railway. The details of the report are very circumstantial; and, according to the latest advices from the party, they would probably have reached the locality referred to (four days' march south of Assin) at the time indicated. The report referred to, being based on the statements of natives who have reached Wargla professing to have escaped the fate of their companions, must for the present be received with reserve; and we may hope that there is at least some exaggeration in the rumour that all the Europeans were killed, with the solitary exception of a sergeant of native infantry.

DR. BUCHNER's letters on a recent visit to the residence of the Matiamvo have been published in the Mittheilungen of the German African Association. The Musumba of that powerful potentate lies a day's journey to the west of the site it occupied at the time of Dr. Pogge's visit. Its exact position, according to Dr. Buchner's astronomical observations, is lat. 8° 24' 18" S., long. 22° 50' E.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Geology of the Principal European Capitals.—An interesting little work, entitled Der Boden der Hauptstädte Europa's, has lately been written by Herr Felix Karrer, and published by A. Hölder, of Vienna. The subject with which it deals is one of great importance, inasmuch as the health and welfare of a city are dependent to a large extent upon the geological conditions of its site. M. Karrer describes, in succession, the geological features of the ground beneath and around the following cities:—Vienna, Paris, London, Brussels, Berlin, St. Petersburg, and Rome. These descriptions are illustrated by horizontal sections and by well-borings. In describing the London basin, the author derives his information mainly from Mr. Whitaker's writings, and from Mr. Stanford's geological Library map. There may be nothing strikingly original in the work, but it is unquestionably useful to find, in a collected form, a great body of information for which the reader would otherwise have to search through a multitude of scientific memoirs.

At a general meeting of the Royal Astronomical Society on April 1 a series of resolutions was proposed condemnatory of the Government grant to the Committee on Solar Physics at South Kensington. Under the guise of an attack upon the principle of endowing research, it is idle to conceal that a personal attack was intended to be made. A certain number of persons, whose scientific eminence cannot be denied, have for some time past promoted an agitation on this question, in which they have not disdained to receive the support of the Anti-Vivisection Society. On every ground, therefore, we are extremely glad that the following amendment, proposed by Prof. H. J. S. Smith, of Oxford, and seconded by Mr. Moulton, late of Cambridge, was adopted by a decisive majority:—"That, under existing circumstances, there is not sufficient reason for the expression of any opinion by the Royal Astronomical Society, in its corporate capacity, upon the question of the endowment of research by Government." It is to be hoped that this will finally settle a course of proceedings which threatened to assume the character of a persecution.

AN imposing monument has recently been placed in the cemetery of Père-la-Chaise to the memory of J. Crocé-Spinelli and Sivel, the two unfortunate aéronauts who fell victims to their scientific zeal when accompanying M. Gaston Tissandier on one of his scientific balloon expeditions in 1875. The monument, of which a model was to be seen at the Exhibition of 1878, consists of a white marble sarcophagus on a granite base, and, above, the recumbent figures of the aéronauts in bronze, clasping one another by the hand. The inscription states that they died at the height of 8,000 metres, or under 26,000 feet. It will be remembered that Messrs. Glaisher and Coxwell, in 1862, in the celebrated ascent when both lost consciousness, certainly attained an elevation of 29,000 feet, and probably 37,000 feet, or about seven miles. The monument was inaugurated with a speech from M. Paul Bert, who stated that the subscription for the families of the deceased had realised a total of nearly £4,000.

WE learn from Nature that the French Minister of Public Instruction intends to do a great service to science by publishing monthly a résumé of the scientific work being done in France, under the title of Revue des Sciences. The Review will be under the direction of the venerable M. H. Milne-Edwards, and will consist exclusively of analyses and summaries. It will embrace the work of individuals and of societies all over the country, and each number will contain about one hundred pages.

As a result of the excavations which have recently been carried on at Bernissart, in Hainaut, the Royal Museum at Brussels has acquired possession of a large and valuable collection of fossil remains, including twenty iguanodons, five different species of crocodiles, and more than three thousand fishes.

BOOKS ON ORIENTAL STUDIES.

A NEW journal devoted to Oriental literature, entitled Revue critique internationale, Etudes orientales, africaines, océaniques et américaines (Paris: Maisonneuve), contains in its first number some excellent specimens of what critical reviews of books ought to be. The reviews are written by competent judges, who, without dealing much in either praise or blame, are satisfied to point out the strong and weak points of every book. The conseil de rédaction consists of Messrs. C. de Harlez, F. Justi, and K. Patkanoff; the chief contributors to the first number are Dr. Orterer, F. Lenormant, de Harlez, Lamy, Patkanoff, Pizzi, de Restaing, &c. There is a good review of a new Sanskrit grammar by Mr. Whitney, which is declared to be not only the latest, but, as it ought to be, the best. But why is Mr. Whitney always called Mr. Withney? M. Lenormant does full justice to Dr. Hommel as one of the few truly scholar-like students of Assyriology. M. de Harlez publishes some very judicious remarks on M. Bergaigne's system of Vedic interpretation. M. Lamy gives a history of the Thesaurus Syriacus and its various contributors, expressing approval of its learned editor, Mr. P. Smith. M. Pizzi takes the part of M. de Harlez in his opposition to M. Darmesteter, without apparently being aware how small the difference really is between those two eminent interpreters of the Avesta. There are several other articles which will be read with interest and advantage. Whether there was a call for a new Oriental journal we cannot tell. To many scholars every new journal seems a new evil on account of what in Germany is called the "zersplittrende Einfluss," the "splintering influence," which journals exercise on scientific work. If this new journal can not only hold its own, but put an end to some of its numerous competitors, it will be all the more welcome to students of limited time and leisure.

THE Indian Antiquary for March continues Mr. Fleet's important series of papers on Sanskrit and Old-Canarese inscriptions. The present instalment deals with the inscriptions at Bādāmi, and includes a new and better lithograph of the Mangalarāja inscription given as pl. xxxii. of Mr. Burgess's first archaeological Report. Mr. Fazl Lutfullah contributes an important article on the origin and history of the famous sect of the Wāhābis. Mr. Raghunathji proceeds with his account of the "Bombay Beggars and Criers," giving a popular account, among others, of the abominations of the Śāktas. Dr. Kielhorn discusses the history of the so-called Jainendra school of grammarians. There is a note by Mr. Beal on the origin of the Chinese belief in Kwan-Yin, first regarded as a male spirit, and afterwards as a female; and a further instalment of M. Senart's very important and interesting essay on Asoka's Edicts is given in an English translation. The edicts discussed are the fourth and fifth, enjoining the practice of religion and appointing ministers of the Dhamma. Mr. Mathew Ondaatje, of Ceylon, gives "A Summary View of the Castes of the Tamil Nation," originally drawn up in Dutch at the close of the last century by the celebrated native missionary Dr. Melho; and the usual miscellanea and book notices complete a very full number of this useful periodical.

THE Revue de l'Histoire des Religions (Tribner), which has been started under such excellent promise by the Musée Guimet at Lyons, has now reached its fifth number. A journal devoted to the comparative study of religious belief was much wanted; and as the Lyons periodical, forming part of the Annales du Musée Guimet, is conducted by scholars of established reputation, and opens its doors most hospitably to foreign contributors, it bids fair to supply a long-felt want. The fourth number contains lengthy critical summaries of recent work in the field of Greek mythology by M. P. Decharme, and of the mythology of Gaul by M. H. Gaidoz, and independent articles on Greek funeral monuments by M. F. Ravaisson and on the Hebrew feasts and sacrifices by M. J. Wellhausen. Of these last the former attempts, not very successfully, to prove that the Greeks were believers in the immortality of the soul; but neither the monuments nor the passages which the learned author adduces seem to involve necessarily a clear belief in an eternity of conscious existence after death. M. Decourdemanche contributes a version of a curious legend, popular among the Turks, of a law-suit among the birds heard and decided by Solomon, who, after hearing them all, finally condemns the crow, as a false accuser, to feed for ever on the dead. In the fifth number there are summaries of work done in the field of early Christian history, by the editor, M. Maurice Vernes; and in the field of post-biblical Judaism, by Prof. Oort, of Leyden. This number also contains a valuable discussion by Prof. Tiele, of Leyden, on exotic, and especially non-Aryan, elements in Greek mythology. Before the rise of comparative philology several scholars had attempted to explain various points of the mythology of the Greeks by that of their Semitic neighbours. Later writers, and particularly the Germans, have scouted these ideas, and striven to explain all Greek myths by Indian or Persian parallels. Prof. Tiele holds the reaction to have gone too far; and applies his more moderate views to the two examples of Aphrodite and Herakles, showing that, though fundamentally Aryan, both those circles of religious belief are in part indebted to Semitic influence. Each number of the Revue de l'Histoire des Religions contains also reviews, besides an analysis of all those articles in periodical literature which bear on the history of religious belief; and we trust that the enterprise of the Musée Guimet in initiating so useful a work will meet with the wide support which it deserves.

Bibliothèque de l'Ecole des Hautes Etudes. Etudes d'Archéologie Orientale. Par Ch. Clermont-Ganneau. Tome premier, 1^{re} livraison. (Paris: Vieweg.) M. Clermont-Ganneau's wide knowledge of the records of Semitic antiquity, and his inexhaustible ingenuity, are well known. The present collection of dissertations is not less attractive than any of his former researches; it relates to the stele of Byblos, associated with the name of King Yehawmelek (= "him whom Moloch keeps alive"), and brought before the learned world by M. de Vogüé in 1875, to the first Phœnician inscription of Umm el-Awāmid, and to the myth of Horus and of St. George (supplementary to the remarkable treatise already noticed in the ACADEMY). As M. Ganneau observes of the stele of Byblos, "those who know how gradually Semitic epigraphy makes progress, and how much the texts gain by being taken in hand over again, will not be surprised if he allows himself to approach a monument which has already been examined by such competent scholars." He thinks that the inscription of Yehawmelek describes the dedication of the works executed by the king in honour of his patron-goddess—the goddess of Byblos, who has the form and all the characteristic attributes of the Egyptian goddess Hathor; and that we have here the exact equivalent of the imposing ceremony at the dedication of his temple by Solomon to Jehovah. This is a specimen of the way in which, on every fair opportunity, M. Ganneau brings the Biblical documents into relation with popular Semitic religion; and from this point of view, as well as from that of Semitic philology, we can highly recommend M. Ganneau's dissertations. It is of course only externals that anyone will expect to find illustrated from these inscriptions; and the author's point of view has more affinity with that of Mr. Tylor than with that of Ewald. M. Ganneau is not so well read in Biblical criticism as in epigraphic literature; hence, also, we can account for the assumption that the explanation of na'amān in Isa. xvii. 10 as a title of Adonis is new, whereas it was divined by Ewald and proved by Lagarde (see Cheyne's The Prophecies of Isaiah, ad loc.). Among the well-supported conjectures with which this attractive fasciculus abounds we ought especially to notice that relative to the ancient city which once stood on the site known in Arabic as Umm el-Awāmid ("mother of columns"). After a long historical survey M. Ganneau inclines to the view that the locality so called is the Palae-Tyros, which, according to Strabo, was thirty stadia from Tyre. "Old" and "New" are, indeed, only relative terms; New Tyre, when it was abandoned, became an Old Tyre—i.e., one which is no longer inhabited. In any case, M. Ganneau thinks that Umm el-Awāmid represents a Tyrian city of short existence, and that its site was dictated by a desire to approach as near as possible to the ancient Tyre (between 275 and 612 B.C.).

M. FRIEDERICI'S Bibliotheca Orientalis for 1880 has just appeared. This useful work comprises fairly complete classified lists of all books, serials, essays, &c., on Oriental subjects which appear in each year in Europe. The first year thus indexed was 1876, and four annual catalogues have since been published. In 1876 the total number of Oriental works issued in England and abroad was 1,727; in 1877 it was 1,654; in 1878 there are 2,084 entries; in 1879 only 966; in 1880, 1,007. Either Orientalists have been less prolific than usual these last two years, or M. Friederici has relaxed his efforts as a collector of titles. The first section in the Bibliotheca is headed "General Philology," and includes, beside books of a comparative character, lists of the contents of the Journals and Transactions of learned societies at home and abroad, which will be found of considerable service. After these follow sections on the bibliography of China, Japan, Polynesia, Indian Archipelago, Indo-China, India (230 entries), Afghanistan, Persia, Armenia, Asia Minor; cuneiform inscriptions; Syria and Palestine; Arabia; Egypt, hieroglyphs; Africa, &c. The attribution of books to a given heading is not always well founded, as when an Arabic treatise on weights and measures is put under the heading Syriac. Misprints are more numerous this year than before. But, on the whole, the arrangement and the accuracy of the lists are most praiseworthy; and M. Friederici's annual catalogues will be found very serviceable by Orientalists who wish to be kept au courant with the progress of Eastern studies in all their branches.

THE Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal for 1880, part ii., commences with an important paper by Dr. Hørnle on "Hindī Roots," which was originally intended to form part of his Comparative Grammar of the Gaudian languages. It is, in fact, an etymological glossary, arranged alphabetically, of the five or six hundred Hindī roots which practically form the basis of the whole verb-wealth of the language. No. iii. contains the last of Lieut. Temple's papers on the "Afghans found along the Route of the Tal Chotiali Field Force in 1879." It gives full details of the genealogical legends of the various clans, who, as is well known, trace themselves back to Solomon and David, claiming to be the descendants of deported Jews. Dr. Thibaut contributes the first part of what promises to be a very interesting article on The Sūryaprajñapti, the standard astronomical work of the Jaius, but written in Jain prakrit. It is a much fuller and more connected account of this important work than the summary of it given in 1868 by Prof. Woher in the Indische Studien. Finally, Mr. Rivett-Carnac points out the resemblance between the "spindle-whorls" found in such quantities in Buddhist ruins in India with those discovered at Hisarlik by Dr. Schliemann. Mr. Rivett-Carnac holds that they were votive offerings.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Tuesday, March 22.)

F. W. RUDLER, ESQ., V.-P., in the Chair.—Mr. R. W. Felkin exhibited a series of photographs of scenes and natives of Central Africa taken by Herr Buchta.—Prof. Flower exhibited a collection of crania from the Island of Mallicollo, in the New Hebrides, which have been lately presented to the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons by Mr. Luther Holden. The peculiar conformation of the heads of the people of this island attracted the attention of Capt. Cook. The naturalist Forster, who accompanied the great navigator on his second voyage, writes that "the depressed and backward inclining forehead causes an appearance in the looks and countenance of the natives similar to those of monkeys." Yet Cook bears testimony to the activity, intelligence, and honesty of this "ape-like" nation, as he calls them. A few years ago Mr. Busk described some skulls collected in the island by the late Commodore Goodenough, and found that they all showed signs of having undergone alterations in form from pressure applied in infancy. The present collection corroborates Mr. Busk's views, some of the skulls being deformed to a remarkable degree, and closely resembling the well-known Peruvian crania from the neighbourhood of Lake Titicaca. This is the more remarkable, as on no other of the numerous islands of the neighbouring ocean is the practice known to exist. Beside the deformed crania the collection contained several monumental heads, said to be those of chiefs. In these the features are modelled in clay upon the skull, apparently with the intention of preserving a likeness of the dead person; the face is painted over with red ochre, artificial eyes are introduced, and the hair elaborately dressed and ornamented with feathers. In one case the hair has been entirely removed, and a very neatly made wig substituted. The head thus prepared is stuck upon a rudely made figure of split bamboo and clay, and set up in the village temple, with the weapons and small personal effects of the deceased.—Mr. Joseph Lucas also read a paper on "The Ethnological Bearings of the Terms Gypsy, Zingaro, Rom, &c."

FINE ART.

EXHIBITIONS.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTER-ETCHERS.

THIS first exhibition of the Society of Painter-Etchers is one of great interest, representing, as it fairly does, the progress made hitherto in the revival of the art of etching, one of the strongest and most satisfactory art-movements of the last ten years. It is to the practice of Mr. Seymour Haden and to the precept (and practice also) of Mr. Hamerton that the spread and success of this movement in England is due; and it is a matter of some regret that the present exhibition contains no work of the latter. In pure etching Mr. Seymour Haden holds the first place easily among English etchers of original landscape impressions. His set of dry points show what can be done with pure line and burr; they are masterpieces of skilled impromptu; with every touch a certain contribution to the realisation of the mental vision. In rapid record of pictorial impressions, with the utmost economy of selected line, which is the distinction of etching, the skill of Mr. Haden is almost unequalled; and, what is more, his impressions are always worth the record.

That the pure art of etching is as suitable for the record of conceptions as of impressions is shown by the very remarkable plates of Mr. Legros, whose genius scarcely meets (except among artists) with the recognition which it deserves. In all of these slight and, as it may appear to some, hasty and barren designs there is the germ of a whole picture; a definite suggestion not only of the main line and masses and their relations, but of the scheme of chiaroscuro and the quality of the atmosphere. Unless the popularity in England of the pictures of Corot be a mere fashion, these landscape etchings of M. Legros should find a public. There are, however, few persons, however Philistine or wedded to realism, who will fail to be impressed with his design of Death and the Woodman, in which every line even of wall and tree contributes to the weird surprise of "sudden death." For those who are unmoved by the power of this remarkable work there are still left two portraits of the Academicians Watts and Poynter which they can scarcely fail to admire. On the other side of the room is a portrait of M. Legros by Mr. Watts—refined and sensitive, but leaving Mr. Watts still in debt to M. Legros.

While these "masters of the art keep strictly within its peculiar province, not attempting what cannot without great effort be produced by pure black lines, others naturally are fascinated with the desire to prove that the range of the art is almost infinite. While we may well doubt as to the wisdom, we cannot fail to be interested at the daring experiments, of such men as Colin Hunter. He, not contented with what he can do almost to perfection—for instance, the swirl of unbroken water—must needs, as if in defiance of Mr. Ruskin, whose utterances on the subject of etching are certainly provocative, attempt the least linear of all things, the powdery froth of breaking waves. He succeeds, indeed, to an extent which is surprising; but, while one admires the triumph over difficulty in The Western Shore, it is only such etchings as his Gare Loch that satisfy. If Mr. Colin Hunter's strife after foam shows us one of the limits of the art, both he and others prove that its scope is far wider than was imagined a few years ago; and nothing in this exhibition is more surprising than the revelation of its large range. In architecture we find Mr. Ernest George laying his premeditated lines with the certainty and precision of a wood-engraver; while Mr. Kent Thomas, in his silvery interiors of St. Alban's Cathedral, obtains a gradation of light and quality of stone with a delicacy impossible to line engraving. In landscape Mr. Law gets, as in On the Orchy, a fullness of tone which is almost equal to mezzotint. Mr. Herkomer, who seems to try everything, has his own portrait in etching by the side of his mother's in mezzotint, and there is little to choose between them in point of modelling. To see efforts in mezzotint which are not producible by pure etching one has, however, only to turn to the luminous landscapes of Mr. Huson.

Altogether, as a "proof of the actual state of the art of etching," as the catalogue puts it, this exhibition is one of great interest, and it is very encouraging as to the future. The present collection was very properly retrospective; and the fact that so many of the etchings are well known will be an excuse for not mentioning the work of such men as Tissot, Cope, Hook, Heywood Hardy, and many other Englishmen. The same excuse will apply to the Continental etchers, such as l'Hermite, Gravesande, and Lançon, but scarcely, perhaps, to the strong and sound work sent from across the Atlantic. It would take more space than is available here to distinguish as they deserve the works of Henry Farrer, Robert Swain Gifford, Thomas and Mary Moran, and F. S. Church. At the next exhibition (we are glad to see) there will be no etchings which have been exhibited or published before. COSMO MONKHOUSE.

THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

THE exhibition of this society is far from deserving the reproach with which it is sometimes visited. It contains this spring, just as usual, little of affected, if likewise little of thoroughly accomplished, work. But its five rooms are stocked with a sufficient assemblage of creditable designs, and with some works of most distinct interest and merit. Thus, for instance, we find in the great room the most important, if not quite the most obviously skilful, of Mr. John Reid's vivid outdoor studies, Her Constant Care, a prettily kerchiefed damsel feeding chickens in front of quaint red farm-buildings—the whole painted not so much for the sake of the nominal subject as for the opportunity the place affords for the study of colour and light. Here, too, are Mr. John Burr's vivid studies of the figure—A Fisher Lass and The Pet of the Ballet. The Fisher Lass is a little too slenderly graceful, and would have been more thoroughly acceptable had she presented herself under another title. As to The Pet of the Ballet, is it Mr. Burr's intention to enter into rivalry with M. Degas? The thing is worth doing, for the order of movement—more or less impudent and bold and free—which one is compelled to associate with the modern ballet, from which all quieter grace has passed, deserves to be understood and recorded from the point of view of an artist. Here, again, in the large room is Mr. Wyke Baylis's important picture of St. Mark's—every inch of it aglow with the splendour of Byzantine ornament; a picture, nevertheless, which we rank less highly than the Interior of St. Madeleine at Troyes by the same painter. Among the figure subjects of the large room, Preparing for the Party, by Mr. W. Bromley, is undoubtedly one of the best of those which deal with a story; while, of pure studies in which the figure is painted frankly for its own sake, we should name first Mr. Walter Blackman's Study of a Head—in reality the dark head and shadowed shoulders of a finely coloured brunette. We congratulate a society, several of whose members have been strangely fearful of passing beyond the line of the "draped model," upon the measure of emancipation to which the exhibition of Mr. Blackman's study witnesses. Mr. Caffieri's Isabella, if hardly an ideal presentment of that heroine, is a broad and vigorous example of painting. Mr. J. Morgan's The Newspaper is a return to the study of contemporary life, with all the evidence of realism that is to be looked for in the work of a shrewd observer of common things.

In landscape and seascape the pictures of Mr. Henry Moore, Mr. A. F. Grace, and Mr. Bernard Evans are naturally worth inspection; and in A Moonlight Walk Mr. J. D. Watson—more frequently a figure-painter—essays the rendering of a difficult effect of hurrying cloud and veiled landscape. If much of the exhibition is to be considered satisfactory, the portion consisting of water-colour drawings must be confessed to be somewhat below the average. Mr. Malcolm Lloyd's Shoreham Harbour is gray and real—has, in fact, that humble and prosaic order of merit which is supposed to belong to work at the Dudley Gallery, when there is bestowed upon it the traditional praise of being "faithful and unpretentious." "Fidelity" is sometimes a good and sometimes a bad quality in our landscapists; as for "unpretentiousness," that is a virtue which in painters whose business it is to aspire is wholly negative and valueless. Mr. B. W. Spier's little bits of still-life are among the most successful of the drawings. There is little that they want except atmosphere. Mr. John Evans, whose wonderfully masterly sketches of Venetian church interiors have become a feature at more than one of our exhibitions, has a drawing of Venetian sailing-boats—sail after sail along the quay-side. The transition from what is precise in the foreground to what is indefinite and admirably suggestive in the background is as cleverly made as in the church interiors; but in other respects there is less of power, or, at all events, less of interest.

OBITUARY.

MR. THOMAS BRIGSTOCKE, the artist, died suddenly last week at the age of seventy-two. Mr. Brigstocke studied painting first at the Royal Academy, and afterwards at Paris, Florence, Rome, and Naples. He exhibited his first picture at the Academy in 1842. In 1847 he travelled to Egypt, and was the bearer of an address from the Oriental Club to Ali Pasha. He stayed in Egypt for some time, painting the portraits of the Viceroy's family and other notabilities. On his return he devoted himself chiefly to portraits; but he also painted historical and religious subjects from time to time. In his later years Mr. Brigstocke occupied himself with literature more than with painting; and on the morning of his death he was preparing a number of original fables for publication.

M. JULES NOËL, the well-known painter, has just died at Paris at the age of about sixty-three. Born at Quimper, he devoted himself chiefly to painting subjects taken from the coast of his native Brittany. He first exhibited at the Salon of 1840, and subsequently won the honour of several medals. Several of his works were purchased by the State. Between 1843 and 1845 he visited the East, and brought back a few landscapes from Constantinople and the Archipelago. For some years past he suffered from a painful malady, which entirely stopped his work.

THE death is also announced at Paris of M. Henry Lacoste-Brunner, aged forty-three, whose landscapes and pictures of flowers have recently attracted considerable attention.

THE artist, Charles Humbert, who died at Geneva on March 31, was one of the best painters of the Genevan school. His pictures found a ready sale both at home and abroad, particularly in France. After his preliminary studies he went to Paris and worked for some time in the atelier of Ingres, but he soon departed from that master's style, preferring, as he said, "the fat cows and the powerful oxen" of his native land.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MESSRS. NEILL AND SON, of Haddington, announce that they have acquired, and will shortly publish, certain plates by and after Turner which have been hitherto unpublished or issued only in very limited editions. They include mezzotints and line engravings by Upton and others, and—what would appear to be a more interesting plate—a full-length portrait of Turner in his studio, drawn and etched by the artist himself.

It is stated that the Prince of Wales, at the request of the German Crown Prince, has consented to allow his Indian art treasures to be exhibited at Berlin in the coming autumn.

MR. HERKOMER will exhibit at the Royal Academy a large picture of a national subject called Missing, which represents life-size groups assembled at the gates of Portsmouth Dockyard making enquiries regarding the Atalanta; and for the Grosvenor he has a Welsh mountain scene, called The Gloom of Idwal, in which he has carried out with great success that aim at "poetic realism" on which he wrote so eloquently in the Portfolio a few months ago. We will reserve further remarks upon these fine pictures till their exhibition. In the same room (Messrs. Goupil's, in Bedford Street) where they were shown were other samples of his rich artistic harvest of last year, ranging from two highly finished little paintings on ivory to a "poster" designed for the Magazine of Art. Between these extremes were bold water-colour studies in the manner of Love, Light, and Melody, whose charming cabinet pictures, etchings, and mezzotints. Of the pure etchings there are none finer than his portraits of Mr. Hamerton and himself. Among the pure mezzotints is a lovely study of a child, the first of a series of studies of child-life. In one or two scenes of Alpine life Mr. Herkomer seems to have been experimenting, using etched lines freely, with a very light filling of mezzotint, like a flat wash, producing a very complete effect with very little work, something between the old aquatint and the Liber Studiorum.

MR. HAMO THORNYCROFT will undoubtedly sustain his already high reputation at the next exhibition of the Royal Academy. His most important work is a full-size statue of the Homeric bowman, Teucer, who has just let fly an arrow at Hector. While escaping the straight line which would be caused by the arrow in position, he retains to a great extent the tension which is prolonged by expectation as to the result of the shot. The effect is remarkable; the balance between past and future, the momentary rest between exertion and relaxation, is rendered in the happiest manner; and, with the aid of the curved lines of the bow, the composition, from whatever point of view it is seen, is graceful as well as strong. Mr. Thornycroft has also a lifelike bust of Prof. Owen, which shows both the intellectual power and the large kindness of the great man.

MR. O'CONNOR will contribute to the Grosvenor a large painting of the market-place at Verona. We call it a painting, though it is not in oil, but body-colour, with glazes of transparent water-colour, the effect of which is an extraordinary brightness and lightness for so large a composition. This fine work will undoubtedly add to the artist's reputation.

MR. FRANK MILES sends to the Royal Academy a picture entitled Home, Sweet Home—a landscape taken from his own garden.

MR. W. E. LOCKHART, R.S.A., sends to the Grosvenor Gallery his important picture, The Cid and the Moorish Kings, already described in our columns.

MR. MILLAIS' new picture, Little Mrs. Gamp, we are informed, will not be exhibited at the Royal Academy this season, but will shortly be on view at the Graphic gallery in the Strand.

WE have received from Capri the description of a remarkable water-colour drawing just sent to London by Mr. Talmage White, whose works are better known in France than in England. The title is Ghosts of the Past—Dawn at Ghizeh. On the left is a dark mass of rocky headland, crowned by the village of Ghizeh, faintly touched by the gray light of dawn. Below it stands a distant group of palms. Across the picture stretches a dark blue and purple line of plain, above which the pyramids tower grandly in a ghostly white light. In the middle distance a river reflects the greenish-blue sky, and the yellow setting moon. A whitish-blue figure stands on the river brink, while another moves towards the village. The pyramids are also reflected in the water, which comes down to the foreground. The rest of the picture is composed of dark sand-banks, rushes, and a group of storks. The harmonies are gray-green, brown, and white; the golden moon supplies the note.

WE have received from Messrs. Hogarth a catalogue of the important collection of drawings, principally by Dutch and Flemish masters, formed by M. A. G. de Vessier, which are to be sold next month, by auction, at Amsterdam. We hope to return to the subject next week; meanwhile, those interested will be glad to know that the principal part of the collection will be on view at 96 Mount Street till Monday next.

THE April number of the Nineteenth Century contains an excellent paper by Mr. Frederick Wedmore on the late M. Jules Jacquemart, whose art-work is divided into the three classes of slight water-colour sketches of flowers and landscape, of etched transcripts from pictures, and of etchings from still-life. In his subjects of the last class Jacquemart could give interest even to things as common as the group of worn and bulged boots and shoes that are relieved against the rough planking of a floor in the large plate quaintly entitled Souvenirs de Voyage; but his more individual and perfect work is of course to be found in his renderings of precious objects of still-life—the porcelain of his father's cabinets, the Gemmes et Joyaux of the Louvre. Mr. Wedmore's singularly picturesque and vivid style is seen at its best in his account of these things and of the spirit in which the Frenchman dealt with them, "with the bestowal of fire and life upon matter dead to the common eye," "suggesting all that is in the object by the little that is in the etching."

THE Portfolio has not much of interest to offer this month. The chief etching is an African elephant's head, cleverly drawn and etched by Mr. Heywood Hardy, who studied his subject, it is stated, in the Zoological Gardens. The head certainly gives the idea of its being a good likeness, with more of character than is to be found in many human portraits. An Amand Durand reproduction of Lucas van Leyden's celebrated print of Abraham kneeling before the Three Angels will delight all those who are interested in early German art.

THE April number of the Art Journal, in addition to Mr. Llewellyn Jewitt's article on "Old Corporation Plate," has an article by Mr. Herbert Marshall, the artist—somewhat inefficiently illustrated—on the artistic capabilities of the town of Rye; an interesting paper by Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse, giving a practical account of Botticelli, and expressing a view curiously at variance with that of Mr. Pater as to the religious sentiment in the Virgins of this master—Mr. Monkhouse's view being moderately urged and eminently worthy of consideration; and, finally, the usual instalment of the valuable series, "Hints to Collectors," the collector who holds forth on this occasion being Mr. W. G. Rawlinson, and the subject the one naturally associated with his name, the Liber Studiorum of Turner.

DR. CHARLES WALDSTEIN is at work on a little book on Pheidias, growing out of his successful lectures at Cambridge on Greek art. It will probably be ready by June.

MR. WILLIAM REEVES announces a new monthly periodical devoted to etching, and to be called English Etchings. While we welcome it as an indication of the growing popularity of this fascinating branch of art, we must express our opinion that the prospectus scarcely does justice to the illustrated art periodicals already in the field. English Etchings will be published in imperial quarto, with a portrait of Rembrandt on the cover; and each number will contain four etchings, with descriptive letterpress.

It is rumoured that the Greek Government contemplate a continuation of the German excavations at Olympia, which have now ceased. The late Minister, M. Trikoupis, after having touched upon the German work in very high terms, proposed that the enterprise should be continued on a reduced scale for a term of thirty years, and asked the Government to allow a yearly grant for this purpose.

A LIST of the monuments and objects excavated by the German Government is given in the Political Correspondence of Berlin. In the course of the work, which began at Olympia in 1875 and was abandoned in 1881, the following sculptures and architectural works have been brought to light:—(1) About 180 statues in a very variable state of preservation, groups, reliefs, busts, &c., among them the Hermes of Praxiteles, the Nike of Papias, the groups from the Temple of Zeus, the pediment of the treasury of Megara, &c.; (2) 1,500 fragments, belonging to the statues, &c., just mentioned; (3) 400 inscriptions and 600 fragments of lines; (4) more than 14,000 art objects of copper; (5) about 4,000 of clay; (6) about forty buildings or foundations of buildings; (7) 6,000 coins; and (8) a smaller number of pieces of iron, lead, glass, &c. The total number of duplicates which the German Government asks the Greeks to give up, in recompense for its exertions and sacrifices, is 2,150.

A propos of the sale of Millet's L'Angelus in the Wilson collection in Paris last month, it may interest our readers to learn that one of Millet's finest pictures, The Sower, is at the present time in London, and on view, with one or two important sketches by the same artist, at Messrs. Cottier's galleries, 8 Pall Mall.

WE understand that the extraordinarily rich collection of ancient prints known as the Lobanow Collection will be sold at Berlin at the end of the present month. Early in next week a selection from the collection, including, no doubt, the Rembrandt etchings, will be on view at Mr. Thibaudau's.

THREE large pictures of our Saviour, by Mme. Edith Courtauld Arendrup, are on exhibition at Messrs. Dowdeswell's in New Bond Street. The Agony in the Garden, The Cross, and Christ showing His Wounds to the World are the subjects. In all, the expression of the heads is fine (reminding one not a little of Delaroche), the light and the drapery skilfully managed, and the colour rich. There are some obvious defects of drawing, but they are impressive works, the last mentioned especially.

DR. HUBERT JANITSCHKE continues to bring out the Repertorium für Kunstwissenschaft with praiseworthy punctuality. The present number contains a mass of useful material for the art-historian, though it must be admitted that few who are not art-historians would care to wade through it. The Repertorium is not a lively work. It deals exclusively with art from a severe scientific aspect; but it is admirable in affording dry details that even such faithful historians as Crowe and Cavalcaselle occasionally overlook. Thus, in the current number we have a careful description by G. Dahlke of two wings of an old altar-piece in the Castle of Ambras assigned to an artist of the school of Pacher; a supplement by J. E. Wessely to handbooks of engravings; contributions to the history of copper-founding by Theodor Hach; and a contribution to the early art-history of Bohemia from the study of documents. Added to this there are short notices of books on art-history, archaeology, &c., and much miscellaneous information on art matters in general.

HERR KOEHLER, of Leipzig, is about to publish a collection of thirty coloured plates in commemoration of the completion of Cologne Cathedral last year, from water-colours by the well-known artist, Tony Avenarius.

MESSRS. SCHULZ AND Co. have just brought out a series of fifty-four plates, designed from the original documents by Herr Ad. Seyboth, representing male costumes at Strassburg in the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries, and forming the complement to the plates of female costumes at Strassburg of the same period which appeared last year.

It is announced that an exhibition of the arts and industries of Bavaria will be held in Nürnberg next year, and vigorous preparations are being made in the way of building. Already contributors to the number of 1,702 have promised to assist, and the whole affair is to be on the grandest scale. Poor Nürnberg! After destroying her fortifications, restoring her ancient patrician dwellings into handsome modern lodging-houses, and marring her ancient loveliness in countless ways, it only wanted a great modern exhibition to be added as a last indignity to her mediæval charms.

THE use of pastels seems to be developing among artists. The well-known Italian painter M. de Nittis will, it is said, exhibit a large number of pastel drawings at the Cercle des Mirlitons at the end of May. These drawings are reported to be of a large and decorative character, and to be entirely novel in their mode of execution. Some of them are portraits.

AMONG the painters in Paris who have come forward in answer to Albert Wolff's appeal on behalf of poor Andrieux's young son, left fatherless and penniless, we find some well-known names—notably those of Alfred Stevens, Vollon, de Neuville, Detaille, Bastien-Lepage, Edouard Frère, Worms, Ziem, Berne-Bellecour, Moreau, Flahaut, Leloir, Anker, Coomans, John Lewis Brown, Puvis de Chavannes, the Baroness Rothschild, Mme. Muraton, and Mlle. Abéna.

THREE Roman altars and a Roman statue have been presented to the museum of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society by the Rev. Mother-Superior of St. Mary's Convent, Micklegate, York. The statue and the altars were discovered, while excavating in the grounds of the convent, some five feet below the surface.

THE Neue Freie Presse states that the only authentic portrait of Franz Schubert, the composer, a water-colour by Rieder, was recently sold by auction at Vienna. It is described as twenty-four centimetres in height and of middling artistic value, but was knocked down to Dr. Granitsch for 1,205 florins. It was painted in 1825. Rieder, overtaken by a shower, had sought refuge in the house of his friend Schubert, and while waiting there made this sketch, which he afterwards finished at two or three sittings. It has served as the original for all subsequent portraits of the composer.

A MARBLE bust of a young boy was found some time ago in the granary belonging to the farm-buildings of the Château of Chardonne, in the district of Vevey. The child is dressed in armour of the period of the end of the fifteenth and beginning of the sixteenth century; and he carries on the breast the insignia of the Order of the Annunciation, the collar bearing the initials F. E. R. T. The bust is supposed to have lain hidden in the granary for centuries, and is now recognised as the portrait of the young Duke Charles John Amadeus of Savoy, who was born June 24, 1489, and died April 16, 1496, after a reign of six years under the protectorship of his mother, Blanche de Montserrat. The Château of Chardonne originally belonged to the Bishop of Lausanne, next to the families of de Blouay, d'Oron, and the Counts of Gruyère, until it finally passed to the republic of Bern.

THE annual dinner of the Hogarth Club, with Mr. Alma-Tadema, R.A., in the chair, will take place at the Criterion on the 28th inst. We learn also that the club is about to remove from Charlott Street, Fitzroy Square, to more central quarters in Albemarle Street, Piccadilly.

THE STAGE.

THERE is little need to detain the readers of the ACADEMY long over the discussion of Branded. The new piece at the Princess's is, as we last week opined that it would be, a piece of chiefly sensational interest, with that intricacy of story and that abundance, not to say superfluity, of movement which, it seems, no sensational drama can be without. We do not propose to tell the tale, but confine ourselves pretty much to an expression of surprise that so many good actors as are to be found at the Princess's at this moment should consent to be engaged in a performance which it is probable may bring them pecuniary reward but certainly no credit. Even Mr. Neville, who has a gallant part, has little opportunity for showing fine acting. He can but bear himself well. Mr. Archer, a quiet, painstaking actor who is not seen too often or too prominently in London, is rather lost in the part of a military man whose character is not sketched with any great delicacy or precision. Mr. F. Charles, who a while ago was playing very cleverly the Fool in Lear, is now less creditably engaged. Miss Caroline Hill represents the heroine; and Mrs. Huntley plays an offensive part with real power, thus reminding us of her "La Frochard" in the Two Orphans. An unsympathetic character is assigned to Miss Maud Milton, who has lately made much advance in her profession. Of her Desdemona it was well said that it was "pure womanly;" and the like praise—almost the highest to an exponent of these characters—could have been given to her Cordelia, at least in the last and most exacting scenes. There is little satisfaction in seeing her in her new part.

WE feel sure there will be a good many people to take an interest in a performance which will be given at St. George's Hall next Saturday afternoon, April 16. The time is ill-chosen, as half the world will have gone away for an Easter holiday, but the event is of an unusual kind. It is proposed then and there to perform Hamlet from the First Quarto (1603). Mr. Furnivall has made some suggestions in the matter; a body of enthusiastic Shaksperians have consented to play the parts—led by Mr. William Pool, and including Mr. H. Stacks and certain gentlemen who have assumed noms de théâtre for the occasion. The costumes will be Elizabethan rather than of the uncertain period more or less identified with the action of the play; and we shall see in the place of elaborate scenery perhaps a little tapestry and a few written indications of where the scene lies. This all sounds as if it were going to be distinctly interesting.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8, will be acted SHAKSPEARE'S Tragedy of
ROMEO AND JULIET
 Characters by Messrs. Wilson Barrett, John Ryder, Forbes-Robertson, Clifford Cooper, E. Price, Norman Forbes, E. B. Norman, Brian Darley, Neville Hogue, W. P. Phipps, W. P. Greinger, E. Butler, &c., and G. W. Anson; Mesdames Helena Modjeska, M. A. Giffard, D. Gardner, J. Clifford, &c., and R. G. Le Thiere.
 Preceded, at 7, by
TWO OLD BOYS.
 Box-office open from 11 to 5. Doors open at 6.45. Carriages at 11. No fees. Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

DURRY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

To-night, THE WORLD.
 A Grand Sensational Drama, by MERRITT, PETTIT, and HARRIS, pronounced by the Times newspaper, in its review of the theatrical year, to be most undoubtedly the greatest success of the year.
 Preceded by THE STORES.
 Messrs. Augustus Harris, William Rignold, Macklin, Gibson, Boleyn, Idley, Gresham, Ridley, and Harry Jackson; Mesdames Fanny Josephs, Fanny Brough, Maud de Vere, M. Namara, and Louisa Payne.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.
 A new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CREST.
 Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Mesdames Effie Liston, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.
 At 10, THE WIZARD OF THE WILDERNESS.
 Mr. J. L. Toole.
 Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. ALEXANDER HENDERSON.

On SATURDAY NEXT, at 8, an entirely new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled MARCO.
 Under the immediate direction of Mr. H. B. Farnie.
 New and elaborate scenery by Ryan and Hicks. Dresses, after designs by Grévin and Faustin, by Monsieur and Madame Aias.
 Preceded, at 7.15, by a Comedy, after Meilhac and Halévy, entitled SEEING FLOU-FLOU.
 Mesdames Arnaldi, Turner, Dubois, Graham, Evelyn, and Wadman; Messrs. Cull, Temple, Ashford, Mansfield, and Paulson.
 Greatly augmented chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Hillier. Ballet master, Mr. Lauri. Chorus mistress, Mrs. Johnson.
 Box-office open on Monday next. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. DURT.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(900 yards from the Angel.)

Miss BATEMAN as MARY WARNER.
 To-night (LAST TIME), at 8, TOM TOLSON'S popular Play, MARY WARNER.
 Miss Bateman; Messrs. E. H. Brooke, E. Lyons, &c.; Mrs. Hantley and Miss Compton.
 Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. Farce at 7.
 "There are some things, however, that can defy the changes of time and fashion; among these is the Mary Warner of Miss Bateman. This performance appealed to the heart years ago, and it does so still, with as much irresistible force as before."—Daily Chronicle.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. D'OLY CARTE.

CLOSED for rehearsals of the new Aesthetic Opera by Messrs. W. S. Gilbert and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, which will shortly be produced.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR DRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called THE COLONEL.
 By F. C. BURNAND.
 Preceded, at 7.50, by a one-act Comedy, by SYDNEY GRUNDY, in HONOUR BOUND.
 Messrs. Coghlan, Flockton, W. Herbert, Eric Bayley, Rowland Duckstone, and Edgar Druce; Mesdames Amy Roselle, Myra Holme, C. Grahame, Leigh Murray, &c.
 New Scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith.
 Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOOCH.

To-night, at 7.45, an entirely new and original romantic spectacular Drama of sensational interest, entitled BRANDED.
 Written by RICHARD LEE.
 Messrs. Henry Neville, Edmund, F. Archer, J. Beauchamp, F. Charles, H. C. Sidney, Allen Hewitt, Lewis, W. H. Davis, Gardner, Greville, W. Avondale, Chamberlain, Sirling, &c.; Mesdames Carolines Hill, Maud Milton, Katie Barry, Katie Neville, Hantley, and Lyons.
 Produced under the direction of Mr. Harry Jackson.
 New and realistic scenery by Charles Brooke. New overture and incidental music by Michael Connelly. New military costumes direct from the Army Contractors, Paris. The horses supplied by Mr. George Sanger.
 Preceded, at 7, by the Farce, THE INTRIGUE.
 Doors open at 6.30. Box-office open daily.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

To-night, at 7.30, a new and original Drama, by JOE MACKAY, entitled PEGGY.
 To conclude with DON JUAN JUNIOR.
 Now in the full tide of its success.
 Mesdames Kate Lawler, Harriet Coveney, Amy Crawford, Ruth Francis, Lavender, Sylvia Lewis, E. H. Hitt, & Messrs. Edward Righton, Frank Cooper, H. Kelsey, H. Murrell, and Seymour.
 New and realistic scenery specially designed and executed by Bruce Smith.
 Acting and general Business Manager for Kate Lawler, CECIL BALMAIN.
 Stage Manager, E. RICHMOND.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA "If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa." Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

EXTRACT "It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way." W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.
 "Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted." CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
 A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

TO PROPRIETORS of NEWSPAPERS
 and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, Brief News & Opinion, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION of PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or Plain. Estimates furnished to Projectors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 43, THREADNEEDLE STREET.

BRANCH OFFICES, 69, CHARING CROSS;

And Oxford-street, corner of Vero-street.

Very low premiums without participation in Profits, especially for young lives. Half Premium, Non-Fortitude, and Endowment Assurances granted.

Prompt settlement of Claims.

The Society's newly revised Prospectus, and a greatly simplified form of Proposal, will be forwarded on application.

J. G. PRIESTLEY, Actuary.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Banks, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Madie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes, Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meisner, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS of PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 28½ in. by 21 in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

COME UNTO THESE YELLOW SANDS, after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Failing Denic, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. B. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal.

Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
 F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £5 6s. to 50 guineas.

Drawing-room Suites, from £7 8s. to 45 guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from £7 8s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

THIRTY-INCH BRASS TRANSIT
 INSTRUMENT and FITTINGS, in Box, and THEODOLITE, TO BE SOLD at Bargain, almost new.—Apply, 6, London-road, Southwark.

YATES & ALEXANDER,

PRINTERS OF

Books, Pamphlets, Magazines, Newspapers, and Periodicals.

Catalogues, Posters, Price Currents, Circulars, Notices, and all General Commercial Work.

Parliamentary, Law, and General Printing.

Contracts entered into with Public Companies, Bankers, Insurance Offices, Auctioneers, Manufacturers, Merchants and Traders, &c.

PRINTING WORKS:

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE

(OPPOSITE THE CHANCERY LANE POST-OFFICE).

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

LOCKYER'S SULLY HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
 Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.
 Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.
 Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.
 Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

Gold combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Lysoplegia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

Eversley Edition.

CHARLES

KINGSLEY'S

NOVELS.

Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO. have the pleasure to announce a NEW EDITION of the NOVELS of CHARLES KINGSLEY, which they will publish immediately under the above title.

This Edition has been planned to meet the wish expressed by many admirers of Mr. Kingsley for a really beautiful edition of his novels. The EVERSLEY EDITION will, therefore, be printed from new type by Messrs. R. & R. Clark, on a paper specially manufactured for this work by Messrs. John Dickinson & Co.; the binding will be done by Messrs. James Burn & Co.; and the Publishers hope that the mechanical production will be found in every respect worthy of the books themselves.

The EVERSLEY EDITION will be comprised in ELEVEN VOLUMES, Globe 8vo, and will be published at a uniform price of FIVE SHILLINGS per volume.

A Portrait, by Mr. Lowes Dickenson, of Charles Kingsley in his Study at Eversley, never before engraved, will appear as a Frontispiece in the First Volume.

The Books will be published in the following order:—

WESTWARD HO!	- - -	2 vols., 10s.	May.
TWO YEARS AGO	- - -	2 vols., 10s.	June.
HYPATIA	- - - - -	2 vols., 10s.	July.
YEAST	- - - - -	1 vol., 5s.	August.
ALTON LOCKE	- - -	2 vols., 10s.	September.
HEREWARD the WAKE	- - -	2 vols., 10s.	October.

BLACKS, BOERS, and BRITISH:
A Three-Cornered Problem.

By F. R. STATHAM. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THROUGH the RANKS to a COM-MISSION. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The accounts of the daily routine and duties in camp are plainly written. . . . He has no stirring tales to tell, no great adventures to enlarge upon, no battles to fight again, no slain to slay; but his book seems to us to deserve attention. . . . It is a fair and clear account of a career not common in England."—St. James's Gazette.

ANTHROPOLOGY: an Introduction to the Study of Man and Civilisation. By E. B. TYLOR, D.C.L., F.R.S. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"A most attractive and entertaining introduction to the science of anthropology. . . . His writing is clear and luminous, and his arrangement masterly."—Saturday Review.

THE COLLECTED WORKS of
FRANCIS SIBSON, M.D. London, F.R.S., &c. Edited by WILLIAM ORD, M.D. With Illustrations. 4 vols., 8vo, 43 3s.

NEW and REVISED EDITION of Vol. I. of THE LIFE of JOHN MILTON.

Narrated in connexion with the Political, Ecclesiastical, and Literary History of his Time. By DAVID MASSON, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in the University of Edinburgh. Vol. I. New and Revised Edition. 8vo, 21s.

Vol. II., 8vo, 10s.; Vol. III., 8vo, 18s.; Vols. IV. and V., 8vo, 32s.; Vol. VI., with Portrait, 8vo, 21s.

THE METAPHYSICS of the SCHOOL. By THOMAS HARPER (S.J.). In 5 vols. Vol. II., 8vo, 18s. Just ready, Vol. I., 8vo, 18s.

"We can only recommend professors, students, and cultured readers of all sorts to study it and to try to master it."—Dublin Review.

NEW PART—XIII. (PLANCHE to RICHTER).
A DICTIONARY of MUSIC and MUSICIANS, A.D. 1450—1881. By Eminent Writers, English and Foreign. With Engravings and Woodcuts. Edited by GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L. In 3 vols. Vols. I. and II., 21s. each; Parts I. to XIII., 3s. 6d. each.

MATERIALISM, ANCIENT and MODERN. By a late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 2s.

SERMONS preached in a COLLEGE
CHAPEL. With an Appendix. By J. R. ILLINGWORTH, M.A., Fellow of Jesus College, and Tutor of Keble College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"These sermons have a rare intensity and reality of tone. . . . It is full of strength, and we should be glad to induce anyone to read it."—Spectator.

GUIDE to the UNPROTECTED, in Every-day Matters relating to Property and Income. By a BANKER'S DAUGHTER. Fifth Edition, Revised. Extra fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

QUESTIONS on STEWART'S
ELEMENTARY LESSONS in PHYSICS. By THOMAS H. CORE, Owens College, Manchester. 18mo, 2s.

EXERCISES in ANALYTICAL GEOMETRY. Compiled and Arranged by J. M. DYER, M.A., Senior Mathematical Master in the Classical Department of Cheltenham College. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

. Subscribers' names will be received by all Booksellers in Town and Country.

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 467.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
MEMOIRS OF MARSHAL Saldanha, by DOM OLIVEIRA MARTINS	271
COLONEL Lumsden's BEOWULF, by F. YORK POWELL	273
DOSTOYEVSKY'S BURIED ALIVE, by W. R. S. RALSTON	273
BLADES' BORE OF SAINT ALBANS, by E. W. GOSSE	274
STATHAM'S BLACKS, BOERS, AND BRITISH, by W. WICKHAM	274
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	275
SOME BOOKS OF HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY	276
NOTES AND NEWS	277
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS	278
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	279
PINDAR'S SEVENTH OLYMPIAN ODE, by J. I. MINCHIN	279
THE PRINTED CATALOGUE OF THE BRITISH MUSEUM, by W. E. A. AXON	280
SELECTED BOOKS	281
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Recent Discoveries on the Site of the Roman Baths in Bath, by the Rev. H. M. Scarth; Oriental Literature , by Ch. Friederici; Mr. Herkimer's Etching of Mr. Hamerton , by P. G. Hamerton	281-2
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	282
COX'S COMMENTARY ON THE BOOK OF JOB, by the Rev. T. K. CHEYNE	282
ORIENTAL BOOKS	282
OBITUARY	283
NOTES OF TRAVEL	283
SCIENCE NOTES	284
PHILOLOGY NOTES	284
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	284
ARCHAEOLOGICAL NOTES FROM THE MEDITERRANEAN, by GREVILLE J. CHESTER	285
EXHIBITIONS: THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS, AND MODERN DUTCH PAINTINGS AT MESSRS. GOUPIL'S, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	286
ART JOTTINGS FROM FLORENCE	287
ART SALES	287
OBITUARY	287
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	287
STAGE NOTES	289
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	289

ST. ANDREW'S HALL, PLYMOUTH.

ART AND INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION, 1881.
£200 IN PRIZES.
OPENING MONDAY, MAY 23RD.
SPECIAL PRIZES.
£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best Picture painted by any Artist residing in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, or Dorset, each Competitor being allowed to show three Pictures. 2nd Prize, SILVER MEDAL; 3rd, BRONZE.
£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best Picture exhibited. Open to all England.
£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best exhibit in the Exhibition.
N.B.—Pictures will not be eligible for this competition.
Winners of these Gold Medals will be paid in Money if preferred.
100 Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals will be given in the following Classes:—
Class 1.—Professional Workmanship.
Class 2.—Amateur Productions, made by Exhibitors who follow some other trade than that to which their articles belong.
Class 3.—Inventions and Novel Contrivances. To include both Amateur and Professional Workmanship.
Class 4.—Models, Architectural, Mechanical, Marine, and Ornamental.
Class 5.—Fine-Arts, including Oil and Water-Colour Paintings. Open to all England.
Class 6.—Oil and Water-Colour Paintings and Drawings, open to Students of any recognised School of Art or Private School.
Class 7.—Oil or Water-Colour Paintings, open to residents in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, or Dorset. Each competitor will be allowed to exhibit three pictures.
Class 8.—Carving and Fret Work. Two Classes—Amateur & Professional.
Class 9.—Sculpture.
Class 10.—Preserved Natural Objects.
Class 11.—Ladies' Work of all kinds.
Class 12.—Musical Instruments.
Class 13.—Furniture.
Class 14.—Painters' Graining of Wood.
Class 15.—Photography.
Class 16.—Bicycles, Tricycles, and Sewing Machines.
Class 17.—China Painting.
Class 18.—Electrical Inventions.
Class 19.—Pen and Ink and Crayons by Amateurs.
Class 20.—Pottery.
Class 21.—Miscellaneous. This will include all objects not properly belonging to any of the other Classes.
Further particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, Mr. THOS. MARTIN, Plymouth.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

MEETING ON MONDAY, APRIL 25, at 4 P.M., instead of on MONDAY, April 18.
PAPER by Rev. S. W. COCKLE, entitled "TARTAR or TURK."
W. S. W. VAUX, Secretary R.A.S.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

MR. ROBERT N. CUST will read a PAPER "ON SPAIN: ITS CITIES AND CUSTOMS."
W. S. W. VAUX, Secretary R.S.L.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

The NINETY-FIFTH EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, 5, PALL MALL EAST, from 10 till 6. Admittance, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

The BRITISH MUSEUM (NATURAL HISTORY), Cromwell-road, South Kensington, will be OPEN to the PUBLIC, free, on EASTER MONDAY, the 19TH APRIL, and Daily from that date. Hours of Admission as at the British Museum.
EDW. A. BOND, Principal Librarian.

SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.

FIFTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION NOW OPEN at the SUFFOLK STREET GALLERIES, PALL MALL EAST, from 9 to 6 daily. Admission, 1s.
THOMAS ROBERTS, Secretary

ROYAL MANCHESTER INSTITUTION.

SIXTY-FIRST EXHIBITION OF MODERN WORKS OF ART.
This EXHIBITION will be OPENED early in the month of SEPTEMBER NEXT, and will close about Christmas. Works should be delivered not later than AUGUST 31ST.
Artists' Circulars, with Regulations, &c., may be obtained on application to EDWIN W. MARSHALL, Assistant-Secretary, 34, Barton-arcade, Manchester.

ON EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS by the American Artist, the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art."—Gallery, 14, Grafton-street, Old Bond-street.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall-mall.—The TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF PICTURES by Artists of the Continental Schools (including Portraits of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prince Bismarck, Count Moltke, Dr. Döllinger, and other works by Franz Lembach) is NOW OPEN. Admission 1s.

DUTCH WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS and PAINTINGS.

An Interesting EXHIBITION, by the MODERN DUTCH ARTISTS, NOW ON VIEW, at GOUPIL & CO'S GALLERIES, 25, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND. Admittance, including Catalogue, 1s.

STUDIOS.—Remaining Set.—With Two Ante-rooms, Lavatory, &c. Well placed in Bayswater, near two Stations. Rent £50 per annum.—E. & F. SWAIN, 82, High-street, Nottingham, W. (7/35.)

LIVERPOOL, HANOVER GALLERIES.

The Important and very Valuable Collection of Pictures formed by the late John Miller, Esq.,
By MESSRS. BRANCH & LEETE,
On WEDNESDAY, 4TH MAY, and two following days, at 1 o'clock each day.

ABOUT THREE HUNDRED PICTURES.

forming Mr. MILLER'S COLLECTION, many of them well known throughout the country.

SALTASH, the celebrated work by J. M. W. TURNER, R.A., engraved, and seventeen other good examples.

PORTRAIT OF MRS. RICHARDSON, by Sir JOSHUA REYNOLDS, P.R.A.

EVE OF ST. AGNES, HOLMAN HUNT.

SWEET TOOTH, D. G. ROSSETTI.

ORANMORE, GALWAY BAY, J. W. OAKES, A.R.A.

THE BOWLERS, Sir GEORGE HARVEY, P.S.R.A.

Fine examples, both in oil and water-colour, by Jan Van der Heyde and Adrian Van de Velde, and others by the following artists of the English and foreign schools:—Van Princep, Ward, R.A., Constable, R.A., Mulready, R.A., Ety, R.A., David Cox, Müller, De Wint, F. Madox Brown, Wm. Hunt, Delessard, Greuse, Soyer, Fortuny, Isabeau, Ary Scheffer, Redgrave, R.A., Sir David Wilkie, R.A., W. L. Windus, Decamps, R. Tonge, Gainsborough, R.A., Sam. Prout, Bonington, Holland, W. Davis, J. J. Lee, W. W. Wilson, D. Williamson, and others.

To be viewed on Saturday, 30th April, by private card, and on public view Monday and Tuesday, 2nd and 3rd May.

Catalogues can be had from Messrs. Branch & Leete, in Hanover-street, Liverpool.

MRS. W. DINZEY BURTON receives as

Boarders GENTLEMEN from INDIA, the COLONIES, or the PROVINCES, Students or otherwise, who desire a Home in Town while preparing for professional or public life. High-class references. Terms on application.—39, Amptill-square, N.W.

PRIZE ESSAYS.—100 GUINEAS.—

Time for Receiving PRIZE ESSAYS on "THE ORIGIN OF THE DOCTRINE OF THE TRINITY" will be Extended to JUNE 30TH, 1881.—Particulars may be had from the Rev. R. SPEARS, 19, Mornington-road, Bow-road, London.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq.

This Library contains 90,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a-year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £6; Life Membership, £25.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application.

ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS.—NOTICE.

A New Edition of the List of Books recently added to MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, containing every Recent Work of acknowledged merit and general interest, is now ready, and will be forwarded on application.

All the best New Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction continue to be taken in large numbers on the day of publication, and fresh copies are added as the demand increases.

Arrangements have again been made with the Leading Publishers for an ample supply of the Principal Works already announced for the New Year, and of many other Forthcoming Books as they appear.

SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM,

For a Constant Succession of the Newest Books.

THE NAMES OF NEW SUBSCRIBERS ARE ENTERED DAILY

BOXES AND PARCELS OF THE NEWEST BOOKS

Are forwarded Daily to FAMILIES and BOOK SOCIETIES in every part of the Country, on the lowest possible terms.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD STREET.
City Office 2 King-street, Cheap-side.

THE COUNCIL of FIRTH COLLEGE,

SHEFFIELD, intend to Appoint a PRINCIPAL who shall also be Professor either in the Literary or in the Mechanical Department of the College.

These Departments will comprehend respectively the following Subjects:—
1. Classics, History, Literature, Political Economy, Moral Science,
2. Mathematics, Mechanics, Engineering, Geology, Physics.

Applicants are requested to state in which of these Departments they would be prepared to act as Professor, and which of the Subjects in that Department they would be prepared to undertake.

The Salary of the said Principal will be £500 per annum, with Half the Fees of his own Classes.

The Council will only make the appointment in event of suitable candidates presenting themselves.

Candidates are requested to give full particulars concerning age, experience, and any Academic distinctions they may have gained, together with any other information likely to effect the decision of the Council. The names of three gentlemen to whom references may be made should be given, but no testimonials need be sent unless they are asked for.

Applications to be sent on or before the 25TH day of APRIL next, to ENSOR DRURY, Registrar.

Firth College, Sheffield, March 24, 1881.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 3RD of MAY.

F. W. MADDEN, M.R.A.S., Secretary.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WARBERRY

HOUSE, Bishopsdown Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STERLING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 100 to 300 Guineas.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely-

place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1852, for preparation of Candidates for Competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The Special Classes for R.I. CONSTABULARY Cadetships have carried off 80 per cent. of the Cadetships offered for competition last year; First Place, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Sandhurst; over 320 have passed Army Exams., including 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 6th, 7th, at recent Competitions.—Apply to W. J. CRETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.G.S., F.R.G.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

ELLEN WATSON MEMORIAL FUND.

It has been decided to found a PRIZE or SCHOLARSHIP in MATHEMATICS at UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON, open equally to Men and Women, as a memorial of the mathematical genius of the late Miss Ellen Watson. More than £200 has been already subscribed in sums varying from 1s. to £40. Further subscriptions will be gladly received, and may be paid to the Hon. Secs. of the Fund, Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD, 25, Colville-road, Bayswater; Miss A. M. PALMER, 65, Grosvenor-street, London, W.; or to the Account of the "Ellen Watson Fund," at Messrs. DIMSDALE & CO.'S, Bankers, Cornhill, London.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S

LIST.

MR. CLARK RUSSELL'S NEW NOVEL,

AN OCEAN FREE LANCE,

By the Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c.,

IS NOW READY

At all Libraries. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A SECOND EDITION IS NOW READY OF
MR. ROBERT BUCHANAN'S NEW NOVEL,

A CHILD of NATURE,

At all Libraries. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The work of a genius and of a poet."—Spectator."Simplicity, freshness, vivid presentment of scenes and figures, reminding us that we are reading the work of a poet, are the characteristics of 'A Child of Nature.'"—Pall Mall Gazette.

MRS. CAMPBELL PRAED'S NEW NOVEL,

POLICY AND PASSION,

IS NOW READY

At all Libraries. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A POPULAR EDITION OF
MRS. HENRY WOOD'S LAST WORK,

JOHNNY LUDLOW,

SECOND SERIES,

Is now ready. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

UNIFORM WITH

"BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS."

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS'.

JANE AUSTEN'S NOVELS.

The only Complete Edition. Each Volume in crown 8vo, price 6s.

Emma.

Lady Susan, and The Watsons.

Mansfield Park.

Northanger Abbey, and Persuasion.

Pride and Prejudice.

Sense and Sensibility.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

C. KEGAN PAUL & CO.'S

LIST.

With Portrait from a Painting by Samuel Laurence, demy 8vo, price 21s.

THE LIFE of WILLIAM WHEWELL, D.D., late Master of Trinity College, Cambridge; and Selections from his Correspondence. By Mrs. STAIR DOUGLAS.

With numerous Illustrations, crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

SIGHT: an Exposition of the Principles of Monocular and Binocular Vision. By JOSEPH LE CONTE, LL.D., Professor of Geology and Natural History in the University of California.

 Vol. XXXIII. of "The International Scientific Series."

MYTHOLOGY AND FOLK-LORE.

AN INTRODUCTION to the SCIENCE of COMPARATIVE MYTHOLOGY and FOLK-LORE. By the Rev. Sir GEORGE W. COX, M.A., Bart. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 9s.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

THE NICOMACHEAN ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. Translated by F. H. PETERS, M.A., Fellow of University College, Oxford.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d.

CLAIRAUT'S ELEMENTS of GEOMETRY. Translated by Dr. KAINES. With 145 Figures.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

MATHEMATICAL PSYCHICS: an Essay on the Application of Mathematics to the Moral Sciences. By F. Y. EDGEWORTH, M.A.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

VIRGINIBUS PUERISQUE, and other Papers. By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON, Author of "An Inland Voyage," "Travels with a Donkey," &c.

THE PARCHMENT LIBRARY.

ENGLISH ODES. Selected, with a Critical Introduction, by EDMUND W. GOSSE, Author of "Studies in the Literature of Northern Europe." With a Frontispiece by HAMO THORNYCROFT, A.R.A. Elzevir 8vo, limp parchment antique, price 6s.; vellum, 7s. 6d.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE SPIRIT of the CHRISTIAN LIFE: a New Volume of Sermons. By the Rev. STOFFORD A. BROOKE.

Second Edition, large crown 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 7s. 6d.

SISTER AUGUSTINE, Superior of the Sisters of Charity at the St. Johannis Hospital at Bonn. Authorised Translation by HANS TRABAU, from the German Memorials of AMALIE VON LASALLE."The memoir gives a distinctive sympathetic portrait of the heroine, and thus attains the great object of a biography. The life of Sister Augustine is full of interest on the spiritual and moral side."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

A LITTLE CHILD'S MONUMENT. By the Hon. RODEN NOEL."Very lovely in form are many of these poems, while all are exquisite in feeling."—Contemporary Review."It is rare to meet with poetry so spontaneous and genuine as that which Mr. Noel has just published. In form and melody these poems are perhaps the most perfect Mr. Noel has yet produced."—Academy.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

ANNE BOLEYN: a Tragedy, in Five Acts. By the Author of "Palace and Prison," "Ginevra," &c.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

SONGS of STUDY. By William Wilkins, B.A., Scholar, Trinity College, Dublin.

Small crown 8vo, price 5s.

THE CROWNED HIPPOLYTUS, Translated from Euripides. With New Poems. By A. MARY F. ROBINSON, Author of "A Handful of Honeysuckles."

LONDON: 1, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S
NEW LIST.

Ready next week.

MAJOR SERPA PINTO'S HOW I CROSSED AFRICA; from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean, through Unknown Countries; Discovery of the Great Zambesi Affluents, &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Twenty Full-Page and 118 Half-Page and smaller Illustrations, Thirteen small Maps and One large one, cloth extra, 42s.

 As an indication of the perilous nature of the Journey, it is sufficient to mention that of the entire force comprising the expedition, and numbering over four hundred, only a very few survived, the rest having been destroyed by savages, wild beasts, fevers, &c.

DR. EMIL HOLUB'S SEVEN YEARS in SOUTH AFRICA: Travels, Researches, and Hunting Adventures (1872 to 1879). Translated by ELLEN E. FREW, Translator of Schweinfurth's "Heart of Africa," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with 200 Illustrations and Map, cloth extra, 42s.

 The publication of Dr. HOLUB's work has been eagerly looked forward to by the geographical world. It will be found to contain an immense amount of information of the greatest interest to all who appreciate accounts of travel in new lands, and amongst, for the most part, unknown tribes. The Doctor's experiences and adventures are most varied, and most vividly described. His life was frequently in danger from savages and wild beasts.

TO THE CENTRAL AFRICAN LAKES and BACK: the Narrative of the Royal Geographical Society's East Central African Expedition, 1878-80. By JOSEPH THOMSON, F.R.G.S. 2 vols., crown 8vo, with Portrait and brief Memoir of the late Keith Johnston, and with Portrait of the Author and Map.

[Will be ready about the end of this month.]

SUNRISE: a Story of These Times. By WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "A Daughter of Heth," "Three Feathers," &c., &c. 3 vols., 31s. 6d. A FIFTH EDITION is now ready. 3,000 Copies have been sold.Among the Press opinions are the following:—
"The interest of Mr. Black's last novel depends in a large measure upon the character of the heroine, which is at once conventional and picturesque. . . . From the outset the girl exercises a sort of fascination over the reader. . . . Not only is the story full of interest, but the characters, from that of Natalie downwards, stand out with distinctness."—Times.
The Daily News says:—"It deals with those secret societies the workings of which have exploded on the public mind so suddenly and so terribly in the murder of the Emperor of Russia. . . . Mr. Black shows his old power on new ground. There is something wonderful in the constant freshness of Mr. Black's style. . . . Natalie Lind is placed in circumstances entirely different from those of any of Mr. Black's former heroines, and has to play a bolder and more difficult part. . . . Even with the recollection of Coquette and Sheila before us, we are inclined to think 'Sunrise' Mr. Black's best novel. There are those who will always believe 'The Daughter of Heth' to be the sweetest of stories, yet even such must recognise the growth of power, the larger grasp, the stronger stroke in this last book. The magic art of description, which is peculiarly his own, has been used in it with more restraint, but equal effect.""The best of the novelist's writings."—John Bull.
"The finest work of fiction since George Eliot gave us the result of her first labours."—Our Journal.

IMPORTANT WORK BY JULES VERNE.

THE GREAT EXPLORERS and NAVIGATORS of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. With numerous Illustrations, and Facsimile Copies of Old Engravings, Charts, Maps, &c. Translated by N. D'ANVERS. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, price 12s. 6d.; gilt edges, 14s.

PUBLISHERS' NOTE.—This volume forms the third of three volumes under the general title of "Celebrated Travels and Travelers." The First Volume is entitled "The Exploration of the World," and covers a period in the world's history extending from B.C. 535 to the close of the seventeenth century. The second Volume treats on the "Great Navigators of the Eighteenth Century" and the Third Volume, as announced above, gives an account of "The Great Explorers and Navigators of the Nineteenth Century."

The SECOND PART of

THE STEAM HOUSE, by Jules Verne,
ENTITLED
TIGERS and TRAITORS

Is now ready, square crown 8vo, cloth extra, fully illustrated, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

 One of Verne's most original and thrilling romances.

Now ready, royal 8vo, price 5s.

THE ENGLISH CATALOGUE of BOOKS

for 1880. Containing a Complete List of all the Books published in Great Britain and Ireland in the Year 1880, with their Sizes, Prices, and Publishers' Names; also of the Principal Books published in the United States of America, with the addition of an Index to Subjects—a continuation of the London and British Catalogues.

"It is quite indispensable."—The Athenaeum.FOREIGN COUNTRIES and BRITISH COLONIES. Edited by F. S. PULLING, M.A.

The New Volumes of this Series are:—

AUSTRALIA. By J. F. Vesey Fitzgerald, late Colonial Secretary of Victoria. With Illustrations and Two Maps. 24 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.EGYPT. By Stanley Lane-Poole, B.A., Author of "The Life of Edward Lane." With Map and Illustrations. 200 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

Or "Military Maxims and Apophthegms" SIR GARNET WOLSELEY says:—"I hope it may be largely studied by the Army generally."

MILITARY MAXIMS & APOPTHEGMS of COMMANDERS (Ancient and Modern): the Soldier's Diary. Compiled by Captain BARTLE TEELE. In Pocket-book style, interleaved for Notes, leather binding, price 5s. [Now ready.]

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1881.

No. 467, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscripts.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Memoirs of Field-Marshal the Duke de Saldanha; with Selections from his Correspondence. By the Conde da Carnota. (Murray.)

AMONG Portuguese, few men have ever so fully possessed both the good and the bad qualities of the Peninsular race and character as Marshal Saldanha. All that was really great and all that was weak in him flowed from the fact of his being so true to his blood and his breeding. It is not within the scope of this article to follow up this appreciation of the Marshal's life in any sort of detail; and I shall content myself with a glance at the chief events recorded by the author, with such critical remarks as his treatment of them may suggest.

As to the style of the book, and the literary workmanship therein displayed, it does not become me, as a foreigner, to judge or to meddle.

The reader is warned at starting not to expect anything like critical impartiality. Count Carnota tells us in his Preface that the task of writing a Life of his famous brother-in-law "devolved upon him as a duty." After that we know what to expect, and the warning is certainly not unnecessary. It is not the attitude of a biographer which the Count assumes, but that of a devotee before a shrine. The work extends through two bulky volumes, and deals with the life of a man who lived more than eighty years; yet no single word of censure—hardly a criticism—escapes from the writer's pen.

Saldanha was born in 1790, the eighth son of his parents. His family was noble, and he counted among his ancestors the famous Bernardo del Carpio and the still more famous Marquis de Pombal. The consciousness of high lineage goes for something in any estimate we may form of Saldanha. He himself, during a considerable period of his life, was in heart and in behaviour not unlike one of those barons of feudal and mediæval Spain whose portraits have been so admirably drawn for us by M. Dozy. He was born to poverty, and his poverty, too, influenced his life. It obliged him to embrace the career of arms at an age when most boys are still in the school-room. At fifteen he joined the army; at the age of twenty-three he had already served through several campaigns of the Peninsular War, and on its termination he found himself a full colonel. Military life for him was what it was to some of the great captains of Napoleon. He passed through all the grades of command with a rapidity that owed everything to individual energy, capacity, and the happy chances of battle. This portion of the Marshal's career is well narrated by his biographer.

In 1816 he left Portugal for Brazil, where the Portuguese King had set up his throne eight years before. Saldanha was charged with the task of pacifying the south of the empire. The Captain-Generalship of Monte Video was the title with which he held that great province, all but in name a kingdom—so nearly, indeed, that, when the son of King John VI. proclaimed in 1823 the separation of Brazil from the mother-country, the people whom Saldanha had ruled vice-regally offered him the crown of Monte Video. Saldanha refused, through loyalty to his King, but subsequently expressed his conviction "that he would have made an excellent king of any country whatever." This mixture of loyalty and of an assurance not far removed from vanity ran like a strong thread through all the texture of Saldanha's character, and is conspicuous in every event of his long life.

In 1823 Saldanha returned to Lisbon, where John VI. now reigned as King. The then rulers of Portugal were the authors of the Revolution of 1820, which had proclaimed a Constitution, so-called parliamentary, but virtually all but Republican. The Ministers took alarm at the arrival of the eminent soldier, and to rid themselves of his presence appointed him to the command of the expedition then preparing to reduce the emancipated Brazilian provinces to subjection. Saldanha refused the appointment, and was thrown into prison. Shortly afterwards the military rising of Villa Franca suppressed the Constitution of 1820, and proclaimed an absolute monarchy. Saldanha escaped from prison, and "placed himself at the orders of his Sovereign." The biographer uses considerable ingenuity to reconcile the absolutist attitude of the Marshal at this juncture with the liberalism which he subsequently professed. The Liberals of the day, however, were not so easily satisfied, and when they came into power he was banished from the kingdom.

Such advocacy as this on the part of Count Carnota is evidence, if evidence were required, how little desirable it is that the biography of any public man should be undertaken by a relative. Saldanha was in turns absolutist, demagogue, and doctrinaire; and all the attempts of the author to explain away these contradictions of view are futile. Common observation led impartial persons to perceive that it was not within the scope of Saldanha's mind to grasp political ideas. His actions were, indeed, swayed by motives very far removed from abstract theories or general principles; and it is known to all well-informed Portuguese that these motives were his own likes and dislikes, a most ingenuous self-conceit, and, more than aught else, the urgent necessity he felt to satisfy the crowd of clients who gathered round him.

Named Military Governor of Oporto, he found himself in that city when the death of the King took place, and Dom Pedro, the heir to the throne, already Emperor of Brazil, after granting the country a Liberal Charter, abdicated the Portuguese Crown in favour of his daughter, Donna Maria Segunda. The account given by Count Carnota of the events which followed the King's death is singularly deficient. An English writer has no excuse for overlooking the numerous works of English writers who have given data the very opposite of what he states as facts. He might have read that neither Canning nor Lord Stuart, who brought the Charter to Portugal, approved the action of Dom Pedro. Should the book run to a second edition, the author will do well to refer to the following authorities:—An Historical View of the Revolutions of Portugal, by an Eye-witness (Murray, 1827); A Letter to the Marquis of Lansdowne on the Affairs of Portugal and Spain, by W. Walton (Richardson, 1827); The Last Days of the Portuguese Constitution, by Lord Porchester (Bentley, 1830); A Letter to the Earl of Aberdeen, by H. G. Knight (Ridgway, 1829); Papers respecting the Relations between Great Britain and Portugal, presented to both Houses of Parliament, June 1829, &c. These last State papers especially will put the attitude taken by Great Britain at this juncture in a clear light.

The plain truth is that Saldanha, hitherto the general and servant of an absolutist king, was carried away by the flattery of the Jacobins. He fomented a military manifestation, and by means of it forced on the proclamation of the Charter in 1826. This opens a new period in the life of Saldanha. Raised to the Ministry, the reactionary principles of his colleagues soon afterwards drove him into exile. The author gives too brief a relation of the tumults which this event caused in Lisbon; and he omits to mention a fact referred to by all writers who have dealt with the events of the period—that Saldanha was publicly acclaimed First Consul by the multitude.

Count Carnota prints some very interesting letters written to the Emperor Dom Pedro by Saldanha from his English exile, with the intention of proving his loyalty to the throne. In point of fact, he was loyal at the very same time to the principles of the Radicals—so far, that is, as it lay in him to be true to, or even to comprehend, the general principles of political life. Here is a sketch of him at this period of his career, drawn by the impartial and not unfriendly hand of a companion in arms:—

"He is by nature and by experience a soldier; but if he leaves the field and enters the Cabinet then he becomes a child, and commits follies which, in the eye of a person who does not know his weakness on this point, appear unjust and iniquitous" (Shaw, Personal Mem. and Corresp., 1837, ii., p. 14).

The letters from Saldanha to Dom Pedro, who was still on his throne at Rio, quite confirm the judgment given by Shaw. Saldanha tells the Emperor that "the whole kingdom longs for your Majesty;" and yet the subsequent civil war of four years' duration is a melancholy proof how utterly he misjudged the situation. Further evidence of how far Saldanha's imagination could travel beyond the region of "practical politics" is found in the extraordinary fact that he engaged himself in the schemes of the Spanish refugees in London, and seriously offered to assist in placing Dom Pedro upon a constitutional throne in Spain, vice King Ferdinand, to be deposed. Forunately for Portugal and the Peninsula, the proposal came to nothing.

During the reign of the absolutist usurper, Dom Miguel, from 1828 to 1832, Saldanha was attached to the Radical émigrés. The instability of his character, joined to his military prestige, caused him to seem a danger to the leaders of the Liberal movement—so much so that he was excluded from the expeditionary force with which the Emperor Dom Pedro sailed for the re-conquest of Portugal. But when the Liberal cause was seemingly lost in 1832, and the invading army of liberators was closely blockaded in the city of Oporto, the Emperor was compelled to call to his side the most famous of Portuguese captains. There can be no doubt that at a most critical moment he saved Oporto, and with that city the cause of Liberalism in Portugal. Yet immediately afterwards, while he was serving as a general of division at the right hand of his Sovereign, of his own single initiative, without leave obtained from his commander-in-chief or his king, he opened negotiations with the enemy, a fact which only came to be divulged by an accident. Such an act might easily be described as high treason; but those who are read in the habits and character of the mediæval condottieri of Spain, and can trace these habits and this character in Saldanha, will be little surprised. And his conduct is praised by his biographer. Saldanha "was not governed," he tells us, "by any ambitious views, nor by the desire to make himself with his sword alone master of the situation, or 'virtual king,' as his calumniators expressed themselves." It is very difficult, under the circumstances, to arrive at any conclusion but that he desired to attain that very object. At least, so appears to have thought Marshal Solignac, a blunt French soldier in chief command at Oporto, for when he heard of this escapade of Saldanha he was, to use the biographer's words, "furious, . . . and declared that he would bring Saldanha to a court-martial and, if found guilty, have him shot."

The long war between Liberalism and Absolutism ended with the victory of the Liberals; but before the conclusion of the struggle Saldanha, for his great services to his country, had been created a field-marshal. The latter period of the civil war had been for him a time of vacillation. At one time he seemed to incline to become a leader of the democratic party; at another, to be a mere tool in the hands of the Crown. It was a transition period for him, and the contradictions and inconsistencies between his speeches and his acts, his deeds and his declarations, are more than ever abundant.

In 1835 began the third period of the Marshal's life. He now took his stand very decidedly on the side of constitutional monarchy, and found himself in opposition to his recent friends the Radicals, who were agitating for reform. This portion of his career, intricately bound up as it is with the history of Portugal, deserves a brief examination. In 1836 a revolution abolished the existing charter and re-established the all-but Republican constitution of 1822. Encouraged by both Great Britain and Belgium, the Queen proposed to herself by forcible means to stem the current of ultra-Liberalism. Saldanha held the strings of this counter-revolution, headed a palace intrigue against the so-called Septembrist movement, and, when things were at their worst, took the field, was beaten at Chão da Feira, and crossed the frontier into Spain.

During the next ten years Saldanha took no further part in politics than as ambassador to various Courts of Europe. It is no secret that successive Portuguese Governments employed him in this capacity, not for any diplomatic use they thought to put him to, but to rid themselves of the dangerous presence of an ambitious and ever-restless politician—useless to them as a counsellor, worse than useless in the machinery of government, and yet prominent and influential by reason of his popularity and his military renown. The missions he was sent on were indeed wholly idle. What raison d'être could there be for so eminent a personage as Saldanha at the Court of Vienna, for instance? It is not surprising to find, by a letter quoted by Count Carnota, that he was preparing to occupy his dignified leisure with an attempt to reconcile the Book of Genesis with the latest developments of geological science!

In the year 1846 there broke out in Portugal a revolution against that doctrinaire movement which found its Guizot in Senhor Costa Cabral. The Queen decided to overturn the Ministry created by that revolution. She sent for Saldanha, and charged him with the execution of the disastrous coup d'état of the 6th of October of that year. Saldanha again acted the part of condottiere for the Crown; and this particular act of prowess resulted in a civil war so long and so grievous that the Queen, to save her throne, was forced to seek the intervention of Spain and of Great Britain. Saldanha, at the nominal head of the Government from 1846 to 1849, virtually handed over all real power to Costa Cabral; but two years sufficed to tire the Marshal of his own party, and he stirred up a pronunciamento against the Ministry which for years he had headed. The reader of Count Carnota's book will anticipate the apology which is here given for such a change of front. Whenever Saldanha abandons the principles he had been advocating, it is always that the country is on the verge of an abyss, and can be saved only by a military revolt or by a palace intrigue.

In the account of the revolution of 1851 there are many notable omissions and some actual errors. For example, Count Carnota does not tell us that at this period the prestige of Saldanha had so dwindled in Oporto itself that he had to fly to Galicia, and only returned to head a revolt of the garrison which had been promoted by the Radical party. The author ascribes to Saldanha an importance in the Ministry which lasted from 1851 to 1856 (the so-called Regeneração) which he was far from possessing. At that period the true ruler of the country, as every student of its history well knows, was not Saldanha, but Rodrigo da Fonseca.

Saldanha again retired into private life in 1856; and this time he passed from the study of theology to that of homoeopathy, and from the world of politics to the world of commercial finance. Towards the end of his life his name figured in the prospectuses of several companies of more or less repute.

In 1870 Saldanha, now a very old man, seduced two regiments, surrounded with them the palace of the King, and forced upon his Majesty the dismissal of the existing Ministry. This ignoble coup d'état, the latest of a long list of such strokes of intrigue, has met perhaps with more of ridicule than of opprobrium; but for Count Carnota the upsetting of a constitutional Government is deserving neither of ridicule, nor of hatred, nor of contempt. "He once more," says his unfailing apologist (ii. 397), "saved the country from anarchy!"

The Ministry thus forced upon King and country at the point of the bayonet, and of which Saldanha naturally constituted himself the head, lasted but a few months. Then, as had so often happened before when the rulers of Portugal desired peace and freedom from the restless ambition of Marshal Saldanha, he was sent out of the country, as ambassador to Great Britain. It was during the term of this embassy that Saldanha made a proposition to his Government which, in its astounding cynicism, forms one of the most remarkable episodes in the history of European diplomacy. He offered "to give up his diplomatic appointment if the Government would grant him a pension of twelve millions of reis a year, with continuance of half of that sum to his wife" (ii. 433). All that the author finds to say of this is that it is a moderate wish!

So far, the biography of Count Carnota has suggested much occasion for critical reprehension; but justice requires the admission that the book is full of most important documentary evidence, in the shape of State papers, despatches, letters, and private notes, bearing on the history of the time, as well as on the character of Saldanha himself. It is a grave shortcoming in the author that he has utterly failed to see the force of the evidence he adduces—that his appreciation of his brother-in-law's character and motives is a wholly one-sided one. As a rule, the author is not ill-informed as to recent Portuguese history—by no means a common characteristic in the works of foreigners treating of Portugal. His facts are, indeed, often correct even when he is illogical in his deductions from them. Errors indeed there are, but they are few and far between. The author, for instance, talks of a Portuguese constitution granted in 1820, but the revolution which broke out in that year adopted the Spanish constitution of 1812, and it lasted till 1822. Gen. Clinton's arrival with the English division is ante-dated by three years; the right date is 1827, and not 1824. A few more such slips are hardly noticeable flaws in a work whose value—notwithstanding the strong, and not perhaps wholly blameable, personal bias of the author, and the shortcomings arising therefrom—will be considerable to the future historian of a long and critical period in the history of Portugal.

OLIVEIRA MARTINS.

Beowulf: an Old-English Poem. Translated into Modern Rhymes by Lieut.-Col. H. W. Lumsden, late Royal Artillery. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

It is now many years since an English verse translation of our famous epic has appeared. That of Prof. Wackerbarth (Pickering, 1849), written in 1847, was well adapted to the taste of its day, and is in many respects a creditable performance, achieved in the teeth of difficulties far greater than a translator of our time is obliged to face. Still it must be confessed that Scott's metre, which the Professor adopted, is no better suited to the Lay of Beowulf than it is, pace Conington, to the Aeneid. The admirable prose rendering of Kemble is not easily obtained; and even Thorpe's edition, in which the translation is provokingly cut into little bits and set side by side with the original, has long been out of print. There is, therefore, ample room for a new English version. Moreover, since the days of Thorpe and Kemble a whole generation of zealous scholars have been at work upon Beowulf; and, although their toil has not been as fruitful as might have been expected by those who are not aware of the peculiar difficulties which beset the student of the "Tractatus nobilissimus poetice scriptus," yet it is surely well to have some record of their progress in English. The "learned" have Moritz Heyne's good and handy edition of Beowulf, and will soon be possessed of the long-promised facsimile of Vitellius A. XV. itself; let them bear them. But it will be long ere the "general reading public" will be able or willing to read the Old-English text, or even the German or Danish translations thereof. In the meanwhile, it will, I hope, readily welcome a vigorous and readable English version, in good swinging ballad-metre, such as this of Col. Lumsden's.

A poem written down in the lifetime of Dunstan in a form dating from the days of Alfred at latest, dealing with some of the oldest myths and most early historical traditions of our race, can hardly be altogether uninteresting. Even those whose favourite mind-food is the spicy romance of modern life made up in three-volume doses by approved female practitioners may experience a "gentle pleasure" if they will turn for an hour to this curious piece of old-world poetry. They will find, in a quaint and unwonted setting, a series of pictures of life in the heroic age of Teuton history, and will make acquaintance with a hero who fulfils the ideal of Carlyle, and is at once truly manly and really pious. For Col. Lumsden cannot expect the wide circulation to which von Wolzogen's threepenny German Translation for the People is probably destined, but trust he will find the appreciation which his labour of love undoubtedly deserves. For the work is one which demands no small care and pains. The very blemishes of the original, its occasional obscurity, tiresome repetitions, and prolix moralising, are of a kind which no version can remove, save by the heroic method of M. Botkine, who, in his rendering, treats what he calls "superfluité choquante" by the simple process of excision. On the other hand, the harmonious cadences, the energy of phrase, the peculiar and beautiful variety of epithet and synonym which are all so charming in the Old English are exceptionally difficult to render. Col. Lumsden has managed to stick closely to his text, and at the same time to keep pretty clear of the mock-archaic phrases and words which are so dear to the would-be imitators of Mr. Morris. The metre is well chosen and by no means ill-handled. An example or two will best show the measure of Col. Lumsden's success. He gives the noble description of the fiends' haunt thus:—

"They have their lair
In darksome land, wolf-haunted cliffs, and windy headlands high,
And fen-ways rough, where mountain-streams, the hills' dark shadows by,
Run down in flood to fields below. Not far from hence the mere
A mile away; above it hang fast-rooted forests sere O'ershadowing the waves. There wonders dire are seen by night,
And fire upon the flood. But cunning hath no living wight
To know the depths. The heather-ranging hart, in antlered pride,
Pressed by the hounds and hunted far, in woody holt may hide,
But on the bank will sooner die than plunge therein his crest.
A dreary place—wan 'neath the clouds heave waters in no rest,
When wind upstirreth weather foul, and all the lift grows dark,
And the heavens weep."

Those who will take the trouble to turn to their Beowulf, ll. 1359-77, will agree that the sense, at all events, is closely enough given, though the charm of the original words can of course be only faintly conveyed. Hearty and stirring are the words of the Finnsborough fragment, the worthy Old-English analogue of the famous Biarka-Mál. The king's enemies have beset his hall by night and he wakens his men to war.

"'Tis not the daybreak in the east, nor hither dragon flies
Nor burn this hall's high pinnacles, but on us foemen rise!
The grey wolf howls, the ravens cry, the battle-
word clangs loud,
Shield answering to shaft; the moon shines full beneath the cloud!
Now to fulfil this people's fate are coming deeds of woe!
But wake ye now, my warriors all! Awake, your valour show!
Lift up your hands, fight in the front and think of glory won!"

It would be easy to point out occasional slips of scholarship and notice unrevised roughnesses of metre, but these can be corrected in a second edition, and do not, on the whole, detract from the use and purpose of the book. When Col. Lumsden revises his poem he will do well to use Heyne's last edition, which, besides Grim's clever emendations, contains the valuable notes and corrections of Bugge and other scholars. He will also cut out the word "breastplate," which is useless and misleading; correct "Eala" to "Eaha;" and give Weird its capital where, as so often in Beowulf, it is Fate personified. The word "useful," p. 37, is unpoetical, and "mickle" is not English. The episode of Offa should be given, and the "p" changed for "th," if not for "þ," in the quotations. Note D is, I think, new, and worth making. In Note C the "older arrangement" referred to is undoubtedly right. It would be useful to have the numbers of the lines marked at the head of each book and part, especially as Col. Lumsden has wisely discarded the old divisions for his translation, and adopted the sensible plan suggested by Mr. Arnold.

F. YORK POWELL.

Buried Alive; or, Ten Years of Penal Servitude in Siberia. By Fedor Dostoyeffsky. Translated from the Russian by Marie von Thilo. (Longmans.)

THE recent death of the author of Notes from the Dead House, and the striking demonstrations of respect with which his funeral has been attended at St. Petersburg, invest with a special interest just now the English version of that remarkable work published under the title of Buried Alive. The descriptions of prison life in Siberia which it contains are well worthy of being widely read, serving as a useful corrective to the sensational accounts of Siberian horrors which certain French writers of fiction delight in producing.

The principal drawback to the real merits of Buried Alive is that it is impossible to say what part of it is fact and what is fiction. The author of the book really spent four years as a convict in a Siberian prison, and the sketches which he has produced are no doubt faithful to life. Still they have not the value which they would have possessed if he had recorded without modification what he really saw and heard during his time of bondage. It must be remembered also that thirty years have elapsed since he was condemned to penal servitude. And in this interval many reforms have been effected. Mr. Lansdell, whose account of a recent visit to many of the Siberian prisons was published in the Contemporary Review last October, found them "in a much better condition than is generally supposed." He states that "the food per week given to a hard labour convict at Kara is nearly double in weight that which is given to a convict in England;" and the amount of indulgences accorded to a Siberian katorjnik might deservedly render jealous a prisoner at Dartmoor or Portland. Dreary indeed is the lot of an English malefactor who has fallen into the hands of the law compared with that of his Siberian brother, whose imprisonment is alleviated by tobacco and enlivened by strong drink and gambling, not to speak of the possibility of an occasional flirtation and the probability of a yearly theatrical performance at Christmas. Among professional criminals, therefore, Buried Alive may give rise to grumbling. But by other persons it will probably be perused with interest.

Of the translation it is not necessary to say much. Having been made by a Russian lady, it is sufficiently correct so far as descriptions of fact are concerned. But the author's reflections at the beginning of each chapter have been rather paraphrased than translated. The statement is somewhat puzzling (on p. 234) that the soldier on duty who looked at a convict's corpse, being moved by a sudden impulse, "took off his sword and helmet and crossed himself." A reference to the original explains that the soldier unfastened his chin-strap, then took off his helmet and crossed himself. A phrase in the description of the prison soup appearing suspicious, it also was compared with the original. The author is made to say, "I used, at first, to be horrified at the numbers of black beetles floating about in it, but my fellow-prisoners evidently thought that they imparted an additional flavour to the soup, and never took any notice of them." The words which we have italicised are the gratuitous contribution of the translator or reviser. The author writes simply and concisely; the interpreter prefers a more ambitious style. For instance, the words "there were here murderers by accident and murderers by profession, brigands and brigand chiefs," are expanded into "there were among us criminals of all kinds and classes, beginning with the man who had slain his adversary in a moment of blind fury and the highway robber, and ending with the cold-blooded murderer who delighted in the death-struggles of his victim." After mentioning that more than one-half of the prisoners could read and write, and that someone had used the fact as an argument to prove that education demoralises the masses, the author says, in the translation, "the cause of the terrible depravity of our lower classes must be sought for elsewhere." He really never said a word about the "terrible depravity" of the Russian lower classes, a depravity in which he did not believe. He merely said: "There are quite different causes for that [i.e., for crime], although it must be admitted that reading and writing produce self-sufficiency among the people. But surely that is not altogether a fault."

W. R. S. RALSTON.

The Boke of Saint Albans. By Dame Juliana Berners. Reproduced in facsimile from the Edition of 1486. With an Introduction by William Blades. (Elliot Stock.)

MR. BLADES is an iconoclast. If there is a figure in our early literature which successive generations of scholars have approached with reverence and affection, it is that of Lady Juliana Berners, the lovely aristocrat who, from her dignified retirement as Prioress of Sopwell Nunnery, in Hertfordshire, wrote such a quantity of rather bad poetry and remarkably shrewd prose. Like the people who broke up stained glass windows for the sake of the lead, Mr. Blades bursts into this fairy chapel of false history, and, being infatuated with the printer of St. Albans and his types, thinks nothing of shattering this many-coloured vision. Dame Juliana Berners—"Dam Julyans Barnes" the original misprints it—becomes mere Mrs. Barnes, who was not an aristocrat, kept no diary, had nothing whatever to do with Sopwell, and, as Mr. Blades has the cruelty to hint, possibly had very little indeed to do with The Boke of St. Albans that has made her so famous. In all this, however, as is often the case with reformers, Mr. Blades goes too far. The real foundation of the legend of Lady Juliana Berners, the legend that Haslewood turned into full apocrypha, is the statement by Bale, who is the first historian to mention her. "Femina illustris," says Bale, "corporis et animi dotibus abundans ac forma elegantia spectabilis!" Mr. Blades boldly affirms that Bale had no information whatever to go upon, and that he built his edifice of praise entirely out of his own imagination. Of course it is possible that he did so, but it is not probable. It seems strange that it should not have struck Mr. Blades that, as Juliana Berners may possibly have survived her publication thirty years—for it must be remembered that her supposed relationship to Sir James Berners is all moonshine—Bale might very well have seen her and talked to her before she reached extreme old age. In 1496 Wynken de Worde speaks of her as though she were then alive; and if so, she certainly lived to be a contemporary of the future Bishop of Ossory. At all events, there is enough probability that Bale knew what he was talking about to place Mr. Blades' sweeping allegation among the vanities of dogmatising.

We have ventured to rally the editor of this splendid volume on one link in his reasoning, but we have nothing but praise for the care and erudition which he has generally displayed. His zeal for the nameless schoolmaster at St. Albans has enabled him to collect all the data with regard to this obscure but important personage which are likely now to be forthcoming. Eight works appear to have issued from the press at St. Albans during the period, from 1480 to 1486, when it was in activity. Of these only two, and those the latest in point of date, were in English. These were the Fructus Temporum, a folio volume of English chronicles, attributed to 1483, and the present work, printed in 1486. Mr. Blades has not been able to discover any internal or external facts that throw light on the personality of this printer; the only thing we know about him is supplied by Wynken de Worde, who mentions that he was a schoolmaster. Yet to the question, "Was he connected with Caxton and the Westminster Press?" Mr. Blades answers, "Without a shadow of doubt, No!" Here, again, Mr. Edward Scott and the supporters of that theory will say that he goes too far, and asserts a positive when he has only proved a negative. He merely controverts all the evidence that has been brought to prove that the schoolmaster was employed by Caxton by calling it, as indeed it is, mere surmise. Yet he allows that the fount used at St. Albans is the very same which, until 1484, had been in Caxton's possession; and it is certainly not beyond the reach of probability that a worn fount would be passed on to a pupil or dependent rather than sold to an absolute stranger. At all events, surmise is merely confronted with surmise; and in the silence of history we must hold that "beyond a shadow of doubt" Mr. Blades, like other less learned experts, can give no definite statement whatever upon the matter.

The bibliographical history of The Boke of St. Albans is curious. It was exceedingly popular during the hundred years that followed its original issue. Before the close of the sixteenth century the limited public of that day had exhausted at least nineteen editions. In Shakspeare's youth it reached its zenith of popularity. Gervase Markham rewrote it in 1595, and three separate reprints bear date 1596. But after 1614, when it was issued under the title of A Jewell for Gentrie, it ceased to be in demand, popular taste in literature, as all students of Jacobean thought must have noticed, taking a very sudden change about that time. For 180 years it remained a mere curiosity—"a bon morceau for the quizzical collector," as Dibdin said in his affected way. In 1793 a certain J. Dallaway reprinted it in quarto, with, says Mr. Blades, an excellent Introduction. Finally, in 1810, the extraordinary Joseph Haslewood edited it with all sorts of florid romancing about the fair authoress, adding every description of dome and flying buttress to the airy structure which Mr. Blades pulls down upon us with so much gusto.

There is a great quantity of fine confused reading in The Boke of St. Albans. One may dip into it almost anywhere and be amused—with most positive instruction perhaps in the treatise on hawking. A great many things which in the fifteenth century were as well known to Kate the queen as to the page beneath her window are now unfamiliar enough to the wisest of antiquaries. It is not everybody who knows that the roe of small fishes made juice of is good for the passion that goshawks have, fasting, or in what manner a man should feed his hawk in mew. It is well to lay to heart the solemn fact that "the feathers upon the back of a hawk be called the back feathers." Dame Juliana is always sententious, but not always so commonplace as this; and when she comes down upon us with a very cryptic and crabbed paragraph on "the kindly terms that belong to hawks" she commands our respect as much as she always commands our affectionate admiration. The facsimile reproduction of the text seems to be most carefully and correctly performed, and the whole volume forms a luxurious and magnificent bait for book-buyers.

EDMUND W. GOSSE.

Blacks, Boers, and British: a Three-Cornered Problem. By F. Reginald Statham. (Macmillan.)

THAT utter and complete ignorance exists in England respecting South African affairs is the opinion of Mr. Statham; and, in spite of the voluminous literature on the subject which the last three years has produced, we are not disposed to disagree with him. He endeavours, in a popular way, to dispel this ignorance in the small volume before us, which is well adapted to its purpose. There is nothing to frighten the lightest of readers, and the author is thoroughly acquainted with his subject. He resided in Natal, as editor of the Natal Witness, the oldest established journal in that colony, during the eventful years of 1878 and 1879. He formed an independent judgment on public affairs and kept clear of colonial prejudices, while entertaining a very kindly feeling towards the colonists, whom he is anxious to clear from the charges brought against them with respect to Langalibalele and the Zulu War. In the first case, much is to be allowed for 25,000 European colonists living among 300,000 blacks. The Zulu War he attributes to Sir Bartle Frere, and Sir Bartle Frere alone. The sin, says our author, is not the colonists',

"but that of the proconsul, whose reputation would have enabled him to inaugurate in South Africa a policy of peace and moderation, but who, deliberately choosing the lower road, stirred up every base and bitter passion, and threw five millions of imperial treasure clean into the sea."

He shows how determined Sir Bartle Frere was from the beginning to crush the Zulus, how trumpetry were the pretences for war, how documents were suppressed, how the alarm in Natal was created and fomented. The colonists had the most perfect confidence in Sir Bartle Frere, and he was able to lead them as he chose.

The Zulu War is now a matter of history, but the question of the position of the Dutch in South Africa is one of present and pressing urgency. The future of South Africa is in their hands. Popular institutions have been forced on Cape Colony, where the Dutch far outnumber the English, though as yet they have not felt, or at least have not exerted, their power; the Orange Free State and the Transvaal are purely Dutch; Natal alone, with its handful of white inhabitants, chiefly English. What will be the effect of the war with the Boers of the Transvaal on their brethren in Cape Colony? Mr. Statham, as others have done before him, paints in vivid colours the cruel wrongs of the Boers—the way they were imposed upon in the matter of compensation for their slaves, the oppression which caused their great exodus from Cape Colony, the abominable treatment they experienced in Natal, and the annexation of the republic. And here we have a new and unexpected light thrown on the proceedings of Sir Theophilus Shepstone—that he was not the originator of that piece of treachery, but a tool in the hands of a clique of Natal land-speculators. The author indignantly repels the accusation made by the enemies of the Boers of the Transvaal that they enslaved the natives; and, even were the accusation justified, we must confess to a feeling of disgust when we hear loud cries of horror at the idea of the Dutch making slaves from the same persons who are perfectly callous to the destruction of the Zulus.

To what source are we to trace the wrongs of the Boers? According to the author, to what he calls the curse of South Africa, the Colonial Office. He deals his censure without regard to party; Lords Carnarvon and Kimberley come in for it alike. His complaint is that the Office has no policy.

"What is absolutely destructive of all confidence, all respect, on the part of South African colonists towards the department of State with which it is their misfortune to have to deal, is the purposeless, colourless, unstable drifting hither and thither; the policy of committal, and reversal, and re-reversal; the policy that one day blows hot and the next day blows cold; that one day makes a new commandment, and the next day chastises you for attempting to keep it; a policy the guiding principle of which is the keeping of things quiet"— and a better instance of this could not be found than the case of the Transvaal Boers, driven from Natal, which they found empty and colonised, then established as a separate State, then reclaimed as British subjects.

Mr. Statham's work is carried down to the departure of Sir F. Roberts for Natal. He could not have foreseen that the Boers would regain by force of arms that independence which, so long as they had only right and justice on their side, was denied them. We must not omit to call the reader's attention to the chapter on confederation, and to the pleasing account of the life of the Dutch in Cape Colony. WILLIAM WICKHAM.

NEW NOVELS.

Beside the River: a Tale. By Katharine S. Macquoid, Author of "Patty," &c. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Noirs et Rouges. Par Victor Cherbuliez. (Hachette.)

Found though Lost. By Charles H. Eden. (Newman.)

The Margaret-Book: a Legend of Lorraine. By Th. von Saldern. (Sampson Low.)

Ben-Hur: a Tale of the Christ. By Lew Wallace. (Sampson Low.)

MRS. MACQUOID stands almost alone in the excellent use which she makes in her fictions and other works of the very picturesque scenery to be met with in the North of France and the most favoured portions of Belgium. The present novel may be taken as more than a fair sample of her power in this direction. While not by any means destitute of interest as a story, Beside the River cannot fail to charm every reader by its admirable touches of local colouring. Even those who are unacquainted with the scenery will be able to carry away a vivid picture on the retina of the mind of the view on the highway to Spa where the Château Montecour is situate, and where close beside the clear, sparkling Ambève stands the pleasant white-washed inn of the brothers Cajot. Nor is the opening of the novel less striking, where we meet with the heroine, Jeanne Lahaye, at the rural cottage on the banks of the Meuse. We could extract many little vignettes of scenery which do credit to Mrs. Macquoid's perceptions of the beautiful and to her facile pen. However, our readers will, no doubt, consider that, the work before us being a story, the plot's the thing. In this respect, too, we are able to speak more cordially of the novel than of some of its predecessors by the same hand. The most unsatisfactory piece of portrait-painting is that of the scheming Mdlle. Herkenne, the wicked lady of the piece. She is too shadowy. It is true that on one or two occasions she simulates a dramatic energy that would fetch down the house if she were represented on the boards of some transpontine theatre; but she is, after all, a poor creature. She makes a good outline for such a creation as an artist like Wilkie Collins loves to fill in; but she does not make one's flesh creep, as so many of his naughty, stealthy women do. Mrs. Macquoid is not strong enough in the feline element. Mdlle. Herkenne puts her claws out of their velvety sheath rather too soon and far too demonstratively. But passing from this artful bête noire to the other characters, we have scarcely anything but praise for the way in which the heroine and some of the minor personages are limned. M. Baconfoy is evidently true to the life; after disclaiming against matrimony he is caught by that bewitching widow, Mdlle. Boulotte—a venial sin, we are willing to admit, considering her power to charm. A great deal of trouble arises through the separation of the heroine, Jeanne, and her lover, Edmond Dupuis. The latter, believing that Jeanne has ceased to love him, marries another, and discovers too late that his old love has always been true to him. There being consequently one too many in the dramatis personae, as we approach the conclusion of the novel, we look for some convenient and fatal fever or accident to remove the superfluous individual; but in this case nobody dies, either voluntarily or because they are made to. Jeanne's noble character and devotion lead Edmond to love his wife even better than ever; while Jeanne herself takes to works of charity. The male villain of the piece, a certain red-haired Antoine Vidonze, is emphatically "played out." We are inclined to rank this as the best of all Mrs. Macquoid's novels; and her stories are always entertaining.

Those readers who wish for a change from the feverishness and unhealthiness of M. Zola will find it in the pages of M. Cherbuliez. And yet the present work is far from lacking in dramatic passages. The story opens on a Christmas Eve, eighteen young girls being present at the usual fête to the child Jesus. Among these maidens is Mdlle. Maulabret, the heroine of the novel. She subsequently passes through a very diversified career, and there are some exciting scenes between her and her lover, Albert. The letters of the latter to the heroine are very lively and clever. There is one very powerful scene towards the close of the work, where Albert rescues Mdlle. Maulabret from her enemy and persecutor, Lésin. Owing her life to Albert, she offers him her friendship, but he will be content with nothing less than love. He conquers at last, and the contest between worldly happiness and the Church ends in favour of the former.

Mr. Eden's story is in one volume, but it is full of incident and sensation. We cannot say much for its literary style, but the book will no doubt be read with interest. The author is very warm in his praises of Seville. No doubt Seville is a very beautiful city, but it does not stand alone in this respect; and there is almost too much praise of it in Mr. Eden's pages. Mark Twain was advised to "see Naples and die," and he almost did both; but Naples must pale the ineffectual fires of her splendour before Seville, according to Mr. Eden. The heroine of the story is the best of all the characters in the novel; but the villain is a very poor, washed-out individual, not fully up to the melodramatic business. The account of the secret capture and deportation of the hero is very curious; and the author shows that it is based upon fact, for such readers as may be sceptical. Mr. Eden is neither a profound nor a graceful writer, but in Found though Lost he has had the advantage of a telling plot.

The Margaret-Book, as its title states, is a legend of Lorraine. Some of its descriptions are really excellent, nor is the story itself without certain agreeable points. The much-tried Margaret, also, is a really fine character. The narrative, originally written in German, has on the whole been well rendered into English.

It is not stated whether Ben-Hur, which appears in Sampson Low's "Six-shilling Series," is now published for the first time, nor do we ourselves remember. However, that is a matter of little consequence. It is a very singular book, and one that, if liked at all, will be liked very much. The local colouring seems, so far as we are able to judge, to be not untrue, the transcriptions of Palestine scenery being especially well done. The portrait of Mary, the mother of Christ, is very attractively drawn. The story of Ben-Hur is well worth reading; and the author tells us that if, on visiting Rome, anyone will make the short journey to the catacomb of St. Calixto, which is more ancient than that of San Sebastiano, he will see what became of the fortune of Ben-Hur, and give thanks. This tale is certainly very unlike the ordinary run of novels.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

SOME BOOKS OF HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

A Popular History of the United States. By William Cullen Bryant and Sydney Howard Gay. Vol. IV. (Sampson Low.) It may be remembered that in our notices of the earlier volumes of this work we reserved the expression of our opinion of its merits until its completion. It may also be remembered that we then ventured to suggest the probability that the venerable poet and journalist, whose name has still pre-eminence on the title-page, really had, and would have, nothing whatever to do with the actual authorship, the sole responsibility of which would rest upon his nominal colleague; and that Mr. Gay had yet his reputation as an historian to make. The accuracy of these conjectures is now fully confirmed by no less a witness than Mr. Gay himself, the first paragraph of whose "Introductory," as he calls it, we here quote verbatim :—

"The present volume is the completion of the work which the late Mr. Bryant consented should have the sanction of his name. The first two volumes passed the ordeal of his careful perusal; in justice to those who began the reading of the work at the beginning of its publication it is only proper to say that, save in the absence of his verbal criticism for the last two volumes, there was no change of actual authorship consequent upon his death."

We know now, therefore, that, although Mr. Bryant's name appears on the title-page of every volume as one of its authors, he had nothing whatever to do with the last two volumes, and that his authorship of the first two extended no farther than the friendly offices of "verbal criticism." In other words, he read Mr. Gay's production as he would have read an article sent to him for publication in his daily journal, and was as much the author of one as of the other. That the writer of Thanatopsis should have consented to lend the "sanction of his name," as Mr. Gay cunningly puts it, to a work of which he was in no sense the author, or, to speak more accurately, should have consented to appear publicly before his countrymen and the world as the actual author of a work not one line of which he had written, cannot fail to prove a source of deep and lasting regret to all those who hold his memory in reverence. Of the motives of those who persuaded him, in his extreme old age, to such a course it is unnecessary to speak. The anticipated results having been attained, nothing is easier now than for Mr. Gay to make a clean breast, and confess practically that Mr. Bryant's professed authorship was only a Transatlantic commercial device.

It is with Mr. Gay alone, and his work, that we have now to deal; and we say frankly that we do not think these volumes prove him to be in possession of most, or even many, of the qualities which are generally supposed to be necessary to make up the character of a careful and impartial historian. As a serious "History of the United States" it does not compare at all favourably with that issued in this country a few years ago by Messrs. Cassell, the composition of which is remarkably pure and classical, while that of the work before us is frequently careless and occasionally slovenly. The bulk of the work—more than three and a-half of the four ponderous volumes—treats of the history of the country from prehistoric times down to the commencement of the late Civil War, and might have been written by anybody who had the slightest knowledge of the principles of compilation. It betrays no original research and presents no new facts, but is simply a résumé of what has been repeatedly, and often better, said before. The causes and events of the Civil War are rehearsed in some hundred and fifty pages, and we detect nothing that was not already familiar to us through the newspapers of the period. This is a portion of the history to which Mr. Bryant, with his half-a-century of practical knowledge of American affairs, could have done ample justice. Mr. Gay contents himself with a rehash from the partisan journals of the period; and it need hardly be said that his history of the war, such as it is, is entirely from the Northern point of view. That the work can ever become a standard authority is impossible and, it may be added, undesirable. On the other hand, as specimens of American typography these volumes are luxurious and beyond all praise. The illustrations are profuse, all of them pertinent, and most of them exquisite. They alone render the volumes a desirable acquisition for a drawing-room table, while they would occupy space that might be better filled on the shelves of a student's library.

Sylvestra: Studies of Manners in England, 1770-1800. By Annie R. Ellis. (Bell and Sons.) Dip into these modest volumes for half-an-hour in the morning, return to them in the evening for the same time, and they will be read to the end with delight. There is just enough incident in the lives of Dick Ashmead and his wife, charming Molly Blaise—sober and sensible people blest with daughters whose feelings are somewhat beyond the ken of the good Church dignitary and his wife—to sustain the reader's interest, and not sufficient to draw his attention away entirely from the sketches of English life at the end of the last century of which their family supplies the central figures. The scenes are laid in the vale of the Severn and around the great church of Durham, in those pleasant places, "not wholly in the busy world nor quite beyond it," which inspire an indescribable charm in the minds of those whose sympathies are cast in a bygone age and amid the old-fashioned customs which have died out in times when not only "the dead travel fast," Sarcasms there are in abundance on the philosophers and politicians of 1881, and many sly strokes at those innovations in Church and State which cannot but shock a writer whose time is passed among the dead of a century ago. If these sometimes show that there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in the author's philosophy, they only expose in a pleasant manner what other people endeavour fruitlessly to conceal. We would not for the world quarrel with a lady who can discourse so sweetly on the delicacies which maidens in the country were not above making with their own fair hands for their brothers and friends, and who can speak in praise of cookery as "an art and a science, with its history, its antiquities, its ana." Indeed, when we came to the end, we had forgiven the cruel manner in which she had altered and applied to Dean Tucker alone the epigram which the dictatorial Warburton directed against that great economist and a brother dean. Anyone who, in reading these pages, comes across a bitter allusion to his own pet theory or politician will forget it, as we did, after the perusal of another chapter.

Great Orators: Burke, Fox, Sheridan, Pitt. By H. J. Nicoll. (Edinburgh: Macniven and Wallace.) This book is what it claims to be, a plain and simple account of the four chief politicians of the concluding years of the last century. It is never an easy task to compress into a small space the details of the lives of those great party-leaders who have played prominent parts in the world's history. And when it happens, as in the case of the four orators selected by Mr. Nicoll, that their reputations have been won on opposite sides of opinion in the same parliamentary debates, the difficulty of retaining the interest of the reader without a constant repetition of detail is greater than ever. This labour Mr. Nicoll has grappled with bravely, and he has succeeded in overcoming it beyond what a candid critic could have expected. The memoirs are written without any undue straining after effect, and, as Whig and Tory will both acknowledge, with a laudable freedom from political bias. The compiler has no doubt had the benefit of following in the footsteps of excellent guides, but there are not infrequent evidences that he has read and thought for himself. In the notice of Burke, the advantage of the publication of Mr. John Morley's essay in the English Men of Letters is plainly perceptible; but it may be as well to take this opportunity of pointing out to both of these writers that the date of Sir James Mackintosh's visit to Beaconsfield, which has been taken by Mr. Nicoll from the pages of his predecessor, must be fixed at least a year too late. There are a few other errors in Mr. Nicoll's account of Burke which should be corrected in subsequent issues. The name of the well-known dramatist and journalist was not Andrew Murphy, and the favourite of George the Third never attained to the dignity of being the Marquis of But.

Cuthbert of Lindisfarne: his Life and Times. By Alfred C. Fryer. (S. W. Partridge.) Mr. Fryer has written a picturesque life of Cuthbert from the Protestant, or rather mildly Anglican, point of view. It is pleasant reading, and will give many persons a far clearer notion of what the England of the seventh century was than they ever had before. It is not, however, a work of original research, and the historical student will find nothing in its pages which he did not know before. It shows, nevertheless, a great advance in popular literature, and, if useful for nothing else, will be of service as a milestone on the road of progress. It is in many ways instructive to compare Mr. Fryer's Cuthbert with Mr. Collins's Spirit and Mission of the Cistercian Order, a book published but fifteen years ago. The reasonable tone of the one and the wildness of the other form a remarkable contrast. Mr. Fryer writes on several occasions as if he thought that the contest between the old priests and the Roman missionaries, in which St. Wilfrid figured so prominently, was in some way or other a fight about articles of faith. He tells us, for example, that Alchfrith "was warmly inclined to the Catholic doctrines," and in another place that that prince had "early evinced a predilection for the Roman faith." Wilfrid, too, we are informed, "had a strong leaning to the doctrines of Rome;" and we also hear of a certain Columban abbot being "converted to the Roman faith." This will be very misleading to all readers who have not gained a knowledge of the ecclesiastical history of the time from other sources. The fierce controversy in which Wilfrid and many others of the holiest men of the time engaged was not about the faith at all—for here there does not seem to have been a shade of difference—but concerning matters of discipline only. The time at which Easter ought to be kept was in fact the main cause of dispute. It may be well to remark that the object called St. Wilfrid's Needle in Ripon Minster is an underground vault or crypt, probably of Saxon workmanship, not "a narrow archway . . . in the chapel." A good account of this highly curious work may be seen in the York volume of the Memoirs of the Archaeological Institute, communicated by the late Mr. J. R. Wallran.

Eighteenth-Century Studies: Essays. By Francis Hitchman. (Sampson Low.) No apology is needed from Mr. Hitchman for the title of his work. Although two of the worthies—Isaac Disraeli and Diddin the bibliographer—whose lives are described in its pages were best known to the reading world in the early decades of this century, their lives were passed and their books were written in the fashion of a previous age. Some very hard phrases are applied to the author of the Curiosities of Literature; and to most readers it will appear a subject for some surprise that Mr. Hitchman, whose name is chiefly familiar to them as the author of a Life of the "young Disraeli" which certainly does not err on the side of severity, should have published an article on "Isaac Disraeli and Bolton Corney" which does not spare the reputation of the father. The most disappointing of the studies is that which has the founder of Methodism for its subject. There were depths of feeling in John Wesley which Mr. Hitchman cannot fathom, and his criticism of Wesley's character does not satisfy the desires of the reader. By far the best of the essays are devoted to the lives of Wilkes and the poet Churchill. Both of them are written with vigour, and without any desire to apply the prejudices of the politics of to-day to the combats and combatants of more than a century ago. The failings of both poet and demagogue are described without malice, and the reader is justly reminded that faults equally grave have often been condoned in men who had less to plead in extenuation of their vices. There are some features of Mr. Hitchman's style which we do not admire, but these will be forgiven for the interest which he has contrived to throw into his memoirs. In the course of our perusal we have noticed a few errors, such as Alman (p. 26), Glynne (p. 27) with the erroneous assertion that the illustrious serjeant was an ancestor of the wife of the present Premier, and Sir John Mawbey (p. 38); but a few defects of this character will detract but little from the pleasure of those who may be expected to open this volume.

Men Worth Remembering.—Philip Doddridge. By Chas. Stanford. (Hodder and Stoughton.) A better example of the Nonconformist divine than Dr. Doddridge might be sought for in vain during the second quarter of the last century. His theological creed never stiffened into austerity; and, although the Dissenting churches were greatly exercised in controversy, his nature found little pleasure in the polemical divinity which attracted his brethren. Genial in disposition, and with a genuine affection for rural scenery and country life, disposed to seek for points of union rather than of difference, and with a natural readiness to allow the best motives even to opponents, it is no wonder that he drew to his side such antagonistic dispositions as Bishop Benson of Gloucester and Conyers Middleton from Cambridge. As a writer, Doddridge is now forgotten; the reputation of his Family Expositor has faded away, and his hymns are sung both in church and chapel without any knowledge of their authorship. But the practical value of his life has extended to this day; under his care the county infirmary of Northampton—the parent of all such charitable institutions—grew into being. This little work of Dr. Stanford is far more than a mere summary of Dr. Doddridge's career taken from the volumes of previous biographers. There are documents in it which have hitherto slumbered in obscurity, and extracts from letters which have never seen the light of day since they were received by the Christian ministers to whom they were addressed. Such an unusual occurrence in the history of these handbooks is accounted for by the fact that Dr. Stanford has amassed the materials for a comprehensive history of the good doctor's life, and then put his collections aside in the belief that the busy men of this age could only afford the time for the perusal of a small volume. His decision should be commended for its propriety; but, if his labours should succeed in rekindling some enthusiasm for the memory of Doddridge, we should gladly welcome a full-dress memoir of his hero if it did not fall behind these pages in knowledge and vivacity.

Justus Erich Bollmann: ein Lebensbild aus zwei Welttheilen. Hrsg. von Friedrich Kapp. (Berlin: J. Springer.) The subject of this memoir is already known from his correspondence with Varnhagen von Ense, and his connexion in earlier days with the fortunes of Lafayette. He died sixty years ago; but his strong individuality, his varied and adventurous career, and his acquaintance with many remarkable persons form the perennial elements of a good biography. The story is told almost exclusively in his own letters, supplemented by the fewest possible connecting remarks, this course being, in the opinion of the author, or rather editor, "die Einzige richtige Objectivität eines Biographen." In many cases, however, the sources on which such a biographer would rely are defective either in quantity or quality, and if other materials are forthcoming it savours of a tour de force to dispense with them. Here, the materials being excellent, the result is very good. The character of the hero is developed with a clearness unattainable, perhaps, through any other medium; while even as regards his outer life the framework at all events of the story—thanks to the industry of the editor in collecting the letters and his judgment in selecting them—is in all essentials fairly complete. The early letters of the young medical student breathe a pleasant freshness and half-restrained exuberance of spirits, entering into details which give them additional value and interest now, and candidly expressing an amusing mixture of sentiment and shrewdness, as when he plans the escape of Mme. de Staël from Paris, of Lafayette from his Austrian prison, out of pure sympathy with the individuals, while alive to the advantages which may accrue to himself. He desired in some vague way to connect himself with the public life of that stirring period; but, this failing, he abandoned his profession and took to commerce, for which he was constitutionally unfit. One scheme after another failed, through no lack of energy or hard work. Still, his elasticity and hopefulness remain wonderful, though poverty and anxiety about his children sometimes created despondency. He died on a journey to the West Indies, just as his chemical researches were beginning to bear fruit. Besides the central point of interest—the unfolding of the individual character—the letters afford curious glimpses of the German middle-class life and opinions of the period; of Paris during the Reign of Terror, including the appearance of the King and Queen at the National Assembly on August 10; and of the life of the refugees in England. They do not suffer in interest from the changes which the writer's opinions undergo, while the occasional mistaken forecasts of events are sometimes amusing. He formed friendships everywhere, for the fascination of his manner seems to have been irresistible, and he gives clear and pointed descriptions of many public characters with whom he was more or less intimate. Among these are Mme. de Staël, Humboldt, and Washington; Forster, the companion of Cook, whose literary and scientific merits are somewhat eclipsed by the fame of the great navigator; and the principal personages at the Congress of Vienna, including Talleyrand, who, at first pronounced from a high Teutonic point of view to be "moralisch verdorben," is afterwards admitted to have a heart, the verdict indeed recalling Mme. de Rémusat's testimony. But we have said enough to show that the book is of exceptional interest and very pleasant reading.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE are glad to hear that Burke's Letters and Papers on Irish Affairs are to be republished immediately by Messrs. Macmillan and Co., with a Preface by Mr. Matthew Arnold. It is most important at the present time that these valuable contributions to the solution of the Irish problem should be in the hands of as many people as possible.

IN a note to his sermon on Progress in his College Sermons Dr. Salmon gives an interpretation of the statement which has puzzled Deau Swift's biographers that he obtained his degree speciali gratia. To have kept twelve terms was necessary before being admitted to the scholastic disputation by which candidates qualified for the degree. Swift has failed to pass one term examination, obtaining, indeed, best marks in his Greek and Latin authors, but wholly failing in what went by the name of physics. He was allowed to take his degree, but the grace could not be supplicated for in the usual form, "Ut duodecim termini a matriculatione," &c. Soon after Swift's time, a supplemental examination took the place of the special grace in such cases. The inference is not that Swift was an idle student, but that he confined his studies to subjects which interested himself.

MR. J. CHALONER SMITH, the Superintendent of the reading-room at the Probate Office in Somerset House, has been for many years compiling a calendar of all the wills there up to Queen Elizabeth's time. He has called Mr. Furnivall's attention to what proves to be the earliest known bequest of a MS. of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales—namely, A.D. 1420, in the will of John Brynchele, citizen and tailor (riissor), of London. This worthy bequeaths to William Holgrave—as an inducement to be one of his executors—6s. 8d. and his best bow and his book called Tulys of Cawnterbury. That Brynchele had one or two copies of Chaucer's englisshing of Boethius de Consolatione Philosophiae is also highly probable; for an earlier bequest in the will is to John Broune of a copy of the Latin treatise which the testator got in exchange for a copy of an englisshed version of it, while a second bequest is to "David Fyvyvan," Rector of St. Benet Fink, of a book in English called Boecium de Consolatione Philosophie. These englisshings may have been copies of that by John the Chaplain made in 1410; but they were more probably Chaucer's version, made about 1380, the Boece and The Canterbury Tales being both by the same author, whom the London tailor no doubt heartily admired. May we ask those librarians and owners who have Chaucer MSS. in their collections to see whether any contain the names of John Brynchele, William Holgrave, or David Vyvyvan?

MESSRS. LONGMANS AND Co. have just commenced publishing a series of Oxford Tracts for English Churchmen. The title of the first of the series ("Conscience before Vestments") is suggestive of the spirit of the entire undertaking. These tracts—written by Churchmen for Churchmen—are intended as a protest against the irregularities and extravagances of the Ritualistic school.

MESSRS. NEWMAN AND CO. have in the press a work, in two volumes, by Mr. C. R. Low, (late) I.N., F.R.G.S., author of the History of the Indian Navy, &c., entitled Maritime Discovery: a History of Nautical Research from the Earliest Times.

A WORK on the church bells of Lincolnshire has been prepared by Mr. Thomas North. It contains particulars of inscriptions, traditions, and peculiar uses.

DR. ANGUS SMITH is compiling a history of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester from its foundation.

MESSRS. BEMROSE have ready for immediate publication the first volume of the Exposition of the Gospel of St. John, by R. Govett; Satan Bound: a Lyrical Drama, by Wimsatt Boulding; A Middle Class, and other Sermons, by the Rev. J. T. Jeffcock; and The Saturday Half-Holiday Guide and Handbook of Evening Leisure.

THE Rev. H. R. Haweis delivered the last of a course of four lectures on "The American Humorists," at the Royal Institution, on Saturday last. Mr. Haweis has consented to redeliver the course on "Washington Irving," "Oliver Wendell Holmes," "James Russell Lowell," and "Artemus Ward," at the London Institution, Finsbury Circus, at five o'clock in the afternoons of April 29, May 6, 13, and 20.

IT is stated in the Sunday Mirror, the Calcutta organ of the Brāhma Samāj, that Babu Debendro Nath Tagore has presented five hundred rupees (£50) to Mr. Voysey in aid of his proposed church in London.

MR. HENRY SWEET and Dr. James A. H. Murray, both formerly Presidents of the Philological Society, and Prof. Paul Meyer, of the Collège de France, have been elected Vice-Presidents of the New Shakspeare Society. The Rev. W. A. Harrison has been elected a member of the Society's Committee in the place of Mr. J. N. Hetherington. Mr. A. G. Snelgrove having been obliged, by private matters unconnected with the society, to resign the post of Honorary Secretary which he has held since the foundation of the society in 1873, Mr. Kenneth Grahame has been elected Hon. Secretary in his stead.

A LADY, who has been working for twenty years on Lord Bacon, specially with a view to comparisons between his thoughts and phrases and Shakspeare's—whose plays she thinks Bacon wrote—has found, in one of Bacon's note-books of 1595, jottings-down of two phrases successively which occur within six lines of one another in Romeo and Juliet. This evidence strengthens the position of those who hold the early date for that play, 1591-93. The extent of the likeness between these two great authors, Bacon and Shakspeare, and of the difference between them and any third writer compared with them, is certainly very striking. An enormous amount of careful and faithful work has been bestowed on the subject by Lord Bacon's fair devotee; and, though Shaksperians will absolutely reject her conclusion—that Shakspeare as a writer is a myth, though as a manager a fact—they will be thankful for her most valuable illustrations of Shakspeare's words and work.

MR. WILLIAM ANDREWS (hon. secretary of the Hull Literary Club) will contribute to the Leeds Express a series of sketches entitled "Historic Yorkshire." The papers will deal with the battles and battle-fields, remarkable historical events, legends, traditions, &c., &c., relating to Yorkshire.

BIBLICAL students will be glad to learn that a second edition of Schrader's Die Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament is in the press.

THE great French bibliopole, M. A. Labitte, offers for sale a copy of Ronsard at the price of 22,000 fra. (£88). Besides being an exceedingly rare edition, it is bound by Trautz-Bauzonnet.

M. JULES SIMON has finished his Introduction to the general body of the Jury Reports on the Paris Exhibition of 1878, giving an encyclopaedic sketch of the history of industry and of its present condition. The Introduction has been printed at the Imprimerie Nationale, but not for public circulation. The original MS. was returned by M. Tirard, the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, to the writer, who has in his turn presented it to M. Tirard as a personal gift, and it will be deservedly honoured with a magnificent binding.

THE firm of La Monnier, of Florence, has just commenced the publication of Andrea Maffei's Italian translation of Schiller's dramas.

HERR STRAKOSCH, Professor of Elocution at the Vienna Conservatorium, has come to England on a six weeks' visit for the purpose of giving a series of Shaksperian readings in German. Prof. Strakosch brings with him a great reputation as a dramatic reader, and the most competent critics of Vienna and St. Petersburg speak highly of his ability and genuine artistic feeling.

It has been stated that, by the reception of M. Rousse, who succeeds Jules Favre, the forty chairs at the Académie Française are now all filled for the first time for thirty years. This is true; but at the same time it may be mentioned that M. Émile Ollivier, who was elected so long ago as April 1870, has never yet been formally admitted, for reasons which are well known.

WE have received from Spoleto four folk-lore tales, "Quattro Novelline Livornesi," with Umbrian variants, and an excellent commentary and extensive comparative notes by Dr. Stanislas Prato, professor in the Royal Lyceum there. The volume will be welcome to all folk-lore students.

PADRE GARRUCCI has just published a small pamphlet containing addenda, &c., to his Sylloge Inscriptionum Latinarum, published at Turin in 1877.

THE Swedish Academy of Science has awarded the Letterstedt prize to Mr. Stjernstroem for his translation of Whitney's Language: its Life and its Development.

M. AUGUSTE CHARAUX, author of a study on Corneille, is engaged on a similar work on Racine.

FOLLOWING upon the unfavourable disclosures concerning the management of the Biblioteca Vittorio Emanuele at Rome, the Italian Government has appointed a commission, consisting of six senators, six deputies, and several experts, to enquire into the public libraries and museums throughout the kingdom.

DR. MAX WIRTH is about to publish with Herr Herbig, of Berlin, a little work on the agricultural crisis and the means for its relief.

HERR PERTHES, of Gotha, announces Goethe in Wetzelar, 1772: Vier Monate aus des Dichters Jugendleben, by W. Herbst—the first independent monograph on this important episode in the life of Goethe.

M. ZUPANSKI, of Posen, will shortly publish a work on the failure of the Polish insurrection of 1830, by an author who played a leading part in the events of which he treats.

THE death is announced (from Paris of M. Tanera, the military publisher of the Rue de Savoie, well known to students of military history in France and abroad for his extensive knowledge of the bibliography of the subject.

M. CALMANN LÉVY has just published a new and improved edition of L'Irlande sociale, politique et religieuse, by M. Gustave de Beaumont, of the Institute.

THE first volume of a collection of the popular literature of all countries, entitled Littérature orale de la Haute-Bretagne, par P. Sébillot, has just appeared (Paris: Maisonneuve). Other volumes announced are on the Popular Literature of Egypt, by Maspero; of Gascony, by Blade; of Modern Greece, by Legrand; of Basse-Bretagne, by Luzel; and of the Pays Basque, by Vinson. The books are bound, and the type is excellent.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

WE have received:—The Catholic Doctrine of the Atonement: an Historical Review, with an Introduction on the Principle of Theological Developments, by H. N. Oxenham (W. H. Allen and Co.); Outlines of the World's History, Ancient, Mediæval, and Modern, with Special Relation to the History of Civilisation and the Progress of Mankind, by William Swinton, illustrated by six historical maps in colours and numerous smaller maps and engravings (Blackie and Son); Lessons in Elementary Mechanics introductory to the Study of Physical Science, designed for the use of Schools, and of Candidates for the London Matriculation and other Examinations, with numerous Exercises, by Philip Magnus, Seventh Edition, Enlarged (Longmans); Ned Farmer's Scrap-Book: being a Selection of Poems, Songs, Scraps, &c., &c., by the Author of "Little Jim," Ninth Edition, Enlarged and Revised (Bemrose and Sons); Three Years After, by J. C. Phythian, Author of "Scenes of Travel in Norway" (Published for the author by Cassells); Unclaimed Money: a Handy Book for Heirs-at-Law and Next-of-Kin, by Edward Preston, Fifth Thousand (Allen); Nihilism; or, the Terror Unmasked, by John Baker Hopkins (Newman); The Counting and the Interpretation of the Apocalyptic "Number of the Beast," by the Rev. James Challis (Rivingtons); Self-Education: an Essay on the Relation between the Teacher and the Taught, by Maurice C. Hime (W. Skeffington and Son); &c.

WE have also received the following pamphlets:—The Cherry and Medlar: their History, Varieties, Cultivation, and Diseases, illustrated, by D. T. Fish (Bazaar Office); Report of the London Rowing Club for the Year 1880; Cato Redivivus: a Satirical Review (Hamilton and Adams); The Mechanism of Sensation—Popular Science Lectures, No. 1, by Thomas Dunman (Griffith and Farran); The "Restoration of Churches" is the Restoration of Popery, by the Very Rev. Dean Close (Newman); The River Clyde and Harbour of Glasgow, by James Deas (Glasgow: Wilson and Mc Cormick); Monetary Relief through the Paris International Conference, by Nemo (Effingham Wilson); England's Blind Sons and Daughters: a Letter, by H. J. R. Marston (Durham: Andrews); On the Wisdom of Old Times; or, the Limitations of Sound Reform, by Civis (Trübner); Corrupt Practices at Parliamentary Elections, by Lewis Emanuel (Chapman and Hall, Limited); The Tenant-Right Question in Ireland, by T. G. Palmer Hallett (Stanford); Annual Report of the Saint Louis Mercantile Library Association; Is English not so Clear as Latin? a Few Words in Reply to Prof. Ramsay's Attack on the Queen's English, by A. Cuthel (Glasgow: James Hadden); &c., &c.

THE following periodicals (among others) are also upon our table:—The Westminster Review,

New Series, No. CXVIII. (Trübner); The London Quarterly Review, No. CXI. (Wesleyan Conference Office); The Modern Review, Vol. II., No. 6 (James Clarke and Co.); The Dublin Review, Third Series, No. X. (Burns and Oates); The Church Builder, New Issue, No. VI. (Rivingtons); The Army and Navy Magazine, No. VI. (W. H. Allen); The St. James's Magazine and United Empire Review, Vol. XLI. No. 132 (Grattan, Marshall and Co.); Home, No. XXII. (Ellissen); The Monthly Packet, Third Series, No. IV. (Walter Smith); Night and Day, Vol. V., No. 48 (Haughton); The Phrenological Journal, New Series, Vol. XXIII., No. 4 (L. N. Fowler); Hardwicke's Science Gossip, No. 196 (David Bogue); The American Naturalist, Vol. XV., No. 4 (Philadelphia: McCalla and Stavelly); The Private Schoolmaster, Vol. II., No. 1 (Elliot Stock); The Cape Monthly Magazine, New Series, No. 21 (Trübner); Modern Thought, Vol. III., No. 4 (The Modern Press, Aldine Chambers); Bulletin of the American Geographical Society, No. 2 (New York: Printed for the Society); and the Zeitschrift für die Oesterreichischen Gymnasien (Wien: Gerold's Sohn).

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

Macmillan's Magazine for April is largely devoted to social subjects, and is largely the work of women. Mrs. Julian Marshall gives a candid account of the success that has hitherto attended the "People's Concert Society," and of the expectations of its friends for the future. Miss Martin, under the ambiguous title of "The Other Side of the Question," gives a very interesting sketch of an educational experiment in the way of establishing a small orphanage in connexion with a large girls' school, as a means of training the sympathy and giving a practical direction to the good intentions of early years. Miss Chesney, in a paper on "Poultry Keeping in Normandy," tries to recal English farmers to a really lucrative pursuit, by detailing the results of her investigations in the district where poultry are made to pay. Mr. Odell, from his experience at Coventry, has many practical hints to contribute to the question of "Free Libraries and the Working Classes." Besides this mass of social information, Mrs. Macdonell writes a very pretty sketch of the career and character of the Quaker Abolitionist, "Lucretia Mott;" and Prof. Percy Gardner publishes his inaugural address at Cambridge on "Archæology, Literature, and History," which is an excellent plea for the study of classical archæology at our universities. The most interesting paper, however, is by Mrs. Oliphant, on "Thomas Carlyle," which is really an explanation, founded on personal knowledge, of the strange tone of the Reminiscences. Mrs. Oliphant boldly declares that the sketches in that book are failures to portray real persons, and only represent one mood of the writer's mind. Her own remarks about Mrs. Carlyle are, we venture to think, the best things that Mrs. Oliphant has ever written. It is a difficult task for a friend to attempt to indicate a different view of matrimonial relations from those which seemed the supreme truth to the husband; but Mrs. Oliphant has managed admirably to make herself understood without saying a word that is either presumptuous or casts the least reflection on husband or wife. The following passage is excellent:—

"She, for her part—let us not be misunderstood in saying so—contempered him, her great companion in life, with a certain humorous curiosity not untied with affectionate contempt and wonder that a creature so big should be at the same time so little, such a giant and commanding genius with all the same so many babyish weaknesses for which she liked him all the better! . . . To see what he will do next, the big blundering male creature, unconscious entirely of that fine scrutiny, malin but tender, which sees through and through him, is a constant suppressed interest which gives piquancy to life, and this Carlyle's wife took her full enjoyment of. He was never in the least conscious of it. I believe few of its subjects are."

THE Cornhill Magazine continues the "Rambles amongst Books" which have so long formed its great attraction. "Autobiography" is the subject of the current number, and rambles over Bunyan, Cellini, Gibbon, Rousseau, and Mill. One remark is worth quoting as of general application.

"As every sensible man is exhorted to make his will, he should also be bound to leave to his descendants some account of his experience in life. The dullest of us would, in spite of themselves, say something profoundly interesting, if only by explaining how they came to be so dull—a circumstance which is sometimes in great need of explanation."

Mr. Ewald gives us the results of his investigations into the "Youth of Henry V.," and succeeds in showing, contrary to Shakspeare, that he was an eminently respectable young man. Indeed, a careful study of his reign leads us to consider him a prig and a fanatic, rather than a large-minded and adventurous hero. "The Census of 1881" gives a practical account, from the pen of some one of experience, of the elaborate process which is requisite for the numbering of the people. Mr. Gosse writes a fine poem called "Timasitheos" on the old theme that the gods hate insolence; but though the theme is not new the quantities are, and our ears are not likely to become habituated to Timasitheos or Stesichorus.

THE most striking and valuable article in the current number of Mind is a criticism of Monism by Mr. Edmund Gurney. The way in which the critic points out the weaknesses and inconsistencies of the theory of "things in themselves" put forward by the late Prof. Clifford shows considerable dialectical skill. Mr. Gurney sees plainly enough that the modern scientific doctrine of a complete parallelism between the physical and the psychical, between nerve processes and mental actions, while it appears to bring the philosophic question of the relation of object to subject to a narrower issue, cannot provide any solution of the problem. His criticism of Monism is not, we think, so exhaustive as that by Mr. Shadworth Hodgson in his Philosophy of Reflection, but it is singularly fresh and forcible. The other articles call for little attention. Mr. S. Hodgson continues to expound and criticise M. Renouvier's system. He says things on the free-will question which appear to us to be the best which he has written on this point. Mr. Hodgson, as a phenomenalist, stands at the right distance from M. Renouvier for making him an object of the most profitable kind of criticism. The Rev. W. L. Davidson has some good things to say on "The Logic of Dictionary-defining." Mr. A. W. Benn writes on Buckle and the economics of knowledge, by which he appears to mean the application of the abstract geometrical method of political economy to the problems of sociology. The paper is ingenious in a way, yet the leading idea is not sufficiently defined, and a good deal of the criticism of Buckle is, to say the least of it, not new.

THE Revista de Ciencias Históricas has just appeared with the numbers from December 1880 to March 1881 forming a volume of over four hundred pages. It opens with a remarkable paper by the Jesuit historian, J. F. Masdeu, advocating a Spanish National Church, written in 1816. A chapter of Nanot Renart's "Decadence of Catalonia" follows. F. B. Navarrot prints a summary and extracts from the inedited Catalan Chronicle of Berenguer de Puigpardines. A short account of Don Pedro, Constable of Portugal, is given by Balaguer y Merino, of which the most interesting portion is the catalogue of his well-chosen library and coins (circa 1450). There is more than one valuable contribution by the Padre F. Fita; the most considerable is the first part of the Basque supplements for Larramende's "Diccionario trilingüe," written in 1746 by the Carmelite José de Maria; the dialects are noted, but there is no other kind of arrangement. Equally noteworthy is the editor's "Contribution to the Study of Iberian Megalithic Monuments," with illustrations of dolmens, menhirs, and talayots, supporting the theory that the ancestors of the Basques were the builders of these monuments by tentative Basque etymologies of the names of them in Catalonia. Another illustrated article of value is that on the Celtiberian coins of Hispania Citerior by Pujol y Camps. The inventory of the Treasure of the Cathedral of Gerona in 1588, to be continued by E. C. Girbal, is worth the attention of Ritualists. We omit several good but minor notices. This Review has now become indispensable to all interested in Spanish history or archæology.

THE Revista Euskara for March contains a valuable paper on the vowel permutations of the Basque of the valley of Ulzama in Navarre by the Prince L.-L. Bonaparte. There is also a Basque prose version of Tennyson's Dora, by C. Otaegin, made from the Spanish translation of Vicente Arana.

PINDAR'S SEVENTH OLYMPIAN ODE.

TO DIAGORAS OF RHODES.

Strophe I.

As rising in the marriage hall,
The wealthy father of the bride,
Draining the goblet bubbling with grape foam—
That golden glory of the festival—
Gives to the youthful bridegroom at his side
To take from home to home,
Who sits amongst his friends an honoured guest,
And envied partner of a bed so blest:

Antistrophe I.

So I, the poured-out nectar, Fame,
The gift which to the Muse I owe—
Sweet harvest of a poet-heart—
To those that in the stress and glow
Of Pythian and Olympian game
Are conquerors, impart.
Ah, happy he, embraced by fair repute!
Grace making life to bloom is his, the lyre, and sweetly sounding flute.

Epode I.

And now, with song and melody,
I celebrate in praise
The hero, by Alphaïos crowned—
The brave Diagoras.
And him, his sire, no less renowned,
The favourite of Justice, He:
Who, dwelling with their Argive host
In front of Asia's festive coast,
Give glory to nymph Rhodes, their island home,
Bride of the sun, and child of ocean foam.

Strophe II.

Beginning from Tlepolemos,
Tracing their line from Herakles,
To them and Rhodes I share the fame;
For, on the father's side from Zeus,
And from Amyntor's daughter, these Descent from God can claim.
But endless errors human reason blind;
And this is still impossible to find,

Antistrophe II.

How man of highest bliss possess
Can guard it to the end.
That truth this island's founder knew,
Who, at sudden anger's heat,
Alkmena's bastard brother slew,
Likymnos, his friend.
So even the wise are gusty passion's slave,
And to the oracle he came to save.

Epode II.

To whom the God with golden hair,
From his all-fragrant shrine,
Bade to sail from Lerne's strand,
And seek in voyage the island fair,
Where once with golden snow divine
The King of Gods rained on the land,
When, by Hephæstos' art, with cleaving throe,
Athena burst from forth her father's brow
With mighty battle-cry; and, at her birth,
Thrilled with awe-struck shudder Heaven and Mother Earth.

Strophe III.

There, shining on the human race,
Hyperion's son enjoined his own
To watch the moment fixed by Fate,
That first of mortals they might place
The altar, with white gleaming stone,
With victims to propitiate
Heaven's sire, and the spear-threatening maid.
Thus reverent Foresight came to human aid.

Antistrophe III.

Still oblivion's cloud will rise,
And make the mind from reason rove.
They came without the seed of glittering fire,
And, with unburnt sacrifice,
They hallowed their pure grove.
Then, drawing on his cloud of gold, the sire
Rained over them; and, as her prize,
Herself, the Goddess with the gleaming eyes,

Epode III.

Bestowed on them, in toiling art
Of hand, all mortals to excel.
So now upon their public ways,
Like breathing, moving things, there start
Their statues. Hence their fame, and well
Their guileless skill they use. Old lays
Tell us when Zeus, and the immortal race,
Divided 'mongst themselves the earth's fair space,
That in the sea Rhodes was not yet revealed,
But in the briny depths lay still concealed.

Strophe IV.

But since the Sun was absent, then
None the allotted portion drew
Of that all-pure divinity;
And when it came to Zeus's ken
He purposed an allotment new.
The Sun declined, and said that he Saw in the white sea foam a growing space,
Kindly for herds, and for the human race.

Antistrophe IV.

And gold-encircled Lachæsis
He straightway bade outstretch her hand,
Not to transgress the God's decree,
With nod of Kronos' son to promise this,
That, issuing into light, that land
His own prerogative should be.
The prayer, truth-reaching, to completion grows,
And from the ocean brine the island rose.

Epode IV.

Holds it the father of awif rays,
The ruler of fire-breathing steeds,
To whom nymph Rhodes in wedlock bore
Seven sons, that in the early days
Showed unto men all lawful deeds,
Exemplars of wise lore.
To one of these there springs the progeny—
Ialysos, Kameiros, Lindos—three
Fair sons, who shared their realm, and dwelt apart,
Named after whom the triple cities start.

Strophe V.

There, to the Tirynthian king,
Tlepolemos, as one divine—
Sweet compensation for his doom—
The sacrificial pomp they bring,
With steaming offerings of kine,
And contests held beside his tomb.
Twice garlanded at these Diogenes came—Victor at Athens, Nemea, and the Isthmian Fame.

Antistrophe V.

Knows him well the Argive shield,
His trophies in Arkadia grow,
In Thebes, and the Bæotian game,
Aigina, and Pellene's field,
Six times our conquering hero awoke,
And Megara's column tells his fame.
O father Zeus! our Rhodes' Mountain awaking, Honour my customary song, with Victory's pride arraying.

Epode V.

My hero from the struggle borne,
Grant to him reverential grace,
From his own citizens and foreigners;
For he has left the hateful ways of scorn,
Clearly instructed by his hero race
In the straight purpose that was theirs.
Deckt by the Graces, now proclaim that he Claims kindred with the old Eratidae.
His city, too, holds revel. Brief their day,
Howe'er the shifting breezes surge and away.

JAMES INNES MINCHIN.

THE PRINTED CATALOGUE OF THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

It has so often been asserted that the proposal to print the Catalogue of the Library of the British Museum is visionary, that there is a certain sense of surprise in the appearance of what is virtually the beginning of such a register of its possessions. The long-fought battle is being determined by considerations apart from those urged by the advocates and opponents of the scheme of printing. The MS. catalogue is becoming a library in itself. More than two thousand volumes cumber the ground; and the inexperienced visitor who turns up the entry of "Voltaire" and is referred from it to "Arouet" has to perform a circular pilgrimage not conducive to devotional feeling. Meanwhile, additions pour in. The Copy tax, frequently as it is evaded, brings in a yearly contingent of some thousands of "articles." American literature is rapidly increasing in bulk and in importance. "Greater Britain" sends contributions of the most varied description. The Colonial press groans with books and pamphlets on science and divinity, with political essays, and with volumes of verse. From India there come not only the productions of transplanted Europeans, but the efforts of the native mind, alike in the literary English of the Babus and the lithographed sheets of native texts. The present age has been called the age of steam; it might be called with equal propriety the age of the Printing-press. Its products from the four quarters of the globe are flooding the storehouse at Bloomsbury; and the mere entry of the titles is increasing the catalogue to a bulk that in the not remote future threatens to be appalling.

On the principle that "like cures like," the aid of the printing-press has been invoked to cope with the dangers and difficulties of the situation. The publication of a list of additions is the natural commencement of an attempt to grapple with a task beset with so many difficulties. The greater compactness of printed over MS. matter is a well-known fact. The space occupied by a title in print is but one-sixth of that which it covers in MS. It has the additional advantage of being far more easily read. In saying this we cast no reflection on the present MS. catalogue, which in a period of bad calligraphy is a monumental example of legible writing. The eight parts already issued, containing the titles of the recent accessions of new books, English and foreign, fill 559 pages. Of the execution it is only necessary to say that the entries have been carefully drawn up in accordance with the cataloguing code of the institution. About these rules there is wide diversity of opinion, but they possess the great and obvious, though frequently overlooked, advantage of being rules. It is no doubt occasionally difficult to find a book that has been catalogued by them; but it would be still more difficult to find one catalogued by the unaided light of nature, which is sometimes held to be a sufficient guidance in such matters. There is an appearance of pedantry in cataloguing the works of Montesquieu under the name of Secondat; and inborn reverence for the British peerage is slightly shocked at being sent from the high-sounding title to the occasionally commonplace, if not plebeian, surname. But, though the effect is sometimes odd, it would perhaps be difficult to find a satisfactory substitute for the rule under which this is done.

The accessions list of what we may call the greatest library in the world should also serve another purpose—as a list of the most important works selected from the mass of literature now yearly put forth in lands beyond the sea. The Museum has the critical apparatus for making its yearly purchases really representative of the best productions of foreign literature. Such a list would be welcomed in the libraries and literary institutions scattered over the land, and would be not less serviceable to individual students. In both cases the high price at which the subscription is now fixed will greatly restrict the circulation. At first it was intended to charge ten guineas yearly, but this has now been reduced to half that sum. It is to be hoped that some further cheapening process may yet be found practicable. The Treasury never looks with a very kindly eye upon expenditure connected with literature or art. If some member of Parliament of the present day were to execute the threat which Joseph Hume is said to have made, and move for the printing of the entire catalogue as a parliamentary paper, the public would obtain it at a much lower price than that they are now asked to pay.

Another step forward is also being taken. In addition to printing the list of the accessions of new books, the entries in the existing MS. catalogue are being gradually put into print. It is not intended to do this systematically from A to Z, but to take such parts as have become unmanageable in MS. In the course of forty years it is hoped that the written will be entirely replaced by printed entries. This is not a very rapid rate of progress, but it is as rapid as the parliamentary grant will allow. If the present generation of scholars and readers desire its acceleration they must apply a gentle pressure to the Treasury, and try to persuade the authorities there that a catalogue of the national library is worth as much as an iron-clad. The grant is not large enough to allow the entries to be stereotyped, so that some day the entire cost of printing will have to be incurred again. The accessions lists are, however, being stereotyped, and will thus be available for use in any future issue of general or special catalogues.

It is, of course, a disadvantage that the printed catalogue should come in a piecemeal fashion. Some portions of the letter A are in type, and will shortly be issued. These include Agobard—Aguirre, Alb—Albert, and the works published under pseudonyms beginning with the letter B. The last-named article is one of considerable extent, and includes some very curious entries, ranging from the "Hook in the Nose of Leviathan" (Bridgwater, 1877) of a still enigmatical B. to some of the well-known writings of the late Lord Lytton. The anonymous B.'s fill 191 columns, and are by no means a small or uninteresting swarm. The objection of being fragmentary will not apply to certain entries, which can be issued in a complete and serviceable form. Thus, it is intended to print the portions of the catalogue relating to Shakespeare, Homer, the Bible, which will be invaluable bibliographical aids. This is in accordance with the suggestions made in an article in the New Quarterly Magazine, which attracted considerable attention on its appearance, and is well known to have been written by Mr. Richard Garnett, whose practical experience gives special importance to his proposals.

The strenuous efforts of the authorities of the British Museum to make the library of the greatest possible use deserve cordial recognition at the hands of all who are well affected to literature. The national library of England is the only one that has yet had the courage to face the difficulties in the way of a printed catalogue; and this is the more praiseworthy, as they are probably greater than would have to be encountered in any other library. There are obvious defects in the plan adopted, but they probably are unavoidable under present circumstances. What is most wanted is an increase of speed in the publication and a decrease of the price to be charged to the public. When completed, the Printed Catalogue of the Library of the British Museum will be a bibliographical monument quite unparalleled, and worthy of the great library of a great nation.

WILLIAM E. A. AXON.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BOGORIC, E. Zur bosnischen Frage. Agram: Hartman. 1 M. 60 Pf.
CAMERON, L. de, sämtliche Gedichte. Zum ersten Male deutsch v. W. Storck. 3. Bd. Buch der Elegien, Sagen, Oden u. Octaven. Paderborn: Schöningh. 6 M.
CUMMINS, G. F. Gordon. At Home in Fiji. Blackwood. 25s.
EMERSON, E. E. Frage. Idyll, zu e. Gemälde seines Freundes Alma Tadema erzählt. Stuttgart: Hallberger. 3 M. 50 Pf.
ENGLISH PHILOSOPHERS. Ed. I. Müller. Bacon, by T. Fowler. Hardy and Mill, by G. S. Bower. Sampson Low & Co. 3s. 6d. each.
GÖTTES-JAHREBUCH. Hrg. v. L. Geiger. 2. Bd. Frankfurt-a-M.: Rütten. 11 M.
GÖTTES, S. Oberbann u. seine Liga. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 11 M. 20 Pf.
MONTIGNY, E. Poésie et Artistes de l'Italie. Paris: Hachette. 1 fr. 50 c.
SCHWICKER, J. H. Die ungarischen Gymnasien. Geschichte, System, Statistik. Budapest: Kilián. 3 M. 50 Pf.
STAPFER, P. Shakespeare et l'Antiquité. 2^e Partie. Shakespeare et les Tragiques grecs; Molière, Shakespeare et la Critique allemande. Paris: Fischbacher.
THACKERAY, Miss. Miss Williamson's Divagations. Smith, Elder & Co. 10s. 6d.
THODE, H. Die Antiken in den Stichen Marcanton's, Agostino Veneziano's u. Marco Dente's. Leipzig: Seemann. 4 M.
TRUMPF, E. Die Religion der Sikhs. Nach den Quellen dargestellt. Leipzig: Schulze. 3 M.
UOLBY, E. v. Russland u. England. Aeusere u. innere Gegensätze. Leipzig: Friedrich. 6 M.
VOYAGE aux Sources du Niger: Expédition C. A. Vermineck. Paris: Challamel aîné. 10 fr.
WALKER, P. E. A Short Account of Afghanistan, its History, and our Dealings with it. Griffith & Farran. 2s. 6d.

HISTORY.

- BAUER, H. Die geheimen Gesellschäften in Spanien u. ihre Stellung zu Kirche u. Staat von ihrem Eindringen in das Königreich bis zum Tode Ferdinand's VII. Mainz: Kirchheim. 5 M. 50 Pf.
CAMESTRA, A. Urkundliche Beiträge zur Geschichte Wiens im 16. Jahrh. Wien: Bölder. 8 M.
CRONIQUE (les) de Normandie (1223-1433), réimprimées pour la première fois d'après l'édition rarissime de Guillaume le Talleur, p. p. A. H. d'Alot. Rouen: Métérie.
GIORRATI, D. B. di Vi. Riformatore politico e ministro, con sue Lettere inedite a Pistoletti e Giovanni Barocco. Napoli: Detken & Rocholl. 3 fr. 50 c.
KOPALLIK, J. Cyrillus v. Alexandrien. Eine Biographie, nach den Quellen bearb. Mainz: Kirchheim. 6 M.
L'AGIOGRAPHIA di San Laverio del MOLXII. illustrata da G. Racioppi. Napoli: Detken & Rocholl. 3 fr.
PARDON, L. Guadeloupe depuis sa Découverte jusqu'à nos Jours. Paris: Challamel aîné. 5 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- AMERINO, F. La Antigüedad del Hombre en el Plata. Paris: Masson. 40 fr.
BACHMANN, E. Th. Darstellung der Entwicklungsgeschichte u. d. Baues der Samenschalen der Scorophulariaceen. Leipzig: Engelmann. 10 M.
BETRAND, A. L'Aperception du Corps humain par la Conscience. Paris: Germer Baillière. 5 fr.
BARDICHIN, Th. Recherches sur les Queues des Comètes. Leipzig: Voss. 4 M.
BROUILLÉ, l'Abbé de. Le Positivisme et la Science expérimentale. Paris: Palmé. 15 fr.
HOUEL, J. Cours de Calcul infinitésimal. Paris: Gauthier-Villars. 50 fr.
LOCARD, A. Etudes sur les Variations malacologiques d'après la Faune vivante et fossile de la Partie centrale du Bassin du Rhône. T. I. Paris: J. B. Baillière.
OTTO, R. Pharmacologische Studien üb. Amylnitrit u. s. w. Dorpat: Karow. 2 M.
ZEILLER, R. Végétaux fossiles du Terrain houillier de la France. Paris: J. B. Baillière. 18 fr.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ARISTOTLE'S Nicomachean Ethics. Trans. F. H. Peters. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 6s.
BASSE, A. D. praesidiis Aristotelis Politica emendandi. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 20 Pf.
FERRINI, E. C. Quid conferat ad iuris criminalis historiam Homerorum Hesiodorumque poematum studium. Berlin: Calvary. 1 M. 80 Pf.
FELIX, J. Notes on the Nalopakhyanam, for the Use of Classical Students. Cambridge University Press. 12s.

- SUSEMIL, F. De Magnerum Moralium codice Vaticano 1342. Berlin: Calvary. 1 M. 20 Pf.
THIEMANN, C. Grundzüge der homerischen Modus-Syntax. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 50 Pf.
TRUMPF, E. Grammar of the Sanskrit, or Language of the Aftāgā, compared with the Iranian and North-Indian Idioms. Tübingen: Heckenhauser. 15 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

RECENT DISCOVERIES ON THE SITE OF THE ROMAN BATHS IN BATH.

Wrighton, Somerset: April 11, 1881.

Those who have examined the Palais des Thermes at Paris, contiguous to the Hôtel Cluny, or the Thermæ at Trèves, and marvelled at their extent and completeness of arrangement, may not have realised the idea that in their own country, in one of its inland cities, once existed a set of buildings not inferior in extent or convenience to any structure of a similar kind in France or Germany.

The discovery of a complete system of Roman baths in the city of Bath was made in the year 1755, and further additions to the information then obtained were made in 1763. The results of these discoveries have happily been recorded, and sufficient was then uncovered to enable a partially correct plan to be drawn, and very probable conjectures to be formed of the great extent of the Roman building. It is only, however, very recently that these conjectures have been confirmed, and an opportunity offered of obtaining a more correct plan of the extent and arrangement of the Roman Thermæ.

Recent works undertaken by the Corporation of Bath for carrying off the waste water from the modern baths, and for preventing any risk of pollution to the thermal springs, have revealed the true construction, as well as the great extent, of the Roman buildings.

The ancient Roman drains for carrying off the waste water, which remain almost perfect, have been utilised; and the work of their adaptation to modern wants has revealed not only the original Roman spring and the large reservoir which received the thermal waters, but has given the opportunity of ascertaining the ancient plan and the method by which the waters were collected and distributed through the building.

Most persons who have visited Bath know the position of the Pump Room, and how it stands at the north-eastern extremity of the open space known as the Abbey Churchyard, having the grand old structure of the abbey at the east end and the imposing Pump Room Hotel at the west. Behind the Pump Room is the cooling tank for modern purposes. All the arrangements of the modern baths are from fifteen to twenty feet above the ancient Roman level, and the extent covered by the modern baths forms but a very small portion of the area covered by the Roman.

It has been ascertained beyond doubt that the Roman building covered an area extending from Stall Street to Abbey Street in length, and from the Pump Room to York Street in width; and that the modern Pump Room, the King's bath, the Queen's bath, with the vestibule, the cooling tank, the Poor Law Offices, and No. 6 Abbey Place, together with Abbey Street, all now stand upon what was once a superb Roman public bath.

The large bath in the centre of this magnificent arrangement is a room the precise length of which has not yet been quite clearly ascertained, but it appears to exceed 120 feet in length by sixty-eight in width, and in the centre is the bath, eighty-two feet by thirty-nine, with the steps leading into it all round in perfect condition. The house which stands on a portion of this bath has lately been purchased by the Corporation; and, if funds could be obtained, it is probable that every facility would be given for making a further examination of these remains.

But the most interesting of the latest discoveries is the octagonal tank of Roman construction into which the hot waters were received. This was found to be in perfect condition, with the leaden lining remaining on it, and at the bottom were discovered Roman coins, two pitchers of a mixed metal, and two inscribed plates of lead, one of which has already been described in the ACADEMY.

The size of this tank is about fifty feet by forty, and the form is octagonal, though not a regular octagon, for the western side has the angles rounded off so as to present an irregular figure. Within it were found three square pedestals and three circular ones, as if to support figure. In the sides of this tank were found wooden plugs, where the water flowed into the ancient outlets to prevent the rise of the river, and the land waters in times of flood, from affecting the spring water in the reservoir. The sides of this reservoir and the Roman masonry of the drains are of the best kind of work, solid and well put together. In one portion a perfect Roman arch remains.

Fragments of sculptured stone have been found, carved with figures of genii and foliage, the free treatment of which corresponds with the sculptures now preserved in the vestibule of the Literary and Scientific Institution; and this leads us to think that these buildings were erected not much later than the time of the Emperor Titus. There seems little reason to doubt that from the date of the Emperor Claudius, when the West of Britain became subject to the Roman power, the Bath waters were utilised; and the buildings were probably erected soon after the Romans had obtained firm possession.

Some conjectures may be raised by the form of the tank, which, as already stated, is irregular. This leads to the idea that a reservoir for containing the hot spring may have existed before the coming of the Romans, who have preserved somewhat of its original character in their more recent construction. Further discoveries may tend to clear up this and other doubtful points connected with the Roman occupation of the city and neighbourhood; in the meantime, every facility should be given for the investigation of these interesting remains. Happily, the improvements lately carried out by the corporation have been directed by a gentleman, not only thoroughly well skilled in his profession, but who can understand the value of these historical remains, and who has devoted much intelligent labour to their elucidation, having brought the subject to the notice of the Society of Antiquaries.

A number of gentlemen in Bath, with the mayor at their head, have undertaken to raise local subscriptions; and doubtless, if the interest and importance of these discoveries were known, funds would not be wanting to enable the city architect to carry out further investigations, and to preserve, if possible, a free access to what has been so recently discovered.

It is singular that no building containing a system of baths on such a scale has yet been found in Britain. Cirencester, York, Gloucester, St. Albans (or Verulam), Caer Leon, Caerwent, have yielded nothing of the kind; only baths of a very limited structure, more suited to private residences. The largest yet found appear to be at Wroxeter (Uricinium), but these are very inferior in extent to those proved to have existed in Bath. It may be that at Wroxeter—a small portion of the area of the city having only as yet been examined—public baths yet remain to be uncovered, and the same at Cirencester; but at present the baths found at Bath can alone take rank with those known to have existed on the continent of Europe. The number of Roman villas that have been found around Bath are additional proof of the importance attached to the city and its thermal springs.

H. M. SCARTH.

ORIENTAL LITERATURE.

London: April 10, 1881.

The kindly critic of my Bibliotheca Orientalis in your last issue, after quoting the number of publications mentioned by me (viz., 1876, 1,727; 1877, 1,654; 1878, 2,084; 1879, 966; 1880, 1,007), says, "Either Orientalists have been less prolific than usual these two years, or M. Friederici has relaxed his efforts as a collector of titles."

Allow me to say that neither is the case. As mentioned in the Preface to the fourth year's issue I found it beyond my power to continue to collect titles of geographical publications, which also are fully enumerated in Petermann's Mittheilungen and by Prof. Koner in the Transactions of the Berlin Geographical Society. Nor have Orientalists been less prolific than usual. During the last five years not less than ten new serials (excluding the stillborn Extrême Orient at Geneva) have been started and are all continued. Even the American Oriental Society has been able to publish the tenth volume of its Transactions, and publications like Prof. Wright's facsimiles are issued year after year. The German Orientalists meet annually; and of the Transactions of the Congrès provincial of the French Orientalists the first volume of the Lyons and the second of the St.-Etienne meetings are now ready, not to make mention of the usual meetings of the Royal Asiatic Society, of the American Orientalists, and the International Congresses.

Not less than twenty-two different Oriental grammars, besides eleven second editions, were brought out last year alone, including such as Lepsius' Nubian Grammar, and eleven new dictionaries and several second issues of such books as Redhouse's Turkish Dictionary. This shows conclusively that there has been no relaxation of efforts on the part of Orientalists.

CH. FRIEDERICI.

MR. HERKOMER'S ETCHING OF MR. HAMERTON.
Autun: April 11, 1881.

I have just seen with much surprise in the last number of the ACADEMY that, among several works exhibited at Messrs. Goupil's, in Bedford Street, was a portrait of myself etched by Mr. Herkomer. It is true that I gave sittings to Mr. Herkomer for a drawing from which he afterwards made what was technically a clever etching; but, unfortunately, it did not at all satisfy my friends in London as a likeness, and at their urgent request I was obliged to refuse permission for its publication. I did so with regret, but quite decidedly, and after that I think that the etching ought not to be shown with my name.

P. G. HAMERTON.

[In justice to Mr. Herkomer, we ought to say that the etching was not shown with Mr. Hamerton's name.—ED. ACADEMY.]

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

WEDNESDAY, April 20, 8 p.m. British Archaeological: "Seals of the Knights Templars," by Mr. H. Syer Cuming.
8 p.m. Society of Literature: "Spain, Its Cities and Customs," by Mr. R. N. Cust.

THURSDAY, April 21, 7 p.m. Numismatic.
8 p.m. Historical: "The History of Theatres in London from their First Opening in 1576 to their Closing in 1652," by Mr. F. G. Fleay; "The Analogy between Jewish and Christian Baptism in the Apostolic Age," by Mr. J. Baker Green.

8 p.m. Linnean Society: "New Genera of Plants from Socotra," by Prof. Bayley Balfour; "The Fresh-water shells of Australia," by Mr. Edgar A. Smith; "Hibiscus palustris, Linn., and Certain Allied Species," by Mr. B. Daydon Jackson; "Individual Variation in the Branchial Sac of Simple Ascidiaceans," by Dr. W. A. Herdman.

FRIDAY, April 22, 8 p.m. Quekett: "The Histology of the Gustatory Organs of the Rabbit's Tongue," by Mr. Charters White.

SCIENCE.

A Commentary on the Book of Job. With a Translation. By Samuel Cox, Editor of the Expositor. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

A WORK of art and of scholarship (for Mr. Cox is a diligent student of Hebrew) such as it is scarcely possible to appraise adequately in the limited space of a miscellaneous Review. We sadly want books on this, the finest achievement of inspired religious genius. Mr. Cox's needs supplementing and (as he would be the first to admit) correcting; but his will henceforth be the primary work on Job for the cultivated lay reader. No Biblical writing appeals so forcibly to this class of students as the Jobéide (as a French writer calls it); no book so lends itself to comparison with, and illustration from, the literature and philosophy of later times. Mr. Cox's exposition is penetrated through and through with the spirit and phraseology of English, as the Book of Job is with that of Hebrew literature. Delitzsch himself is less abundant in illustration; and, if to the scholar the literary references are sometimes an unwished-for distraction from the primitive modes of thought of the author, to the unprofessional student they will constitute a link such as makes the difference between a readable and an unreadable work. It is no bookseller's speculation which is offered us, but a labour of love, which has occupied the author's leisure for more than fourteen years. The story of its composition is one of the most pleasant literary confessions it has fallen in my way to read. And when Mr. Cox "pleads guilty to the ambition of writing an exposition which any man of ordinary culture may read, as he reads other books, from end to end, with interest and even pleasure," I for one accept the implied rebuke to Biblical scholars for confining their exegetical results rather too much to their own circle.

The composition of the work has been greatly assisted by the generosity of Prof. Davidson, of Edinburgh, whose unfinished Commentary on Job remains, in spite of Mr. Cox, the book for deeper students of exegesis. "When I had reached that point [the point where it abruptly closes—viz., chap. xiv.], and was sorrowfully bracing myself to go on my way alone, with a singular and (to me) ever memorable generosity he offered me the use of his MS. notes on the subsequent chapters of the poem." So writes Mr. Cox, and the student will find in this intimation an additional argument for procuring the book. For Mr. Cox, if I may be pardoned for saying so, has "the defects of his qualities." He is among the first expository preachers of the day; he can apply the words of Scripture as few, if any, in our generation; but he is perhaps too much on the look out for lessons profitable for these times. He seems to me too subtle by half; and, while admiring his insight, I question his fidelity to the ancient text.

It will be a less important limitation of his view in the opinion of many, even among Biblical scholars, that Mr. Cox has no sympathy with the higher criticism. He takes the Book of Job as a whole, just as commentators used to take the Book of Isaiah as a whole; and yet neither the one nor the other will reveal its full meaning as long as this anti-critical prejudice occupies the range of the interpreter's vision. A relative justification, of course, no one will deny either to Mr. Cox or to the advocates of "a single Isaiah." The later portions of Job have not been written without acquaintance with the earlier, just as the later portions of Isaiah abound in evidences of close and affectionate study of the earlier. But this is enough to indicate one chief ground of dissent from Mr. Cox's reading of this enigmatical book. Delitzsch has somewhere applied to Rudolf Stier's exposition the epithet of "kaleidoscopic." The Book of Job becomes "kaleidoscopic" in the hands of anyone who refuses to believe that, like so much of the Old Testament, historical, prophetic, and poetic, it has grown.

It would be out of place to interpolate a justification of my own widely different critical point of view. I hold that the Book of Job is the result of the meditations of a succession of Jewish sages, some more gifted, some less, but all exhibiting that very peculiar quality which, for want of a better term, we must call inspiration. And I hold with Schiller in his distichs, that the world is all the richer for the division of the honours of the poem. It is easy to disparage the advocates of such a view, but those who do so only prove their unacquaintance, first, with the difficulties which suggest it; secondly, with the critical adjustments to meet all fair conservative objections; and, thirdly, with the final proof of the growth theory in its perfect harmony, not only with analogy, but with the other results of comprehensive critical enquiry.

It were easy to quote beauties from Mr. Cox's delightful pages; but why spoil the reader's pleasure in discovering them for himself? One of those which has appealed the most to me is the passage on "Confessions," beginning—"It is surely a significant fact that all the books which handle the theme of 'Job,' even now that the true Light has come into the world, are equally unsatisfactory and disappointing to the logical intellect;" and I heartily agree with Mr. Cox that the poem of Job was never intended to explain the mystery which it so fully and affecting sets forth.

T. K. CHEYNE.

ORIENTAL BOOKS.

Revue Egyptologique. No. IV. (Paris: E. Leroux.) M. Leroux may be congratulated on the completion of the first volume of his new Review, and upon the fulfilment of his promise to found a great scientific serial. The Revue Egyptologique is an unquestionable success, and the present number is even more interesting than its predecessors. Again M. Revillout, with equal industry and learning, sustains the whole weight of the issue, giving a continuation of his study of the Demotic Chronicle of Paris, a first instalment of the promised Philosophic Dialogues, and several other papers of literary and historical value. The reverse side of the papyrus known as the Demotic Chronicle of Paris turns out to contain, not a semi-religious, semi-historical rhapsody, as M. Revillout at first supposed,* but a collection of patriotic prophecies in the style of Isaiah or Ezekiel. These prophecies—edited and commented by some scribe of Ptolemaic times—are of two epochs, the earlier series being the work of an Ethiopian priest apparently contemporary with Piankhi or Taharka; the more modern series dealing with the events following the first Persian invasion. M. Revillout here gives a translation of the earlier series, consisting of detached verses couched in mystical language, each verse accompanied by an explanatory gloss in which the ancient commentator has ingeniously made the text appear to foretell the downfall of the Greeks and the salvation of Egypt by an Ethiopian deliverer. Such prophecies, M. Revillout remarks, were popular in the country after the introduction of Christianity, and might well have been equally popular in pagan times. The religious literature of the Copts abounds in predictions hostile to Arab and Turkish rule, some of which have even found their way into the Coptic version of the Scriptures. The main interest of the present number centres, however, in M. Revillout's analysis of the Leyden papyrus (No. 384), entitled "Entretiens philosophiques d'une Chatte éthiopienne et d'un petit Chacal Koufi." This work scores a new era in our knowledge of Egyptian literature. To the maxims of Ani and Phtah-hotep, which in matter and style are not unlike the Book of Proverbs, we are indebted for a fair idea of the ethical writings of the ancient inhabitants of the Nile valley; but till now no work of a philosophic character had been discovered. Great, therefore, is the importance of this Leyden papyrus; though M. Revillout is possibly somewhat partial when comparing it with the Platonic Dialogues. The MS. dates from the period of Roman occupation. Strange doubts and speculations had by this time been imported into Egypt from Asia and Europe. Men had begun to think for themselves on such grave subjects as "fate, free-will, and necessity;" and the Leyden papyrus betrays from internal evidence that the immemorial orthodoxy of Egypt was on the wane. In these "Entretiens" the jackal represents the advanced thinker of the age, while the cat is strictly conservative. Koufi, however, is a subtle courtier. He addresses her as "Lady," sometimes as "Majesty," and—himself, apparently, of inferior birth—conciliates her by well-placed allusions to her ancient lineage, and to the tradition which symbolises the cat as the eye of the sun. "On dirait un philosophe du siècle dernier discutant avec une vieille Marquise." Koufi is a Pantheistic fatalist. According to his philosophy, men and animals are alike predestined, and the gods can in nowise avert or delay their fate. "Thy birth-place and thy tomb are foretold," he says. "Thou fallest in thine appointed place. Thy sepulchre awaits thee." All things are, of necessity, what they are. Their functions are fixed; their attributes are susceptible neither of exchange nor modification. "The papyrus grows not upon the mountain; the stone tablet is not extracted from the river. The rose blooms not in the emerald mine. The melon grows not upon the rock. No man can change their way of growth; their colours are fixed by fate." Having enforced his meaning by a multitude of similar illustrations, the jackal proceeds to show how all living creatures prey upon one another. The serpent devours the hawk, and both devour the fish. The fish devours other fish. Each creature has its turn. He who kills shall himself be killed. "All the good, all the evil, that is done in this world is done by the will of Ra." After life comes death, and none shall escape. "Even thou, O Cat!" says the jackal, "even thou shalt not be exempted from misfortune. The Cat (that immortal one!) must die like any other. And yet thou art the daughter of the Sun!" Five other articles from the same pen complete this important number of the Revue Egyptologique. Among these, a paper on the topography of Thebes, with sketch-plans by Brugsch-Boy, is of remarkable interest, inasmuch as it defines various quarters and suburbs of the ancient city, and identifies the actual position of certain houses which were bought, sold, mortgaged, and became objects of litigation more than twenty-one centuries ago, and of which the contemporary legal records are now among the Demotic papyri of the Louvre.

* See ACADEMY, No. 450, December 18, 1880.

DR. CHARLES WELLS, the editor of the new edition of Redhouse's Turkish Dictionary, has done good service to students of Turkish by his Practical Grammar of the Turkish Language (Quaritch). In some respects the title he has chosen is misleading, because the term "practical," as applied to guide-books, grammars, &c., at the present day, is usually intended to imply one of two things—either that other books on the same subject are impractical, or that the writer has kept his work free from the taint of erudition. Dr. Wells does not use it in either of these senses, but only wishes to draw attention to the simplicity of his method and the introduction of numerous exercises for purposes of practice. The grammar which hitherto could most safely be recommended to students is that of Mr. Redhouse, in the first part of his Turkish Vade-Mecum. This is the work of one who is at once a good philologist and a thorough Turkish scholar; but the narrow limits within which the author has purposely restricted it render it suitable only for persons who confine themselves to an elementary and colloquial knowledge of the language, while Dr. Wells's book is intended for more advanced, or, at least, more thorough-going, students. Its most distinguishing features are the exercises already mentioned, together with illustrative quotations from native authors, and the account of the peculiarities of Arabic and Persian accidence and syntax as far as they affect the Turkish language. The words are printed throughout both in Arabic and italic letters; the elaborate forms of the verb are fully and clearly given; certain practical difficulties, such as the declension of nouns with possessive pronouns, are well illustrated; and useful lists are given of the most important adverbs, conjunctions, and postpositions, which last take the place of prepositions and of the case-endings of regular inflectional languages. The methods, also, by which the two great deficiencies of the Turkish language—the absence of a verb "to have" and a relative pronoun—are supplied are satisfactorily detailed. In these and most other respects the execution of the work is excellent, and therefore it may be worth while for us now to notice what appear to us its weaker points. In the first place, it is a loss to the student that the leading rules are not distinguished from the others by a difference of type—so much so, that we would recommend a beginner to master the elements in Mr. Redhouse's book before proceeding to that of Dr. Wells. It is also a pity that no difference is made in the italic letters between the ordinary and the nasal sound of n, which is of great importance for pronunciation. There is considerable inequality in various parts of the book in respect of fullness of treatment. The exercises on the ordinary forms of the verb are scanty; while, on the other hand, those forms are given at unnecessary length. Thus, while, for purposes of practice, it may perhaps be of advantage to introduce a necessitative mood and a complete paradigm of the interrogative verb, though both these are perfectly simple forms, yet the passive voice might surely have been omitted, as that is formed throughout by the insertion of a single syllable. Again, there is in places a good deal of repetition, which might have been avoided by more methodical treatment. The position of the verb in a sentence is discussed on p. 213, and again on p. 259; the mode of expressing emphasis on pp. 219 and 261; the degrees of comparison on pp. 19 and 187; and the omission of the conjunction "or" between numerals is noticed both on p. 124 and p. 192. The same thing happens with regard to the cases. The case-forms in Turkish may be regarded either as parts of nouns or (more rightly) as postpositions. Here they are given under both heads; and we may well ask, if declensions of substantives are introduced at all, which no doubt is convenient, why the ablative, locative, and instrumental, which are as genuine and as serviceable cases in Turkish as any others, should be omitted from the paradigm. It is unscientific, too, and somewhat like a rule of thumb, to speak of the persons of the verb and one of the gerunds as being formed from the third person singular. These and other slight imperfections may be amended in a second edition, if the book reaches it, as it deserves to do. But they detract little from the usefulness of a very valuable work, which forms an excellent introduction to one of the most interesting of modern languages.

OBITUARY.

M. ACHILLE DELESSE, whose death was briefly noticed in the ACADEMY of April 2, was eminent alike as a geologist, mineralogist, and mining engineer. In early life he was Professor of Geology and Mineralogy at Besançon, and at a later period was appointed to the Ecole des Mines in Paris as Professor of Agriculture. M. Delesse was recognised in France as the great authority on the geology and hydrology of Paris; while he was widely known in all geological circles by his annual Revue de Géologie. One of his most solid contributions to science was the work which he published in 1865 under the title of Recherches sur l'Origine des Roches.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

THE Council of the Royal Geographical Society have awarded their annual gold medals for the encouragement of geographical research to Major Alexander Serpa Pinto and Mr. B. Leigh Smith. The award is made to the former for his great journey across Africa, during which he explored some five hundred miles of new country and defined the fluvial system of the southern slopes of the Benguelan highlands, and for his maps and numerous scientific observations. The other medal is given to Mr. Leigh Smith for his important discoveries on the coast of Franz Josef Land last summer, and for his previous geographical work in three expeditions to the north-east of Spitzbergen.

THE forthcoming number of Petermann's Mittheilungen contains a paper on A. Forrest's explorations in North-western Australia in 1879, with a map; an extended description of the new fortifications along the western frontier of France, with a map; and the second part of Herr Denhardt's notes on Eastern Equatorial Africa. These latter shed much light upon the geography and ethnology of the whole of the region which lies between the Indian Ocean and the Victoria Nyanza. We understand that Herr Denhardt is about to return to the scene of his labours at the instance of the Frankfort "Rüppell Association;" and, considering the very valuable surveys made by him during his recent exploration, we look forward with confidence to his future performances.

WE are glad to learn that the missionaries on Lake Nyassa are making good progress in reducing the native languages to writing. Dr. Laws, the head of the Livingstonia station of the Free Church of Scotland, has just completed a Chinyanja primer; and the MS. has been sent to the older missionary establishment at Lovedale in the South to be there printed by Kafirs for Kafirs.

THE Himmelsberg must no longer be described as the culminating point of Jutland and all Denmark. Prof. Erslev, in the Geografisk Tidsskrift, shows that this distinction must be transferred to the Eier Bavnhöi, near Skanderborg, which, according to the latest trigonometrical measurements, rise to a height of 564 feet.

THE Church Missionary Society have received intelligence of the first successful journey by an Englishwoman into the interior of Eastern Equatorial Africa. The lady in question, Mrs. Last, has gone to the Mamboia station, forty-five miles east of Mpwapwa, which was founded by her husband last year, and which is fortunately in a very healthy situation among the mountains of Ukaguru. Mr. Last has already sent home a useful account of some of the tribes of East Central Africa; and, now that he is aided by the presence of his wife, we may hope to gain a better insight into their inner life. The people among whom the station is placed are described as being far superior to the inhabitants of Ugogo—the region so much dreaded by travellers—and, what is somewhat unusual among East African tribes, are not afraid of work.

DR. EMIL HOLUB, whose account of his seven years' experiences in South Africa we hope to review next week, is expected to leave Europe in about two months, with the view of undertaking the extensive journey of exploration in Africa which was referred to in the ACADEMY of November 6. He will, however, in the first instance, spend some time in South Africa, and will probably not start before next year on his arduous journey across the continent from south to north. Dr. Holub proposes to combine science with commerce in the far interior; and he is stated to have been supplied with a large quantity of goods, so that he may be able to make the products of his native country known to the various tribes, and have something to offer in barter for natural-history specimens. The difficulty of transport, however, appears to have been quite underrated or, more probably, entirely overlooked by merchants and others in contributing to the very miscellaneous collection of gifts, which is described as forming a rich exposition of Austrian industry.

A LETTER recently received from Dr. Gerhard Rohlfs announces the arrival of the German expedition in Hamasen, the most northern province of Abyssinia. The party started from Ailet in December, and ascended the plateau by the route followed by Herr A. von Katte in 1836, although it is considered more difficult even than the one by Kameilo which was chosen for the British expeditionary force. In the neighbourhood of Kasen they crossed, at a height of 7,500 feet, the mountain-chain which may be said to support the Abyssinian plateau. The Kameilo route is bare and unwooded; but the mountain traversed by Dr. Rohlfs and Dr. Stecker, on the contrary, abounds with forests, the trees in which differ according to altitude. They have, of course, reached a much colder climate, the mean temperature being about 30° F., whereas on the coast it was nearly 80°.

WITH reference to a note in the ACADEMY of March 19, we learn that the agents of the South American Missionary Society intend, when the waters rise, to pay another visit to the Sepatiny affluent of the River Purus; and they expect then to be successful in meeting some Indians, who have intimated their intention of waiting for the arrival of the little missionary steamer. This will be very satisfactory, as almost all the previous efforts of the party to reach the Hypurina and other tribes on the various affluents of this great tributary of the Amazon have failed from one cause or another.

MR. B. F. DE COSTA has published a pamphlet the paper on "Arctic Exploration, with an Account of Nicholas of Lynn," which he read before the American Geographical Society. It is illustrated by several curious old maps, including a reproduction of Mercator's map of the world (A.D. 1569).

THE latest news received of the movements of Dr. Matteucci's expedition is that he and Lieut. Massari, after experiencing very great difficulties in penetrating into Wadai, had gone on to Bornu after spending only a fortnight in the country.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Geology of Utah.—In prosecuting the survey of the Rocky Mountain region, Prof. J. W. Powell felt the pressing necessity of studying in detail the great series of volcanic formations which characterise the group of High Plateaus in the Territory of Utah. Unable to devote sufficient time to carry out the work himself, he was fortunate in securing the services of Capt. C. E. Dutton, who has spent three years in unravelling the structure of the country. An admirable monograph, giving the general results of the work, has recently been issued by the United States Government. It contains not only a full description of the structural geology of the plateaus, but also a vast amount of matter which offers general interest to all students of vulcanology. It appears that in this region eruptions on a grand scale have occurred at intervals from the Mid-Eocene period until a few centuries ago. The erupted products display great diversity, for, although trachytic rocks predominate, they include representatives of all groups, from the very acid to the very basic. Petrography is not a strong feature of the volume, and it is to be hoped that the valuable petrographic work known to have been accomplished by Capt. Dutton will eventually be issued as a separate Report. It should be added that the present monograph is accompanied by an excellent atlas of maps and sections.

MESSRS. ENGELMANN, of Leipzig, have just published a little monograph on "Copernicus as a Physician," by Dr. L. Prowe.

M. G. MASSON, the medical publisher of Paris, is bringing out a French rival to Brain. The new venture is entitled L'Encéphale: Journal des Maladies mentales et nerveuses, and is edited by MM. B. Ball and J. Luys.

MESSRS. DÜMLER, of Berlin, have just published the correspondence of Leibnitz and Huygens with Denis Papin, together with a biography of Papin, and illustrative letters and documents. The volume is produced at the cost of the Royal Prussian Academy of Sciences, under the editorship of Dr. E. Gerland.

CLAUDE BERNARD himself planned and partially executed an Index to his voluminous works. This has now been completed by Dr. R. de la Coudraie, and published by MM. J. B. Bailliére et Fils. An Introduction is furnished by M. Duval; notices by MM. Renan, Paul Bert, and Moreau; and a bibliography by M. Malloizel. A portrait of the great physiologist is prefixed to the volume.

THE International Exhibition of Electricity which is to take place at the Palace of the Champs-Élysées will include bibliographical collections of works relating to electrical science and industry.

THE British Association, which meets at York in August next, will hold an exhibition of scientific instruments, for the purpose of illustrating the progress made during the past half-century in the construction of instruments of scientific research. Philosophical bodies and inventors are invited to co-operate.

THE Times announces that the President and Council of the Royal Society have selected, from the whole number of fifty-two candidates for the fellowship, the following fifteen to be recommended for election at the annual meeting on June 2 next:—W. E. Ayrton, H. W. Bates, J. S. Bristowe, W. H. M. Christie, G. Dickie, A. B. Kempe, A. Macalister, H. McLeod, J. A. Phillips, W. H. Preece, B. Samuelson, B. B. Stoney, R. H. Traquair, the Rev. H. W. Watson, and C. R. A. Wright.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE last number of the Hermes (vol. xv., par iv.), which, owing to some accident, only reached us a few days ago, opens with a suggestive and characteristic essay upon the Medea of Euripides by Wilamowitz-Möllendorf. H. Jordan ("Vorläufiges zu Theognis") defends Bekker against some of his recent critics. Zeller has some interesting remarks on the literary history of Plato's Crito and Republic and the Politics of Aristotle. Gemoll discusses the relation of the tenth book of the Iliad to the Odyssey; coming to the conclusion that the author of the Doloneia was acquainted with the Odyssey in its present shape. Neumann publishes and criticises some fragments of Heraclitus contained in the Strassburg MS. of Justin. Notes on the Epistle of Cornelia, the mother of the Gracchi, and on some points of Latin orthography are contributed by H. Jordan. Johann Schmidt ("Zwei Getilgte Inschriften") discusses two erased inscriptions found on the same bases as those published in C. I. L., vi. 1194, and in the Bollettino della Commiss. Archeolog. Commun. di Roma, vi. 251. The inscription on the lead tablet recently discovered at Bath is examined at length by Zangemeister. Hübner gives an account of further discoveries of antiquities at Citania, and Lehmann continues his notes on Cicero.

A SOCIETY has been formed in Norway for the study of the Norwegian dialects and folk-lore under the title of Förening for norske dialekter og folketraditioner. Among its promoters may be mentioned P. C. Asbjørnsen, Ivar Aasen, Prof. Bugge, J. Fritzen (the author of the well-known Old-Norse dictionary), M. Moe, H. Ross, Prof. Joh. Storm, and C. R. Unger, including, as will be seen, the first authorities in Norway on folk-lore and philology in all its branches. The work of the society will consist mainly in the publication of a periodical, which will appear in two sections, one dealing with tales, songs, traditions, superstitions, and popular customs; the other purely philological, giving historical, grammatical, and lexical treatises and contributions. The yearly subscription is fixed at the very moderate sum of three crowns. Those who wish for further information should address themselves to Prof. Sophus Bugge, Christiania.

THE second part of Prof. Steintal's Abriß der Sprachwissenschaft, treating of language in general, is on the eve of publication.

PROF. POSTGATE, the newly elected Professor of Comparative Philology at University College, will deliver a course of twelve lectures on "The Science of Language," on Wednesdays and Fridays at three p.m., beginning on May 4. The lectures will be illustrated with diagrams, and the fee for the entire course is one guinea. The first lecture, introductory to the general subject, will be open to the public without payment or ticket.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—(Thursday, April 7.) EDWIN FRESHFIELD, ESQ., V.-P., in the Chair.—Mr. C. K. Watson exhibited the silver lid of a chrysmatory, and a "paxbrede" representing the crucifix, with Mary and John, in the possession of

New College, and, according to tradition, once the property of William of Wykeham, having been found together with his mitre. Mr. Watson read an indenture of the time of Henry IV., in which such articles are mentioned, but showed from differences between the objects and the descriptions in the indenture, as well as from the evidently later date of both of the objects, that they could not have belonged to that bishop. The lid of the chrismatory is triple, and bears the letters O. C. V., which Mr. Watson interpreted as ordinatio, confirmatio, unctio, while Mr. Micklethwaite thought the last letter more probably stood for varia, as oil for unction was not specially required by the bishop.—Mr. George Paine, of Sittingbourne, exhibited an iron sword, spearheads, knife, apur, and other articles found in a Saxon grave near Sittingbourne; and the horns and bones of red deer, ox, horse, and dog, handles of amphoræ, and tiles found near Bayford.—Mr. C. E. Davies, of Bath, gave an account of the attempt to preserve the remains of the Roman bath found in that town.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Thursday, April 7.)

LORD TALBOT DE MALAHIDE, President, in the Chair.—The noble Chairman made some observations upon the loss that the Institute and scientific societies generally had sustained by the death of Sir Philip Egerton.—Mr. F. C. J. Spurrell contributed further information on the dense or chalk holes of Kent and Eastern England, with special reference to earthworks in connexion with them, and their relation to streams and the conformation of the land, by considering these with their uses, the methods of excavation, means of access, and the difficulties presented by the rocks through which the shaft was carried, &c. Mr. Spurrell divided the ancient pits into three chief periods, but pointed out instances in which minor distinctions in time could be made in certain positions convenient for observation. The subsidences at Blackheath were explained by this means, and many instances adduced of caves known to have subsided in former times on Blackheath, at Charlton, and in the neighbourhood; in addition, he remarked that though on a public place like Blackheath, where they had been well and carefully filled up, they were therefore difficult to detect, yet he could point out several spots where some would be found to have existed. They were classed in the third or latest division of ancient pits.—Sir Henry Dryden sent some notes on a bronze steelyard weight exhibited by Mr. J. F. Melville Cartwright, which had been recently found at Newbottle, in Northamptonshire. This example, said to be the finest yet discovered, bears the arms of England, Cornwall, Germany, and Poitou.—Mr. Hartshorne called attention to weights of this kind, and bearing, with slight variations, the same arms, having been found in many parts of England. He suggested that Richard Earl of Poitou and Cornwall, and King of the Romans, who enjoyed many privileges granted to him by Henry III., and whose arms are here represented, may have had a concession on the sale of wool or some other commodity sold by weight throughout the kingdom.—Mr. R. S. Ferguson sent some remarks upon a Fakir's crutch exhibited by Mr. Porter. This apparently peaceful object contained in its stem a secret dagger, and has been ascribed to a religious fanatic of the Mahratta people.—Miss Box exhibited a small "button and pillar," or "sheep's head," alarm clock. Mr. Ready sent a late seventeenth-century cross, inlaid with mother-of-pearl. The Dean and Chapter of Carlisle exhibited a close helmet, temp. James I. Mr. H. Harland exhibited a deed with the Great Seal of Henrietta Maria and her signature, and that of Sir Kenelm Digby, and many others.

NEW SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Friday, April 8.)

DR. B. NICHOLSON in the Chair.—The first paper, by Miss Constance O'Brien, on "Shakspeare's Old Men," was read by Mr. Fumivall. Omitting the historical characters like Gaunt, Miss O'Brien divided the remaining old men into four classes, with three exceptions, who stood alone:—(1) The calm or resigned old men, Ageon in the Errors, Friar Lawrence in Romeo and Juliet, Friar Francis in Much Ado; (2) The old fidgets or fussy old men, including Justice Shallow, Dogberry, Verges, and Polonius; (3) The cool, common-sense old men, Lafau in All's Well, Escalus in Measure for Measure, Menenius in Coriolanus, and Gonzago in the Tempest; (4) The passionate old men, Capulet and Montague in Romeo and Juliet, Leonato and Antonio in Much Ado, Nestor in Troilus, Brabantio in Othello, and Lear, the one old man taken as the hero and centre of a great play. The exceptional old men were Sir John Falstaff, who would always insist on being young; Adam in As you like it; and Gremio (probably not Shakspeare's) in The Shrew. Shakspeare saw the faults and absurdities of old age, but never mocked at it as other dramatists did; to him it was a thing which ought to be honourable and venerable in every rank, from the king to the serving-man.—The second paper was by Miss Emma Phipson, "Was Shakspeare a Democrat?" Rejecting the ordinary definition of "democrat," and distinguishing between the mob, whom Shakspeare scorned, and the people, Miss Phipson contended that the true democrat was he who best recognised the worth of manhood independent of circumstances of title, pomp, or poverty; and from this point she contended that Shakspeare—who summed up the highest praise of his noblest hero, Brutus, in the words, "This was a man," who used nearly the same words of Hamlet's father, and who went to the heart and not the rank of his every character—was truly a democrat.—The third paper was by Mr. J. W. Thompson, "On Two Performances of The Merchant of Venice, at Dresden and Meiningen," dwelling chiefly on the extravagance of action in Herr Haas as Shylock at Dresden, and Portia and Nerissa wearing beards there, and on the admirable working together of the Meiningen company.

FINE ART.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL NOTES FROM THE MEDITERRANEAN.

Alexandria: March 21, 1880.

What bids fair to be a discovery of the first interest has just been made at Alexandria by a Greek antiquary of that city. Near the spot indicated by Strabo he has found a large subterranean vaulted chamber which is described as having the roof supported by Doric pilasters. This he conjectures, with great probability, to be the hitherto-unknown burial vault of the Ptolemaic dynasty. Opening out from the large chamber are smaller ones, of which the walls and roofs are covered with beautifully executed frescoes. Of these, at present three only have been partially excavated, but in one has already been found a granite sarcophagus, which bears the name ΣΩΣΗΒΙΟΣ—that, viz., of the tutor of Ptolemy Philopator. Here also was discovered a splendid bronze lamp, with a long Greek inscription.

It tells well for M. Maspero that at the commencement of his career in Egypt he should have made a compact permitting the discoverer to excavate the tombs, and allowing him to receive a third of the value of any objects which may be discovered. This would have been impossible under the rule of the late Mariette-Pasha, whose jealousy of any but Frenchmen, and especially of Englishmen, absolutely amounted to a monomania. It is to be hoped that under the new régime, of which M. Maspero is the head, the brutal and short-sighted treatment of the unhappy fellaheen who accidentally discovered objects of ancient art will for the future cease. It was this treatment—the confiscation of the treasure trove and the flogging and imprisonment of the finders of antiquities—which rendered the name of Mariette a byword of terror throughout all Egypt, and led to the immediate melting of objects of the precious metals, and the instant breaking up of larger monuments of stone. At the very time of Mariette-Pasha's death a number of unfortunate boys, who in playing amid the crude brick ruins of Tel Basta had accidentally found a treasure, were, with their male relatives, lying in prison at Zagazig, where they had been confined for some two months, being occasionally brought out to be bastinadoed, in order, after they had given up all, to make them confess to the possession of more.

I have lately ascertained that the Christian bottles bearing the effigy of St. Menas were not made at the celebrated convent at Alexandria, where they were probably sold to pilgrims, but near Aboukir, on the site of Canopus, where exists a kind of clay suited for their manufacture. Upon this site several moulds for making these bottles have been discovered. Part of the ancient Church of the Dagr of St. Menas still exists in the Mosque of Abdul Damián at Alexandria, and within a short while ago ancient Christian mosaics were visible upon the walls. At a recent visit I found that these have been whitewashed over, and the whole place modernised.

I am now certain of a fact of which I had previously serious doubts. I have obtained undoubted proof that inlaid porcelain, like that of which I brought numbers of specimens to the British Museum, and which Prof. Hayter Lewis will illustrate in the forthcoming number of the Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, is found elsewhere than at Tel el Yahoudeh in the Delta. When at Thebes this winter, I obtained two specimens from Arabs working among the ruins of Karnak, which bear the name of Seti I., an earlier name than I had seen before. The hieroglyphs are in brown upon a pale yellow ground. Another precious fragment shows what Dr. Birch calls a Phoenix (Bennu) upon a sort of basket, the material being alabaster inlaid with blue, red, and pale-green glass.

I have this year obtained another instalment of the hoard of papyri found in the Fayoum, which, as such documents are not appreciated by Dr. Rieu of the British Museum, will probably find their home with their congeners in the Louvre. These MSS. are in cursive Greek, Coptic, and Cufic, and among them are some specimens in Pehlevi. Several documents are in perfect condition, and one or two have beautiful little clay seals preserved intact.

The Russian Baron von Ustonov, who has settled at Jaffa, has been forming a very interesting collection of antiquities from that town and neighbourhood. Among the stone monuments I noticed several interesting inscriptions from the ancient Jewish burial-ground which extends over a large tract of land to the north and east of the town. One of these in Greek characters is partly in the Latin language; another is bilingual, Hebrew and Greek. A third stone bears an oblong label, with the following Hebrew and Greek inscription in Greek characters. It reads:—

ΑΒΒΟΗΑΠΥΓΙΟΥΑΑ

ΛΕΥΕΙΤΗΣ

ΒΑΒΕΛΗCARTOKO,

with a palm branch at the end of the second line.

A Christian gem which I lately obtained at Beyrout with a subject upon it well known in the Roman Catacombs, but rare, I imagine, as an intaglio, is of sufficient interest to merit description. It is a Nicolo, and the engraving represents Jonah leaping from a ship with a single mast and oars into the sea. Above the prophet's head is a star, and in the water is a sea-horse and two other marine monsters. Above the mast on one side is the Greek letter P (?), and on the other H. To the left of the composition is an anchor ending in a cross with a fish on either side, and above is the monogram of Christ.

Valletta: March 29, 1881.

Some workmen employed by the Government of Malta to plant trees in the vacant space of ground on the top of the hill outside the fortifications of Notabile, or Città Vecchia, the inland capital of the island, recently came upon what turns out to be the remains of a Roman villa of considerable interest; and further excavations are now in progress with the view of laying bare the whole building. The central court has already been excavated. It was surrounded by Doric pillars, and paved with mosaics of unusual fineness and beauty. The tesserae are formed in many cases of minute squares of precious African marbles. A border of wreaths of fruits, with tragic masks at intervals upon a white ground, I have rarely seen equalled, even at Rome or Pompeii. One design, representing Hercules and Omphale within a square border, is of extraordinarily fine workmanship. Among the ruins two headless statues and the marble bust of a woman with flowing hair have been discovered. Perhaps the rarest objects, however, are several panes of glass, some of which have assumed beautiful colours from the process of oxydisation. Only a few coins have been found, whereof the only ones now decipherable are a first brass of Gordianus Pius, a follis of Constantius, and a third brass Aurelian. A quantity of Roman pottery has been dug up in the ruins, and also a few undoubted specimens of the Phœnician epoch. A good deal was discovered in a curious storehouse, or rather tank, with four openings, which is excavated in the rock under the villa. This storehouse is funnel-shaped, and lined throughout with plaster laid upon the solid rock. Two similar receptacles have just been found, but have not yet been cleared out.

Some interesting catacombs found about three years ago near the church of St. Agatha at Città Vecchia were opened for public inspection a few months ago. The tops of the tombs are in some instances rudely carved out of the solid rock to represent sarcophagi, the entrance being underneath. In two places are what were apparently rude altars of stone. I could hear of the discovery of no inscriptions of any kind.

One cannot help regretting that the noble armoury in the Palace of Valletta should be shorn of its fine proportions, deprived of its double light, and encumbered by a wretched screen painted yellow, put up to enable a former governor's guests to perform tableaux vivants. In the galleries, too, the labels under several of the pictures of different grand masters, which were formerly inscribed with their names and dates, have been allowed to be destroyed or lost by the cleaners.

GREVILLE J. CHESTER.

EXHIBITIONS.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.

THE present exhibition of the "old" society, while quite up to its average level, is not one calling for any very special notice. What is, perhaps, its most noteworthy drawing, Mr. Alfred Hunt's Heart of Corry, Skye (124), is imperfectly visible owing to the reflections in the plate-glass which covers it. We can see enough to know that it is a very faithful and impressive view of that remarkable scene, with the glen in twilight gloom, and the terrible crests of the mountains by Coruisk coming out clear against the sky—like flames of iron. The artist has two other drawings in his more usual manner, both of Whitley, from nearly the same point of view. It is needless to say that they are distinguished by beauty and delicacy of colour and subtle rendering of atmosphere. The largest of Mr. Albert Goodwin's drawings is a view of a Canal in Dordrecht (6), with the light in sky and on very red tiles above, contrasted with the cool greenness of the shadowed houses and water. He has another smaller view of this Northern Venice, and some charming little bits of English scenery; but it is in his blue and breezy Summer Sea, Mount's Bay, that he has achieved his newest success. Mr. Herbert Marshall has taken advantage of the severity of last winter to study for us the effect of sunset on the Thames at London filled with snowy lumps of ice; and he has besides a very successful drawing of Cavendish Square in Winter (102), filled with a slight evening fog, and the bare boughs of its trees coming out against a smoky red sky; a cab crawling round by the railings completes its London character. No drawings are more conspicuous for tender and yet healthy sentiment than Mr. Hale's. In Autumn Twilight (66) he has boldly dealt with trees still bearing crumpled and shredded dead leaves, tangled with mist, the clear evening sky beyond throwing them into purple shade; in another (35), a swan sails alone up the reach of a river rich in sunset reflections, its banks dimmed with haze; in another (17), perhaps the finest of all, he has drawn Loch Maree in rainy desolation, the sky covered with a flock of lightest gray clouds, whose transparency and motion are admirably given. Mr. Francis Powell shows equal strength and variety, if not so much sentiment. His Opposite the Setting Sun (24) is the most striking work in the room; but he has several drawings of lake, river, and sea which are equally good in their way. Of sea-painters Mr. Henry Moore is the strongest, and he has allowed himself and us more colour this year. He has never painted the swell and transparency of the open sea with more power and truth than in his Light Breezes. The colour of the water, a fine blue, appears to be not entirely due to reflection of the sky, but to belong to the water itself, as in the Mediterranean. His shore scenes are also more full of colour than usual, and as strong as oils. We must pass over lightly the remaining landscapes and sea-views. We observe Mr. Naftel has broken fresh ground in the Pyrenees, and Mr. Boyce has some pretty views from the South of France. Mr. S. P. Jackson has never been more successful than this year. His Tintagel Head (25) and Llanstephan Castle are lovely; and the smooth force with which water falls over a weir has seldom been better given than in his view on the Thames (95). Near it is another picture of a weir by George Fripp, remarkable for the admirable way in which the glassy smoothness of the water is given. This accomplished artist has many beautiful drawings here. Of Mr. Thorne Waite's vigorous drawings none is so beautiful as that called Silver Light (8). Mr. Eyre Walker's glen (164), with its finely painted birch-trees and the mist clinging to the hills, should not be missed. Of the rest it may generally be said that they are what we have learnt to expect from the artists, and that they give no cause for disappointment or surprise. A special word must, however, be given to the wonderfully clever sketches by Miss Clara Montalba. It is very tantalising of an artist who can do so much with so little colour not to give us the benefit of a fuller scale; but if we cannot have the sun of Venice we must be content with the stones and the water, and these she gives us strongly. How true a colorist she is is shown by the way in which these slight sketches in saffron and white or sea-green and gray hold their own, though hung close to others on which all the resources of the colour-box have been expended.

No society owes more to its lady members than this. Miss C. Montalba, Mrs. Allingham, and Mrs. Angell are quite unsurpassed in their several lines. By Mrs. Allingham are several charming drawings, especially one of two little girls carrying a clothes-basket, and an Old White Horse in a summer field; and Mrs.

Angell's dead birds, flowers, and eggs are perfect.

The nearest rival to Mrs. Allingham is Mr. Waterlow, who has some very pretty drawings of lanes and fields, with rustic figures; but in figures generally the exhibition is somewhat weak. Emphatic exceptions must, however, be made in favour of Mr. Robert Barnes' Coaxing Mother, which is admirable in design, expression, and colour, and Mr. Arthur Hopkins' Tired of Waiting (431). There is also a fine group in Mr. Norman Tayler's Peacemaker. Mr. Brewtnall has a clever drawing of a young lady of the beginning of the century showing her first offer (in writing) to her papa; Mr. Radford a highly finished and admirably drawn composition, called The Bather, whose principal fault is that it does not explain itself. Mr. Tom Lloyd and Mr. E. K. Johnson also send good examples of their usual styles. Mr. Du Maurier and Mr. Pilsbury are new associates of the society. The former makes his début with two drawings, one of which (267) shows much feeling for colour; and Mr. Pilsbury has some very pretty drawings, especially one called Buttercups.

It is not every society that can boast of its veterans with such reason as this. Old age seems to have little or no effect upon Mr. Samuel Palmer, who has two large drawings, grand in composition and gorgeous in colouring, such as we have often seen before and often wish to see again. Similar thoughts are inspired by the vigorous Gipsy Encampment and stalwart Standard-bearer of Sir John Gilbert, R.A. Of these men it may be said that they have no rivals but themselves. They, with Mr. Frederick Tayler, Mr. Richardson, Mr. Samuel Read, and others, have passed beyond the province of current criticism.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

MODERN DUTCH PAINTINGS AT MESSRS. GOUPIL'S.

AT Messrs. Goupil's is now on view a very interesting collection of modern Dutch water-colours and oil pictures, all bold, sincere, and national. Love for their flat, wet country, and sympathy for the hard lot of the poor shown with true artistic reserve, are the notes of modern Dutch art. By J. Maris and Mesdag there are a number of bold studies of sea and shipping, canals, and moist, green, grassy places beloved of ducks. The latter artist is painting a panorama of Schevening, the first marine panorama ever executed. There are some fine drawings by Blommers—notably, one of a number of men and women in the slanting rain, watching the sea from under the lee of an old boat. Israels has some fine works, among which may be mentioned a large oil picture of a poor family removing all their household gods in a cart under cover of the night. There are two or three by Sadée—none more beautiful than a simple drawing of a little girl looking out of the window at a cheerless prospect of rain and gray sea. The pride of the collection is a very large water-colour, called Preparing for the Wedding, by Bisschop, a splendid piece of colour. By this powerful master is another fine work, called The Queen's Jewels; and Mrs. Bisschop (née Kate Swift) has a drawing of a mother putting her baby in the cradle, which might well be mistaken for her husband's work. There are many works by Kever, Mauve, and others which will well repay a visit to Messrs. Goupil's rooms, which should not be left without seeing an exquisite little painting of Gleaners, by Millet, and a grand cattle-piece by Marcke.

C. M.

ART JOTTINGS FROM FLORENCE.

MRS. STILLMAN (Miss Spartali) has just completed a fine water-colour drawing for exhibition at the Grosvenor. It represents a subject from the Vita Nuova, one of Dante's few meetings with Beatrice. The poet stands to the left of the spectator, and is bending forward with yearning eyes to greet the lovely lady in red, heading her band of maidens, and leading Love by the hand. A glimpse of country is seen through the San Giorgio Gats. Tall buildings hem in the group. Mrs. Stillman is very happy in effects of colour, and the tones of her draperies are finely contrasted. Her Love is a trifle meagre and careworn, but the day of chubby, laughing Loves seems altogether past. The whole composition is full of tender charm. The following version from Mr. Rossetti's pen is the motto of this charming picture:—

"Last All Saints holy-day, even now gone by,
I met a gathering of damozels.
She that came first, as one doth who excels,
Had Love with her, bearing her company."

THE clever young American sculptor, Mr. Thaxter, is about to put into marble his graceful composition entitled Love's First Dream that has won him so much praise among American critics.

SIGNOR CECCHINI has despatched to London some spirited oil-colours on Venetian themes.

SIGNOR FRANCESCO GIOLI, one of the most distinguished members of the rising Tuscan school, has sent two excellent oil-colours to the Milan exhibition. The larger of the two, entitled The Ford, represents one of the curious Pisan ox waggons, heavily laden with faggots, struggling down the bank of a little stream. On the projecting box, facing the spectator, the girl driver stands erect, brandishing a stick. Her figure comes out finely against the stack of brushwood upon which she is leaning. The red framework of the cart supplies a note of brilliant colour, and there is much vigour in the movement of the oxen and of the man grasping their nose-rings. Signor Gioli's other picture is an exquisitely rendered scene of Italian harvest-time. It is entitled Corn and Olives, and represents a field of golden corn at the edge of an olive grove, with a group of reapers at work. The tawny glow of the corn and the play of light among the branches of the trees are rendered with admirable effect.

MR. ARTHUR LEMON is another delightful exponent of Italian rustic life. Chief of the clever works he has recently sent to England is a noble study of oxen in a poetic setting. It is entitled An Idyll from Theocritus. It represents a glade in an ilex wood, with a glimpse of the sea in the distance. In the foreground are two superb oxen in repose. A peasant girl lying against one of them is listening to the strains of a pipe played by her male companion. Other cream-white animals are seen browsing here and there among the trees. Mr. Lemon is unrivalled as a painter of oxen. He knows them as a shepherd knows his sheep, and endows every animal with a life and individuality of its own.

MISS ANNIE PERTZ has just sent to its destination across the Atlantic a remarkably truthful portrait of Mr. Charles Dana, author of Two Years before the Mast. This young artist has a genuine gift for portraiture, and makes such rapid progress in the technique of her art that great things may be expected from her in future.

SIGNOR ULISSE CANTAGALLI, whose majolica works are one of the sights of Florence, is sending a large collection of his wares to the Milan exhibition. A few years ago this establishment turned out nothing but the commonest crockery for domestic use. Now, with the same materials, it furnishes capital reproductions of Urbino, Faenza, and Cafaggiolo majolica, and has lately given us many imitations of della Robbia ware. Some Raffaslesque vases, dishes, and ewers are specially good.

ART SALES.

DURING three days of last week Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods were engaged in selling the collection of pictures long the property of Mr. Bicknell. Mr. Bicknell was the son-in-law of David Roberts, which fact accounts for the presence of so many pictures by that artist in the cabinet that has just been dispersed. Apart, however, from the Robertses, the collection might have been deemed interesting in virtue of at least two considerable Turners. One of these, called Ivy Bridge, Devon—a simple English village subject, known to many by the homely but excellent print—sold for 800 guineas. Of the second Mr. Agnew was the purchaser, and he paid for it 3,000 guineas. This was the Palestrina, obtained direct from the artist, and exhibited in 1830—a picture, therefore, of the middle period of Turner. For David Roberts's pictures there is hardly the same demand that there was during the closing years of that artist's life, for criticism has recognised—perhaps with more unanimity than usual—that David Roberts's work was rather popular and respectable than great, and that, accordingly, he was a painter for a generation, and not for all time. His works sold pretty well on Saturday, when 550 guineas was given for his Interior of the Church of St. Gomar (Agnew), 220 guineas for his St. Andrews from the Sea (Vokins), 500 guineas for his Interior of the Church of SS. Giovanni e Paolo (Agnew), 184 guineas for his Interior of St. Anne at Bruges (Martin Colnaghi), 490 guineas for his impressive Venetian picture of the Dogana and the Church of Santa Maria della Salute, Venice (Dowdeswell), and 440 guineas for the Forum with the Arch of Titus (Vokins). Mr. Bicknell's whole collection of paintings was so fortunate as to realise more than seventeen thousand pounds.

At the Hôtel Drouot, in Paris, last week, there was sold the collection of Jules Jacquemart. It comprised precious objects from the East, principally Japanese, and an assemblage of etchings—a limited number of his own, and a considerable quantity which he had received from other etchers. Among them were examples of Mr. Whistler, and rare and fine specimens of the work of Mr. Seymour Haden. Many of Jacquemart's own finest etchings had, before the sale, passed into the hands of the keepers of the Bibliothèque Nationale, Département des Estampes—which now contains perhaps the most complete collection of his works in existence. Indeed, with regard to Jacquemart's own etchings which appeared at the sale, it may be said, generally, that it was much inferior to M. Burty's collection of the same which was sold by auction in England about two years ago.

THE Visser (wrongly printed Vesser in our last) collection of drawings has been sent to Paris, at which place, as well as at Berlin, they will be exhibited for a day or two before being sent to Amsterdam for sale by auction by Messrs. Frederik Muller and Co., on May 16, 17, and 18. The opportunities of M. Visser, first as a print-dealer and then as Directeur de Ventes at the Hague, were great; and he availed himself of them, desiring to make a collection not only of the greatest masters of his country, but of all of any importance. The collection, therefore, besides some fine works by Rembrandt, Ostade, Cuyp, a very fine example of Frank Hals (specimen précieux de sa touche magistrale, as the catalogue has it), one of Brauer and several by Van der Helst, Jan Steen, Vermeer, Ph. de Koninck, and other well-known masters, is rich in specimens of the less and later men. The Frank Hals is a polychrome drawing of two heads—a jester and a youth convulsed with laughter. The Rembrandts include fine designs of Christ with Martha and Mary, Abraham dismissing Agar, The Departure of the Young Tobit, The Execution of St. John the Baptist, The Deliverance of St. Peter, The Adoration of the Kings, A Landscape with a Windmill, and three others. One of these is a curious figure of a man, with an endorsement in Rembrandt's writing that it was taken from a Japanese figure.

THE collection of the late Charles Damian Disch will be sold at Cologne on May 12. Beside works of art of the period of the Renaissance, this collection comprises a large number of Roman and Gaulish antiquities found in the Rhine provinces.

OBITUARY.

MISS JANE BEWICK, the eldest daughter of the founder of English wood-engraving, died at Gateshead on April 7, at the advanced age of ninety-four years. She edited the Memoir of Thomas Bewick, published in 1862, the Preface to which bears her initials. We learn from the North of England Advertiser that Isabella, the second daughter, still survives. It may be recollected that, about six years ago, these two sisters announced their intention of bequeathing to the British Museum a complete set of proofs of their father's prints and engravings.

M. DAVIDOUD, the architect, died in Paris on April 6 at the age of fifty-eight. He was the architect of the Trocadéro and of several theatres, and he also designed many of the finest squares and public places in the French capital.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

It is announced that some progress has been made with the project of concentrating, as far as may be, the works of our water-colour painters in an important central exhibition, and that the gallery intended to be the scene of this annual exhibition is likely to be open next spring. It is situated in Piccadilly, nearly opposite Burlington House. The members of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colour are known to be largely supporting the scheme. The exhibition will include contributions from outsiders, chosen according to merit, or on the principle of selection adopted at the Royal Academy; but we believe that a Saturday contemporary is in error in imagining that the older "Society of Painters in Water-Colour" may take part in the scheme. The society is a rich body, and an old prestige attaches to it, so that it would seem to have felt little inducement to join in the new movement; and, moreover, those water-colour painters who are not among its members possess sufficient strength to form an important exhibition and one which will represent various sides of water-colour art.

THE gold medal of the Royal Institute of British Archaeologists has been awarded, after the approval of the Queen, to Mr. George Godwin, who has been editor of the Builder for the past thirty-six years. Mr. Godwin, himself an architect, is the author of several valuable works on architectural subjects.

MESSRS. BROADWOOD, with the assistance of Miss Kate Faulkner, to whom the merit of the new and effective decoration is due, have added another to their list of pianos remarkable for ornamental design. This instrument is of what may be called the Burne-Jones shape. It is more elegant in its curve than the ordinary grand; ends with a sharp angle; and is supported on twin-legs, square and fluted, in place of the usual heavy posts. It is of plain unpolished oak, with lid and sides covered with large full-blown roses with stems, leaves, and thorns modelled in low relief. They are treated in a strictly conventional but highly graceful manner. The flowers, which are drawn in all positions, approach the appearance of the Tudor rose in what may be called the full-face blossoms, while the stems curve about them in arabesque fashion. The leaves and stems are gilt, and the roses deep red, producing a rich but quiet effect, similar to that of Spanish stamped leather. Here and there are butterflies, also gilt, but over-painted with transparent colour, by which a very delicate bluey iridescence is obtained. The quality of the whole effect is fairy-like; and if Beast, as no doubt he did, furnished Beauty's boudoir, with a spinet, it must have been very like this.

WE hear that the following articles (among others) will appear in forthcoming numbers of the Magazine of Art:—"The Fitzwilliam Museum," by Prof. Sidney Colvin; "The Classical Fallacy," by Mr. Grant Allen; "The Study of Anatomy for Artistic Purposes," by Sir Coutts Lindsay; "Artistic Aspects of Women's Dress," by Mrs. Comyns Carr; "Thornercroft," by Mr. E. W. Gosse; "Munkacsy," by Mr. E. Beavington Atkinson; "The Salon," by Mr. J. Forbes Robertson; "Old English Silver," by Mr. Wilfred Cripps; "The Venice of Titian," by Mr. Wyke Bayliss; and "Quaint Drinking Vessels," by Mr. Llewellyn Jewitt. The "Homes of our Artists" that will be illustrated next are those of Mr. Alma Tadema and Mr. Hubert Herkomer.

MR. BURNE JONES's painting entitled Dies Domini is now on view at the rooms of the Birmingham Royal Society of Artists.

THE controversy about the proposed transfer of Ashburnham House from the Dean and Chapter to the governing body of Westminster School has directed attention to the condition of the school itself, which appears to be such as to make some considerable changes absolutely necessary. There is a proposal now that the school should take one of the houses in Dean's Yard instead of Ashburnham House. But before any transfer of property at all is made there should be a thorough enquiry and a clear understanding as to the future of the school. Whatever houses the school authorities obtain are certain to be pulled down or to be so far altered as to become new; and every one of those which belong to the Dean and Chapter contains valuable old work which ought not to be destroyed unless an absolute necessity is proved. The case seems to be one for a Royal Commission.

AT the meeting of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies to be held at 22 Albemarle Street, on Thursday, April 21, at five p.m., the following papers will be read:—"The New Statue of Pallas," by Mr. C. T. Newton; "Votive Helmets and Spearheads," by Canon Greenwell; "Boat Races in Antiquity," by Prof. Percy Gardner; "The Battle of Marathon," by Mr. Watkiss Lloyd; and "The Etymology of ἐμπὸς, ἐκπὸς, κ. τ. λ.," by the Rev. E. M. Geldart.

WE quote the following from the Japan Weekly Mail:—

"One of the greatest attractions of the exhibition at Uyeno will be a tea pavilion, built in strict accordance with the rules of the Tea Clubs, and furnished with utensils handed down from father to son for twenty generations. The originator of this idea is a gentleman of Kioto, by name Senô. He is a lineal descendant of the renowned Sen no Rikiu, master of Tea Ceremonials to Nohunaga and Hideyoshi (1550-96). It is characteristic of the reverential affection Japan bestows upon the gentle arts that now, at a distance of three centuries, the name of Sen no Rikiu is known to every educated man in the empire. Sen was indeed the Epicurus of Japan; the founder of a philosophy that teaches, not that happiness is to be derived from sensual pleasures, but that the greatest good within mortal reach is the peace of mind springing from virtue. Many may remember him now merely as a dilettante—a man who devised forty-six varieties of tea pavilions, and persuaded the world to discover occult beauties in the rude, uncomely productions of ancient keramists; but those who have studied his life and philosophy know that with him aesthetics were but the outcome of moral beauty, and that the history of his own doings and death gives the truest possible idea of the faith he possessed."

THE Art Furnishers' Alliance (Limited) have opened rooms at 157 New Bond Street, which is rapidly becoming a perfect art-warren. These rooms are furnished with articles all warranted, by no less an authority than Dr. Christopher Dresser, "to possess intrinsic merit as regards originality, design, and execution." After this, we feel that criticism would be profane. The Alliance have published their profession fidei in the shape (and a peculiar shape it is) of a little book, containing the Principles of Art, by Dr. Dresser, with an apologia, in the form of prefatory remarks, by Edward Lee, Knt. The principles are sound, the prefatory remarks show an ardent desire to educate the Boeotian public, and the shrine was opened to worshippers and purchasers on Tuesday last.

WE gladly acknowledge the first part of an Italian periodical called Pompei: Rivista illustrata di Archeologia popolare e industriale e d'Arte. It contains, among other illustrated articles, one on the new bronzes discovered at Pompeii, and the first of a series on ancient goldsmith's work, beginning with the discoveries at Kertch.

FOLLOWING close upon the Exhibition of Painter-Etchers in Bond Street, where America is so strongly represented, an exhibition of American etchings opened at Boston, U.S.A., in the Museum of Fine Arts, on April 11. The contributions from each artist are limited to ten.

RAPID painting seems to be coming as much into fashion as other rapid modes of executing life's work. The day has gone by when Gerard Dow spent nine days in elaborating a broomstick. We have most of us seen Mr. Poynter's striking portrait-studies, painted before his class at South Kensington in the space of two hours; we have heard of Mr. Whistler's effective celerity; and we have lately been informed by the Daily News that Mr. Millais painted his admirable portrait of Mr. Gladstone in five hours. But all this is as nothing to an Italian peintre improvisateur who is at present showing off in Paris. A few days ago he painted, before the ex-Queen of Spain and a number of notabilities assembled to see the feat, a view of the Rhine, with a castle on the shore, in ten minutes; and drew a busy scene at a port in five minutes. At this rate, art would outrival even photography; but then is it art, this marvellous dexterity? We should opine that Signor Carlo's works were not; but Mr. Poynter and Mr. Millais really make one afraid of judging this dexterous improvisatore.

THE King of Italy has nominated the Swiss sculptor, Vincentio Vela, a companion of the Order of the Crown. Vela was the son of a poor peasant of Ligornetto, near Mendrisio, in the canton of Ticino. He was born in 1822. In his twelfth year he was apprenticed to a stonemason, and worked in the quarries at Viggio. He showed a natural genius for drawing and carving, and was delighted two years later when he was taken to Milan in order to work among the masons at the restoration of the cathedral. He learned drawing in his spare time, and laboured until late at night upon models for the goldsmiths of the town. Cac-ciotori, the sculptor, took him into his studio; and he was just about to visit Rome to carry on his studies when he was called home by the breaking out of the Civil War of the Sunderbund, throughout the whole of which he served as a soldier in the Federal Army. After the defeat of the Roman Catholic cantons Vela went to Venice, where he received the first prize at the Exhibition of Sculpture for his bas-relief of Christ raising the Daughter of Jairus from the Dead. In 1848 he again took up arms, but as an Italian, not as a Switzer, and greatly distinguished himself as a volunteer at the siege of Peschiera. After the close of the campaign he returned with zeal to his profession, and achieved a wide renown by his works at the Paris Salon, especially by his Spartacus in 1855, and his marble group of France and Italy in 1863, for which he received the Cross of the Legion of Honour. In 1855 he was elected a member of the Milan Academy of Fine Arts, and in 1870 corresponding member of the Institute in Paris. The Harmony in Tears on Donizetti's monument is his work. He has been a frequent exhibitor both in Paris and Milan. At the last elections for the Great Council of Ticino the sculptor entered his name as a candidate, but was defeated. Among the best known of his works are the colossal Christopher Columbus and America and The Last Days of Napoleon I.

KREUTZ's monograph on St. Mark's, Venice, is being continued by Ferdinand Ongania, with the help of Venetian contributors. It will contain a great number of engravings and chromo-lithographs, minutely illustrating every feature of the great basilica, and is to be completed in 1884.

DR. MILCHHÜFER is about to publish a work on the Museums of Athens, which is specially intended for the use of archaeologists.

MM. MORGAND ET FATOUT, of Paris, offer for sale a few copies of the late M. Double's privately printed Promenade à travers deux Siècles et quatorze Salons, a copy of which the great amateur was in the habit of presenting to every visitor to his famous collection of works of art. It is illustrated with a portrait of M. Double, nine etchings by Jacquemart, four by Flameng, and one by Gaucherel, beside chromo-lithographs and wood-engravings. M. Double's collection is to be brought to the hammer on May 24.

THE same firm announce a new publication of the Society of French Bibliophiles—Vie du Comte d'Hoym, Ministre de Saxe-Pologne en France et célèbre Amateur de Livres—which will be of interest to the historian, the student of books and binding, and the collector of works of art. It contains many anecdotes on men and manners in France during the Regency; details of Hoym's private life and expenditure; and a catalogue of the Count's collection of pictures, furniture, porcelain, and bronzes, compiled by himself, with curious particulars as to their former owners, and the sales at which they were purchased. The editor quotes documents to prove that the manufactory of Meissen was greatly indebted to French artists under the patronage of Count d'Hoym. Models by Meissonnier and designs were furnished to the Meissen factory by Frenchmen (Huet, Lemaître, and Lebrun) who had relations with the Saxon Government.

A JOURNAL of Tournai, La Vérité, calls the attention of the Commission des Monuments to the repairs now being executed in the cathedral of that town under the care of the canons. It is feared that these repairs may injure the architectural beauty of the edifice.

A COLOSSAL statue of the Norwegian poet, Herik Wergeland, who was born in 1808 and died in 1845, has been erected at Christiania.

on the Eidsvoldsplatz, opposite the Storthing. The statue will be unveiled on May 17, the sixty-seventh anniversary of the date on which the first Norwegian Storthing, at Eidsvold, accepted the national constitution.

PROVINCIAL France is breaking out everywhere in exhibitions. A grand one is announced at Tours, both industrial and artistic, to be opened on May 28. Others are to be held at Bourg, Montpellier, Dunkerque, Boulogne, and Dijon.

SEVERAL French artists seem to have been behindhand with their work for the Salon. M. Diogène Maillart has been endeavouring to finish his Prometheus in time, but has been obliged to send only two small portraits, reserving Prometheus for next year; and M. Ch. Delon, whose curious study of the capture of the Dutch fleet among the ice-blocks of Texel by the Republican Hussars in 1794 has been much discussed, did not finish his work in time, and will have to wait for its exhibition in the Palais de l'Industrie until 1882.

M. GUSTAVE DORÉ applied to the committee of French artists appointed to regulate the Salon for a respite of forty-eight hours, that he might be able to send in the pictures destined for the exhibition, but to which he had been unable to give the finishing touches because of his mother's death. The committee refused to grant the favour; therefore Doré will be unrepresented in the picture galleries. It is said, however, that he will hold a proud place in the sculpture gallery.

THE STAGE.

Two interesting particulars reach us with regard to the performances of the Meiningen company which begin next month in London. Unless alterations are made in their plans at almost the last moment, the company will, in two respects, depart from their usual ways during this their London engagement. We hear, in the first place, that Friulein Haviland, one of the most distinguished of German actresses, but not a member of the Meiningen troop, will support them on the forthcoming occasion; and this, we are further informed, is accounted for by the opinion of experts that the company is not largely provided with actresses of genius. This we can easily believe. The generally neglected virtue of ensemble is the strong point of the Meiningen players, and some of those who know the Meiningen Theatre best speak of it as "a school"—a training-place whereat perfection is not reached by many players at the same time. Secondly, we hear that it is not the intention of the company to bring over their supernumeraries. This we considerably regret, as we do not see how it can be possible—even from among the German population of London—to rapidly train a sufficient body of persons to move with naturalness and significance on the stage; and, not to speak of the customs of our own theatre, the admirable Dutch actors accustomed us, last summer, to the presence of supernumeraries by no means to be confused with the traditional "Adelphi guests." Unless, therefore, the Meiningers look well after this department of the business, in which, at home, they are famous for success, there will be some disappointment felt at Drury Lane.

The revival of The Belle's Stratagem at the Lyceum and the production of the new play at Sadler's Wells are likely to be the principal events of Eastertide at the theatres, which this year take less account of Easter than they have been wont to do. The Belle's Stratagem will be brought out with that large measure of outward adornment to which visitors to the Lyceum have grown accustomed, and likewise, we are glad to add, with a very strong cast. At the St.

James's Theatre, during Easter week and for some time afterwards, The Lady of Lyons will alternate with The Money-Spinner, principally, we suppose, that playgoers may renew acquaintance with Mrs. Kendal's really powerful reading of the part of Pauline.

We have received from Messrs. Trübner Mr. James Murdoch's The Stage; or, Recollections of Actors or Acting. This is a book of very sensibly written gossip and memoranda by a veteran American actor of considerable note, and one who has indeed studied the principles of acting, and has observed and understood many different methods of interpreting parts and of producing stage effects. There is about it no small amount of sagacity and common-sense, so that it is, in a greater degree than is usual with books upon the stage, a practical book—of service to students of the profession as well as fitted to give sufficient entertainment to idle quarters of an hour. Perhaps George Henry Lewes's book upon the theatre and Mr. Dutton Cook's Book of the Play were until now almost the last of which this might truthfully be said. Most theatrical books are written only for a wide public that likes personal gossip about people with whose names and figures it may be easily familiar, but which has little care for analysing what it enjoys. Mr. Murdoch's book is not so compact a book as Mr. Lewes'. It is not so tersely written; it is not so much a work of literature. And it contains far more of that personal gossip and stage anecdote which is welcomed by the greater number. But it is still akin to it by its frequently practical character; and there are, of course, occasions on which the practical writing of a man on his own profession will be still more practical than that of an observer of it. The artist has something to say that the critic cannot say, though the critic—whose field of vision is much wider than the artist's, and who is more rarely the creature of a coterie—has much to say that the artist cannot say. For one who actually practises the art he writes about, Mr. Murdoch shows that he has wide sympathies. This, even more than his technical knowledge, gives real value to his volume, in which the reader will find very interesting and calm and generally unprejudiced record of the acting of many of Mr. Murdoch's best contemporaries—Booth and Forest and Buckstone—as well as thoughtful comment on many facts that have been handed down to us concerning the great men of the stage from Garrick onwards. We recommend Mr. Murdoch to the reader. He is not rapid; he is not a merely facile producer of just readable padding.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THE last appearances of Mme. Schumann and Herr Joachim at the two last concerts of the twenty-third season of the Saturday and Monday Popular Concerts (April 9 and 11) attracted very large and enthusiastic audiences. Mme. Schumann will surely remember with pride and pleasure the cordial manner in which she has been received this time in London; and musicians and amateurs are not likely soon to forget the earnest and intelligent interpretations of Beethoven, Bach, Schumann, &c., to which they have listened. On the arrival of the great pianist, we expressed a hope that she would give us as much as possible of Schumann's music. She has performed many of his important works; and we are sorry that she only played on Saturday the first part of the Humoreske (op. 20), one of his most original pieces, and that on Monday five numbers were omitted from the Carnaval. We, however, cordially thank Mme. Schumann for what she has done, and hope that she will soon pay another visit to this country. Her presence here is interesting for her own sake, and for that of her lamented husband. She has always been recognised as a great pianist, but it is only within the last few years that Robert Schumann's music has been properly understood and appreciated. We would also mention two very fine performances of Beethoven's quartets in E flat (op. 74) and in F (op. 133) by MM. Joachim, Rees, Straus, and Piatti. The series of concerts just concluded has been highly successful; the performances have been very good, but the actual novelties introduced have been few and unimportant.

Berlioz's dramatic symphony, Roméo et Juliette, was repeated at the fourth concert of the Philharmonic Society on Thursday, April 7. The solo vocalists were Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. F. Boyle, and Signor Ghilberti. The performance was in many respects better than the preceding one. The introduction, the scène d'amour, and the Tomb scene were well rendered; but the scherzo, the Funeral scene, and the finale still lacked colour, spirit, and finish. We cannot understand why Mr. Cusins takes the "Queen Mab" scherzo at a rate which makes it sound more like a funeral than a fairy march. Mr. Sims Reeves sang Beethoven's Liederkreis, and M. de Rémaury played the same composer's concerto in C.

We would briefly notice some other interesting events of the past week. The South London Choral Association gave their first concert at St. James's Hall last Tuesday. The singing was excellent; everything that could be desired in the way of precision, firmness of attack, and finish. Mrs. Osgood, Mme. Bolingbroke, and Mr. Joseph Maas were the vocalists. Why does not Mr. L. C. Venables, the conductor, select a programme more important, and more worthy of the able choir over which he presides?

Mme. Sinton Dolby gave the first of a series of three concerts at the Steinway Hall on Thursday afternoon, April 7. The programme was performed by pupils now studying in her vocal academy, assisted by Miss Arthur, Miss Blackwell, and Mme. Mary Cummings, former pupils. We cannot enter into detail, but may state that the singing of the various pupils testified to the ability, intelligence, and care of their teacher, Mme. Dolby. We would particularly notice an excellent rendering by all the students of Schubert's serenade for solo (Miss Blackwell) and female chorus, and Schumann's Requiem for Mignon, solos and chorus (mixed voices). The latter work was rendered with much feeling and intelligence, and afforded proof of careful and patient rehearsal.

The Sacred Harmonic Society gave a very good performance of Handel's Samson yesterday week at St. James's Hall. The principal vocalists were Miss Annie Marriott, Mme. Patey, Mr. Maas, and Mr. F. King. We would specially note Miss Marriott's rendering of "Let the bright seraphim;" Mr. Maas' "Why does the God of Israel sleep?" the duet, "Go, baffled coward," by Messrs. Maas and King; and the choruses, "Then round about the starry throne" and "To man God's universal law."

Last, but not least, we would notice the Royal Academy students' orchestral concert at St. James's Hall last Saturday evening. The first part of Handel's Semele was given for the first time in London since 1762. The performance was very good, and Mr. W. Shakespeare proved himself an able and energetic conductor. The revival of Handel's neglected masterpieces must afford pleasure to all lovers of music, and the rendering last Saturday certainly leads one to wish to hear the whole work. The programme contained many features of interest, including an overture by Mr. Percy Stranders and a clever Credo by Miss Maude V. White.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

TRÜBNER & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

FORTHCOMING.

FRANCE and the FRENCH, in the SECOND HALF of the NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By KARL HILLERBRAND. Translated from the Third German Edition. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

ON the DIAMONDS, COAL, and GOLD of INDIA.

By V. HALL, M.A., F.G.S., of the Geological Survey of India. Fcap. 8vo, cloth.

THE ESSENCE OF CHRISTIANITY.

By LUDWIG FEUERBACH. Translated from the Second German Edition by MARIAN EVANS. Second Edition. Post 8vo, cloth.

EDGAR QUINET:

His Early Life and Writings. By RICHARD HEATH. Post 8vo, cloth.

RECENT.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of MARK RUTHERFORD,

Dissenting Minister. Edited by his friend, REUBEN SHAPCOTT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

JAMES A. GARFIELD,

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: a Biographical Sketch. By Captain F. H. MASON, late of the United States Army. With a Preface by BRET HARTE. Crown 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE FAITH of ISLAM.

By the Rev. E. SELL, Fellow of the University of Madras. 8vo, cloth, 6s. 6d.

"THE MESNEVI"

(Usually known as the Mesnevi Sherif, or Holy Mesnevi) of Mevlana (our Lord), Jelali'd-din Muhamed Er-rumi. Book the First. With an Account of the Life of the Author, and Anecdotes from El Eshaki. Translated, and the Poetry Versified, in English, by J. W. REDHOUSE, M.R.A.S., &c. Post 8vo, cloth, 21s.; large paper, 42s.

THE SCIENCE of BEAUTY:

An Analytical Enquiry into the Laws of Aesthetics. By A. W. HOLMES-FORBES, M.A., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT within HISTORIC TIMES;

With Some Account of British Wild White Cattle. By J. E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Demy 8vo, with Illustrations by Wolf, Whymper, and others, cloth, 14s.; large paper, 31s. 6d.

DR. APPLETON:

his LIFE and LITERARY RELICS.

By J. H. APPLETON, M.A., and A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Queen's College, Oxford. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE ENEMIES of BOOKS.

By WILLIAM BLADES, Typograph. Crown 8vo, on laid paper, with Five Plates, parchment, 5s.

THE GULISTAN;

Or, Rose Garden of Shekh Muslihu'd-din Sadi of Shiraz. Translated for the first time into Prose and Verse, with Preface and a Life of the Author from the Atish Kadah. By E. B. EASTWICK, M.R.A.S., &c. Second Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES;

Or, Jataka Tales. From the Jatakavannanah. Translated from the Original Pali, by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 12s.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the HISTORY of the DEVELOPMENT of THE HUMAN RACE.

Lectures and Dissertations. By LAZARUS GEIGER. Translated from the German by DAVID ASHER, Ph.D. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE CLASSICAL POETRY of the JAPANESE.

By D. H. CHAMBERLAIN, Author of "Yei-go Henkaku Ichiran." Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

THE CHURCH QUARTERLY REVIEW

For APRIL, 1881.

CONTENTS.

1. ON CHRISTIAN MARRIAGE.
2. THE RISE of the HUGUENOTS.
3. THE TARGUMS on the PENTATEUCH.
4. THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPELS.
5. ON SOME FACTS of PLANT LIFE.
6. THE LETTERS of POPE GREGORY I.
7. THE DAWN of the PAPAL MONARCHY.
8. RECENT FORTUNES of the CHURCH in OXFORD.
9. GEORGE ELIOT.
10. DEAN HOOK'S LIFE.

SHORT NOTICES.

London: SPOTTISWOODE & Co., New-street-square.

STATISTICAL SOCIETY'S JOURNAL

Now ready, Part I., Vol. XLIV. MARCH, 1881. Price 5s.

CONTENTS.

- THE QUESTION of the REDUCTION of the PRESENT POSTAL TELEGRAPH TARIFF. By R. PRICE WILLIAMS, C.E.
- THE METHOD of STATISTICAL ANALYSIS. By WYNNARD HOOPER, B.A.
- LAND TENURE and the DISTRIBUTION of the POPULATION in RUSSIA. By A. VESSELOVSKY. (A Translation.)
- MISCELLANEA. Financial and Commercial History of 1880—Fires in the Metropolis during 1880—German Literature of 1879 and 1880—English Literature in 1880—Emigration and Immigration in 1880—Notes on Economical and Statistical Works—Additions to the Library Periodical Returns, &c.

London: E. STANFORD, 55, Charing-cross, S.W.

This day is published.

THE LIFE

OF

COLIN CAMPBELL, LORD CLYDE.

ILLUSTRATED BY EXTRACTS FROM HIS DIARY
AND CORRESPONDENCE.

By LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SHADWELL, C.B.

With Portrait, Map, and Plans. In Two Vols., 8vo, 36s.

EDINBURGH AND LONDON:

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

BIBLE REVISION

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Cramer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorized, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or Morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman."
—Observer.

London: S. BAISTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.
And sold by all Booksellers.

Just published, 2 vols., imp. 8vo, 1,195 pp., cloth, 36s.

A BOOK of the BEGINNINGS. By GERALD MASSEY. Containing an Attempt to Recover and Reconstitute the Lost Origins of the Myths and Mysteries, Types and Symbols, Religion and Language, with Egypt for the Mouthpiece and Africa as the Birthplace.

"Mr. Gerald Massey has given us an extraordinary book. Ten years ago he retired from the public gaze as Livingstone disappeared into the heart of Africa; and now he emerges laden with manifold information which he has collected. Stranger than 'travellers' tales' are some things which he has to tell us, yet not on that account to be summarily rejected. Only profound scholars will be competent to question or capable of fairly judging the author's main results. The axe is now laid to the root of the tree in a very different fashion from what was done by Bishop Colenso or the Author of 'Supernatural Religion.' Evolution and the comparative method are here applied, with the greatest boldness, to the study of language, typology, myths, the genesis and succession of the gods, the antiquities of the Jews, and subjects which touch us more nearly still."—Modern Review, for April.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

THE CODEX COTTONIANUS.

Just published, 4to, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

SUPPLEMENT to the FRAGMENTS of the CODEX COTTONIANUS, published by Tischendorf in his Monumenta sacra. Together with a synopsis of the Codex. Edited by the Rev. F. W. GOUGH, LL.D., M.A. Printed in facsimile type, with a facsimile in autotype.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S LINGUISTIC

CATALOGUE. European Languages, Ancient and Modern, Anglo-Saxon, Gothic, Celtic, Slavonic, Basque, Gipsy, Icelandic, Scandinavian, French, German, Dutch, Italian, Romance, and other languages. Post-free, One Stamp.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

SHEPHERD BROTHERS, Art Commission Agents and Picture Dealers, Nottingham, beg to announce that their LONDON PICTURE GALLERY is NOW OPEN, at 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W. (opposite Messrs. Christie & Manson's).—Choice Works ON VIEW by Henry Dawson, sen., T. S. Cooper, R.A., E. J. Neumann, L. J. Pott, Ernest Fardon, Marcus Stone, A.R.A., Noble, Stark, Jutsum, &c.

The Solicitors' Journal.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

VOL. XXV.—ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—Discussions of the legal events of the week.

LEADING ARTICLES.—Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

RECENT DECISIONS.—Explanatory and critical disquisitions on all the cases of importance decided in the Courts of Common Law and Equity, pointing out their relations to the previous law. A reference to the Index to the Volume just completed, under the head "Cases Discussed," will show the extent to which the decisions of the year have been treated of in the JOURNAL.

CASES OF THE WEEK.—Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.

CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS.—Special reports, furnished by a Barrister.

SOLICITORS' CASES.—Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.

PENDING LEGISLATION.—All important measures before Parliament are summarised in this department.

LEGISLATION OF THE YEAR.—Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the Session.

REVIEWS.—New legal works are elaborately noticed in this department.

NEW ORDERS, &c.—In this department are given all new Rules and Orders; in some cases before they can be obtained by the public.

GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.—A medium for the interchange of ideas between members of the profession.

COURTS.—Special reports of cases decided by the Railway Commission. Selected cases in the County Courts are also reported. All important decisions on Election Petitions are reported, and notes are given of decisions of importance in the Revising Barristers' Courts.

PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION.—A complete record of the progress of legislation during each Session.

APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.—Pains are taken to render these accurate and complete.

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.—Full Reports of the proceedings of the Law Societies.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the week, and Special Attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

The FIRST NUMBER of VOLUME XXV.
Published November 6th, 1880.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s.; when paid in advance. Single number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

 The JOURNAL and REPORTER can be ordered from any date, and a proportionate reduction will be made in the Subscription up to the end of the current volume.

Cheques and Post-Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 52, CAREY STREET, LINCOLN'S INN.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8, SWAKSPERE'S Tragedy of

ROMEO AND JULIET.
 Characters by Messrs. Wilson Barrett, John Ryder, Forbes-Robertson, Clifford Cooper, E. Price, Norman Forbes, E. B. Norman, Brian Durley, Neville Boone, J. W. Phipps, W. T. Geringer, E. Butler, &c., and G. W. Anson; Mesdames Helena Modjeska, M. A. Giffard, B. Gardner, J. Clifford, &c., and K. G. Le Khiero.
 Preceded, at 7, by TWO OLD BOYS.
 Box-office open from 11 to 5. Doors open at 6.45. Carriages at 11. No fees. Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

DURRY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

To-night, THE WORLD.

A Grand Sensational Drama, by MERRITT, PETTITT, and HARRIS, pronounced by the Times newspaper, in its review of the theatrical year, to be most undoubtedly the greatest success of the year.
 Preceded by THE STORIES.
 Messrs. Augustus Harris, William Rigold, Macklin, Gibson, Boleyn, Lily, Gresham, Kidley, and Harry Jackson; Mesdames Fanny Josephs, Fanny Brough, Maude de Vere, M'Namara, and Louisa Payne.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.

At 8, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CRUST.
 Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Mesdames Edie Liston, Holand Phillips, and Emily Thorne.
 At 10, THE WIZARD OF THE WILDERNESS.
 Mr. J. L. Toole.
 Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. ALEXANDER HENDERSON.

To-night, at 8, an entirely new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, by OFFENBACH, entitled LA BOULANGERE.
 Under the immediate direction of Mr. H. B. Farnie.
 New and elaborate scenery by Ryan and Hicks. Dresses, after designs by Grévin and Faustini, by Allas.
 Preceded, at 7.15, by a Comedy, after Meilhac and Halévy, entitled SEEING FROU-FROU.
 Mesdames Anadi, Maud Taylor, Turner, Dubois, Graham, Evelyn, and Waldman; Messrs. Celi, Temple, Ashford, Mansfield, Stepan, and Paulton.
 Greatly augmented chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Hillier. Ballet-master, Mr. Lauri.
 Box-office now open. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

To-night, at 8, HIS WIFE.

a new Play by H. A. JONES (Author of "A Clerical Error," &c.), founded on a Novel by Mark Hope.
 Entirely new scenery and appointments.
 Miss BATEMAN (Mrs. Crowe) will appear as MARGARET FIELD, the character having been written expressly for her.
 The following artists will also appear:—Messrs. E. H. Brooke, J. D. Beveridge, W. Young, E. P. Edgar, G. Lyons, G. Canning, R. Lyons, &c.; Mesdames John Carter, Lena Lindon, and Kate Patison (by kind permission of Messrs. Lane and Knollys).
 Act 1. Fairdale Hall—Evening. Act 2 and 3. Chaplain's Parlour at Tominster Gaol. Act 4. Dr. Billing's Private Asylum. Act 5. Fairdale Hall—Morning.
 Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. Farce at 7.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. DOYLE CARTE.

The FIRST NIGHT of performance of the new Aesthetic Opera by Messrs.

W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN is fixed for SATURDAY, APRIL 23. Seats for the first and following night will be allotted in reply to written applications (which can now be sent in) in the order in which they are received.
 The Box-office will not be open until Monday next, April 18.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

To-night, at 8.40, a new Comedy, in three acts, called

THE COLONEL.
 By F. C. BERNARD.
 Preceded, at 7.50, by a one-act Comedy, by SYDNEY GRUNDT, in HONOUR BOUND.
 Messrs. Coghlan, Flockton, W. Herbert, Eric Bayley, Howard Buckstone, and Edgar Bruce; Mesdames Amy Roselle, Myra Home, C. Grubame, Leigh Murray, &c.
 New scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith.
 Doors open at 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Solo Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOUGH.

To-night, at 7.45, an entirely new and original romantic spectacular Drama of sensational interest, entitled

DECEIVED.
 Written by RICHARD LEE.
 Messrs. Henry Neville, Redmond, F. Archer, J. Beauchamp, F. Charles, H. G. Sidney, Allen Thomas, Hewitt, Estcourt, Evans, Gardner, Greville, W. Avenhale, Chamberlain, Stirling, &c.; Mesdames Caroline Hill, Maud Milton, Katie Barry, Katie Neville, Huntley, and Lyons.
 Produced under the direction of Mr. Harry Jackson.
 New and realistic scenery by Charles Brooke. New overture and incidental music by Michael Connelly. New military costumes direct from the Army Contractors, Paris. The horses supplied by Mr. George Sanger.
 Preceded, at 7, by the Farce, THE INTRIGUE.
 Doors open at 6.30. Box-office open daily.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATR LAWLER.

This Theatre will re-open on EASTER MONDAY with a new and attractive programme.
 Miss Kate Lawler and Mr. Arthur Williams will appear in STAGE STRUCK on Easter Monday.
 Box-office open from 11 to 6

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA "If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa." Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.
EXTRACT "It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."
 W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.
 "Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."
 CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.
 Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
 A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

TO PROPRIETORS OF NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, Brief News & Opinion, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPOSITE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION OF PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—71 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping accounts.
 The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880.

FRANCIS KAVENSCROFT, Manager.

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS!
ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds
 The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNARD, Chairman.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £230,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS.

Bonuses allowed to Insurers after Five Years.

£1,630,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, and West end Office, 8, Grand Hotel Buildings, Charing-cross, or 64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(Twenty doors west of Mudie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Paleogeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Palatings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.
 AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS OF PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMPTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 29½ in. by 21½. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

COME UNTO THESE YELLOW SANDS," after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

PICTURES CLEANED, RESTORED, FRAMED.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Deane, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
 Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.
 Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.
 Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.
 Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
 The original, best, and most liberal.
 Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.
 Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
 F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious ware houses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £6 6s. to 50 guineas.
 Drawing-room Suites, from 49 9s. to 45 guineas.
 Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.
 And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

BRAND & CO'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
 MAYFAIR, W.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. It gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drooping feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s. 9d. and 1s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache
 Gout, and Indigestion.

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies,
 Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.

BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY

MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.
 ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS
 Are free from SMELL
 Are manufactured
 Without Phosphorus
 Are perfectly harmless
 To the Operatives employed
 Are very DAMP PROOF

LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

NEW BOOKS

PUBLISHED AND PREPARING BY

EDWARD STANFORD.

Crown 8vo, with Seventeen Illustrations and Maps, cloth, 6s.

THE TOWN, COLLEGE, and NEIGHBOURHOOD of MARLBOROUGH.

By F. EDWARD HULME, F.L.S., F.S.A.,

Author of "Familiar Wild Flowers," "Art Teaching," "The Principles of Ornamental Art," "Mathematical Instruments, and How to Use Them," &c.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Map and Three Plans, 2s.

TOURIST'S GUIDE through LONDON:

COMPRISING

Historical Summary and Notices of the Principal Objects of Interest which may be Visited during a Few Days' Residence; with Lists of the Principal Hotels, Theatres, Railway Stations, Churches, Exhibitions, and other Notes likely to be useful to the Sightseer.

By the Rev. W. J. LOFTIE, B.A., F.S.A.,

Author of "Round About London," "In and Out of London," &c.

The above forms one of STANFORD'S TWO-SHILLING SERIES of TOURIST'S GUIDES, which includes ROUND ABOUT LONDON, the CHANNEL ISLANDS, CORNWALL, DERBYSHIRE, NORTH DEVON, SOUTH DEVON, ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT, KENT, NORFOLK, SURREY, SUSSEX, YORKSHIRE NORTH and EAST RIDINGS, and YORKSHIRE WEST RIDING.

SECOND EDITION, large post 8vo, cloth, with Illustrations and Twenty-one Maps, 12s.

PHYSICAL, HISTORICAL, POLITICAL, and DESCRIPTIVE GEOGRAPHY.

By KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.G.S.,

Editor of the "Africa" Volume in "Stanford's Compendium of Geography and Travel;" late Leader of the Royal Geographical Society's East African Expedition.

GEOGRAPHICAL READERS FOR ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.

By CHARLOTTE M. MASON,

Authoress of "The Forty Shires: their History, Scenery, Arts, and Legends." Post 8vo, cloth, illustrated with numerous Maps and Woodcuts.

Book I. for Standard II.

ELEMENTARY GEOGRAPHY. Illustrated, 124 pages, price 1s.

Very simple Reading Lessons upon the lines laid down by the Code of 1879. An effort is made to treat the subject with the sort of sympathetic interest and freshness which should attract children to a new study.

[Ready.]

Book II. for Standard III.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE and the GREAT DIVISIONS of the GLOBE. With numerous Pictorial Illustrations.

[Preparing.]

Book III. for Standard IV.

THE COUNTIES of ENGLAND. Illustrated by Maps on a Uniform Scale. 315 pp., price 2s. 3d.

A Notice of the General Aspect of each County; Interesting Reading Lessons on the Aspect, Industries, and History of the several Counties.

[Nearly ready.]

Book IV. for Standard V.

EUROPE. [Preparing.]

Book V. for Standard VI.

ASIA, AFRICA, AMERICA, and AUSTRALASIA.

[Preparing.]

Each book affords a complete and connected view of the subjects for each year's work. The matter is of an interesting character, conveyed in an easy, readable style. The language is simple, with a view to promote fluent reading. A very special feature of the work is that the letterpress is completely illustrated by clear Maps. Each Map is accompanied with a carefully prepared map exercise, to guide the children in classifying facts, and in making or themselves the lists of names usually learned from text-books. It is felt that, without this kind of systematic use of maps, the facts of Geography cannot be satisfactorily learned from Reading Books.

Crown 8vo, with Twelve Coloured Diagrams.

BALANCE-SHEET of the WORLD for TEN YEARS, 1870-1880.

By MICHAEL G. MULHALL, F.S.S.,

Author of "The Progress of the World," "Republics of the River Plate," &c., &c., &c.

[Nearly ready.]

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Map and Plan of Winchester Cathedral, 2s.

TOURIST'S GUIDE to HAMPSHIRE.

By G. PHILLIPS BEVAN, F.G.S.

Being one of Stanford's Two-Shilling Series of Tourist's Guides.

[Nearly ready.]

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Map and Plan of Wells Cathedral, 2s.

TOURIST'S GUIDE to SOMERSETSHIRE.

By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S., &c.

Being one of Stanford's Two-Shilling Series of Tourist's Guides.

[Nearly ready.]

Demy 8vo, cloth.

THE WATER SUPPLY of ENGLAND and WALES:

Its Geology, Underground Circulation, Surface Distribution, and Statistics.

By CHARLES F. DE RANCE, F.G.S.,

Assoc. Inst. C. E.; of H.M.'s Geological Survey of England and Wales.

[Preparing.]

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

THE BRONZE AGE OF GREAT BRITAIN.

Now ready, in 8vo, with 540 Illustrations engraved on Wood, price 25s., cloth.

THE BRONZE IMPLEMENTS, ARMS, AND ORNAMENTS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

By JOHN EVANS, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., &c.,

Author of "The Ancient Stone Implements, Weapons, and Ornaments of Great Britain."

LONDON: LONGMANS & CO.

PROF. ROBERTSON SMITH.

Just ready, in crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE OLD TESTAMENT in the JEWISH CHURCH.

By W. ROBERTSON SMITH, M.A.,

Professor of Hebrew and Exegesis of the Old Testament, Free Church College, Aberdeen.

EDINBURGH: ADAM & CHARLES BLACK.

Just published, 2 vols., 8vo, 32s. 6d., with Ten Portraits.

FOREIGN SECRETARIES of the NINETEENTH CENTURY, to 1834.

By PERCY M. THORNTON.

LONDON: WM. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE.

Just published, crown 8vo, with Portrait, 6s.

WILLIAM HERSCHEL: his Life and Works.

By EDWARD S. HOLDEN,

United States Naval Observatory, Washington.

LONDON: WM. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE.

Just published, Third and Enlarged Edition, 8vo, 14s.

THE CATHOLIC DOCTRINE of the ATONEMENT:

An Historical Review.

WITH an INTRODUCTION on the PRINCIPLE of THEOLOGICAL DEVELOPMENTS.

By HENRY NUTCOMBE OXENHAM, M.A.,

Late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford.

LONDON: WM. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE.

Just published, with numerous Illustrations and Maps, 528 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, red edges, 5s.

OUTLINES OF THE WORLD'S HISTORY,

ANCIENT, MEDIAEVAL, AND MODERN,

With Special Relation to the History of Civilisation and the Progress of Mankind.

ADAPTED FOR SCHOOLS AND PRIVATE STUDENTS.

By WILLIAM SWINTON,

Author of "Studies in English Literature," "A Complete Course of Geography," "History of the United States," &c.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, 49 AND 50, OLD BAILEY.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 468.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
DR. HOLUR'S SEVEN YEARS IN SOUTH AFRICA, by F. R. STATHAM	291
TWO BOOKS ON CARLYLE, by E. D. A. MORSHEAD	292
BRANDAM'S SELECTED PLAYS OF SHAKESPEARE, by PROF. E. DOWDEN	293
OVERTON'S LIFE OF WILLIAM LAW, by E. PEACOCK	293
MRS. MAGNUS' ABOUT THE JEWS, by Prof. J. P. MARAFFY	295
MADAME JAUBERT'S SOUVENIRS, by Miss SIMCOX	295
CURRENT LITERATURE	296
NOTES AND NEWS	297
OBITUARY: THE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD, by GEO. SAINTSBURY, &c.	299
ORIGINAL VERSE: "TO A GREAT AND GOOD PHYSICIAN"	300
THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY, by JAS. S. COTTON	300
A LITTLE-KNOWN BYRON LETTER	300
UNPUBLISHED VERSES OF THOREAU	301
SELECTED BOOKS	301
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Status of a Pope after Election, by the Rev. E. Hatch; Mr. Fyffe's "History of Modern Europe," by G. Strachey; Australian and Greek Mysteries, by A. Lang	301-2
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	302
THE "CHALLENGER" REPORT, II., by Prof. P. MARTIN DUNCAN	302
NOTES OF TRAVEL	305
SCIENCE NOTES	305
PHILOLOGY NOTES	305
DURER'S PORTRAIT OF HIMSELF, by Mrs. C. HEATON	306
ART NOTES FROM FLORENCE, by C. HEATH WILSON	306
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	307
THE STAGE	308
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	308

THE COUNCIL OF FIRTH COLLEGE, SHEFFIELD.

Intend to Appoint a PRINCIPAL who shall also be Professor either in the Literary or in the Mechanical Department of the College.
These Departments will comprehend respectively the following Subjects:—
1. Classics, History, Literature, Political Economy, Moral Science.
2. Mathematics, Mechanics, Engineering, Geology, Physics.
Applicants are requested to state in which of these Departments they would be prepared to act as Professor, and which of the Subjects in that Department they would be prepared to undertake.
The Salary of the said Principal will be £500 per annum, with Half the Fees of his own Classes.
The Council will only make the appointment in event of suitable candidates presenting themselves.
Candidates are requested to give full particulars concerning age, experience, and any Academic distinctions they may have gained, together with any other information likely to affect the decision of the Council. The names of three gentlemen to whom references may be made should be given, but no testimonials need be sent unless they are asked for.
Applications to be sent on or before the 25TH day of APRIL next, to ESSOR LURRY, Registrar.

Firth College, Sheffield, March 24, 1881.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 3rd of MAY.
F. W. MADDEX, M.R.A.S., Secretary.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, Ely.

place, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin.—Founded 1852, for preparation of Candidates for Competitive Examinations; over 1,000 Pupils have passed direct from the Academy. The special Classes for R.I. CONSTABULARY Cadetships have carried off 80 per cent. of the Cadetships offered for competition last year: 4 First Places, four times. Special Work for Woolwich and Sandhurst; over 300 have passed Army Exams, including 2nd, 3rd, 6th, 6th, 7th, at recent Competitions.—Apply to W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.B., F.O.S., F.R.G.S., Director and Sole Proprietor.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—KENSINGTON

HOUSE, Culverley Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STEERING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200 Guineas.

HEATH BROW SCHOOL.—Boys prepared for the Public Schools. Girls for the Higher Schools and Colleges. Classics, FRED. STOCK, D.Lit., M.A. Lond.; Mathematics, JOHN BRIDGE, M.A. Lond. Kindergarten for Infants. The SUMMER TERM begins MAY 4TH.—Prospectus on application to Mrs. CASE, Heath Brow, Hampstead, London.

SAINT PAUL'S SCHOOLS.—About

EIGHT SCHOLARSHIPS will be AWARDED Next Term.—For information, address CLERK to GOVERNORS, Mercers' Hall, E.C.

ST. ANDREW'S HALL, PLYMOUTH.

ART and INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION, 1881.
£200 in PRIZES.
OPENING MONDAY, MAY 23RD.
SPECIAL PRIZES.
£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best Picture painted by any Artist residing in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, or Dorset, each Competitor being allowed to show three Pictures. 2nd Prize, SILVER MEDAL; 3rd, BRONZE.
£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best Picture exhibited. Open to all England.
£20 GOLD MEDAL for the best exhibit in the Exhibition.
N.B.—Pictures will not be eligible for this competition.
Winners of these Gold Medals will be paid in Money if preferred.
100 Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals will be given in the following Classes:—
Class 1.—Professional Workmanship.
Class 2.—Amateur Productions, made by Exhibitors who follow some other trade than that to which their articles belong.
Class 3.—Inventions and Novel Contrivances. To include both Amateur and Professional Workmanship.
Class 4.—Models, Architectural, Mechanical, Marine, and Ornamental.
Class 5.—Fine-Arts, including Oil and Water-Colour Paintings. Open to all England.
Class 6.—Oil and Water-Colour Paintings and Drawings, open to Students of any recognised School of Art or Private School.
Class 7.—Oil or Water-Colour Paintings, open to residents in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, or Dorset. Each competitor will be allowed to exhibit three pictures.
Class 8.—Carving and Fret Work. Two Classes—Amateur & Professional.
Class 9.—Sculpture.
Class 10.—Preserved Natural Objects.
Class 11.—Ladies' Work of all kinds.
Class 12.—Musical Instruments.
Class 13.—Furniture.
Class 14.—Painters' Graining of Wood.
Class 15.—Photography.
Class 16.—Bicycles, Tricycles, and Sewing Machines.
Class 17.—China Painting.
Class 18.—Electrical Inventions.
Class 19.—Pen and Ink and Crayons by Amateurs.
Class 20.—Pottery.
Class 21.—Miscellaneous. This will include all objects not properly belonging to any of the other Classes.
Further particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, Mr. THOS. MARTIN, Plymouth.

THE SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

The NINETY-FIFTH EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, 5, PALL MALL EAST, from 10 till 6. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d.
ALFRED O. FRIPP, Secretary.

SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.—

FIFTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION NOW OPEN at the SUFFOLK STREET GALLERIES, PALL MALL EAST, from 9 to 6 daily. Admission, 1s.
THOMAS ROBERTS, Secretary.

ROYAL MANCHESTER INSTITUTION.

SIXTY-FIRST EXHIBITION OF MODERN WORKS OF ART.
This EXHIBITION will be OPENED early in the month of SEPTEMBER NEXT, and will close about Christmas. Works should be delivered not later than AUGUST 31ST.
Artists' Circulars, with Regulations, &c., may be obtained on application to EDWIN W. MARSHALL, Assistant-Secretary, 38, Barton-arcade, Manchester.

ON EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS and

DRAWINGS by the American Artist, the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art."—Gallery, 14, Grafton-street, Old Bond-street.

DUTCH WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS and PAINTINGS.

An Interesting EXHIBITION, by the MODERN DUTCH ARTISTS, NOW ON VIEW, at GOULPI & CO'S GALLERIES, 25, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND. Admission, including Catalogue, 1s.

NOW on EXHIBITION.—PAINTINGS of NIAGARA FALLS, by the late WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT, Author of "Talks about Art," also other Paintings and Charcoal Drawings by the Same Artist.—GALLERY, 14, GRAFTON STREET, OLD BOND STREET.

HANOVER GALLERY, 47, New Bond

Street.—THE BESTS of LORD BEACONSFIELD, MR. GLADSTONE, and LORD HARTINGTON, executed by SAUL for the Carlton and Devonshire Clubs, are NOW ON EXHIBITION for a short time. Admission One Shilling.

HANOVER GALLERY, 47, New Bond-street.—FIRST EXHIBITION OF ORIGINAL ETCHINGS by the Society of Painter-Etchers. NOW OPEN daily, 10 to 6. Admission, 1s.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

SCHOOL.—THE NEXT TERM will commence on MAY 3RD.—Prospectus may be obtained from the Office, Gower-street, W.C.
TALFORD ELY, M.A., Secretary.

TO CONNOISSEURS AND COLLECTORS.

A FINE COLLECTION OF OLD-ENGLISH

CARVED AND INLAID OAK FURNITURE, including several historical pieces, with dates, names, coats of arms, mottoes, &c., &c., will be SOLD by AUCTION, by Messrs. TOWELL & POWELL, 8, UNION STREET, BATH, on THURSDAY, 28TH APRIL, 1881.
Catalogues will shortly be ready.

BOROUGH of CARDIFF.

FINE-ART AND INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.

The above EXHIBITION will be held in the DRILL HALL, CARDIFF, by permission of the Marquess of Bute, during the months of AUGUST and SEPTEMBER NEXT.

The profit accruing therefrom will be devoted to the artistic furnishing and decoration of the new Free Library, Museum, and Schools for Science and Art.

Forms of application for Artists and other Exhibitors may be obtained of the Honorary Secretaries.

REES JONES, Mayor,
J. L. WHEATLEY, Town Clerk, } Hon. Secs.
E. SEWARD, A.L.B.A.,
Town Hall, Cardiff, 13th April, 1881.

THE MASON SCIENCE COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL PROFESSORS.

Applications for the ADDITIONAL CHAIRS of Physiology, Geology and Mineralogy, Civil and Mechanical Engineering, Latin and Greek, English Language and Literature, and LECTURES in the French and German Languages (see former advertisements) must be sent in by the 30TH INSTANT, addressed to Mr. G. H. MORLEY, Secretary, The Mason Science College, Birmingham.

ARTISTS' GENERAL BENEVOLENT

INSTITUTION, for the Relief of Distressed Artists, their Widows and Orphans.

The ANNIVERSARY DINNER will take place in WILLIS'S ROOMS, on SATURDAY, MAY 14TH, at 6 o'clock.

The Right Hon. the EARL of ROSEBURY in the Chair.

Donations will be received and thankfully acknowledged by—

JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, R.A., Honorary Secretary.
PHILIP CHARLES HARDWICK, Treasurer.
F. LAMBE PRICE, Secretary, 21, Old Bond-street, W.
Dinner Tickets, including Wines, One Guinea.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall-mall.—The

TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF PICTURES by Artists of the Continental Schools (including Portraits of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prince Bismarck, Count Moltke, Dr. Dollinger, and other works by Franz Lenbach) is NOW OPEN. Admission 1s.

"SCOTLAND FOR EVER!!"—Grand

New Picture, "CHARGE of the 'GREYS' at WATERLOO," by Mrs. BUTLER, painter of the "Roll Call." ON VIEW at the EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, from 10 A.M. till 6 P.M. Admission One Shilling.
A PHOTOGRAPHURE will shortly be published by Messrs. HILDESHEIMER & Co., of London, Manchester, and New York.

ROSA BONHEUR'S celebrated PIC-

TURES "ON THE ALERT" and "A FORAGING PARTY," which gained for the Artist the Cross of the Order of Leopold of Belgium at the Antwerp Academy, 1879; also the Complete Engraved Works of ROSA BONHEUR, including the well-known "HORSE FAIR."—NOW ON EXHIBITION at L. H. LEFEVRE'S GALLERY, 1A, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W. Admission One Shilling. 10 to 5.

NEWSPAPERS and PERIODICALS

PRINTED by FAST (ROTARY) MACHINERY.—MANAGER, Fleet Printing Works, 14, Whitefriars-street, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS.

All the best New Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction are in circulation at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, and may be had without delay by all Subscribers of One Guinea per Annum. See MUDIE'S LIBRARY CIRCULAR. New Edition now ready, postage free.

CHEAP BOOKS.

More than One Thousand Popular Books of the Past and Present Seasons are now on Sale at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY. See MUDIE'S CLEARANCE CATALOGUE. New Edition now ready, postage free.

THE LONDON BOOK SOCIETY.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY Messengers call to deliver Books at the Residences of Subscribers in Every Part of London and the Immediate Neighbourhood, on a plan which has given general satisfaction for many years.

Several Thousand Families in London and the Suburbs already subscribe to this Department of the Library, and obtain a Constant Succession of the Best New Books on or soon after the day of publication.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED),

NEW OXFORD STREET.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

THE SACRED BOOKS of the EAST.

Translated by various Oriental Scholars, and Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER.

THE QUR'ÂN. Translated by Prof. E. H.

PALMER. Vols. VI. and IX. Demy 8vo, cloth, 41 1s.

Vol. X., Part I.—The DHAMMAPADA, translated from the Pâli by F. MAX MÜLLER; Part II.—The SUTTA NIPÂTA, translated from the Pâli by V. FAUSBÖLL; being Canonical Books of the Buddhists. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

Vol. XI., Part I.—BUDDHIST SUTTAS.

Translated from the Pâli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. Demy 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

THE LITURGY and RITUAL of the CELTIC CHURCH. With Facsimile of the Stowe Missal. By P. E. WARREN, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

THE BOOKS of JOB, PSALMS,

PROVERBS, ECCLESIASTES, and the SONG of SOLOMON, according to the Wycliffite Version made by NICHOLAS DE HEREFORD about A.D. 1381, and Revised by JOHN PURVEY about A.D. 1388. Formerly Edited by Rev. JOSHUA FORSHALL, F.R.S., &c., late Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, and Sir FREDERIC MADDEN, F.R.S., &c., Keeper of the MSS. in the British Museum, and now Reprinted. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A TREATISE on the USE of the TENSES in HEBREW, and some other SYNTACTICAL QUESTIONS. By S. R. DRIVER, M.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE ROMAN POETS of the RE-

PUBLIC. By W. V. SELLAR, M.A., LL.D.; Professor of Humanity in the University of Edinburgh, and formerly Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

CICERO DE ORATORE. With

Introduction and Notes by ARGUSTUS S. WILKINS, M.A., Owens College, Manchester, Professor of Latin in the Victoria University. Book II. Demy 8vo, cloth, 5s.

SOPHOCLES. Edited, with English

Notes and Introductions, by LEWIS CAMPBELL, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Greek in the University of St. Andrews. In 2 vols. Vol. II.—AJAX, ELECTRA, TRACHINIAE, PHILOCTETES, FRAGMENTS. 8vo, price 16s. [In a few days.]

A CYCLE of CELESTIAL OBJECTS

OBSERVED, REDUCED, and DISCUSSED by Admiral Wm. H. F. SMITH, R.N., K.S.F., D.C.L. Revised, Condensed, and greatly Enlarged by GEORGE F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S., Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. 8vo, price 21s. [In a few days.]

LOCI E LIBRO VERITATUM:

Passages selected from Gascoigne's Theological Dictionary, illustrating the Condition of Church and State, 1403–1458, with an Introduction by JAS. E. THOROLD ROGERS, M.P. 4to, price 10s. 6d. [In a few days.]

London: HENRY FROWDE,

Oxford University Press Warehouse, 7, Paternoster-row.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for MAY.

The Finest Number yet Issued in England.

The following will be prominent features:—

GEORGE ELIOT: a Paper of Biography and Personal Reminiscence.

By C. KEGAN PAUL. With Fine Portrait and many other Illustrations.

THOMAS CARLYLE: a Paper of the Personal Reminiscences of Eighteen Years. By M. D. CONWAY. Including many Conversations of Carlyle. With Portraits and Views.

An exquisite Frontispiece by E. A. ABBEY, one of the finest specimens of wood-engraving yet produced in America.

Illustrated Papers are those on ATHENS, with Portraits of KING GEORGE and QUEEN OLGA of Greece, and many Views; one of a series on MUSIC and MUSICIANS in the chief musical centres, with Portraits of SULLIVAN, GERSTER, CAMPANINI, JOSEFFY, WILHELM, and other celebrities; one on the new DECORATIVE POTTERY of Cincinnati, with Twenty Illustrations: &c.

A Paper by the eminent American Constitutionalist GEO. TICKNOR CURTIS, on "THE SPEAKER'S RULING in the HOUSE OF COMMONS."

The continuations of Mr. THOMAS HARDY'S striking story, "A LAODICEAN," with Illustration by GEORGE DU MAURIER, and of the American novel, "ANNE," &c., &c.

ASK TO SEE IT AT YOUR BOOKSELLER'S.

The MAY Number completes the first English Volume. Price, bound, 8s. 6d.; cases for binding, 2s.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON, Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

FOUR BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

"A unique phenomenon, both in the annals of publishing and of African exploration."—Times.

MAJOR SERPA PINTO'S HOW I CROSSED AFRICA; from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean, through Unknown Countries; Discovery of the Great Zambesi Affluents, &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Twenty Full-page and 118 Half-page and smaller Illustrations, Thirteen small Maps and One large one, cloth extra, 42s. [Ready this day.]

"Sufficient to make the expedition one of the most notable on record, to kill off by far the greater number of the Major's companions, and to inspire him, as he confesses, with a greater awe of the Dark Continent than he had thought it possible he should ever entertain."—Daily Telegraph.

"Bravely he pressed onwards, and successfully accomplished the work he undertook. The narrative is full of interest and excitement, and is sure to have many readers."—Times.

DR. EMIL HOLUB'S SEVEN YEARS in SOUTH AFRICA: Travels,

Researches, and Floating Adventures (1872 to 1879). 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Two Hundred Illustrations and Map, cloth extra, 42s. [Ready this day.]

"Nothing escapes his watchful eye, and even when in the most critical circumstances in danger of life from lions, or Zambesi crocodiles, or from furious natives, the habits of the animals and the appearance and mode of dress of the people seemed to claim more of his attention than the immediate danger to himself. Indeed, the only other work with which we can think of comparing it is Mr. Darwin's 'Classical Voyage of the Beagle.'"—Times.

"It is, however, as an observer, and chiefly as a naturalist, that he has done work which is of permanent value. The book is full of adventure; but it is full also of every kind of information, and gives us a picture of the districts through which he passed which, if a little wanting in topographical clearness, brings out most forcibly all the physical characteristics of the country, the habits of the people, and their natural surroundings. There is at least the germ of a negro civilisation in many of the countries which he near the European settlements."—Daily News.

In the press, to be published immediately.

TO the CENTRAL AFRICAN LAKES and BACK: the Narrative of the Royal Geographical Society's East African Expedition, 1878–80. By JOSEPH THOMSON, F.R.G.S. 2 vols., crown 8vo, with Portrait and brief Memoir of the late Keith Johnston, and with Portrait of the Author and Two Maps, cloth. [Will be ready shortly.]

In the press, to be published early in May.

THE HEAD HUNTERS of BORNEO; up the Mahakkam and down the Barito. By CARL BOCK. Super-royal 8vo, with many Full-page Coloured Plates and Woodcuts from the Author's own Drawings. Among other matters the book describes and gives drawings of the fair-skinned race inhabiting the forests of the island, of whom the women at least have never previously been seen by any European traveller.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON, 188, FLEET STREET, E.C.

SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1881.

No. 468, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Seven Years in South Africa; Travels, Researches, and Hunting Adventures between the Diamond Fields and the Zambesi (1872-79). By Dr. Emil Holub. Translated by Ellen E. Frewer. In 2 vols., with Illustrations and a Map. (Sampson Low.)

PEOPLE who consult maps of South Africa—and they have been many during the last few months—will have noticed, lying between the great Kalihari desert and the western frontiers of the Transvaal, a tract of country evidently, from the names laid down upon it, inhabited by native tribes. Possessing roughly the shape of a wedge, the apex of which is fixed somewhere about the capital of the Diamond Fields, this tract of country gradually widens towards the northward, until it is cut off from what may be called Central Africa proper by the channel of the Zambesi. This territory, which formed the field of Livingstone's earlier labours and explorations, plays a part in the South African problem of great and increasing importance. For, while on the Atlantic coast the course of the great Orange River supplies a well-marked boundary between country which is colonisable and country which is not; and while, on the eastern coast, the twofold obstacle of Portuguese settlement and an unhealthy climate stands in the way of the spread of British influence, there can be little doubt that the route leading due northwards from the Diamond Fields, through the centre of the wedge of territory described, is destined before long to become a great highway for British commerce towards the centre of what Dr. Holub excuseably calls "the continent of the future." Into and through this territory the British trader and hunter largely penetrate already, and year by year they will penetrate into it more and more. It is from this country that all the ivory and a large part of the ostrich feathers that are shipped from South African ports proceed; the return trade in the shape of arms, gunpowder, manufactured goods, and agricultural implements already reaching dimensions which, could they be summed up in one total, would probably astonish even those who are engaged in it.

It has been Dr. Holub's endeavour, during the course of seven years, to make himself at home in this important region, and the results of his experiences are contained in the two volumes now before us. It is not always the man who travels who can best interest the public in what he has seen. Dr. Holub, it may be said at once, is as graphic in description as he is accurate in observation. Graphic, that is, in the better sense; for another style of writing passes by the name of graphic which is two-thirds of it mere rhetorical exaggeration. There is a photographic straightforwardness about his sketches of events, places, and people that at once guarantees their reliability. If, in expressing opinions, he occasionally seems to go wide of the mark, it is because he is speaking only from second-hand. There is, however, little of this in his pages. What the public have to thank Dr. Holub and his translator for (besides the practical information contained in his work) is a collection of sketches of wild South African life, in all its phases, which has certainly not been surpassed, and has probably not been equalled. This is no doubt largely owing to the fact that Dr. Holub approached his subject purely as an observer, and without prejudice of any kind. He was not sent out by a learned society to find a river, nor by a religious society to convert a nation. So far from being sent by anyone, indeed, it would be difficult to imagine a series of exploring expeditions undertaken with so little encouragement or on such slender resources. An enthusiast on his own account, Dr. Holub is not ashamed to confess that, on going out to the Cape by steamer in 1872—those were the old bad times when a voyage of thirty-six days was regarded as rather speedy than otherwise—he was too poor to afford himself the luxury of a first-class passage. It was his hope to be able to provide means for his excursions into the interior by practising medicine; and it speaks well for his scientific enthusiasm that, though nearly at the end of his resources, he resisted the temptation to accept a practice worth £600 a-year which was offered him a fortnight after he landed at Port Elizabeth. Resolving to push on to the Diamond Fields, he arrived there with only a few shillings in his pocket, under circumstances the reverse of cheerful.

"The first day on which I set my eyes upon the Diamond Fields, I must confess, will ever be engraven on my memory. As our vehicle, drawn by four horses, made its rapid descent from the heights near Scholze's Farm, and when my companion, pointing me to the bare plains just ahead, told me that there lay my future home, my heart sank within me. A dull, dense fog was all I could distinguish. A bitter wind rushing from the hills, and howling around us in the exposure of our open waggon, seemed to mock at the protection of our outside coats, and resolved to make us know how ungenial the temperature of winter in South Africa could be; and the gray clouds that obscured the sky shadowed the entire landscape with an aspect of the deepest melancholy."

Compelled to choose between practising medicine and turning diamond-digger, Dr. Holub accepted the former alternative; and in three months, by the exercise of the strictest economy, he was able to pay off sundry obligations and lay the basis of his first expedition into the interior. Starting in February 1873, the route taken lay nearly due northward through the country occupied by the Batlapins, following the course of the Hart's River, which forms the boundary between the Bloemhoff district (the most south-westerly portion of the Transvaal) and the independent native tribes to the westward. Reaching Potchefstroom, which in 1873 had a population of upwards of four thousand, Dr. Holub is able to contribute the following charming sketch to the existing information with regard to a place so recently the centre of attention in this country:—

"Although the town has no pretensions to architectural beauty, yet the places of business are thoroughly commodious, and the private residences are often quite elegant villas. The great charm, however, of them all, even of the most modest, lies in the well-kept orchards and gardens with which they are surrounded, the hedges being gay with myriads of roses, with big bushes, and with the bright leaves and fiery blossoms of the pomegranate, which turn to their large and luscious fruit. The whole atmosphere seems pervaded with colour and fragrance; and for many consecutive months of the year a tempting supply of fruit hangs in the hedgerows, so that the owner may gather in their produce without depriving his plot of ground of its ordinary aspect of a gay and enjoyable flower-garden.

"Overhanging the brooks that ripple in gutters along the streets are fine weeping willows, that afford a refreshing shade from the glowing sunbeams; their light-green leaves and slim, drooping boughs stand out in elegant contrast alike to the compact growth of the fruit trees, to the dark foliage of the eucalyptus, to the pointed shoots of the arbor vitae, and to the funereal hue of the cypresses."

Interesting, however, as are these reminiscences at the moment, it is in the country to the west and north of the Transvaal that Dr. Holub's work lay. This was not touched during the first expedition already alluded to; and it was not till November 3, 1873, that Dr. Holub found himself in a position to start on a more extended journey. Arriving at Moshaneng, the residence of the Barolong chief Montsua, Dr. Holub first came upon traces of Dr. Livingstone, which were presently more accentuated by his coming into contact with Sechele, the chief so frequently referred to in Livingstone's Missionary Travels. His account of Sechele, who lives in European style and possesses a silver tea service, is not encouraging. "Sechele," he says, "is a thorough intriguer, double-faced, and evidently a firm believer in the maxim that the end justifies the means." Possibly the incident recounted below had something to do with this impression.

"After acknowledging our salutations, Sechele turned to Mr. Price (the missionary) and begged him to tell me that my appearance pleased him more than that of any white man he had ever seen. Mr. Price had hardly finished interpreting what had been said, when, in turning towards the king in astonishment at receiving so flattering a compliment from a man whom I had never met before, I caught him winking his right eye at a subordinate chief and his son with an expression that completely belied his words. The facility with which, on perceiving my surprise, he resumed his habitual smirk, proved that he had no inconsiderable amount of self-possession."

A far more interesting character is that of Khame, the present king of the Eastern Baman-gwatos, who succeeded his father, Sekhomo, during the interval that elapsed between Dr. Holub's second and third expeditions. Khame presents the singular spectacle of the son of an utterly savage and worthless father suddenly appearing in the light of a social reformer whom Europeans might not object to imitate. To his efforts to prevent the importation of intoxicating liquors into his country Dr. Holub refers, as well as to his still more striking act in compelling traders who imported and clandestinely sold them to quit his capital. He does not, however, mention the fact that, so particular are Khame's subjects at Shoshong with regard to their attire, that a specially fine make of brown corduroy is imported through Natal for their market.

As for adventures in the field, Dr. Holub's book teems with them from one end to the other. Not the least remarkable of his escapes occurred while on his second expedition. The party had left Hebron, in the Diamond Fields territory, and were making their way towards Gasibone's, a chief who has his location on the south-western borders of the Transvaal. Not a drop of rain had fallen in the country for months. The oxen had not tasted water for thirty hours, and the only hope was that they might pick up wheel-tracks which would lead to some native huts, and consequently to water. A cloud had been noticed at some distance off, and every one of the party, guides included, believed it to be a flight of locusts. What was their horror on finding out that it was the smoke from a grass fire, and that the whole plains were in a blaze. The conflagration was still five miles off, but it was exactly across their path.

"The first among us to regain composure was our temporary guide, who pointed out that the waggon-tracks of which he had spoken were hardly twenty yards ahead—at least, we could reach them. We looked to the right, we looked to the left; on the right the ground was level, but it only led to a chain of hills, the base of which was already licked by the flames; on the left was a hollow, which was just beginning to catch fire, and beyond us a little hillock some forty feet high. Our perplexities seemed only to increase. The oxen were too weary to allow us for one moment to think of retreating—they could not hold out for a mile—and yet something must be done. The fire was manifestly advancing in our very face. We discussed the possibility of setting fire to the brushwood close in front of us, and thus, as it were, forestalling the flames; but the scheme was not to be thought of. The waggon, which contained some thousands of cartridges, 300 pounds of gunpowder, besides a quantity of spirits, was already so heated by the sun that we could scarcely lay our hands upon it; a single spark of fire would in an instant involve it in complete destruction, and the risk was too great."

The only thing was to make for the hillock, which was reached just in the nick of time to save the whole party from destruction. Even then the dangers of the situation were not over, for the travellers had a long tramp over the burnt ground, without a drop of water, before reaching any inhabited spot. It is of such incidents as these that South African travel is largely composed.

In conclusion, and with regret that regard for the limits of space prevents us from going more at length into the author's adventures, we must give Dr. Holub's work the highest praise, both for its readableness and its accuracy. The illustrations, too, with which it abounds are in every respect admirable. It is a book which recommends itself, and cannot fail to add largely to the general stock of knowledge on South African subjects.

F. R. STATHAM.

TWO BOOKS ON CARLYLE.

Thomas Carlyle. By H. J. Nicoll. (Edinburgh: Macniven & Wallace.)

Thomas Carlyle: the Man and his Books. By W. H. Wylie. (Marshall, Japp & Co.)

THE natural, but not very seemly, haste in which, since Carlyle's death, his biography and bibliography have been poured upon the world seems likely to annul the permanent value of works like these. Occupet extremum scabies is not a principle upon which good literary work can be produced. We sincerely hope that Carlyle will find a Boswell, a Macaulay, or an alter ego who shall do for him what he has done himself for Burns, Schiller, and Sterling. But Mr. Nicoll's volume, and even the more comprehensive work of Mr. Wylie, though they contain much that will be useful to a biographer and critics of Carlyle, hardly amount to either biography or criticism. We must make an exception in favour of chaps. x. and xiv. of Mr. Wylie's book—the former containing a really graphic account of Carlyle's life at Craigenputtock and his correspondence with Goethe; the latter, the best estimate we have yet seen of the signal historical service done by Carlyle in rehabilitating the defaced image of Cromwell.

Mr. Nicoll's pleasant and enthusiastic little volume is defective, it seems to us, in adequate appreciation of Carlyle's works, as distinct from his life and personality. A droll saying, a racy anecdote, is held to outweigh more solid claims to immortality. Yet only once or twice do we find any welcome addition to the recorded sayings of the sage. On pp. 184, 185, his prophecy of the fall of Napoleon III., and his description of that potentate in his early exile in London, possess real historical and biographical interest. A quaint story (p. 168), which is also given by Mr. Wylie (p. 218), relates Carlyle's detection of a sleek, respectable impostor, shortly revealed as such, by "seeing rogue in the twist of the false hip of him as he went out at the door." But neither writer seems aware that Mr. Tennyson has already embalmed the remark in Sea Dreams, where the hero, parting from a snuffling cheat,

"Read rascal in the motions of his back,
And scoundrel in the supple-sliding knee."

We hope Mr. Nicoll will forgive us for suggesting that a good deal more care in minor matters was required to do his subject justice. We feel pretty sure that Carlyle did not address the Berlin dinner-party (p. 30) as "Mein Herren;" nor write to Napier (p. 47) that a certain paper would be written "tacento Minervâ;" we doubt his having described Sir W. Hamilton's talk (p. 74) as "revelly;" and we are sure he is ill-served by such notes as (p. 90) "Mr. Grant differs from other accounts," or that, on p. 127, by which it is unconsciously made to appear that Sir P. Francis, reputed author of Junius' Letters, was present at a dinner-party in 1850. If Mr. Nicoll feels called to describe Carlyle, he should at least aspire to his master's laborious fidelity in details. Nothing disfigures a book so much as careless extracts and hasty notes.

Mr. Wylie and his publishers call special attention to the poem "Drumwhinn Bridge," extracted from Leigh Hunt's London Journal of October 1834, and presumed to be Carlyle's. It is not much more than a metrical version of certain thoughts in Sartor Resartus, book ii.; it has little or none of the charm of his prose-poetry, and is certainly very inferior to the "Tragedy of the Night Moth." Yet one or two touches in it confirm Mr. Wylie's conjecture; the three last stanzas are redolent of Carlyle, and must, one would think, be by him or some very sympathetic student of his style.

The faults of Mr. Wylie's book are rather those of over-zeal than of carelessness. We cannot but think that the elaborate account of the Burgher branch of the Secession Kirk of Scotch Presbyterians, of its essential witness to purity of doctrine and life, and to freedom of administration, might have been spared. All sects claim this as their raison d'être; and Dean Stanley's phrase that "Carlyle clung to the Church of Scotland," to which Mr. Wylie objects (p. 47), seems to us much less misleading than the attempt to emphasise minute and fractional differences. Another hobby of Mr. Wylie's is that Carlyle ought to have been made a peer (pp. 7, 8, 271); and we so far agree with him as to think that the Government which, very rightly, pensioned Leigh Hunt and ennobled Macaulay would have done well to consider the claims of Carlyle. But to denounce Mr. Disraeli's offer of a G.C.B., in 1875, as "an insult" is distempered and preposterous. We think he did well to offer it, and Carlyle not unwisely to decline it. "Insult" there neither was nor could be in it; and the animus displayed here by Mr. Wylie is unworthy and irrelevant; the subject of the book is above party feelings.

Yet Mr. Wylie can be impartial if he chooses. Not all his admiration for Carlyle saves the latter from the severest rebuke (chap. xix.) for his attitude towards the Jamaica massacre. Indeed, if there be error here, it is on the side of over-severity to Carlyle, Mr. Ruskin, and Kingsley. Mr. Wylie leaves on the reader an impression that these men developed an absolute liking for cruelty. The case is bad enough, but not so bad as that. Mr. Wylie forgets the awful lesson, then fresh in the public memory, of the native rising in India; he forgets the unwillingness of the public to make Eyre responsible for all the acts of subordinates in a position of great, though exaggerated, danger. There is no doubt that Carlyle's attitude to inferior races and slavery is the blot on a lofty character. But we do not recognise the justice of such a summary of his views as that on p. 192; and the sentiment there ascribed to Godwin is as old as Plato.

For one episode of his work Mr. Wylie deserves the thanks of all. We do not remember to have seen elsewhere the exquisite account of the interview (pp. 363-65) of two Scotch lads with their father's old friend almost on his death-bed. The school-boy simplicity of the narrative sets off the kindly pathos of the old man's last recorded words—words of "star-fire and immortal tears." And the last quiet comment of his youthful visitor—"I was not at all shy, he seemed such a venerable old man"—sums up the feeling of thousands who never saw him in life. He walked so many paths of thought; more deeply than any one of this century he felt the Past, the Present, the Future—he seemed such a venerable old man.

E. D. A. MORSHEAD.

Shakespeare: Certain Selected Plays abridged for the Use of the Young. By Samuel Brandram, M.A. Oxon. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

MR. BRANDRAM'S idea is an excellent one—that of a book which shall be as far removed from a school edition of Shakspeare's plays as from a mere book of "Beauties." It must, of course, omit whatever is matter of offence against the innocence of boyhood and girlhood; but, in addition to this, it omits all passages that would weary or retard a young reader. The plays are thus considerably abridged, but continuity is preserved by an abstract, as brief as possible, of the contents of each scene or passage omitted. Thus—"The King then promises Laertes full satisfaction for his father's death" serves as a substitute for the speeches which follow the exit of Ophelia in Hamlet, IV. v.

The plays selected are The Merchant of Venice, Romeo and Juliet, A Midsummer Night's Dream, Much Ado, Twelfth Night, As You Like It, Hamlet, Macbeth, The Tempest. In Mr. Hudson's School Shakespeare, he arranged the plays in groups intended for three successive years of study. Among the first nine plays in Mr. Hudson's order, five of those selected by Mr. Brandram appear. It is worth noting what plays those are which are considered by two competent persons, who have carefully considered the subject, as most suitable for introducing young readers to Shakspeare—The Merchant of Venice, Twelfth Night, As You Like It, Hamlet, The Tempest. To these Mr. Hudson would add Henry IV. and Julius Caesar.

The justification of Mr. Brandram's attempt is not, I think, that the best approach to Shakspeare is through selections from his plays, but that different modes of approach suit different persons, and that all which lead towards the centre are good. If a boy will read an entire play, and return again and again to those scenes which have most taken his fancy, and then read a second and a third play, he will be more likely to grow to a right understanding of Shakspeare (even though at first his choice of favourite passages show a crude feeling for poetry) than if a master picks and chooses for him. Mr. Brandram's method has, however, its advantages. It would probably be a long time before a young reader had really got interested in nine of Shakspeare's plays; but if he is pleased with any one of Mr. Brandram's chosen plays he will probably read them all. And one who knows even partially nine of Shakspeare's plays is not likely ever during the remainder of his life wholly to escape from the grasp of the poet.

As to the manner in which Mr. Brandram has carried out his design, while there is much that is excellent, I could wish that in a volume of the same size he had given eight plays instead of nine, and had given those eight a little more fully. There are very few additional scenes for which I should care to plead. But the scenes and speeches which are presented might with advantage appear with fewer erasures. The aim should have been to avoid as much as possible constructing new periods and paragraphs, in which (by omitting one line here, and two lines there) passages more or less widely separated in the original text are run together. To do this occasionally may be unavoidable; how often it may be unavoidable only one who has tried to abridge a play of Shakspeare's can tell. But it should never be resorted to except of necessity; never merely to economise space, nor through the mistaken notion that this or that line, being in itself of no high poetic worth, can be dispensed with.

As an example of excessive abridgement, take Twelfth Night, II. iii. Mr. Brandram omits the opening speeches of the Duke and Curio, including the lines in which the Duke calls for "That old and antique song we heard last night;

Methought it did relieve my passion much
More than light airs and recollected terms
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times."

Lines very characteristic of the Duke and his self-conscious love-languishment. The speech, "Come hither, boy; if ever thou shalt love," &c., continues the Duke's train of thought; passionate music is in their ears, and the Duke, contrasting it with the "light airs and recollected terms," professes his constancy in love. "How dost thou like this tune?" he asks, and Viola replies,

"It gives a very echo to the seat Where Love is throned."

Whereupon the Duke, finding the supposed boy "speak masterly," guesses that he has experienced what it is to love. The well-known passage follows:—

"Too old, by heaven: let still the woman take An elder than herself," passing on, after Viola's reply, to the speech, "Then let thy love be younger than thyself, &c." Presently Curio returns with Feste, and the exquisite description of the song occurs:—

"Mark it, Caesario, it is old and plain
The spinsters and the knitters in the sun," &c.

And straightway Feste sings,

"Come away, come away, death," &c.

The following is Mr. Brandram's abridgement:—

"DUKE. Come hither, boy: if ever thou shalt love,

In the sweet pangs of it remember me;

For such as I am all true lovers are.—

My life upon 't, young though thou art, thine eye

Hath strayed upon some favour that it loves;
Hath it not, boy?

VIOLA. A little, by your favour.

DUKE. What kind of woman is 't?

VIOLA. Of your complexion.

DUKE. She is not worth thee then. What years, 't faith?

VIOLA. About your years, my lord.

DUKE. Too old, by heaven;

Let thy love be younger than thyself," &c.

After which speech, and Viola's reply of two lines, the scene passes on to

"Once more, Caesario,
Get thee to yon same sovereign cruelty," &c.

The omissions here are grievous; the false junctions—perhaps only too successful—alter the sequence of thought and feeling; and one line is metrically spoilt. The volume, however, contains a wealth of noble poetry, and much of Mr. Brandram's work is right well executed. The book may have an enduring life. If so, I trust that in a second edition Mr. Brandram will see fit to re-insert many speeches and parts of speeches needlessly omitted.

In writing a Life of Shakspeare there are pitfalls which only the wary avoid. Mr. Brandram's brief sketch is not free from errors. Shakspeare was not, as far as we know, a shareholder in the Blackfriars Theatre in 1589; the Globe Theatre was not built in 1593; Shakspeare acted in Sejanus in 1603, making it improbable that he retired to Stratford in 1602. EDWARD DOWDEN.

William Law, Nonjuror and Mystic: a Sketch of his Life, Character, and Opinions.
By J. H. Overton, M.A. (Longmans.)

A GOOD Life of William Law has long been wanted. Mr. Overton has supplied this blank in our literature. His "sketch," as he modestly calls it, is by no means perfect, but does the one thing which, above all others, is required in the written Life of any man, good or bad—it gives us a clear and distinct picture. Law was a far greater man than his contemporaries ever discovered. He was not a man of action, took no prominent part in the world's doings, and in literature, where he made for himself such fame as he has got, he was never a continuous worker. His books, with the exception of A Serious Call to a Devout Life, and the Practical Treatise upon Christian Perfection, were nearly all of them pamphlets, written as the needs of the Church or society seemed to demand them—not treatises that sprung from his own desire to express his thought. The fact is that Law was from the first a mystic of a peculiarly devout and ascetic kind; and we may feel well assured that mere literature, written for the purpose of instructing people in secular matters, and still more for mere amusement, whether of the reader or the writer, would have been considered by him a sinful waste of human faculty. His powers of expression were, however, so great, and his thoughts so clear and well reasoned, that he made an impression on his own age and that which immediately succeeded it out of all proportion to what might have been anticipated from the character of his writings.

Law figures in the popular mind of to-day, when he is remembered at all, as a mystic; and English mysticism, especially that of the eighteenth century, has very little attraction for ordinary readers. It has therefore come to pass that—since the time that Methodism became an organised community outside the Church of England, and the Evangelicals, from being a body of enthusiasts suffering contempt and persecution, have dwindled into a mere Church party receiving their share, or somewhat more, of bishoprics and deaneries—Law's writings have been unread except by an occasional student, and the few devout persons who followed in the footsteps of bygone generations. It is not difficult to account for this. Though Law held and taught many of those doctrines which, to the Methodists and Evangelicals alike, were as articles of faith, he was from first to last a pronounced High Churchman, holding all, and probably more than all, the Catholic doctrines which distinguished the Caroline divines. He was, of course, something more and beyond this, and it was this something more which markedly affected John Wesley. To what precise extent the Serious Call and the Christian Perfection influenced the founder of Methodism, and through him so great a portion of mankind, it is hard to tell. Our own impression is that the direct influence of Law has been to some degree exaggerated; but there can be no doubt that his indirect influence has been extremely great. He was one of the first who taught those doctrines which afterwards developed into Methodism; and he set them forth, not, as too many others have done, in an ignorant and unreasoning manner, but with much logical power and great literary charm. The ascetic side of the great religious movement of the eighteenth century has commonly been traced back to the old Puritanism. In this, we believe, is no little error. We can find but slight evidence that Puritanism had any effect upon Methodism or Evangelicalism; they seem to us to spring from very different roots, and to have nothing more in common than all forms of orthodox English Protestantism must have. Those who so confidently profess to find in the ascetic doctrines of the eighteenth century a reproduction of earlier opinions are apt to exaggerate and misconstrue the true Puritan attitude towards self-denial. With the exception of their rigour as to the Sabbath and their hatred of stage-plays, both of which, it was assumed, had the most direct Bible-warrant, there seems but little in the genuine English Puritan teaching which can justly be called ascetic. Much folly of this kind, we know, has been attributed to them; and the belief that they taught that suffering for suffering's sake is good has become a part of the traditional history of England. We believe this notion has sprung from two roots—first, the slanders of the writers of the Restoration; and, secondly, from the books and Lives of some of the later members of the school, who, when they had ceased to be a political party—"England in arms and council," as one of them not unaptly said—devoted themselves, at times, to a sort of theology which was mainly personal. We believe that the ascetic tint—we might, perhaps, be more exact if we called it blight—which discoloured the revival of personal religion in the last century was due, in a great measure, to the writings and oral teaching of William Law. The true ascetic, like the poet, is born, not made, and it is hard to see why we should quarrel with the one more than the other. The poet, however, is commonly not a propagandist; he knows that his vocation is "out of the common," and does not desire to compel all men to write in lines of unequal length because he has got the divine gift of song. Ascetics have, however, too often misunderstood their vocation, and endeavoured—unhappily, with but too much success—to force commonplace men, who were utterly unfitted to tread the slippery paths or breathe the rarified air of such mountain regions, to follow them in their wanderings. Law was an ascetic by nature, and he never seems to have understood that the mass of mankind had natures so much lower than his own that they would assuredly break down altogether in leading the life of strictness which was but natural to him. His reply would have been, had such an objection been raised, that it was the duty of all men to obey the commands set forth in our blessed Lord's Sermon on the Mount. Such answers have often been given; the reply to them—an only partially satisfactory one, it must be confessed—is to be found in the lax casuistry of certain Roman divines. The asceticism of Law, through, we believe, a faculty with which he was born, was, like the intellectual side of his nature, highly cultivated. He had inherited the strict notions of the better type of English High-Church divines, and had a knowledge of languages which qualified him to read whatever had been written on his favourite subject in the principal modern languages. His position as a nonjuror, too, was not favourable to width of view. He was an English clergyman, and held a very high view of the priestly office. He was from purely conscientious motives a nonjuror, and was known to hold most unpopular opinions. His position with regard to the Church of Rome was similar in most respects to that of a modern High Churchman. "I consider," he says in one of his letters,

"their Church and all its members my brethren in Christ, and as nearly related to me as any Protestants, so it is the same benefit to me to receive benefit from their Church as from that of England. In my own heart I drop and forget all divisions and distinctions which the enemy hath set up among us."

And in another place he says that,

"if each Church could produce but one man apiece that had the piety of an apostle and the impartial love of the first Christians in the first church at Jerusalem, a Protestant and a Papist of this stamp would not want half a sheet of paper to hold their Articles of Union, nor be half-an-hour before they were of one religion."

He also, it would seem, approved of the use of the crucifix and other things which were then, and now, branded as Popery. It is not easy to realise at the present day, when the fanaticism of our people runs in other directions, how intensely hateful language of this kind must have been, not only to the herd of men who looked on religious questions from a political point of view, but also to the truly devout Protestants who had read Foxe's Book of Martyrs at their mothers' knee, and had been brought up to think that the head of the Latin Church was Antichrist, the man of sin, the predestinated leader of the great apostasy. More than this, however, High Churchman as Law was, he avowed sentiments which absolutely cut across all the most popular theories of his time. Men were saved only by the merits of Christ, his death and Passion—that to him was as undeniably true as it is to all Christians; but then he held that this salvation extended to the whole human family, and that the just who had never come within reach of the Gospel were yet not uncared for by him who was its Author. He even seems, if we may presume to read between the lines, to have had doubts as to the eternity of future torment. To add to all this, he avowed the belief that Jacob Böhme was a great religious teacher, and claimed for him something which, to careless people, seemed the same as the inspiration by which the writers of Holy Scripture were moved. This, too, at a time when it was the almost universal opinion that Böhme was a mad enthusiast, whose writings, when they were sufficiently rational to bear any construction at all, carried on the face of them marks of the most dangerous heresies.

It is not surprising that the founders of the great Evangelical movement should have been at once attracted and repulsed by such a man. He was intellectually too far removed and, at the same time, too big for all but one or two of the highest of them to understand. His spirituality charmed them, and their writings are full of testimonies to its beauty; but still it was not quite their spirituality, but rather a survival from an age that was past, mingled with foreign essences which might have come from questionable sources. Then there was also a pronounced "legalism," to use their own technical term, in all his writings which was contrary to every principle of the movement. Yet, notwithstanding all this, and though it could be probably shown that every prominent man among the Methodists and Evangelicals alike had mingled their praise of Law with strong censure, we still think that any fair man who should make the religious history of eighteenth-century England his study will be compelled to admit that we owe to the reclusive mystic of King's Cliffe as great a debt of gratitude as we do to any of the popular leaders who helped to dispel the spiritual darkness which began to gather over England soon after the middle of the seventeenth century, and went on increasing in density until the Methodists and their brethren once more taught men that there was something nobler to live for than the lower utilities.

Although Law was never tired of denouncing mere secular learning as utter waste of time at the best, and as frequently highly dangerous, he was himself a man of refined culture, and his works show that he was well acquainted with most of the solid knowledge of his age. His style is remarkably good—far superior, indeed, to nearly all his contemporaries; and we find, in turning over his pages, hints that his reading cannot have been so narrow as his principles would lead one to expect. His asceticism, though it grates harshly on modern taste, never leads him to advocate any course of action which he could possibly know to be physically or mentally injurious. It is now a perfectly well-ascertained fact that amusements are needed, not by the young only, but by all persons at all stages of life. Law had been dead a century before this fact had been brought home to people, and he is not to be blamed for not having realised it. John Wesley's theories on the matter of relaxation, both for old and young, are nearly as strict and as unreasonable as those of Law. We may be quite sure that neither the one nor the other, could they have possessed the knowledge which all people ought to have now, would have advocated the stern discipline with which they are justly charged.

Mr. Overton has discharged his task with grace and modesty. Law is not only the central figure of his picture, but he fills nearly the whole canvas. We do not know that this is an objection. We certainly should not care for much detail concerning Byrom and the inferior folk with whom his hero was brought in contact; and information relating to the Wesleys was not needed. We think, however, the ordinary reader will find himself much in the dark about Böhme. It is not given to all men to read German, and especially such German as Jacob wrote; and if, in search for light, some unfortunate should have recourse to the quartos which profess to contain a rendering of Böhme into our mother-tongue he would be little wiser. Böhme was, from whatever point of view he be contemplated, a noteworthy phenomenon; call him prophet, impostor, enthusiast, or madman, what you like, his influence has been so great that some fuller notion of him than we get here is worth communicating; and, from the excellent remarks we have on mysticism, it is evident that Mr. Overton would have treated most of the points which would arise in sketching Böhme's career exceedingly well, and all of them with tact and candour. The passages which he has written on mysticism are, in our opinion, of great value. It is seldom that we meet with anyone who, having ventured into that enchanted garden, has come back to the outer world once more without showing some loss of reverence or want of common-sense on his return.

EDWARD PEACOCK.

About the Jews. By Mrs. Magnus. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

MRS. MAGNUS may justly be congratulated on having chosen a profoundly interesting subject, to most people new and fresh, even in this age of myriad books. We know the earlier history of the Jews from our Old Testament; but with the restoration of the Babylonian Exile, where the present book begins, all systematic accounts cease. It was a worthy task to gather from various and little-known sources the later annals of this wonderful race, and put them in a pleasant and readable shape.

This (first) volume only brings us to about 1300 A.D., and ends with the savage expulsion of the Jews by Edward I.; but Mrs. Magnus promises to continue her history, and we hope she will do so with all reasonable speed. Her book is full of instruction to the general reader, and clears up all manner of problems which are left unsolved, though often felt, by ordinary people. The dark page of Christian intolerance and persecution is peculiarly suggestive at the present moment, when otherwise educated and respectable people in Germany are manifesting that large residue of barbarism known as the Judenhetze—a movement which may fairly be regarded as so far giving the lie to all proper claim to higher civilisation. The Judenhetzer in Germany are really worse criminals than the Russian Nihilists; just as the English statesmen who by deliberate legislation killed Irish commerce were worse criminals (though better men) than those who committed outrageous murder and rapine among lawless chieftains in that country. For the real outcome of the history of the Jews shows that they have not only been a thrifty and highly intelligent race, but that they have been loyal subjects of whatever land they adopted for their home—as we see manifestly enough in England, where they are among the best and most loyal of our citizens. This was shown very clearly by the history of the Moors in Spain, who alone, perhaps, in mediæval history gave the Jews a fair chance, and were amply rewarded for it.

Nothing will strike the reader more than the remarkable fairness with which Mrs. Magnus treats her difficult subject. She admits freely the faults of her people. She does not Irvingise Shylock. She does not George-Eliotise higher Jewish types. With all the shrewd practical sense of her nation she avoids vain allusions and random aspirations. She will not even excite the sympathy of her readers by details of the horrible persecutions so often practised by mediæval kings and people. Hence her history impresses us with a sense of truthfulness and of fairness quite exceptional in a popular book intended for Jewish young people. There are, indeed, other features which are likely to exclude it from the hands of Christian young people, however popular it may become with the general public. Mrs. Magnus' treatment of the Founder of Christianity, though thoroughly respectful, is strictly Jewish, and cannot admit the higher claims made for him by our writers. She treats the New Testament documents like any other history, and speaks of Herod's Massacre of the Innocents as a story resting on doubtful evidence.

As every reviewer is supposed to find some fault, or point out something to be corrected, I will add that two statements (pp. 176 and 226) about the capture of Constantinople by the Turks in 1453 are both inconsistent with the real facts and with each other. The dates given are 1423 and 1473, and in the former place the conquerors are called Saracens, in the second vaguely Mahomedans. Possibly the terrible historians who wander about nowadays like knight-errants in search of lurking inaccuracies would find other less obvious slips. One misses any reference to Tacitus' splendid fragment in the history of Vespasian's campaign against Judaea. And in giving us many Hebrew words in the text, vowel points, if not transliteration, might have been vouchsafed to the non-Jewish reader. But these things are only mentioned to satisfy a reviewing conscience.

J. P. MAHAFFY.

Souvenirs de M^{me}. C. Jaubert. Lettres et Correspondances. Berryer, 1847 et 1848, Alfred de Musset, Pierre Lanfrey, Henri Heine. (Paris: Hetzel.)

WE have quoted the sous-titres of M^{me}. Jaubert's Souvenirs as the readiest way of showing the interest the subject-matter possesses for English readers; but they have the subsidiary advantage of introducing us to a very charming personage in the authoress herself, who is clearly characterised in the lively and affectionate letters of her eminent friends. The Souvenirs of Heine are the last in the volume, though those relating to the historian of Napoleon are carried down to the latest date. They are also perhaps the most interesting in themselves, and on that account we may give them precedence. The intimacy began in 1835, and ended in real friendship as the lady overcame her lingering doubts as to whether the poet after all was less méchant than his verses. The question was decided in his favour by his conduct to his mother and his wife, and the unpretentious heroism with which he endured his lingering tortures. To the last, however, his friend was repelled by the unscrupulous way in which friends and foes alike were sacrificed to sharpen the point and intensify the version of an epigram. He defended himself on the oft-tried plea of "meaning no harm," and seemed genuinely surprised when his friends resented the savage phrases he delivered as much in fun as malice. M^{me}. Jaubert did not keep her dissatisfaction to herself:

"Allons donc, lui dis-je une fois, impatientée; vous répondez comme dans une fable le ferait un champion accusé d'être vénéneux: C'est ma nature."

"Bravo! c'est cela même, ma bonne amie."

"Et voilà le malade ravi, sans se soucier d'amitiés précieuses qu'il s'était aliénées."

We are naturally reminded of the recollections of the poet by Lady Duff Gordon, but this intimacy of twenty years furnishes more abundant details—some painful and some characteristically humorous—about his private life and talk. He delighted in telling one story of his wife's distress at a more than usually violent attack of his illness in the night. In the midst of sobs he heard her repeat:—

"Non, Henri, non; tu ne feras pas cela, tu ne mourras pas! tu auras pitié! j'ai déjà perdu mon perroquet ce matin; si tu mourais, je serais trop malheureuse!"

"C'était un ordre, ajoutait-il, j'ai obéi, j'ai continué de vivre; vous comprenez, mon amie, quand on me donne de bonnes raisons. . ."

Heine's name for M^{me}. Jaubert was "Petite Fée;" and he exulted in the droits de moribondage he had established when she promised to visit him at his own home after a last visit paid to her when he was unable to walk. The promise was fulfilled throughout the remaining seven years of the poet's life, and her last interview with him was only four days before his death; he talked with his usual ease, but gravely, and his last words were a warning to come back soon or it would be too late.

To Alfred de Musset M^{me}. Jaubert is not only a fairy, but a godmother besides; he calls himself throughout by the name she has bestowed on him, and profits by the supposed relationship to address to her all the caresses and the petulance of a spoilt child. One of his letters ends, "Adieu, marraine, il y a bien peu de monde que j'aime autant que cette petite fée toujours bonne, qui se tient debout sur vos petits pieds." And it is a standing jest with him to ask the little "blonde aux yeux noirs" if she has begun to grow yet. But the poet was not always equally amiable. The cadre given to these Souvenirs is in the form of a conversation, apparently after de Musset's death, between M^{me}. Jaubert and Berryer, who was an admirer of the poet, with Ernest Picard en tiers. More than twenty of de Musset's letters are given, mostly with a view to elucidating the history of the verses Sur une Morte, published in the Revue des deux Mondes in 1842, which caused a considerable social sensation because it was generally understood that the lady therein dissected was vivante, bien vivante. Mme. de Belgiojoso and her husband, one of a trio of princely tenors who were the delight of Paris at this time, play a considerable part in the Souvenirs; and the beginning of the end of the good understanding between the poet and the princess is traced to his rashness in accepting her challenge to attempt a caricature of her features.

"Un trait rapide traça un petit trois-quarts, où l'œil immense était placé de face, et pour la tournure, une pose au peu abandonnée, en exagérant la maigreur complétait une ressemblance prise en caricature.

"Toutes les personnes présentes se précipitaient pour voir, et souriaient sans se récrier. Elle avec, un air d'indifférence de très bon goût, répéta: 'Il y a quelque chose,' et ferma l'album.

"Mon rôle de maîtresse de maison m'y autorisant, je m'emparai du livre et le mis, à l'abri des curieux.

"Vous avez brûlé vos vaisseaux, dis-je au poète.

"Cependant, madame, je n'ai jamais été plus épris qu'en la regardant tandis que je traçais ce croquis.

"Tant pis, dis-je vivement, vous l'avez blessée."

And a few days afterwards a long, lamentable, serio-comic letter comes to prove the justice of this foreboding; the poet has written confidently as usual: "On lui en a fait une réponse, ô marraine!! une réponse . . . imprimable." After which the verses in question were written, and a good many letters and confidences exchanged of a sort that would scarcely be considered quite "printable" on this side of the Channel, the end being a sort of reconciliation, in proof of which the poem remained unprinted till after de Musset's death. It may be a question now whether more was not made of the matter than it deserved, but there is vigour as well as venom in the last stanza:—

"Elle est morte et n'a point vécu,
Elle faisait semblant de vivre;
De sa main est tombé le livre
Dans lequel elle n'a rien lu."

The glimpses given of Berryer as châtelain of Angerville are very pleasant, and there is the same sort of easy reference to passages of contemporary history all through the volumes as in the best sort of French memoirs of earlier dates. Mme. Jaubert holds that the institution of the salon became extinct after 1848, but her book proves that some of the elements of the society which culminated in salons survived down to the establishment of the later and happier Republic. In the recollections of Lanfrey, as in those of Berryer, the writer gives us to understand, without effort or consciousness, that the social and the political world touch, or rather overlap, and that the leading spirits in each meet upon equal terms in the ground common to both. In England we have had famous literary and famous political hostesses, but we have nothing answering to the social ideal of which Mme. Jaubert reminds us—a society in which the intercourse of friendly intimacy is the first thing, but in which every intimate has to contribute as much as would serve to pay his footing in the outer world of larger ambitions; a society in which world-wide celebrities may appear as the social equals of men and women whose only distinction is their power of receiving and communicating thoughts and impressions with à propos and grace.

The recollections of 1847 and 1848 refer mostly to a little romance with a tragic ending, which has, perhaps, been somewhat brodée by the narrator. The account of Pierre Lanfrey, the historian of Napoleon, contains much that will be new and interesting to English readers. He was a dutiful son, and Mme. Jaubert prints some of his earliest letters to his mother as well as those to herself. The ambitious, industrious, slightly priggish bachelor, who was kind to children, reminds us unexpectedly of Mr. Buckle. It is curious to find that he refrained on one occasion from calling on his old friend because he was afraid of encountering Victor Hugo and his surrounding admirers.

Mme. Jaubert is the sister of the Comte d'Alton Shée, mentioned in these Memoirs, parts of which were first published in the Revue de France. In their present form they make an attractive volume, for which our best thanks are due to Heine's "petite fée."

EDITH SIMCOX.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Despatches, Correspondence, and Memoranda of Field-Marshal Arthur Duke of Wellington, K.G. (Murray.) The despatches of the Duke of Wellington have long been famous; and the volume now issued, which is the eighth of the series, is not less worthy of public attention than its predecessors. It has, too, an additional attraction to those interested in Irish affairs—who at this time is not?—in that it dwells much on the state of Ireland in the years 1831 and 1832, which bear a strong resemblance to the present time. We find, indeed, almost a repetition of the outrages with which we have lately become so familiar, similar complaints from the Irish and similar causes for their disaffection. The seditious and treasonable speeches and placards and threatening letters might pass for the originals of some published in our daily papers. Take, for instance, the following extract from a Dublin paper of 1832:—

"O'Connell will probably, on his arrival in the country, warn the people, according to custom, against illegal acts. That fallacy is easily corrected through the medium of his agents and his servile press, which incessantly inflame the people. It is indeed impossible that any country can remain exempt from rebellion in which such a press is permitted as now circulates its poison. O'Connell's papers are read in every hamlet in every county of Ireland by the most active and intelligent of the people, who communicate the substance of each day's treason to the remainder in conversation. A club and subscription for this purpose exist in every parish, and afford considerable aid to the seditious papers. The general purpose is thus propagated to the remotest quarters from the centre, and perfect sympathy and co-operation is ensured. The most atrocious language is daily used in the Catholic provincial papers, degrading the Government, the Church, and the proprietors. The despotism of this mob authority is intolerable. A Catholic nobleman or gentleman who ventured to think for himself would be as readily denounced as a Protestant. The whole influence of the priesthood is in full activity, and it is certain that in any contest which may arise the number of Catholics in the army would seriously embarrass."

All this, very naturally, called for a great many letters from the Duke, which are written in the clear and concise style for which he was re-

